Suffice it to say that, on the 18th March, the case was heard at the place of dispute, and, as any one might gather from the above, the case went against Anupam Chandra Mitra. The jury took evidence, found the land in dispute was formerly waste land on which cattle and men passed and repassed, that Modhu claimed it on a lease which he did not produce, that he made the excavations, &c. on the land some four or five years ago when there was no opposition that the Zeminder under whom Modhu claimed the land testified to its being his property and not included in Modhu's lease, and yet they decided there was no encroachment by Modhu. They believed that four years' adverse possession of the land made Modhu the rightful owner thereof. The Jury were not, however, unanimous, one of them testifying to and giving, as all unbiassed men would do, as his opinion, that there was encroachment. Now the Deputy Baboo mustered courage to pass the final verdict—"The opinion of the majority of the Jury will prevail. File. (Sec. 139 C. P.) T. K. Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate, 20-3-89," and closed the proceedings. It would appear that Modhu Sudan Ghosh has established a sort of petty Chieftainship for himself in the neighbourhood, and the injudicious judgment in the Nowrah encroachment case is not likely to lessen the estimation he holds himself in.

Is the case beyond recall? Is there no escape from the tyranny of the milkman? Is the Magistrate of the District powerless to afford any relief? Cannot the Commissioner of the Division, in his general power of supervision, reopen the question? We doubt the legality of the farce played out.

NARAIL.

The last University results were lamentably deplorable. Some Herods are at work and the year of grace 1296 B. S. is ushered with the terrible news of boy slaughter. The atrocities are unprecedented in the annals of this or probably any other University. To speak only of the Entrance Examination, nearly 7,500 candidates had appeared and only 1,475 passed, 6,000 and odd have failed. Oh! what a terrible massacre of the innocents! Opinions differ as to the reasons of this. I am disposed to think that the fault lies with both the examinees and examiners alike. A contemporary of yours starts a very novel theory, truly characteristic of John Bull, breathing the hot air of the "City of Palaces," and spreading terror to the small circle of his Madrassee menials and terribly jesticulates, swears and makes all kinds of ugly and horrible faces, being struck home by the short poniard of the Native Press. I allude to your contemporary of the British Indian Street. He says, I write on the authority of the Sanyibani, because the sons of Bhistiwallahs and other low-born students go up for the Entrance, a great many fail in consequence. Whence this entered his brain, I am at a loss to conjecture. I however pardon the grand old man for the sake of his grey hairs attended by follies and failings usual to that age and a general lack of good sense.

To resume the thread of my subject, there are many strong reasons in operation for the recent failures. The way in which examiners are now-a-days elected and the system of the Head-examinership are much to be condemned. A glance at the list of the examiners for 1889-90 will show you that a host of raw graduates have been appointed examiners. This is a great evil. A year or two before, these were students at colleges and now they are the University examiners. What can you expect from them? They judge the merits of the poor boys according to the standards of their own, and the consequence is what has happened this year. The Syndicate ought to use great discretion in choosing examiners. It is a fact that the percentage of successful candidates is higher in the B. A. examination than in others, and that is due to the absence of too many inexperienced examiners. But of all the question papers set in the last B. A. Examination, one was very stiff and it was set by Mr. A. T. Mookerjee junior, who has lately been raised to the Syndicate. That he is a very distinguished graduate, I do not wish to gainsay; but he is still totally inexperienced in the matter of examinations. He, at the head of a train of juvenile examiners, is making great havoc among the students. The name of Mr. Mookerjee is a bugbear to them. Formerly, the practice was to appoint experienced teachers as examiners. Now an M. A. of to-day is an examiner of the same to-morrow. This year Mr. Wheeler, B. A., a mere lad and the grandson of the late Rev. Doctor Banerjee, has been made an examiner in English in the Entrance Examination, while the superior claims of others more competent have been ignored. Of late, there is a great increase in the number of native examiners which forebodes nothing but evil. They as a rule set very difficult papers and generally forget their own difficulties and those of others to master a foreign language.

I am for making the examination stricter as the standard is higher. The door of the Entrance ought to be liberally opened to the students, while that of the B. A. to none but the deserving. The latter ought to be made a test of genuine merit and not of mere cram work. Closing the door of the Entrance fills the popular mind with consternation, and they are already hinting at the Government closing liberal education in this country. But however palpably absurd it may be, it shows full well the sensitiveness of their mind. What I have said with regard to the Entrance, applies with equal truth to the F. A. Examination.

All my views I wish to summarize under the four following heads, and hope that the eyes of Mr. Tawney at the head of the Syndicate may be attracted to them. 1st. There shall be appointed a set of examiners to conduct the various examinations annually and be subject not to constant changes but to changes from time to time. This method is followed in some of the old English Universities. 2nd. These shall comprise of experienced teachers. 3rd. Natives as a rule be not appointed examiners in subjects other than the 2nd languages, exceptions however being made in favour of men of proved ability and attainments. 4th. There shall be appointed a committee to observe that the percentage of success or failure does not vary greatly year to year from a standard one.

The price of rice has decreased to Rs. 3 on account of the recent showers.

Our infant Technical College is already giving proofs of fulfilling all our expectations. The young Vulcans are turning out articles which reflect not a little credit to novices. But whether the present zeal will remain unabated, remains to be seen. I shall suggest to the proprietors not to make the boys work at the expense of their other studies. All necessary instruments have lately been purchased, and a comfortable house is being built for the college.

LORD DUFFERIN'S SPEECH AT THE MANSION HOUSE ON BRITISH RULE.

The Marquis of Dufferin & Ava was presented with the Freedom of the City of London in the Guildhall on May 29. Lord Dufferin was also entertained at a dinner at the Mansion House in the evening of the same day. Lady Dufferin and her daughters, after dinner, witnessed the proceedings from the gallery. The Lord Mayor proposed "The Health of the Marquis of Dufferin," which was received with enthusiasm.

Lord Dufferin, who on rising was received with cheering again and again renewed, said:—My Lord Mayor, my lords, ladies, and gentlemen,—In rising to return thanks for the flattering terms in which you, my Lord Mayor, have been good enough to propose my health, and for the equally kind manner in which you have, my lords and gentlemen, been good enough to receive it, it is needless for me to say that I am grateful for the honour. After sixteen years of almost continual service abroad in distant parts of the Empire or at foreign Courts, to return home and to find such a welcome as this awaiting one at the hands of so distinguished an assembly as that which I see around me is enough to satisfy the fondest ambition, and to make the recipient feel that he is being rewarded far beyond his deserts; and this feeling is very much increased when I remember what noble, famous, and heroic men have stood where I now stand and received at your hands similar marks of favour. But whatever misgivings I may entertain as to my right to have my name inscribed upon your city's roll of fame, I derive, at all events, some encouragement from the fact that, having served my country in three distinct capacities—as a colonial governor, as a diplomatic representative, and as an Indian ruler—in honouring me you are honouring those three great services with whom I have been so intimately connected, and through whose assistance it is that I have succeeded in winning your approbation. (Hear, hear.)

HONOUR TO WHOM HONOUR IS DUE.

During the time of my residence in Canada—a country for which I shall always entertain a sentiment of the greatest gratitude and of the fondest affection—the affairs of the Dominion were conducted by responsible Ministers of the Crown, and if my administration was successful, it was owing to the patriotism, to the sagacity, and the intelligence of those eminent men, one of whom, I am happy to think, is present here to-night. Again, no one but the heads of such commissions are conscious of the degree to which they are indebted for their success to the assistance and discretion, tact and acumen, of those members of the diplomatic corps who are associated with them in the discharge of their delicate duties. But if this is the case in diplomacy, and in colonial government, it is still more obviously the fact in relation to the administration of Indian affairs. In common parlance, and according to the language of tradition, every characteristic of the policy of the Government of India is supposed to be the direct outcome of the Viceroy's special initiative and will, and this is entirely as it should be, because he alone is responsible for whatever is done in India. All the details of business come within his purview. No Executive act can be performed without his consent; he is called upon to decide between what are very often the conflicting views of the departments and the competing suggestions of his colleagues; and he holds in reserve the absolute right of overruling his Council. Consequently his countrymen hold him responsible for whatever happens, whether things go well or ill, nor in this latter case have I ever heard this theory disputed. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) But it will be readily understood that no Viceroy, however self-reliant, however authoritative, however determined to impress his personal genius upon the conduct of affairs, would be able to conduct that vast complicated machine which regulates the destinies of 300,000,000 of our Indian fellow-subjects unless he were enlightened, aided, advised, and assisted by the most remarkable body of men that have ever rendered their country good service abroad, such as are the civil servants of the Crown in India. If, then, things during the past four years have gone sufficiently well in India, it is because a number of very able, very disinterested, and self-sacrificing men have been labouring in posts and positions which, from the force of circumstances, are not wont to attract public attention in England, indifferent to their own fame and renown, provided only that by their exertions the material and moral advancement and security of the Empire can be obtained. (Cheers.)

WORKS IN INDIA.

If, then, the North-West frontier of India and the seaports of India have been fortified and secured, it is owing to the professional skill of Sir Donald Stewart, Sir Frederick Roberts, General Chesney, Colonel Sandford, and the able engineers who are engaged in that important task. If, again, Quetta has been rendered almost an unassailable bulwark of the Empire, it is because the practised eye of Sir Frederick Roberts detected the advantage of that position. If Burmah has been conquered and reorganised it is owing to General Prendergast, General White, Sir Charles Bernard, and those other brave and noble men who have sacrificed their health and even their lives in accomplishing the task. If we have been able to maintain amicable and confidential intercourse with the Amir of Afghanistan, a potentate of great force of character and strong determination, who was advanced to his present position through the determination and skill of Sir Lepel Griffin, it is because we have been strengthened in the Government of India by the resource and sagacity of Sir Mortimer Durand. If the whole organisation of the army has been immensely improved, we have to thank General Chesney and Colonel Collett for the mobilisation scheme. If the revenue system of India has been much improved, and its figures are perpetually showing a better appearance, it is thanks to the initiative of another distinguished Indian official, Sir E. Buck, through whose exertions, in spite of the increase in the army, the Government closed the last financial year showing an equilibrium, with the prospect of a surplus for the ensuing year (Cheers.) For the improvement of our codes we are indebted, amongst others, to Mr. Scoble and Mr. Harvey James, and for the extension of our railways for commercial purposes, for the mitigation of famine, or for warlike purposes, we have to thank the remarkable energy of Sir Theodore Hope ably seconded by Colonel Trevor. If retrenchment has been carried out in every branch of Indian expenditure, it is thanks to the determination, perseverance, and peculiar searching powers of Sir Charles Elliott, and in the same manner we are indebted for a thorough examination of and most interesting report upon the Civil Service of India to Sir Charles Aitchison and those others who have seconded his efforts. (Cheers.) Lastly, that the late Viceroy of India has survived to tell the tale, and is able to dine with the Lord Mayor of London, is because in Sir Donald Wallace he had an invaluable Private Secretary who worked eighteen hours a day. (Cheers and laughter.)

A TRIBUTE TO THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

When I come to think of the hundreds and hundreds of hard-working men in the Indian service, I may say, without any disparagement of the standard of public work in England, that I did not know what hard work meant until I went to India, and saw the unceasing and unintermittent character of the "grind" to which our Indian civil servants so heartily devote themselves. If I were to give a list of hundreds and hundreds of noble, hard-working, patriotic men, through whose unrecognised and unknown exertions, it is that I have the honour of occupying the proud position I do to-night, that list would be too much both for your patience and forbearance; but at the same time it is to me the greatest possible pleasure to have an opportunity of publicly repeating in England the acknowledgments I made in regard to those gentlemen before quitting Calcutta. I cannot help thinking that it is not altogether a bad thing that the English public, occupied as they naturally are with their own affairs and their own politics, foreign and domestic, should be occasionally reminded by a competent witness like myself that hundreds of miles beyond the Indian Ocean, in a depressing and debilitating climate, in homes where the voices and laughter of children are never heard, there are hundreds and hundreds of self-devoted men who are engaged in labour of which the English public have a very inadequate idea, dealing with administrative problems in comparison with which a great number of those questions which occupy the attention of the House of Commons for days together are the merest child's play. (Cheers and laughter.)

THE NATIVE CIVIL SERVANTS.

In referring to the labours of the European section of Her Majesty's servants in India, it would not be right to forget the co-operation of their native coadjutors. It will probably be a surprise to many present to learn that, whereas within the Covenanted Civil Service of India, there are somewhat less than 1,000 Europeans, there are in the Uncovenanted Service nearly 120,000 natives. (Hear, hear.) Of all of the latter, especially those in the highest ranks of the judiciary, it may be said with the utmost truth that they are persons of great sagacity, great industry, and the highest probity, eminently expert, industrious, and loyal. (Cheers.) In reference to this word loyal, which has instinctively escaped my lips, I hope it will be understood that I have not used it in a discriminatory sense.

INDIAN FEELING TOWARDS ENGLAND.

I believe the whole of India is loyal to the throne and person of the Queen, and to the modes and manner of English administration. (Cheers.) I don't mean to say that the English are popular in India, I don't see very well how that could be the case. We are the representatives of a foreign domination. We are aliens in race and in religion. Moreover, the unwillingness of the Hindoos to eat and drink with persons of a different caste from themselves, their refusal to allow their ladies to mingle in our society, undoubtedly prevent the rise and growth of that geniality and good fellowship which you, my Lord Mayor, and the hospitable companies of London know so well how to apply. But though devoid of any sentimental element, I believe the loyalty of India rests upon a far surer, far more solid and sounder basis—that of self interest. (Hear, hear.) If we leave out of account a few fanatical sects, the absolutely ignorant individuals with a personal grievance, and that discontented class which is to be found in every community, I believe that, even including those gentlemen who criticise us most severely in the newspapers, there is not an Indian subject of the Queen in India who is not fully convinced that English administration gives him what he would get neither under an independent India nor in an India under foreign government—namely, peace, security, justice, an enormous share in all the Government appointments, a free Press, municipal independence, local self-government, a prospect of the gradual realisation of our methods of government, the supervision of the House of Commons, and, above all, a sympathetic English public opinion which is ever on the alert to correct abuses of authority and to mitigate the severity of that authoritative regime by which alone it will be possible for many a year to administer the congeries of nationalities, religions, sects, and races comprised within the vast peninsula of India. (Cheers.) In fact, I have come back from India with a far deeper conviction of the strength of our position there than that which I held when I went there. I believe that the ascendancy of Englishmen is increasing in the East, and that the advance of science, the multiplication of railways, the diffusion of our commerce and of our literature, the improvements in artillery and other arms of precision, the acceleration of communications, acting very considerably in shortening the distance between London and—what is by no means an insignificant fact—Australia and Calcutta—all these things I believe are deepening the impression of our superiority. (Cheers.)

THE EASTERN FRONTIER OF INDIA.

I believe we have equal reason to congratulate ourselves on the condition of affairs along our extensive Eastern frontier. The interior of Burmah having been pretty well subdued and pacified, the next task was to teach the wild tribes inhabiting the hills that they must discontinue their head-hunting expeditions and their raids for plunder in the lowlands. Thanks to the energy of my successor, this task also seems to be in a fair way of accomplishment, and I am glad to be able to hold out some prospect of the eventual opening of communications between the Valley of the Ganges and the Valley of the Irrawaddy. (Hear, hear.)

OUR RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA AND AFGHANISTAN.

Our relations with Afghanistan continue to be of the most friendly character. The rumours which were so studiously spread about by the newspapers in regard to some foolish intentions of the Ameer against Russia, and which were never believed by the Russian Government, proved to be altogether imaginary. The Ameer himself has admitted that he has every reason to be satisfied with the conduct of the Russian officers on his frontier, and all he desires is to be left in peace and quiet within his own borders. Here I shall be glad to have an opportunity of making my acknowledgments to the Government of Russia for the perfectly loyal and honourable manner in which, during my term of office, they fulfilled their obligations arising out of the Afghanistan Delimitation Convention. (Cheers.) Before going to India I predicted that this would be the case, because I had great confidence in the wisdom and moderation of the Russian Foreign Secretary, and especially in the high sense of honour and the conscientiousness of the Emperor. You are aware that on two occasions the Ameer had been placed in great difficulties. There is no doubt that had the Russian Government chosen on those occasions to falsify their engagements, and intrigue against Abdur Rahman, affairs in Afghanistan might have been thrown into very great confusion—a circumstance which could not have failed to create very serious complications between ourselves and Russia, for I hold it to be an accepted axiom of our policy that it is not consistent with the good faith of the signatory Powers, or the safety of the Indian Empire, that the terms of the treaty should be either modified or ignored. (Cheers.) The further advance of a great military Power towards the confines of India would throw upon that country such an enormous additional expense in respect to fortifications and other defensive measures that almost any other alternative would be preferable. (Hear, hear.)

CHINESE FRIENDSHIP.

In paying this just tribute to the loyalty of the Government of Russia, I am desirous also of placing on record my acknowledgments to another great Imperial Administration—namely, that of the Emperor of China. (Hear, hear.) If, when we first entered Afghanistan, (Burmah), the Chinese had chosen, they might undoubtedly have exposed us to something like the same difficulties and tormenting anxieties from which the French have suffered so severely in Tonquin. But I am happy to say that, thanks to the admirable manner in which the negotiations connected with the Mission to Tibet were conducted by the British Foreign Office, that danger was averted. Nothing could have been more loyal or more effectual than the assistance given us by the Government of China, and especially by the Viceroy of Yunan. I think I have trespassed sufficiently long on your attention. In thanking you again both for myself and Lady Dufferin, I feel that I am only expressing the sentiment which is garnered in the breasts of all who are serving their country outside of Great Britain.

AN ELOQUENT PERORATION.

Removed as we are from the turmoil of party politics and the acerbities of party controversy, our thoughts and faculties are naturally more directed to the contemplation of the Empire as a whole, and to devoting ourselves to its consolidated interests. To our fond imagination, in whatever distant lands we may be serving, amid all our troubles and anxieties, England rises to our view, as she did to the men of Cressy, like a living presence, a sceptred isle amid inviolate seas, a dear and honoured mistress, the mother of a race of whom it may be said that they have done as much as any other for the general moral and material happiness of mankind, and which has done more than any other to spread abroad the benefits of ordered liberty and constitutional government, which has learnt the secret of gradually interweaving the new material of progress into the outworn tissues of ancient civilisations, and of reconciling every diversity of barbarous tribe to the discipline of a properly regulated existence; whose beneficent and peaceful commercial flag illumines every sea and pavilions every shore, whose language is already destined ere the close of this century to be spoken by a greater number of millions than any other tongue, and the chief necessity for whose prosperity and welfare is the continuance of universal peace, and the spread of amity and good will among the nations. (Loud cheers.) Indeed, without such an ideal to stimulate and encourage them, their work would prove very unthankful to hundreds and hundreds of able and high minded men, who are wearing themselves out in the service of their country abroad, inasmuch as the one thought that sustains them in all their trials and temptations, when struggling with the depression occasioned by sickness, overwork, and debilitating climates, is the thought that they are making a good fight for the honour and welfare of England and her Imperial renown, and that in a greater or a less degree they are earning the approval of those of their countrymen who, like you, my Lord Mayor, and you, my lords and gentlemen, with so much superabundant kindness and generosity, have been pleased to testify tonight your approval of the humble endeavours to do his duty of one amongst the many thousands of your servants to whom the approbation of their fellow Englishmen is their greatest reward. (Loud cheers.)

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadur, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river: [Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye: [Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course. — [Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

We have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE old Border States of the great American Republic maintain their reputation. In Kansas city, there was lately a trial. Between James Smith, the man accused of burglary, and the officers of the Peace, they made short work of it. He rushed from his seat upon Detective Gilley, cut the poor fellow's throat and rushed through the crowd to escape. He was followed by a wild yell of hue and cry, the officers pursuing, and there was heard the sound of a volley. It was all in a trice, but all was over by that. He had shot out of court like an arrow, and they had shot him dead like a dog. There is no sensation in Kansas over this sharp business, whatever may be thought elsewhere. Life on the Border still borders on Death. Lynch, as before, is law-giver, Judge, Jury, and executioner all in one.

QUETTA is progressing fast. They have an omnibus service for the poor.

IT is said that—

"An experiment in journalism of a somewhat unique character is at present being tried in Madrid. The staff consists of reporters only, who after gathering information in the town, commit to paper, which they throw into a box intended for its reception. The printer empties it periodically, sets from the MS., and the paper is circulated through the town twice a day, or more frequently, according to the material. There is no editor, and no matter is commented upon: the whole is simply a chronicle of the daily events in the city."

Many eminent men are of opinion that journalism should be restricted to the mere purveying of news without comment. It is remarkable that backward Spain should have the glory of inaugurating the reform—if reform it be.

A GRETTY Conflict of Law has arisen over the carcase of a blacksmith and sinner, whose smithy brought him gold untold which he knew not how to put to decent use. The late Benjamin Burkeley Hotchkiss, the inventor of the gun bearing his name, died intestate leaving two million sterling. The amount is large enough to draw a legion of lawyers and legal heirs and illegal too, we are afraid. He had a house in Paris and a house in New York, and the question raised is which was his legal domicile. If in New York, the property comes to the father, two brothers and a sister now living in that city; if in Paris, the father and the widow equally divide the sum among themselves to the exclusion of the brothers and sister. From the ways of life of modern grandees and plutocrats, it is difficult to say which nation he belongs to. The facilities for locomotion and the habit of going and remaining abroad are not only obliterating national landmarks, but also creating confusion in municipal Law.

THE New York Herald commands $39,728 for its lowest and $348,000 for its highest priced column in a year. The New York Tribune receives $29,784 and $85,648. In England, it is well known that it is the advertisements that support the newspapers. The price at which they are sold to the public does not pay for the sheets of paper on which they are printed. The price to the trade is even less and involves a positive loss. But the advertising makes it up and leaves a profit besides. Look at the enormous expansion of advertising! The Daily Telegraph, for instance, gives daily broadsheets of 12 pages, of which nearly 9 are filled with close advertisements in small type. That means a fortune. Our people too are learning to advertise, though, with their inferior enterprise, on a small scale.

FOR a misstatement of cargo, the United Steamship Company of Copenhagen had rendered themselves liable to a fine, in Russia, of three-and-a-half millions of roubles. The Czar was graciously pleased to remit the fine. In constitutional England, would the Company have been as fortunate?

HIS descendants have sued the Italian Government for 50,000,000 fis., the value of the property of Joachim Murat, King of Naples, confiscated after his capture in Calabria and execution in 1815. We shall not be surprised to see Maharaja Dhuleep Singh take the hint and bring his grievances to the courts of law. The Kohinoor may be a hard nut for lawyers as well as lapidaries, but the Prince might cause a sensation throughout the globe by suing for the pyjamas and petticoats of the Seraglio ward-robe.

THE Academy notes that Baron Nordenskjöld has passed through the press a "Facsimile Atlas to the Oldest History of Cartography." It is a folio volume, and in it are to be found fifty-one maps printed before the year 1600. It also contains the MS. map of Northern Europe (circa 1467) discovered by him in the library of Count Zamoiski, of Warsaw.

THE Governor-General in Council has appointed the Delhi Jail and the Mooltan District Jail to be places to which persons sentenced to transportation may be sent.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE, Darjeeling, has been affiliated to the Calcutta University in Arts up to the F. A. Standard.

IT has been ruled by the Governor-General in Council that, for the purposes of Act II. of 1886 (Income Tax),

(1) the tentage allowance included in the pay and Indian allowances of an officer in Military employ under Article 748 of the Army Regulations, India, Volume I., Part I, shall be deemed to be salary, unless the officer has provided and has in his possession the camp equipage of his rank in a serviceable condition; and

(2) the horse allowance shown as included in the consolidated or staff pay of the several appointments specified in Article 91 of the same Regulations, shall be deemed to be salary, unless the officer has provided, and actually maintains, the number of bond fide chargers prescribed for his rank.

IN 1890, the Government will offer for sale not more than 57,000 chests of Bengal opium and not more than 4,750 chests in each month, namely, not more than 2,500 chests of Benares and 2,250 chests of Patna opium.

THE Secretary of State for India in Council has decided that if a petition against the orders of the Secretary of State for India in Council is prepared for presentation to Parliament, it should be submitted to the House of Parliament to which it is addressed, through the medium of some unofficial Member of the House, and not through the Secretary of State. There are rules and restrictions about Petitions to Parliament which are too minute and exactly adhered to by the House of Commons. The Petition on the Gagging Act of Lord Lytton narrowly escaped being rejected for non-observance of a common form.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

LIKE the Yugees of Calcutta, the Shaos of Dacca have triumphed. The Garib has, after all, apologised and the case against it permitted to be withdrawn. And no wonder. The Garib has no friends, anywhere. The Babylon of parvenus, publicans and sinners, of East Bengal is about the worst place for the Garib.

The mere cost of litigation was compulsion enough for accused to wash their hands out of an unpleasant and bootless business.

DURING May, thirty-six aliens—eleven from Russia, ten from Germany, four from Prussia, three from Holland, two from the Netherlands, and one each from Austria, France, Italy, Portugal, Switzerland and Turkey—were admitted as English subjects under the Naturalisation Act, 1870. No Indian subject of Her Majesty is admissible under the Act, otherwise many of our Europe-returned Baboos would have availed themselves of its privileges—for the privileges in India of the British-born.

A RETURN shows that there were sixty-three prosecutions under the Coercion Act. Twenty-five of these were against Members of Parliament. In thirty-nine, the order was for imprisonment—the term in the aggregate being more than nine years. There were appeals in twenty-one cases, with the result that in one the sentence was increased, in seven the period of imprisonment was reduced and in one the conviction was quashed. The total reduction amounted to about a year and a half. The working justifies the Act.

THE Oberschlesische Grenzzeitung is being prosecuted for insulting the Duke of Coburg. "The paper stigmatised as a lampoon a widely circulated anonymous pamphlet entitled 'A Programme of the Ninety-nine Days,' in which the Empress Frederick and the members of the Freisinnige party were attacked." The period covered by the pamphlet is the period of the reign of the late Emperor Frederick of Germany. Up to the time the last mail left London, the Duke had not acknowledged that he was the writer.

THEY have carried the railway (cog-wheel) up Mount Pilatus, in Switzerland. It is nearly 3 miles long. The train consists of a steam-engine and one carriage capable of accommodating 32 persons. It mounts from the edge of Lake Lucerne at Alpnach to the summit, nearly 7,000 feet above the lake, in an hour and a half. The average gradient is forty-two in a hundred.

HUMAN vaccine lymph is to be gradually displaced by that from the calf. That will not entirely remove the objection to vaccination.

FOLLOWING the N.-W. P., Bengal has recognized the Value-payable Post for payment of revenue to a limited amount. Madras now follows suit. A trial has been sanctioned for the districts of Chingleput, South Arcot, Tanjore, Madura and Tinnevely.

TATTAI SREENIVASACHARIAR, Deputy Inspector of Schools, Rajahmundry, has been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment, for breach of trust of stationery valued at Rs. 28. He had the luxury and satisfaction of being defended by Mr. Norton from Madras. By the by, has Mr. Norton given up the idea of joining the Calcutta bar?

MANECKJEE DOSABHAI, ex-Jailor of the Cannanore Central Jail, has been convicted and sentenced by the Sessions Judge of Tellicherry to six months' simple imprisonment and Rs. 250 fine, for receiving a bribe of Rs. 150 from a convict, and the Chief Warder, Kutti, to six months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 50 fine, for abetting the offence.

THE Mirror reports the following Police case in the Court of the Chief Magistrate:—

"Mrs. Marian Stanley, of 18, Free School Street, charged Gregory Malchus with having, on the 14th June, at about eleven o'clock at night, trespassed into her house and made use of insulting language, intending to outrage her modesty. Defendant pleaded not guilty. The case for the prosecution was that on the night of the 14th instant at about nine o'clock, Mrs. Daisey Howell called at the complainant's house, and after staying for half an hour left, expressing a desire to return. The gate of her house was consequently kept open, and at about eleven o'clock, the accused got into her house, went upstairs, and then called out to her. When she came out of her room, the accused offered her Rs. 20 for an immoral purpose. The complainant said that she maintained herself by taking in work. She saw the accused on the 14th instant, when the accused made indecent proposals to her. Some ten years ago, he went to her on the same errand. On this occasion, she saw the accused in her parlour; she asked him his name, and he said his name was 'Anderson.' She then went into her room, and shut the door. She could not say when he left. In cross-examination she said that before she turned the light, she took the accused to be Dowling, the undertaker, as her son was ill. Mr. Moses, who appeared for the defence, said that this case had been brought for the purpose of extorting money, which he would prove by citing evidence, as also that the complainant's house was a house of ill-fame, which trade she had been carrying on for years past. Evidence for the defence was then gone into, after which His Worship said, without expressing any opinion whatever as to the nature of the house in which the complainant resides, 'I am clearly of opinion from the evidence that the accused when he went to the house, did not do any act, such as using insulting language, intending to outrage the lady's modesty. The order of the Court is that the accused be acquitted.'"

It appears from the Annuaire Militaire that in France, the infantry comprises 11,491 officers, the cavalry 3,402, the artillery 3,362, and the engineers 946, or 19,201 in all. Whereas Germany has 10,807 infantry officers, 2,358 of cavalry, 2,269 of artillery, and 559 of pioneers, or 16,393 altogether.

THE following little cutting from the American press is characteristic:—

"The Highest Office in the United States of America.—The highest office in the gift of the President of the United States is that of Postmaster at Mineral Point, Col. It is 12,000 feet above the sea level.—Norristown Herald."

That is in the true Sam Slick, Mark Twain and Artemus Ward vein.

"ALL for Love" may be folly, but it is saintly in comparison to All for Gold. From the following anecdote, which has been going round the Press, it would seem that this sordidness may be strong in Princes and sages:—

"The father of the late Duke of Buckingham was in the habit of declaring that he was able fully to appreciate the weight of the injunction, 'Put not your trust in Princes.' The Duke entertained the Queen and Prince Albert at Stowe in 1845, with more than regal splendour. He surpassed even the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth. Two years after the Duke was ruined, and his private affairs were for some time the theme of much gossip, always of a scandalous kind. In 1856 Louis Napoleon came to England, and there was a Chapter of the Garter at Windsor—the first, and doubtless the last, during this reign. It is the custom to 'summon' the Knights on these occasions, and Prince Albert was such a rigid purist that he could not allow a summons to be sent to the present ruined Duke of Buckingham, although he had been guest in his house, and had therein 'fared sumptuously.' The Duke, however, declined to be thus slighted, and he attended the Chapter, and, of course, he could not be excluded. Afterwards there was a State banquet to the Knights in St. George's Hall and Prince Albert pointedly omitted to invite the poor Duke of Buckingham (the only Knight who was left out), who accordingly was obliged to go away, leaving the remainder of the 'Companions' of the 'most noble and honourable Order' to their feast. It was a singularly ungracious proceeding."

We refuse to believe Albert the Good capable of such meanness—such heartless snobbery. But there ought to be an authoritative contradiction. A paragraph like the above is enough to outweigh all the portraiture and narrative of Sir Arthur Helps and Sir Theodore Martin. It is these stories that in part explain the unpopularity of the Prince in Great Britain. There are, to our knowledge, several popular myths in regard to His Royal Highness.

Holloway's Pills.—The ills of life are increased tenfold by the mode of life so many have to lead; most especially is this the case amongst the toilers in our factories and huge workshops of the manufacturing districts whose digestions become impaired and nervous systems debilitated by the protracted confinement and forced deprivation of healthy out-of-door exercise. The factory workers may almost be said to have diseases of their own, readily amenable, however, to treatment if not allowed to proceed unchecked. Holloway's Pills are the most effectual remedy ever discovered for the cure of liver and stomach complaints, as they act surely but gently, regulating the secretions without weakening the nerves or interfering with the daily work.

SIR Henry Brougham Loch, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Victoria, succeeds Sir Hercules Robinson as Governor and High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief at Cape Colony.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Austria-Hungarian Delegation assembled at Vienna on the 22nd. The budget shows augmentation and improvement in armaments. The Emperor received the Delegation the next day. His Majesty in reply said that the allied Powers strive to aim at a peaceful development of the situation in Europe, which, however, continues uncertain. It was hoped the prudence of the Servians would preserve them from serious dangers, and the Emperor rejoiced that Bulgaria made steady progress. The reply has been construed to mean no peace, and the Continental bourses have gone down.

At the sitting of the Delegation on the 25th, Count Kalnoky was a little more free than his master. He was free to confess that the present situation in Europe was unsettled, though there was no danger to peace. He was afraid the Servians were premature in their aggressive and aggrandising aims, but Servia could never be allowed to be a hotbed of intrigue. Of course, Austria-Hungary was on friendly terms with all the States and Powers, Russia not excepted.

THE Russians, according to a Shanghai telegram in the Standard, have occupied Deer, an island near Nagasaki, and thereby secured for themselves a good harbour in the China seas. The news was contradicted in the House of Commons, Her Majesty's Government not being aware of any such occupation. In Persia, if they have not obtained the exclusive right of constructing railways, a Russian Company has been promised a certain priority.

SERIOUS disturbances are reported from Novi-bazar on the Herzog-Montenegrin frontier. Four Begs, at the head of several bands of insurgents organised for the purpose, captured the Governor and expelled him from the town. The report is not believed in in Austria, for, on the 27th, in the Delegation, Count Kalnoky doubted the reports in the newspapers.

THERE is a disagreement between England and France on the Egyptian question. France has asked England to annul the Convocation of 1887, by which the British occupation of Egypt was to terminate in 1892, and the right of entry in case of a disturbance was to be guaranteed to Great Britain and Turkey, but which convention the Porte ultimately refused to ratify. France has also called upon England to appoint a date for evacuation of Egypt.

Lord Salisbury refuses to treat the question of the evacuation and the conversion scheme together. The conversion of the Egyptian Preferences has been dropped.

THE Portuguese Government have ordered the cancellation of the concession to the Diagona railway, the promoters having exhausted the contract time before completion of the railway.

THE Sikkim negotiations are not yet ended nor broken off.

WITH the approval of the Cabinet and the Queen, Princess Louise Victoria Alexandra Dagmar, the eldest daughter of the Prince of Wales, has been betrothed to the Earl—the sixth—of Fife. The Princess has completed her 22 summers and the Earl is 40 years of age.

SIR JOHN GORST announced in the House of Commons, on the 27th, that the Report of the Indian Public Service Commission is still under consideration and that he hoped soon to declare the decision of Government as to the age of candidates for examination for the Indian Civil Service. The Secretary of State has not yet pronounced his final verdict on the Deccan Mining scheme, it is still under the examination of the Councillors. Mr. Caine has elicited an answer from the Under-Secretary that the advisability of taxing beer in India is still under discussion.

ON the 31st May, Mr. G. E. Simms, a reporter, applied to the Bow Street Magistrate (Mr. Bridge) for summonses against the Duke of Cambridge and Inspector Robinson, for assault at Whitehall, at a Fire Brigade Inspection. Mr. Bridge was unwilling to entertain the complaint, and ultimately refused the summonses. On Monday, June 3, in the House of Commons, Mr. P. O. Brien (for Mr. Conyngham) drew the attention of the Home Secretary to the refusal of the Bow Street Magistrate and enquired whether he intended to take any action in the matter. In reply, the Home Secretary said he had no jurisdiction to review the exercise of the Magistrate's discretion. He had, however, been informed by the Magistrate that the Duke had not exceeded any authority, that the complainant was thrown against him by a rush of crowd and that the assault the Duke is said to have committed was justifiable, for protection of himself and others in repelling the rush. From a London telegram of the 22nd, it appears that the matter was taken to the Queen's Bench, and that Lord Chief Justice Coleridge had ordered the granting of the summons, pointing out that all subjects are equal in the eye of the law. Just so. If anything hastens the downfall of monarchy in England, it is this unmanly tenderness for the Reigning House exhibited by magistrates and courts of justice. But if such things take place in England at this day, how are we to wonder at the weakness of Indian courts in dealing with complaints against eminent or influential personages?

THE High Court has directed the Chief Magistrate to entertain the complaint of Captain Hearsey against the Pioneer. A full report of the proceedings will be found elsewhere. We understand an application on behalf of the Captain will be made to Mr. Marsden on Monday next.

The High Court only overrules the Chief Magistrate on the question of jurisdiction. It leaves him free to issue any process or not as he may consider necessary on examination of the complainant, or dismiss the complaint, if in his judgment there be no sufficient ground for proceeding.

Mr. Marsden makes a feeble protest against the ubiquity of the law outside the regular place of publication of a newspaper.

It would have been better if this point had been fully discussed and decided. We hope the Pioneer, if a process issues against it, will try its best to raise the question and take a final decision on the point. Mr. Marsden's protest has not been entirely fruitless. The High Court directs the Magistrate to deal with the matter according to the provisions of Chapters 16 and 17 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thus the Court draws the Magistrate's attention to Sections 204 and 205. Although defamation is a warrant case, Section 204 empowers the Magistrate to issue a summons instead of a warrant, and Section 25 directs that "whenever a Magistrate issues a summons, he may, if he sees reason so to do, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, and permit him to appear by his pleader."

FOR the last month or two, we have been hearing rumours of serious disagreement between Her Highness the Begum of Bhopal and her Prime Minister Moonshee Imtiaz Ali Khan, owing to his inability to carry out all the instructions of Moulvie Siddik Hossain, who seems to have now emerged from his seclusion and assumed an active part in the administration of the State. It was even given out by the Urdu newspapers of the North-West, that the minister would be shortly required to resign his post. We do not know how far these rumours may be founded on fact. But a paragraph is just going round to the effect that Moonshee Imtiaz Ali has arrived at his home at Kakory near Lucknow! What does this mean? How are we to account for this mysterious departure of the Minister from Bhopal? This sort of Hegadah is becoming too common. Between Hyderabad, Indore, Cashmere, Tipperah, and Bhopal, at least half a dozen ministers of Native States have, within the last two years, thus taken what in common parlance is called French leave.

THE Port Commissioners' Godowns and Warehouses have been insured this year at half the rate hitherto charged. That makes a considerable saving to the Trust, to the disgust and discomfiture of the Vice. Following the good old precedent, the smart executive, as in many another department, had left it to certain Companies to charge the premises as third class—though better godowns and warehouses were not known—and regularly obtained the sanction of the Commissioners every year to their orders for renewal of the insurance. A stand was made against this go-lucky style of doing duty, and in the present year tenders were called for, with the result that new Companies have found favor and the Trust saved a good round sum.

Mr. Reilly, Assistant Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Legislative Department, in submitting his opinion in connection with the institution of any action or prosecution against an officer of Government for acts done in the discharge of his official duties, remarks that "it is unfortunately no secret that a large proportion of the prosecutions of the kind here alluded to are instituted not with the object of bringing the accused person to justice, but rather with the view to throw discredit upon his official superiors or upon the executive administration of the district generally. It is therefore the main object of the prosecution (often entrusted to a skilful Native Barrister especially retained in Calcutta) to widen the scope of the enquiry, just so far as the compliance of the court or the ignorance of the pleader charged with the defence will permit. The most effective method for meeting this evil in cases where the court cannot be reckoned upon its own motion to compress the enquiry within the strict limits of the points at issue, is to confront counsel for the prosecution with an opponent equal to him in experience and knowledge: but this step, except in very special cases, is obviously impracticable."

THE Magistrates of the 24-Pergunnahs, Nuddea, and Jessore, represented certain difficulties in connection with the assessment of the Zemindari dâk cess on lands situated within the limits of the criminal jurisdiction of one district and borne on the revenue roll of another. The Government of Bengal has ordered to adjust the payment and assessment of the cess according to the magisterial, not the revenue, district; and, where an estate borne on the rolls of one district includes villages situated in the magisterial jurisdiction of another, to divide the assessment according to the ascertained value of the parts of the estate situated in the several districts concerned. This course is to be pursued in future only when the Zemindars themselves insist on its adoption.

LAST week, we announced the sanction of the Local Government to drawing classes in the Hoogly and the Dacca Collegiate Schools. Drawing used to be taught in the old Hindu College by the late Colesworthy Grant. At one time such lessons would be given in the Presidency College, during college hours, once we believe in the week, the Government furnishing the necessary materials. It is more than 25 years that that instruction has been discontinued. It has now been found necessary to revive the practice. The progress of art requires it. We find Mr. Jobbins, Superintendent of the School of Art, complaining in an official report in connection with the advancement of art education generally in India:

"It has frequently been observed that one of the great obstacles to the advancement of art education generally in India, and of engineering in particular, is the fact that students join the School of Art or the Shipore College without the least previous acquaintance with drawing."

WE have lately been singing the glory of our stiff-necked and irascible brethren in the Hindu peccage, the Chatterjees, and may as well "post up" the information respecting them. Where does the reader suppose—is the habitat of the genus? Many of them hail from the East. One brotherhood from Vikramপুর—the ancient metropolis of Bengal in the Dacca country—have risen to particular distinction. Two of them, who went to Europe, are now in Hyderabad, one of whom is a Doctor in Science and the other a Doctor in Philosophy, with a most interesting history. A third, now in the Punjab, is one of our ablest journalists. This Eastern origin of the Chatterjees gives plausibility to the vulgar theory which assigned them as then ancient live Chatigam or Chhatigam, rendered by the British Chittagong. But whatever their original Vilayet, the present Paradise of an Chatterjee, seems to be situated in Central India. Opening an Eastern Herald, we find the first case under the head of Law Reports thus capped:

"Mr. Haridas Chatterjee (with him Mr. K. K. Chatterjee) Pleader for the Appellant, and Mr. Mohendramath Chatterjee Pleader for Respondent Rasulbhai Summusbhai."

Nothing but Chatterjees here! One Chatterjee on one side and two Chatterjees on the other, in the same case! Verily, it is Chatterjee all over at Mhow. We hope they are a happy family as they are a numerous one in that quarter. It is the same in the neighbouring region of Rajasthan. By the latest accounts, Baboo Panchanan Chatterjee has been appointed a Judge in Oodeypore.

We hear of no Banerjees. If there is one Mookerjee only in Jeypore, he is a host in himself, being the lord there. Indeed, the Mookerjees seem to have an advantage in this respect. Though few and far between, they generally go in for the higher administrative game and find themselves in the Cabinet. Thus, to take a wider survey, the Mookerjees have been the only Brahmans called to the highest office at Moorshedabad and in Tipperah. Again, two Mookerjees have held the highest judicial appointments under the Cashmere State, one of whom was for many years Chief Minister, in reality if not always in name. Against this, there is now in charge of the Exchequer of Faridkote a Chatterjee—the only one of the ilk who has ever held any Cabinet office. In British India, a Chatterjee has just been elevated to the Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab.

In the Rutlam State, a Banerjee, Poorna Chandra, got the principalship of the Central College, but the poor fellow soon died, to make room for a Bengali Kayastha, Baboo Jay Kali Datta, M.A., B.L., of the Calcutta University.

THE theological writers on the Sunday issue of the Statesman—a different set, for the most part, to the more sober men of the work-day world of the daily edition—are much perplexed about "The Future State" and a Moral Text-book for the youth of India. It would be well enough perhaps, if these good gentlemen were not so far behind the age. Their crude theology is already poohpoohed by the highest minds in Christendom. Discredited in the West, is it to be installed under the patronage of the ruling race in the East?

If they will refer to their Schopenhauer, they will find that, seventy years ago, the Frankfort Rishi declared that Christianity was a compound of Buddhism and the religion of Egypt, the former furnishing the morality, the latter the phallic doctrine of the Trinity, the day of judgment, eternal life and eternal punishment, the mummery and the millinery.

Recent research has confirmed the wonderful discrimination of the great philosopher. A reference to the Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum shows that Asoka has recorded on his pillars how he, 250 years B. C., sent out missionaries to Greece, Cyprus, Egypt and the surrounding countries, to preach the most excellent Gospel according to Buddha. How he sent medical missionaries too, the same as Christians now send to us, also agents to preach kindness to animals, and to instruct the heathen in the treatment of their diseases. If these zealots will but look up their Revue Archeologique and study the many translations of inscriptions from the Egyptian tombs, they will see that thousands of years before Christ, even in the days of Kings computed to be antecedent to Abraham, the Egyptians knew all about the next world, heaven and hell, eternal life and eternal damnation. They can confirm it by the works of the Germans Lepsius and Lieblein. The Hindus boast a higher antiquity of not only secular history but also religious consciousness. Buddha was a Hindoo.

As the Frankfort Philosopher says, the whole of the moral sentiments of the New Testament is to be found better expressed in the scriptures of Buddha and Confucius. So there is no need to put that very composite book of mixed contents, speaking respectfully, the Bible, into the hands of our children. If a text-book is to be compiled by our rulers, let them draw the material from the pure fountain-head and not after the stream has been contaminated by phallic obscurities and absurdities, by the interference of various intermediaries in different ages and lands.

THE Law Member has introduced his Charitable Endowments Bill. Like all other measures of Mr. Seoble up to date, this is, as he himself says, "of an unambitious character." This is to provide in British India for the vesting and administration of property held in trust for charitable purposes. Such "Charitable purpose" is intended to include relief of the poor, education, medical relief and the advancement of any other object of general public utility, and to exclude religious teaching as an exclusive purpose. The Bill empowers the Governor-General in Council to appoint, for the discharge of such duties as in England are done by the Official Trustee of Charitable Lands and the Official Trustees of Charitable Funds, a Treasurer of Charitable Endowments, for the territories subject to any Local Government, to meet the difficulty, which has often been experienced, now attending the devolution of charitable property. That is, the Bill permits the Governor-General in Council to appoint a new trustee on the retirement or death of any incumbent of the trust. Such Treasurer shall be a Corporation sole and shall have perpetual succession and a corporate seal and he shall sue and be sued in his corporate name.

It will be optional with the endowers of any existing or future trusts or funds or their representatives, to apply to Government for a vesting order, on such terms as may be agreed upon between them and any Local Government. No vesting order will necessarily be made, nor made of any securities for money except the following :-

- (a) promissory notes, debentures, stock and other securities of the Government of India, or of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland ;
- (b) bonds, debentures and annuities charged by the Imperial Parliament on the revenues of India ;
- (c) stock or debentures of, or shares in, Railway or other Companies, the interest whereon has been guaranteed by the Secretary of State for India in Council ;
- (d) debentures or other securities for money issued by or on behalf of any local authority in exercise of powers conferred by an Act of a legislature established in British India ;
- (e) a security expressly authorised by any order which the Governor-General in Council may make in this behalf."

The Treasurer shall only be the custodian of the Funds. He shall not act in the administration of any trust under his charge, or hold any property not vested in him as Treasurer of Charitable Funds. "No suit shall be instituted against the Government in respect of anything done or purporting to be done under this Act, or against a Treasurer of Charitable Endowments except for divesting him of property on the ground of its not being subject to a trust for a charitable purpose, or for making him chargeable with or accountable for the loss or misapplication of any property vested in him, or the dividends, interest or income thereof, where the loss or misapplication has been occasioned by or through his wilful neglect or default."

All this is good so far as it goes. It does not appear clear to us however, whether the proposed enactment will give the Government power to undertake, or make arrangements for, mixed religious and secular Trusts. For instance, will they appoint a Treasurer to a temple endowment for worship and medical relief and education? The point seems advisedly left in dubiety. If this is so, it is a pity.

THE Indian Spectator says :-

"For the second time in history the Shah of Persia is visiting the countries and courts of Europe, including England, and the Government and the metropolis of the latter are preparing for His Majesty's reception and treatment as a guest during his sojourn in the country. So we fancy India will not be admitted to the honour of contributing to His Majesty's entertainment on some such ground as that his faith is shared by many millions in this country, or that he is a very near neighbour."

What guarantee is there? We are not sure that the honour may, after all, be thrust on us, as in the Abyssinian and Egyptian wars. India can not resist any imposition, and if the responsible authorities protest they are brow-beaten into submission by the so-called responsible Home Government in England. We do hope the Indian Spectator will prove a true prophet. Our contemporary attributes the present immunity to the late Mr. Fawcett. If Fawcett is dead, Bradlaugh lives and is the bolder fighter of the two.

This is the Shah's third visit to Europe, not the second

THE Government of India have advertised a four per cent loan of two hundred lakhs of rupees. Tenders will be received in sums of Rs. 500 or multiples thereof by the Comptroller-General, up to noon of Tuesday, the 30th July next. This loan will form a part of the Four Per Cent Loan of 1854-55.

REPORT has been received in Calcutta of the death, in England, at the age of 67, of Mr. John Watson, once an important member of our mercantile and trading community. He originally kept an ordinary shop in Mission Row of this city, for the sale of cheese and bacon. He gave up his shop on finding employment with Currie & Co., the old auctioneers in Lal Bazar. He afterwards married a daughter of the late Dr. Alexander Duff, the famous Free Kirk Missionary, a connection which, coupled with his knowledge of the business of an auctioneer, recommended him to Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall's & Co., the eminent auctioneers. Entering their service as an assistant on a pay of Rs. 100, he rose to be a partner, and then, after the usual term, retired. He was a good man of business, thoroughly mindful of his own and yet considerate towards others. The native employees of the firm specially are grateful to him and his brother-in-law,

Mr. Pine Duff, for the recognition of their status and position and for his courteous treatment of them. Above all, they will always bless him for the pension system introduced at his instance.

A TELEGRAM from Balasore informs us that a gentleman of position in that town, being headmaster, Barobati School, Honorary Bench Magistrate, Municipal Commissioner, Vice Chairman Sadler Local Board, was caught by police for drunkenness and released on bail. He did not, however, make his appearance on the day fixed before the Magistrate, in consequence whereof a warrant was issued. Subsequently, he appeared and pleaded ignorance. Mr. Mendes found him guilty and fined him Rs. 10. He was formerly removed from Road Cess service in certain embezzlement cases.

THE DEADLOCK IN THE CITY.

THIS is not the season in Calcutta, any more than in Bombay or Madras, Allahabad or Lahore. So far as "society" cares, the Calcutta time, during all these hot months, may be dropped out of Chronology. The gods have long since deserted the plains, leaving them to toil and toilers. Viewed from the standpoint of ton, Calcutta is out of town. The Governments have gone to summer in the hills, leaving the capital at the mercy of Commissioners and Deputies, Chairmen and their Vices. Little wigs and inferior magnates swagger in grandiose equipages on the Strand, where, up to March last, Governor and Governors-General used to take their quiet drives, receiving the ready homage of all to unquestionable eminence. Yet Calcutta lives and moves and has its being. The Exodus notwithstanding, this city of small men and small things is a great city still. Its business existence is uninterrupted, though its fashionable life is in suspension. If the capital has been taken to pieces and removed to different places on the top of the Himalayas, the port remains in full integrity. That port is one of the longest in the world, crowded with shipping, the focus of a magnificent system of railways, and the seat of a great commerce. After all, the Port is Calcutta—the "city" is the town—and commerce is its life and soul. The capital—Calcutta as the residence of the political chiefs—is certainly a subordinate element in the whole. The sum of activity is scarcely affected by the abeyance of the metropolis pro tem. The heads of Government come and go without a sensible augmentation or diminution of the general bustle and business. The city—in the restricted sense—goes the even tenour of its way; it knows not who comes or who goes. The presence of the highest responsible authorities and repositories of ultimate power might be very valuable at particular junctures, in warding off or subduing crises, just as the absence of the Lieutenant-Governor and the Viceroy from the capital on one occasion, some six years back, threatened the whole town and suburbs with their entire shipping with destruction from fire by ignition of highly combustible petroleum—but, as a rule, the movements of the chief rulers of the country have little effect on the normal activity of the metropolis.

This motion of a vast commercial centre is none the less subject to its own laws. Marvellous as is the clockwork regularity with which the Port proceeds in its far from noiseless way, the whole machinery is liable to sudden stoppage from the most untoward cause.

Mercantile Calcutta, whose life is independent of the neighbourhood or distance of the great Powers that be, may be prostrated in a moment by the most trivial circumstance. This has been abundantly illustrated during this very week. The whole trade, external and internal, of the chief entrepôt of this vast Empire has been paralysed from, to all appearance, an inadequate cause—by a most insignificant enemy. Faint symptoms of the coming event might perhaps have been discerned from the very commencement of the week, but nobody took heed on Monday—nobody would believe that anything might be the matter. On the following day, there is no longer room for illusion. All on a sudden, Calcutta awoke to the consciousness that there was no work for its hands. Commerce is no doubt a matter of pence—of pound shilling and pence if you will—but it is primarily a matter of merchandise, of the exchange of goods, on a large scale, such scale differentiating it from the humbler retail trade of shopkeeper, pedler or hawker. This implies the passage of goods from place to place and point to point, from port to port and city to city, from country to town, from warehouse to wharf, from jetty to warehouse, from store to store. The extent and intensity of this carrying activity is usually a fair index to the mercantile status of a place. The proportions of business determine the proportions of the transport agency: the greater the commerce the greater the energies expended in, and the larger the arrangements necessary for, the conveyance and removal of merchandise and goods. The enormous traffic of Calcutta came to an enforced halt on Tuesday, from failure of the usual transport. The mills worked with the raw produce in hand or in store, but there was no replenishing their stocks and no issuing out of the manufactured or baled articles. The counting-houses might have as well shut up shop. There were certainly no transactions for immediate delivery, for no delivery could be made or taken. Merchandise had, all of a sudden, become a fixture as it were. Goods remained undisturbed in the warehouse, or neglected on the wharf, or exposed on the railway stations. Boats, as before, continued pouring in down the river from the country at large, but the consignees were not prepared to relieve them of their cargoes, so that the unsightly craft continued, in ever increasing numbers, to block the bank at the landing-places. Ships too sailed up to the harbour as before, unconscious of the state of things at the port, and they succeeded in emptying their cargo, but they could not do much business in the way of reloading. The cargoes they emptied lay crowding the wharves and jetties, uncalled for, for want of carting. That was the difficulty all round. For want of carting, merchandise was stationary throughout the great city. Goods were there in plenty, and there was demand, but no means of local transit on land beyond the imperfect, utterly inadequate and highly costly service of the shoulders of the weak porters and navvies of India—the coolies. Merchants were ready to sell and merchants and others to purchase and brokers to negotiate, but only time bargains could be made. The regular transactions for prompt delivery were, in the absence of the necessary carrying agency, simply out of the question. Everything was ready for business as usual, but transport. There was no carting. No carts were to be had for love or money. And for want of this trifling element, the vast traffic of the town in merchandise and goods of weight, had come to a stand-still. The repulsive antediluvian vehicles, rudely constructed of bamboo, yoked for the most part to the weak diminutive bullocks of the plain, egged on by merciless brutes disgracing the name of Hindu and Mussulman, which on week days met you at every turn in the "city," dragging their slow length along as they squeaked through the streets, or blocking up your way, no longer obtruded on your sight or stood in your path. They had all vanished, or nearly all. There was no business to speak of in the business quarter. The great thoroughfares were deserted.

The City's voice itself is soft, like Solitude's.

The carters had struck work, in fact. They had vowed by Ganga and Prophet not to ply. It was an organised combination, and "rattening" and "boycotting" and other features of similar movements in the West showed themselves from the beginning. Like Western strikers, they were doubtful of the good faith or firmness of their fellows and suspected each other's avarice. They checked one another. Having plenty of leisure, they strolled about the streets to see the fun of their puny selves, by mere force of union, reducing the great capital to inaction and hourly loss. If any of their fellow-strikers, lured by gain, was found with his cart in the street, he was seized and chastised and obliged to beat a retreat. But they went farther. They coerced also carters not belonging to their association.

The cause of this phenomenon is a firm under the style of Sykes & Co. The name is English or rather Scotch, and, we believe, there is a person bearing it connected with it, but the abbreviative "Co." is a linguistic convenience which may contain and cover a good deal and persons of sorts and different ethnologic groups. One Hindu gentleman at least has been named in the Prospectus as Managing Director of the particular business which has caused all the row, in the person of our rising patriot of Burra Bazaar, Baboo Jagannath Khannah. Messrs. Sykes and Khannah have been immortalised by this untoward event. Immortality is immortality, though only cartmen give it. The fierce light that has, for the whole of this week, beat on these gentlemen must be very unpleasant to them, as the correspondence of Messrs. Sykes and Co., in the newspapers, plainly shows. But that is a momentary inconvenience. The strike will pass away. It is already gone. Yet one thing will remain—the tradition that Mr. Sykes and Mr. Khannah were the heroes of the memorable Calcutta week ending the 30th June 1889. Many men, in times ancient as well as modern, have done desperate deeds to secure such a guerdon, and if our fellow-citizens have won it unwittingly, they may well congratulate themselves on their luck at having secured a bargain—without proposing. But if they did not pay for their fame before, they have paid enough after the event. For weeks they stood a cross fire of distrust and suspicion, from friends as well as strangers. For days they have been the best abused men in the country. And such abuse! The cartmen will any day take a double first class in the university of Billingsgate, and when a sense of wrong gives edge to their eloquence they are simply inimitable—even by the most famous Parsee school-boys.

It is curious to note that, when the prospect was darkest, our Anglo-Indian contemporaries took care to push their own countryman into the background and draw the Baboo in the unlucky business into prominence. At first, it was recommended as a European concern. For long, the story was of British originality and enterprize. But when the thing came to an unexpected crash, it suddenly became all a Baboo business, and poor Baboo Jagannath Khannah was given up as scapegoat to appease the irritation of the European mercantile community and a victim to the fury of the cartmen! But the Baboo had long since washed his hands of the matter. As early as the 29th May, when the Port Commissioners sat on the application of Messrs. Sykes and Co.—and verily they sat upon it—the Managing Director Mr. Khannah, as one of the Commissioners, we understand, shared in the sitting in every sense. He had withdrawn himself from the project and was free to vote against it so far as the Port Trust was concerned. Mr. Sykes, however, in justice to the brave man it must be said, never flinched, never despaired. He stuck to his guns to the last and fought like a hero, prudent and wary to be sure, but always himself—the projector true to his love. He scarcely bowed to the storm, he simply parried it. Elastic as steel, he never bent under it. Would that he might yet obtain the fitting reward of such faith under difficulties in ultimate success!

Mr. Sykes, or whoever is the guiding genius of Messrs. Sykes & Co., is no doubt a wise man in his generation, a canny Scot ever on the qui vive to become rich, if not exactly at the expense of his neighbours in the worse sense, certainly by using them to his purposes. Such men, if not dangerous, are not very amiable perhaps. This gentleman is a fertile schemer. He is a mercantile Abbé Sièyes, his pockets as full of plans for money-making as the Frenchman's was of constitutions! If his one scheme miscarries, he is ready with another. If one business will not go down with the public or the parties aimed at, why, never mind—he has lots of other businesses which may prove more agreeable. He is no visionary, however. He dreams no New Atlantis or old Platonic Republic in commerce—no South Sea or Mississippi Bubble, but works out modest workable work-day plans. Thus, before seeing his first project well-established—perhaps in consequence of his suspicions as to its ultimate collapse—he came out with another—Sykes and Co. tendering to the municipality to discharge its functions in regard to weights and measures as laid down by law. Although a municipal sub-committee have decided against the application, the mental resourcefulness of the applicant is worthy of all respect. Messrs. Sykes and Co. have put some ideas into the heads of the Corporation which they may hereafter put to use. There is little doubt that the Company would have carried out the provisions of the law better than the Corporation. The worst that may be said of the Sykes' projects is that they all involve a recognition of the principle of monopoly, and there has grown in these days a superstitious horror of Monopoly, Protection, Centralization, and such other bugbears.

Some four months since, in view of the difficulties in the local transit of goods at this port and within the Calcutta district, from the unreliability of carters, Messrs. Sykes & Co. launched a project for starting a cart agency. Here is the cream of their Prospectus dated the 1st March last:—

"It is proposed to offer to the public the services of an agency, to be worked under the direct supervision and at the Office of Messrs. Sykes and Co., No. 1 Grant's Lane, Calcutta, a very central position, with a picked staff of European and Native Overseers and Assistants, which, by registering the carts that will be allowed to ply under the control, and with the tickets of the agency, together with the residences and homes, and descriptive roll of owners and carters, with other particulars that will much facilitate detection in the case of frauds, and by a system of strict supervision and close and constant control, render such frauds almost impossible, will offer exceptional advantages to the public, without any enhancement of the rates at present obtaining for the cartage of goods.

The expenses and remuneration of the agency will be provided for by a registration fee, which the carters will be only too glad to pay."

Here was as neat a plan as ever was conceived of reaping a harvest of rupees without sowing any capital. Who says there are no more openings in this used up crowded world of the fag end of the nineteenth century? There are possibilities to genius still. Here is Mr. Sykes, who, in this year of barrenness 1889, with the point of his pen, carves out a neat little ultimate nett income of some Rs. 1,00,000 per annum. But it is not by any means a disgraceful or illegitimate project. The whole is above-board. Even as regards capital, they have, without counting the title for the unavoidable preliminary expenses, made a previous outlay of the coin of their brain—surely as well entitled to respect as inscribed gold and silver pieces. Yet, it was this absence of pecuniary bottom in the project which has not only, in the long run, prejudiced it with the vulgar, who can think of only one species of property and source of influence, but also finally led to its collapse.

Notwithstanding the drawback, the thing took wonderfully. Sykes and Co. are not only clever schemers but apparently plausible palaverers. The dear Major of the Eastern Bengal State line, early hugged the Sykes dragnet to his bosom. The other Railways followed suit. The European merchants, with two notable exceptions, all promised support. Burra Bazar is Khannahjee's own. The great Ralli Brothers and Graham & Co. held out, but the Sykes are presumably clever men of business and Khannah is a favorite of Luck and Sir Alex. Wilson, and they succeeded in securing the rest of the port. The game was now, as good as in their hand.

They now set to carry out their programme. They did not throw themselves like griffs into the midst of the ignorant carters. They rather sought their guild Presidents. But, above and before all, they entertained the services of some dismissed European Police officers and some native ones too, and secured the interest of a veteran European who has weathered many vicissitudes in the same department, by giving employment to his son who lives with him on the Police premises. It was on the services of these men, doubtless that the proprietors of this carrying agency depended for the success of the project. Thus prepared, they commenced work a few days ago. But alas!

The best laid schemes of Scot and mouse

somehow.

Soon it became apparent that it will not do—that way, at any rate. With all their deep-laid programme of operations and astute tactics, between their secret allies in the Police and their open servants who are now out of it but still carry such knowledge and prestige as belong to those who once flourished the dreaded baton, they could not register more than the veriest fraction of the cartmen plying in the city. They gave away, we believe, some three thousand tickets, but, from the complaints of some of the cartmen in the Police Court, it may be doubted whether all these tickets were quite willingly accepted. Neither their ex-Police nor their in-Police succeeded. They probably did more harm than good.

The activity and, doubtless, misdirected zeal of Sykes agents led the carters to put their heads together. Soon their unsophisticated understandings came to the conclusion that they were being victimised by a great conspiracy of the dominant race, presumably under patronage of the State. The firm is a European one and, though a native is put forward as the Managing Director of the new Cart Agency, they well knew that Baboos have ever been the ready tools of European oppression. Company is a familiar word to them in the designation of mercantile houses, but the tradition of the East India Company still flourishes in the country, and they are apt to associate the idea of Government with the term. They are not sure that all Companies are not so many concerns of the State. So, what with Mr. Sykes in the character of a Company Bahadoor, what with a lot of men, once in the service of Government in the dreaded department of the Police, who might, for anything that the people in general knew to the contrary, be in it still, what with the active sympathy of the Police Stations and of men undoubtedly in the Police, the poor ignorant carters may be pardoned if they came to regard themselves as having incurred the evil eye of the great British Sirkar, or at least of a lesser Sirkar similar to the municipality. If they had had any doubt, that was probably dissipated by the registration to which they were invited and the tickets given them. They know the ominous import of the word. Registration is always an authoritative process, and it means cash out of pocket of the poor. They would have none of it.

It is true this Company offered them advantages. But these were problematical—the new taxation is real and certain. They already get employment without difficulty whenever there is a demand. What could Sykes & Co. do more for them? they argued. But Sykes & Co. proposed to mulct them of two pice or half anna in every Rupee they earned or about three per cent. on their gross earnings. As the true wages of the more prosperous of them are no more than six annas in the Rupee (16 annas) the tax is naturally regarded as one of half an anna in six annas or about 8 per cent. on income. All are not prosperous, however, and upon them it must fall with peculiar severity.

So they struck as the best way of demonstrating the grievances of the poor and ignorant. They doubtless applied a little coercion to some miserable poltroons or traitors of their class, but, on the whole, they behaved with remarkable moderation. They molested not any one outside their calling.

In their difficulty, the merchants repudiated Sykes. Some of the more knowing had backed out of their countenance earlier, so soon as they realised the fun of making bricks without straw and coining money without gold or silver or even copper which Sykes had planned. They all flocked to the Police office for help in extricating them. The Commissioner recognised the gravity of the situation and proclaimed to the city that the carters are free to join Sykes' Agency or not as they choose, and directed his subordinates to tell the men accordingly. He proceeded himself to Chitpore, whence most of the carts issue, to reassure, and reason with, the men. They were open to reason, but then the Police again interfered. The fact is, Mr. Lambert is master of a divided camp. While the Ballards and others pulled in favour of Sykes, there were others pulling against them. These were the numerous Police officers and men who own carts, and they naturally clung to the opportunity to embitter the cartmen against the authors of the new danger to the old business. That, we believe, is the reason why, after agreeing, on Thursday, to end the strike, the men still did not come out the next day in the numbers that might be expected.

But the strike is over and no mistake. Today, the town is again as lively as ever. The four days' suspension of traffic would never have occurred had the merchants known what they were about when they embraced the Sykes game. It might have been avoided even if the Port Commission had not been a Star Chamber. Was the Poet of Hope thinking of Calcutta when he sang—

They hate the light because their deeds are dark?

THE LATE RAJINDER DUTT.

AMONG the papers of the deceased gentleman which have come to our hands, is a most interesting letter from one of his numerous American friends. It deals with the American society of a bygone generation. It is not without some literary merit, and hits off the different characters and characteristics that came under the writer's observation with spirit. Believing that most of the gentlemen, including the writer himself, are dead, we have, after much hesitation, decided to publish the epistle. The writer belongs to one of the first families in the United States.

"Boston, June 28, 1867.

My dear Rajinder Baboo,—Time rolls back a good many years—for the moment—as my pen shapes the old familiar words with which I was accustomed to begin my letters to you. Though numerous cares and some slight estrangements first interrupted and for many years stopped our correspondence, my interest in you and yours has never flagged, and I have kept myself pretty well informed of the prominent incidents which have occurred in your family. I have silently sympathised with you in your misfortunes and bereavements, in some of which I have felt myself a sharer, and I regret deeply that I have had so few opportunities to rejoice in your prosperity. I wonder what you look like now. I am a bald, grey old fellow—much older than the enclosed photographs, which were executed two years since would indicate, though I dare say those would not be recognized by you as the shadows of the rosy-cheeked, thick-haired, rustic-looking youth who has so many times shared your unstinted hospitality. Many new associations have of course sprung up for both of us in twenty years, and many of the old links of intercourse are broken, but nothing can give me more pleasure than to strive to keep bright those which still remain. My daughter, named after yours, is a buxom full grown young lady, pleasantly remembering you, not only from hearing my reminiscences of our friendship, but through the mnemonic influence of a Cashmere shawl which you sent her long long ago and which is still among her treasures. When I think of the time that has elapsed and of the limited number of my countrymen who were in Calcutta when I was there, I wonder that many of the same set so frequently cross my path to-day. "Uncle" Lewis, barring the increasing whiteness of his hair and whiskers, seems as young as ever and returns rejuvenated by every Calcutta trip. William Whitney, Steven Bullard, Geo. Silsbee and I have our summer residences on Massachusetts Bay all within the range of a single cannon shot. John Barstow luxuriates in a palatial house in Newport and shews himself occasionally on the Boston Exchange, with the air of a lazy Nabob. John Lee is in Boston what Stroud was twenty years ago in Calcutta. John Atkinson is a stout gentleman farmer looking sort of body, loving his squashes and his potatoes better than gunnies and linseed. John Booth is in my office almost daily. Something, perhaps bachelorhood, has kept him as young as when he was the supercargo of the "Cato." James Adam, lately the partner, is now the competitor of John Lee. Edward Silsbee is an art student in Munich. He left here only a few days since. Six months ago I saw my old chum, may I not say our old chum, Hall, at the office of Chas. Guild, now an insurance President. Hall, as you know, holds a sinecure office in London. Thurston, now a pretty old man, has gone to grass, i. e., has taken a farm somewhere near Boston. Brewster is a bloated ship-broker in New York. Then there are the Baileys, the younger Will's, but my letter must read like a chapter in Genesis—with all these names. By the way, do you still keep up your theological studies? If so, I am sure from your early tendencies that you lean to the opinions of Colenso, Parker, Strauss, and Renan. It seems to me we are in a fair way to have religion kicked out of existence by logic—whether for good or ill, who of the present generation shall say? I suppose that feeble specimen of rationalism, the Rev. Mr. Dall, who has selected Calcutta as a residence as the point of greatest geographical distance from his strong-minded and disagreeable but extremely sensible wife, has just about brains enough to shake the faith of his listeners and pupils in any creed that they may hold, without providing them with a substitute.

Write me something about yourself. As for me, "Story, God bless you I have none to tell, Sir," I have a wife and two children. Excepting that my father and mother, who lived to enjoy a ripe old age, peaceful prosperous and happy, are dead; I have had no bereavements in my family. I am in the business harness, my relations being mainly with the Australasian colonies and our own Western States, doing very little to recall to my mind the coolie chorus of Mava and anna pa-ya, which used to enliven my bazar labours. How I used to enjoy the paan and the hubble-bubble, and, above all, the tiffins that Amon, the most graceful of Khansamas, used to prepare for me. I fear me much that Amon and my old bear

Golooock are under the sod long since. I wish I had even the ghosts of these fellows here, for a worse and more inefficient set of servants than we have in this country never existed. Thank your lucky stars that you have never been called upon to endure the miseries consequent upon a radical administration of a democratic form of government—but if I once get upon my favourite theme of obfurgation, politics, I shall never stop writing, and you will be so ineffectually disgusted that you will not reply to me. I was interrupted while writing the last sentence by another old Calcutta friend, Chaplin, who remembers you if you do not him. He is a prosperous merchant of Melbourne, now at home on a visit. My wife and daughter desire to be kindly remembered to you and I am as ever, My dear Raja Babu, Sincerely your Friend,

THEODORE A. NEAL.

That letter will give the present generation a better idea of the decayed and of the figure he cut thirty years back, than any literary effort of our own.

NARAIL.

Dighalia, a pretty little village, is only 9 miles east of Narail. The Baukana, a tributary of the Navaganga, flows past it. A strange animal has recently made its appearance in the river. It is perhaps unique of its kind, characterised by some marked peculiarities. It is some 11 feet in length, and resembles a crocodile with an addition of a sword, a cubit and a half long, projecting from its forehead. Its claws resemble human palms. If you go to the banks of the river and call aloud "shona," "shona," it is sure to rise on the surface and make straight for the banks. There it will float still for a long time and is never known to have hurt a single body. It avoids animal food, what it takes is not known to man. My informant had a dog's cub thrown at it, but our leviathan (may I call it so?) after playing with it for a length of time, let it go without doing it the least injury. It seems to be a vegetarian and, like the Ribis of old, seems to live on air and water with little or no food. It is very docile and inoffensive. A red streamer fluttering in the air marks on the bank the exact spot of its appearance. A crowd of 400 to 500 persons, from the puny babes sucking their mothers' breasts to the bashful bouncing lassies and the elderly matrons and from the village urchins to the stalwart youth and the wrinkled old men, all throng there daily to look on this new leviathan with evident awe. The more superstitious present it with food, especially sweet-meats, and decorate it with flowers or garlands. Many stories about it are afloat, the following being too generally related. Once upon a time a man proceeded to Kamroup (Kamiksba) to learn demonology, witchcraft, sorcery and all the branches of the black art. There, among other things, he learnt the art of metamorphosis. On his return home, he was prest hard by his ignorant friends and relatives to show them what he had learnt of the occult sciences. After he had satisfied their curiosity to a certain extent, they requested him to pass himself into the form of a new animal. He consented and charged them to scatter over him after his metamorphosis water from a certain pot which he had previously charmed with mantra. He, when leaving aside his human shape divine and assuming his present monster shape, so frightened the timid by-standers out of their wits, that they, in the hurry of their flight, had the pot containing the charmed water overturned, and the man has ever since been unable to cast off his present unenviable form.

CHARU CHANDRA MUKHA.

CONGRATULATORY ADDRESS TO THE CHIEF JUSTICE.

An address of congratulation, on his recovery from his late serious illness, was presented by the citizens of Calcutta to Sir William Comer Petheram, the Chief Justice of Bengal, at his residence, No. 43, Chowringee Road, on the 26th. There was a gathering of the representatives of the different communities. At 7-30 p. m., the Chief Justice accompanied by Mr. Justice Hill, entered the parlour when Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar, stepping up to His Lordship, addressed the Chief Justice thus:—

My Lord,—My fellow citizens of Calcutta have done me the unusual honor to ask me to represent them on this joyful occasion. They have but done justice to the feelings of intense anxiety which filled every heart in this metropolis when you were passing through a terrible trial in the shape of a most dangerous ailment, and to the feelings of unspeakable joy which came later on when the announcement was made first of "danger over," then of your almost miraculous recovery—thanks to skillful medical treatment under the blessing of Providence,—I say they have but done justice to their feelings, in approaching your Lordship today with this address of congratulation which I have now the pleasure and the honor of reading for them.

Mr. R. D. Mehta next spoke on behalf of the Parsi community of Calcutta. Nawab Asghar Ali also spoke a few words as from the Mahomedan community in the absence of Nawab Abdool Lutef who arrived late. The following is the text of the address:—

THE HON'BLE SIR WILLIAM COMER PETHERAM, Kt., Q.C., CHIEF JUSTICE.

May it please your Lordship,—We, the undersigned Zemindars and citizens of Calcutta, beg to approach your Lordship with these few lines, and hope they will meet with your kind acceptance.

Nothing grieved us more than the knowledge of your having been seriously and dangerously laid on the bed of sickness. We, therefore, incessantly offered our prayers to the Throne of Mercy for your restoration to health; and that it has now been restored we rejoice, and beg leave to congratulate you. We hope that you may yet enjoy long years of health and happiness, which would be a source of joy to all your well-wishers.

We remain, my lord,

Your Lordship's obedient Servants,

Signed by: Rajah Purna Chunder Sing, of Paikpara, Kumar Sarat Chunder Sing, of Paikpara, the Hon'ble Syed Amin Hossein Khan Bahadur, c.i.e., Mr. R. D. Calcutta, 26th June, 1889.

In reply the Chief Justice said that it would be difficult for him to find words to express his appreciation for the kindness expressed in the congratulations offered him. Ever since he had been in India, he had received nothing but kindness from the people. He had endeavoured to give satisfaction, and he assured them that what assisted him in doing his work was the appreciation of his endeavours expressed by the people. Coming to this country at his age, he felt a sense of diffidence in dealing with matters new to him, and the expressions of approval which had attended his endeavours were grateful to him. During his illness he was not conscious of what was going on around, but when he recovered he heard with gratitude of the sympathy expressed, not only by the native community here, but also from his friends in the North West, chief among whom were the Maharaja of Benares and the late Mr. Justice Mahmood. He thanked them with all his heart for the expressions of kindness they had uttered, and assured them that their kindness would never be forgotten.

The address was then presented to His Lordship. The gentlemen present were next introduced by Baboo Benode Behary Mullick. The Chief Justice shook hands with all, and they retired.

HIGH COURT.—CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27.

(Before the Hon. Justices Beverley and Trevelyan.)
CHARGE OF DEIFICATION ON THE PART OF THE "PIONEER."

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee.—Your Lordship will remember the application made on behalf of Captain Hearsey against Mr. Cheney, editor of the Pioneer. There is nobody to show cause, and the whole thing will not take five minutes.

Trevelyan J.—If it is only a question of five minutes we will take it up, as we do not intend to take up any more cases to-day.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Nobody appears to show cause. I shall just read the Magistrate's letter to the Registrar of this Court, which will not take two minutes. I appear with Messrs. Handley and Ledlie. The Magistrate says this:—

17th June, 1889.

Sir,—Under the provisions of section 441 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I have the honour to submit the following for the consideration of the Honorable Judges of the High Court. The case of the Empress v. Macleod and another, 3 I. L. R., Allahabad, 312, was cited before me to show that I had jurisdiction in the matter, and that, although the Pioneer is edited and published in Allahabad, where presumably the Editor and publisher reside, the fact of the newspaper being sent to Calcutta for distribution and sale is a publishing of the said journal in Calcutta. This, I apprehend, would undoubtedly be so, but it appears to me that the case of the Empress v. Macleod differs materially from the present case. In that case Dr. Hall, the complainant, was residing in Allahabad when the case was instituted, but in the present case it is not contended that Captain Hearsey, the complainant, or the Editor or publisher of the Pioneer, are any of them residents of this city; and I consider that it would be contrary to the public interest and most liable to cause great hardship were the complainant allowed to obtain a summons for the publication of defamatory matter at any town to which he might choose to go, no matter how far from the place where the journal was edited, and of which town neither he nor the parties sought to be made defendants, were residents. In this case the plaintiff elects not to make his application at Mussooree, where he states he resides, nor at Allahabad, for the reason stated by him. And I submit that the proper place for this application being made is Allahabad, and that the Legislature never intended that, when Courts might have concurrent jurisdiction, it should be open to choose where they might take out process at no matter what inconvenience to both defendants and witnesses. I understand the complainant's reasons for making this application in Calcutta are twofold, viz., that the influence of the Pioneer and of Mr. George Chesney are powerful at Allahabad, and also that counsel are more easily procurable here, but these reasons could not have much weight with me, having regard to the fact that there is both a High Court and large Bar at Allahabad.

(Sd.) F. J. MARSDEN,
Chief Presidency Magistrate."

Mr. Bonnerjee continued:—Now with regard to the questions of law on which the Magistrate has—

Trevelyan J.—I asked you on the last occasion for it, and I want to see the text of it where Captain Hearsey replies to the statements contained in the articles complained of.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—He does not deny them, in the sense that they were never true. If they were all true it would still be good defence, and yet the allegations not be necessarily a disgrace. You may speak the truth of a man, and yet the greater the truth the greater the libel.

Trevelyan J.—Does that proposition apply to civil cases as well.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—I think so, and under the Penal Code there is no difference whatever. A man may be found guilty of assault—

Trevelyan J.—You are, I suppose, referring to those railway cases at Home where there were some damages awarded for putting up notices at stations.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Yes, and there are various other cases relating to these matters. There was a case some time ago which came before Baron Bramwell when a man was being examined as a witness. He had been convicted twenty years before that time, and he was merely giving evidence of some offence for which he was imprisoned. He had after that led a very good life, and had earned the respect of his neighbours, and every body had forgotten all about the offence which he had committed when he was a young man. I submit that the letter of the Magistrate does not show any more whatever. The Magistrate says "This, I apprehend, would undoubtedly be so," but I submit not, and I submit that they were entitled to a summons.

Trevelyan, J.—You said you were prepared with evidence of the publication and sale of the Pioneer paper here.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Oh yes, publication in the sense of the decided cases.

Trevelyan, J.—Having an office here for sale?

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Or sending to subscribers here. I think we have not to go far beyond the precincts of this very Court with regard to sending to subscribers here (Laughter).

Trevelyan, J.—As far as it appears, Mr. Marsden gives no reasons whatever.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—No, my Lord, the reasons he has given now are bad in law as I shall show. There is clearly jurisdiction, and a prosecutor can choose his own Court.

Trevelyan, J.—Yes. Is it a summons case?

Mr. Bonnerjee.—It may be a summons case or a warrant case.

Trevelyan, J.—There is a section about a Magistrate examining witnesses first of all.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—We offered to do that.

Beverley, J.—It is under Section 204, I think.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Yes, my Lord. We applied for a summons merely in the first instance. It will be quite sufficient, my Lord. It is ordinarily a warrant case I see, but summonses may be issued in warrant cases.

Trevelyan, J.—Do you know the form of the order which we make in cases like these, where a Magistrate refuses to issue a summons?

Mr. Bonnerjee.—The order is that he do issue summons.

Trevelyan, J.—I ask the question because he is not obliged to issue it simply upon information. He may require the matter to be proved.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—We offered to prove it.

Trevelyan, J.—I know that, but still it is open to him, and he apparently refused to listen for the reason given in his explanation. You will still give him the opportunity if he requires it?

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Oh yes. This is a matter in which he is bound to exercise his jurisdiction.

Trevelyan, J.—I do not think there are any other sections.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—I do not know whether there is any difference in the procedure before Presidency Magistrates. Ordinarily you put in your complaint, the Magistrate signs it, and you get a summons as a matter of course. It is rather the exception for a Magistrate to examine the complainant.

Trevelyan, J.—As far as I know, it seems that they proceed exactly in the same way now as they have done for many years, unless the procedure has been altered.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Yes, My Lord.

Trevelyan, J.—We think the Magistrate was wrong in refusing process in this case. The facts mentioned in the petition and affidavits, if true, give right to process against the persons charged, and the Magistrate has given an explanation which, in our opinion, affords no answer to the rule. He seems to consider the issue of processes of this kind as more or less a matter of discretion. If an offence is committed within his jurisdiction it is within the right of the person injured to apply to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to proceed against the offender wherever he may happen to reside, or whenever it may be most convenient. There is no question of convenience here at all. Of course, in making these observations, we are not in the least prejudging any questions in this case. The matter is at its first stage, and the persons proposed to be made defendants have not had an opportunity of being heard in reply to any questions. The order we make is the Magistrate be directed to take cognizance of the offence complained of by Captain Hearsey, and to deal with the matter according to the provisions of Chapters 16 and 17 of the Criminal Procedure Code.—The Englishman, June 28.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because he little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree.—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

A limited space only will be reserved in the GUIDE for advertisement, for which early application is invited.

In consequence of the difficulty and delay in getting together reliable matter for the guide portion of the work and the preparation of numerous illustrations which must be executed in England, some delay necessarily will arise in the execution of the work. But intending subscribers should not delay in registering their names at the above address.

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE SAVAGE OF THE PERIOD.*

Hard was the lot of our fathers, the men of the early world,
Beast-like, scratching the earth for a niggardly dole of her fruit,
Wedged in the clefts of the hills, in the hollows of tree-trunks curled,
Groping in glooms of the cave, starving on berry and root.

Shelterless, weaponless, weak, a haggard and wandering brood,
Seared by the brand of the sun, by the whirlwind scattered and toss'd,
Buried in drifts of the snow, whelmed by the rivers in flood,
Flayed by the scourge of the storm, scarred by the dagger of frost.

A wretched and barbarous race, unskilled, at the mercy of all,
In haste to escape from its foes to the hiding-place of the dead;
Hunted of hunger and lean, whose life was a piteous crawl
From the dark of the womb to the dark of the grave through the shadow of dread!

But we! we are cunning and strong, we have made all wisdom our own,
We have mastered all arts, we have tools and raiment and roof overhead,
We laugh at the shriek of the winds, we dance on the brute overthrown,
With his skin we have clothed us about, with his flesh we are filled and fed.

Our fathers, the cowering men of the caves, were the cave-bear's prey;
They fled him, we seek him; the snows with his blood, not ours, shall be dyed;
We follow his tracks through the drift—ha! ha!—we spear him and slay;
We feast on the fat of his ribs; we comfort our loins with his hide.

O marvellous progress of Man! O race of unspeakable craft!
O strikers of Fire from the heart of the rock in a fortunate hour!
Who have fitted the sharpened flint to the wonderful pine-wood haft—
In the day of your weakness and want, who dreamt of the day of your power?

LOSS.

SOMETHING is gone:
I know it by this pain:
But yesterday I had it,
To-morrow though I bade it,
It would not come again.

Something is gone:
What shall we that thing call?
A touch, a tone, that thrilled me,
A hidden joy that filled me?
Say, that is all.

And now 'tis gone,
Lightly as first it came,
The sky a little colder,
The heart a little older,
All else the same.

All else the same?
O death, all-covering sea!
Come with thy floods and drown me
That thing I sought to crown me
Was all the world to me

GAIN

SOMETHING has come:
I felt it yestereve:
The lark on high was singing,
The happy church-bells ringing,
How could I grieve?

I could not grieve.
An old man weary lay;
I lifted up his burden,
He blessed me, and in guerdon
Mine slipped away.

It slipped away.
There came a child in pain,
I soothed it, and soon after
A burst of April laughter
Followed the rain.

How could I grieve?
O blessed human heart!
That in the joy of giving
Hast found the bliss of living,
Up, play thy part!

Strive, and not rest!
Rest here below is none,
Beneath a sky o'erarching
The hosts of men are marching:
Angels look on.

Yet not in dark,
Not wholly sad thy way:
But here in sunny meadows,
There overcast with shadows;
So runs our day.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

HIS Holiness the Pope has been humbled in his own city. On the 9th June, amid great rejoicings and demonstrations, there was unveiled, in the Campo del Fiori, the very place where he was, 289 years ago, buried alive, the monument erected to Giordano Bruno—the victim of the Catholic Church. There were about 30,000 persons present. There were deputations and representatives from all parts of the country, including workmen's societies, students of the Universities and members of the Communal Councils, carrying 1,972 flags and banners. The Syndic and Aldermen of Rome and several Senators and Deputies and other notable men added by their presence to the clat of the occasion.

"The monument having been unveiled amid indescribable cheering and the playing of national airs by the military bands, Signor Bovio, a Radical member of the Chamber, delivered a speech in which he eulogised Bruno, declaring that he had suffered martyrdom for the defence of freethought, and had thus conferred great benefit upon the whole world. Signor Bovio referred also to the Papal question, and declared that the Papacy suffered more for that day's proceedings than the events of Sept. 20. Then, he said, it was the end of the temporal power. But that day it was the beginning of a new religion which placed liberty of conscience and freethought above all things. Signor Guiccioli, the syndic, then formally took possession of the monument on behalf of the town.

After the unveiling of the monument there was an imposing ceremony at the Capitol in memory of General Garibaldi, this opportunity being taken to commemorate his death on June 2, 1882. Signor Imbriani, a member of the Chamber, delivered an address, recalling the great courage and other virtues of the deceased."

The Daily News correspondent thus reports the feelings of the Pope:—

"I am informed that his Holiness is very much depressed by the day's demonstration, and his friends say that it has been one of the saddest days in his life. Only the other day the Pope declared that the actual circumstances, referring to the unveiling of the statue erected to Giordano Bruno, were sadder and more to be feared than the events of the year 1870, and he explained his meaning—namely, that at that epoch the temporal power was attacked for political and national reasons, while to-day it is, according to his Holiness, an attack against the spiritual authority, with the idea of destroying the only power left to the Papacy—namely, its moral influence. The last three days the Pope has seen no one, and no longer goes into his garden, but remains for hours absorbed in prayer in his private chapel. His court ecclesiastics, as well as laymen, have tried in vain to see his Holiness. He thanks them all, but refuses to admit anybody, begging them only to join him in prayer. Over 400 telegrams have arrived at the Vatican from abroad, deploring the commemoration."

The Clerical party in Austria highly censure the demonstration. The Bishop of Linz ordered public prayers "in expiation of the outrage" on the Pope and the Church. The Clerical Vaterland pronounces the fête worthy only of the devil.

The same day and hour that the monument was thrown open, the Association of Italian Cooks and Waiters in London, held, in their headquarters 28 Gerrard Street, Soho, a commemorative assembly in honor of the man and the occasion.

ABOUT forty Cracow students went on a visit to the picturesque Valley of Ojców, in Russian Poland, on the Austrian frontier. After they had crossed the boundary and made themselves jolly over Polish national songs, they were, for that offence, arrested by Russian frontier guards, and not released till after a detention of three days in prison.

RUSSIA has commenced the afforesting of Central Asia in the Samarkand district, and 60,000 deiatines of land are being planted.

As a proof of his loyalty to Russia, the Khan of Khiva, it is said, to perpetuate the remembrance of the escape of the imperial family in the Borki railway disaster, has abolished torture in his territory. The demoralization of Central Asia under European influence has already commenced. These Tartars out and out—as distinguished from the Tartars subcutaneous their masters—seem apt pupils. They have with wonderful quickness picked up the Shams and Unveracities—the pinchbeck sentiment and disloyal loyalty and all the make-believe of civilised public life, which it has taken the princes and people of India more than a century to learn. The most bigotted Chief in Islam abolishing torture as a memorial of his personal joy at the deliverance of the Great Kafir—the hated White Tzar! What next? Will it be the Mahdi giving up polygamy or slavery to please the Archbishop of Canterbury?

A CAIRO telegram of the 27th June reports, according to advices from the Nile, that Wad-el-Njumi, at the head of the Dervishes, is nearing Wady-Halfa, and that, in consequence, another Egyptian battalion, with batteries of Artillery and a squadron of Cavalry, has been ordered to proceed to the latter place.

WE read—

"Mrs. Henry Clews' bath-room is a grotto of onyx—walls, floor, ceiling, basin, tub, all being of the sculptured stone. Distilled and perfumed waters flow at a touch; it is like a cool cave where Undines sport, and no Monte Cristo could project a thing more fanciful and costly. That of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt is very beautiful. The walls are of mirrors, over which run painted vines of morning glory and passion flowers, forming an arbour suggestive of the bower where Venus bathed."

And they breakfast on birds of paradise's eggs, we suppose, and dine on sirloins of the unicorn, and have entrée of the flying-fish! It is impossible to believe they can relish the meats and wines which support ordinary humanity. It would be a libel to suggest that any one of these superfine Peris of plutocracy could elope with her father's groom or footman. They doubtless make love to the angels or the costly cupids in marble all about them in their houses.

HERR Highness Princess Victoria Louise Sophie Augusta Amélie Helena of Schleswig-Holstein and Her Serene Highness Princess Victoria Mary Augusta Louise Olga Pauline Claudine Agnes of Teck have been admitted to the Imperial Order of the Crown of India.

THE Hon'ble P. Nolan takes three months' leave, Mr. C. E. Buckland, from the Board, officiates for him as Revenue, General and Statistical Secretary to the Bengal Government, Mr. C. W. Bolton, from Alipore, acting as Secretary to the Board and Mr. F. R. S. Collier, from Shahabad, being appointed as Magistrate and Collector of the 24-Pergas.

THE Secretariat Clerical Service Examinations—Upper and Lower Divisions—will be held not simultaneously but at different times, so as to enable those who fail in the Upper to appear in the Lower Examination, of course, on payment of the fees.

THE Great Eastern Hotel Co. sued, in the Calcutta High Court, Dewan Luchmundas of Cashmere for Rs. 2,725-8 for goods sold and delivered. The ex-Dewan made many promises of payment but no money was forthcoming. The suit was undefended, and Mr. Justice Norris decreed the suit with costs on scale No. 1. The same Judge has admitted another plaint in which Messrs. Dykes & Co. sue the same Dewan for Rs. 2,440.

THE prosecution of the Garib ended in an apology from the defendant, but the Dacca Gazette holds out still. The prosecution against it has closed. The witnesses to prove malice would not appear though warrants were out against them. Charges were framed and the plea of not guilty has been entered. The case stands adjourned to the 11th for evidence of the defence.

MESSRS. Field and Tuer, the antique printers and publishers, have issued The Hieroglyphic Bible. It has not been discovered among the excavations in Egypt, nor is it inscribed in the ancient picture-writing of that country, having descended to them from an older duct of bibliopasts. In the early years of the century, some ingenious people invented a plan of translating the Bible into pictures—a very different thing from illustrating it. Of course, to turn the whole Scriptures into this kind of business would fill a large library, so selected passages only were subjected to this process. This was done by Messrs. Dean and Munday, in 1819, in their Hieroglyphic Bible. Even they could lay no claim to originality, having drawn their inspiration from the old Biblia Pauperum. And now Field and Tuer have reprinted the work of 1819. It is a quaintly got up curious publication, in which the substantives of selected passages from the Scriptures are expressed by quaint cuts to which a key is subjoined. The object of this Biblical puzzle is to put boys on their mettle to recognise the text and understand the meaning. It is doubtless hoped that, in a country possessing a great deal of superfluous wealth—where large numbers of people move about from place to place or drink and gamble away, or purchase broken bits of old China, or collect old postage stamps of different countries, or hunt after the hair of notable persons, for want of a better occupation—there will be a good demand for this curiosity.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

LORD SALISBURY, in reply to a question, informed the House of Lords that the Porte had denied the outrages said to have been committed by Mahomedans on Christians in Armenia. Several Armenians have been arrested at Erzeroum, on suspicion, for plotting against the Turkish Government.

It is expected that the Delagoa Railway question will be referred to arbitration.

It has been proposed to divert a portion of the fund of the Imperial Institute in the establishment of schools in modern languages in connection with the University and King's Colleges in London.

The British are engaged in the congenial occupation of honising their Persian cat. The Shah has arrived in England. The Prince of Wales received him at Gravesend on the 1st. They next steamed to the Speaker's Steps, Westminster Bridge, where they landed and then drove amid the cheers of an enthusiastic crowd to Buckingham Palace, where the Princess of Wales and her daughters welcomed the Shah. On the 2nd, Her Majesty's Ministers paid His Majesty a formal visit and the royal visitor lunched with the Queen at Windsor. The next day, the Shah was entertained by the Lord Mayor at the Guildhall and presented with the Freedom of the City, followed by a déjeuner. In reply to the address of the Corporation, His Majesty said that he was greatly impressed with the reception given him by the people of London, that he held the friendship, power and industry of England in the highest esteem, and that he hoped his present visit would be the commencement of a new era between the two Governments. At the déjeuner, England's Premier reciprocated the good feelings of the Shah. Lord Salisbury hoped that Persia would remain prosperous and strong. He asked for England no exclusive privilege in Persia but only freedom of trade. On behalf of the people of England, the Premier offered the friendship which would not end in a war but lead to conquests by enterprise and industry. The city was decorated, but the weather marred the brilliance of the scene. The Shah was not forgetful of Mr. Gladstone. On the 4th, he received in audience the members of Mr. Gladstone's last Cabinet. The same day Mr. Dadabhai Nowrojee presented the Shah with an address from the Parsees thanking His Majesty for the improved condition of the Zoroastrians in Persia, and received in reply the royal assurance that he was their protector and that he greatly liked the Parsees. In the evening, the Shah was sumptuously entertained by Mr. Reuben Sassoon at the Empire Theatre. The Prince and Princess of Wales and family and other distinguished personages were present.

Stirring news comes from Egypt. Lieutenant-Colonel Wodehouse opposed, on Sunday night, the advance, at the head of one thousand foot, two hundred horse and six guns, of Wad-el-Njuni and met and routed the Dervishes near Acquin. It was at first reported that two English officers were wounded, seventy Egyptians lost, five hundred of the Madhi's men killed and one of Wad-el-Njuni's guns captured. A later telegram adds that desultory fighting continued all through the 2nd with numerous casualties among British officers. Captain Mason received a bullet wound in the leg and a spear wound in the wrist. Lieutenant Cunningham was wounded, though slightly. Two more guns were captured with 50 horses. Many Madhists deserted and went over to the Egyptians. The pursuit of the Madhists was continued by Colonel Wodehouse with three Black Battalions, a squadron of Cavalry, Camel Corps and Mule Battery. Six hundred more prisoners were taken. The cavalry still kept after the remnant. The latest news is that the Dervishes are reduced to extreme distress, being kept out of the Nile and other supplies of water by the gun-boats, &c. They are mad with thirst. Colonel Wodehouse further adds that there is still a large reserve of Dervishes numbering three thousand who kept themselves away from the skirmishes during the week.

On the motion of Mr. Smith, the House of Commons have appointed a Committee to consider the messages from the Queen for provision for Prince Albert Victor of Wales and Princess Louise. They will also report what principle should be adopted in future with respect to similar grants. There was opposition of course. Mr. Labouchere could not let go the occasion without speaking out his mind as regards royalty and contended that the grants to members of the Prince of Wales's family should come out of the Civil List. Mr. Bradlaugh utilized the occasion for pressing his view with regard to the Civil List and asked that the Committee be empowered to examine the List generally.

They have started at St. Petersburg, under Government patronage, a Company to compete with English traders in Central Asia, chiefly in Persia and Afghanistan.

MR. COLOQUHOUN has been suspended. The Pioneer says it is for his partiality for a particular newspaper, communicating information after he had been warned. Mr. Coloquhoun had a considerable share in the annexation of Upper Burma. In concert with Mr. Holt-Hallet he advocated a scheme of an Indo-Chinese Railway. The bait took and poor Theebaw was coolly sacrificed. Mr. Coloquhoun had his reward, in being put in charge of the Ruby Mines as Deputy Commissioner of the District. He has now doubtless repaid the confidence placed in him by the Government.

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS presented himself before the Chief Presidency Magistrate in quest of justice, and obtained a summons against the driver of a hackney-carriage for furious driving near the Mayo statue, thereby damaging the famous carriage of Justice which the Dharma Avatar was wont to drive through the Law—Courts.

But the carriage of Justice—what is that? Let not the reader be uneasy on that score. In the old French Monarchy, they had a bed of justice. It is but natural that the British who defeated the French, should improve upon their rivals and start a carriage. We for one are prepared for even a 'Bus, the strength—only numerical—of the High Court Bench furnishing enough material for the most extensive stage—coaching.

THE Chief Engineers of the first Class as such have been declared entitled to the privilege of private entrée to Government House. We are not aware of the reasons of this Home Department notification, but this we know that the right of private interview and private entrée and the privilege of the Government House are too lightly conferred now-a-days. Undesirable persons, including such as have expiated their offences against society in a House of Correction or been otherwise disgraced, are seen airing their impudence in the Palace of the Viceroy. It was time also that the Levée List should be revised.

A REPRESENTATION was made by the Commissioner of the Presidency Division to the Government of Bengal, that there are some Zemindari dak lines that are not really paying postal lines. Zemindars are made to pay salaries to postmasters and other postal staff, altogether disproportionate to the requirements, for strictly Zemindari dak purposes, but which are needed to secure men capable of doing ordinary postal work, and sufficiently trustworthy for employment in connection with money-orders, savings banks, &c. They are no doubt more efficient for Zemindari dak purposes, but they are not needed for Zemindari dak duties, and it is not fair to allot and sanction money for one purpose under a law which contemplates its being levied for another. If the Government think it reasonable to require Zemindars to contribute to the cost of the general Postal Department, in consideration of their relief from their liability under the old regulations to carry the communications between the Magistrate and the Police, when there were no regular postal lines, it is better to declare officially and formally that intention. Be it notified to all concerned that, in lieu of the old liability, Zemindars shall henceforth pay a cess at a fixed rate, to be paid along with revenue into the treasury where the revenue is paid. This rate should be uniform throughout Bengal and may be computed so as to yield the same amount that is now paid by all the districts at the present rates. That would also place the relations of Government with regard to the cess on a more satisfactory footing.

With regard to the objection to the present system on the ground that Zemindars are made to pay salaries to postmasters and others, disproportionate to the requirements for Zemindari dak purposes, the attention of the Commissioner has been drawn to Sec. 5 of Act VIII of 1882, empowering him to revise the scale of expenditure in case of extravagant estimates.

For the rest, the Government of Bengal have replied that there are not sufficient reasons to reopen the question regarding the commutation of the liability for the expenses of the Zemindari dak. Nor do we wonder. The subject occupied the attention of Government from time to time, for half a century, before the last legislation.

THE Advocate is in raptures over the amenities of civic life as illustrated in the meetings of the local municipality. He instances the proceedings on a Thursday towards the end of June. The Engineer of the Water Works made a casual proposition to the Board to buy up the apparatus of an electric light company at Nagpore. Munshi Newal Kishore thereupon saw the darkness of his own interior and meekly sought enlightenment as a preparative to judge the question before the meeting. He inquired the distance to which the light would travel. This call for light staggered most of those present who seemed to want it badly themselves. Mr. Mulock confessed himself as much in the dark as his friend the Munshi. An enlightened Mahomedan came to the rescue. Nawab Mehdi Ali Khan had no hesitation in saying, addressing himself to the enquiring member of the Fourth Estate, "Right up to your Press." A roar of laughter, says the local chronicler, followed this extraordinary sally of wit. Mr. Thomas, another of these famous Lucknow jesters, saw his opportunity, and joined the guffaw with the "well-meant but humorous remark" that this was the opportunity for his friend to prove his mettle by purchasing the plant of the Nagpore concern and making a heroic present of it to the city. The object of this attention was equal to it, as, it is said, a broad grin lightened up the countenance of the worthy Munshi. He was not yet let off by his fellows. At any rate, the Chairman would not close the day's sport without emptying his barrel on the prostrate carcass. As leader of the company of Municipal Jesters of Lucknow, he, doubtless with the solemnity befitting such an occasion, gave "the finishing touches to the general fun, with the equally well-seasoned remark, 'You are a very punya person: there was really much punya in your giving your fellow-citizens the benefit of the electric light.'"

This crowning effort closed the performance. The force of wit could no farther go—even in Lucknow, the Paris of the East. We are not informed of the effect on the Munshi of this jest final, whether the aforesaid grin which brightened up his countenance, was heightened and broadened to sardonic perspective and chiaroscuro. At the best, the Munshi was liberal with his face only. It does not appear that the churl was a Rupee out of pocket for all his profuse grinning. Our contemporary, notwithstanding, winds up the performance with this deliberate expression of satisfaction:—

"These amenities of civic life are a pleasant feature of the local Municipal meetings."

Verily, they are not particular in Oudh!

LAST year, there were at the Alipore Reformatory School 108 boys, but the year closed with 106. That is, there were 24 new admissions and 25 were released and 1 escaped. Of the released 64, only 6 follow the trades they were taught, 9 were in jail, 1 is dead and 9 could not be traced, the remaining 45 are said to bear a good character. The question of release lately came under the consideration of Government. Towards the close of 1884, the local Government directed that all cases of juvenile offenders sentenced to imprisonment but detained in Reformatory Schools under Section 8 of Act V of 1876, who attain the age of 18 years before the expiration of their original sentences, should be reported to Government a month or two before they reach the age of 18 years. Such then continued to be the practice till Dr. Lethbridge went home on his last furlough. The Doctor was succeeded by a Civilian, and soon a notable change crept into the management of the whole Department. The Great Covenanted might come in the shoes, but was not to follow the well-beaten track, of the Little Uncovenanted. Mr. Westmacott as officiating Inspector-General considered himself competent equally with the Magistrate to exercise the authority, independently of Government, vested by Section 10 of the Act, of releasing boys on attainment of the age of 18. On his return, the permanent incumbent, finding a departure from the old practice and the express orders of Government, applied to Government, towards the end of last year, for authority to continue the new practice. The Local Government now consulted the Legal Remembrancer, and that Law Officer gave it as his opinion that "Nothing in Section 10, Act V. of 1876, authorized the unconditional release of juvenile offenders by the Magistrate or Inspector-General of Jails on their attaining 18 years, while a portion of the original sentence was still unexpired. Section 10 forbids the detention of such juveniles after they attain 18 years of age in a Reformatory School. If their sentence has still some time to run, it should be carried out in jail. The power of unconditional release is given to the Local Government by Section 11."

The Legal Remembrancer is not so certain on the question of bringing back to prison discipline the prematurely released. He says:—

"The question as to whether those juveniles who have been improperly released can be legally re-arrested is a difficult one. I am disposed to think that there is no legal obstacle, but as a practical question there appear to be serious objections to the exercise of the power in such cases as the Inspector-General of Jails refers to."

On the strength of this opinion, the Government of India simply pronounces the practice, hitherto followed of releasing such prisoners without reference to Government, illegal, and directs the Inspector-General to report to Government a month or two before the boys reach the age of 18 years.

It would be interesting to know how many little Budmashes—hobbledehays born, certainly bred up, in crime—were thus, under the régime and ruling of Mr. Westmacott, early, in hot haste, and in infringement of judicial sentences, let loose on society.

TOWARDS the end of May, the Hindus in the little Himalayan State of Mundi were overwhelmed with horror, as at the approach of the dissolution of the world, from the news that the sacred temple of Tongghur, situated on a lofty spur 9000 feet high, overlooking the upper waters of the river Beas—twenty miles off the city of Mundi—had been robbed of all its gold and silver jewellery worth at least Rs. 5,000. It only proves the ascendancy of the Iron Age. Probably, the good people of Mundi are not aware that, less than 25 years ago, the Holy of Holies, the shrine of Badrinarayan itself was despoiled of all its effects. The temple is shut up during the cold months, the Mohant and priests and every body going down to winter at the foot of the hills, leaving the God to solitary confinement with one ghee lamp burning—which, by the bye, continues to burn all the time, it is said, till the men return. On opening the door of the Great Temple, on their return, one fine summer day, what was their horror to find the whole of the valuable jewels of his Godship and the massive plate all gone! A greater surprise was reserved for the Hindu community when it was whispered that the Mohant knew more about the missing property than he pretended.

HERE, indeed, is something for candid agnosticism to ponder upon!

"Mr. Isaac Roberts, F.R.S., exhibited at the Royal Society a set of star photographs, and remarked that instead of the 350,000 stellar worlds that the astronomers of the last generation knew of, the star seekers of to-day have now discovered, in a great measure through the art of photography, no fewer than 16,000,000, with the almost perfect certainty that at least another 160,000,000 now unseen will come to view."

Photography had early increased our knowledge of the physical geography and geology of the Moon. But who could dream that this art would so indefinitely augment the sphere of our knowledge? It has already enlarged for us more than a hundred-fold God's Universe, and promises to enlarge it to an extent that passes understanding. Nor is this fresh annexation of science an addition of an unprofitable waste—a reclamation of empty space. The whole is peopled with worlds, doubtless as rich as ours or richer perhaps, whose number simply staggers the mind to contemplate. That, after all this, there should still be men of science and thought who honestly believe that such a stupendous system has no intelligent originator and sustainer is the greatest marvel of all!

A CASE of great interest in local native society, has lately been decided in the Police Court. We did not notice it hitherto for fear of prejudicing parties in a delicate contention. Even now we might have held our tongue but for the disreputable conspiracy by which it was kept out of the press. Throughout its tedious progress, not a word was reported by the exemplary purveyors to the morning papers.

Bismillah Jan, a daughter of the well-known songstress Sheereen Jan, laid a complaint in the Northern Division Magistrate's Court, in March last, against Haji Noor Mahomed, son of the late Maimon merchant Haji Zakaria Mahomed, claiming maintenance for her 4 year old son, Noor Ahmud. She alleged that Noor Mahomed had married her by Nikah, and the child was the offspring of that connection. The parties were represented by Messrs. Henderson and Garth. The Hon'ble Syud Ameer Hossein did not take up the case, but left it to Moulvie Abdool Jubbar. After a number of sittings and the examination of a large number of witnesses on both sides, the Magistrate finally disposed of the case about a month ago. The Haji denied that he was legally married to her and would not admit the paternity of the child. In support of his contention, he insisted on the mother being examined in open Court, but she as stoutly claimed the rights of a Puidanasheen, and offered to give up the original claim if the Magistrate insisted on her being openly examined. After that, Moulvi Abdool Jubbar allowed her to be examined in her palki in Court, but he was not impressed with the proof in support of the marriage. He, however, felt no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the child was an illegitimate issue of the defendant's house. The Moulvi in his judgment says that "the mother of the child asserts that the defendant is its father, and there is sufficient proof that he was in the habit of visiting her about the time she became pregnant. No evidence is adduced by the defence to rebut her statement that she was in his keeping * * * While on the other hand, the evidence of the mother that the defendant is the father of the child is corroborated by the ocula proof which the child itself furnishes. Although the witness for the defence, Aga Mahomed Ali, says that the child resembles the defendant in thinness only, no one who has seen Haji Noor Mahomed and sees the child, can fail to observe a strong resemblance between the two. The child is in fact a miniature representation of the defendant." He accordingly directed Haji Noor Mahomed to pay Rs. 15 per month for the maintenance of his illegitimate child, Noor Ahmud. The defence objected to any order for maintenance, as the Magistrate was not satisfied that there was any marriage and the claim was not on behalf of an illegitimate child. But the Magistrate was not to be scared away by such a technical objection. The suit was a claim for maintenance and not to establish the legitimacy of the child. The secondary object no doubt was, if possible, to make the child the lawful heir of the Haji. The Magistrate's decision makes the child a distant heir though, on failure of all legal heirs, and Noor, we understand, has no direct legal descendant.

As was to be expected, a motion was made to the High Court to set aside the Magistrate's order. Messrs. Justices Beverley and Trevelyan admitted it and have called upon Bismillah Jan to shew cause why the affiliation order should not be set aside. They would not express my decided opinion at that stage. At the same time, they thought that the defendant was a competent witness, and the fact that he was not examined, went very much against him. Their Lordships issued the rule in order that the matter might be more fully discussed.

THE Lieutenant-Governor returned to Belvedere yesterday.

At their Special meeting of Thursday, the Municipal Commissioners decided to apply to Government for sanction to borrow four lacs of rupees for extension of drainage operations and ten lacs for extension of Water Works. By law, they are "required to complete and extend throughout Calcutta drainage works and open out and improve bustees," at an annual cost of not less than two lacs of rupees, to be raised by Debenture loan with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council. The Drainage system having proved a nuisance in the generation of sewage gas, the Commissioners would have been prudent to restrict themselves to the lowest sum for this particular loan enjoined by law, without hastening the completion of a work which will have to be exchanged for a more healthful disposal of the sewage of the town.

At the Ordinary meeting of the same day, the City Fathers were unaccountably prudent. They deferred the acceptance of Mr. Harrington's offer of destruction of the town refuse. They would not bind themselves to him for ten years, without more deliberation and consideration of other offers towards the same purpose. They are scarcely to be blamed for this hesitation, if it is in good faith. But it is not bona fide, seeing that there is no alternative scheme in esse. Some canny persons bent on making a cat's paw of Mr. Harrington, are staving off his contract for the purpose of fishing for rival plans in posse.

COLONEL NEILL, Superintendent of Works, Calcutta Division, is preparing to retire from India. He applied for special leave which the Government would not grant. He therefore goes on furlough. He has just completed the transfer of the Akia brick factory and estate to the contractor Rai Bahadur Gunga Bistu Roy, for five years, commencing from next August. The Baboo takes the same on a rental of rupees six thousand a year, and undertakes to supply the Government with 250 lacs of first class bricks in the first year, and in the subsequent years such quantities as Government might require, at the fixed price of Rs. 8 and 4 per thousand bricks, with liberty to sell to outsiders any surplus quantity that the factory might be made to produce. He will besides pay for the use of the machinery. The Factory, we understand, has been worked to the great advantage of Government by the present Superintendent, and we hope, in accepting the offer of the Bahadur contractor, the Government does not yield to any panic of the hour. The Colonel would also like to see Government retire from the Burtakar Iron Works.

ON Wednesday, Mr. Marsden issued summonses against Mr. Chesney, the editor-in-chief, and Mr. Dare, the printer and publisher, of the Pioneer. He was all gracious to Mr. Rose who made the application on behalf of Captain Hearsey. He did not take any evidence as to publication in this city, but was only anxious that sufficient time was allowed to the Pioneer to answer the summonses which he made returnable in three weeks. It was a superfluous kindness, as Allahabad though geographically 504 miles distant, is within 24 hours by rail from Calcutta. The Pioneer is in hourly telegraphic communication with this capital, and must be apprised, no sooner it happens, of every action taken about itself. Captain Hearsey's case, in particular, is no surprise to it. He and his friends have been complaining ever since of the chuckle with which it related its damaging personal history of the Captain, when he was sentenced to jail, at the information of its Editor, by the Cantonment Magistrate of Allahabad. If it has any defence, it is to be presumed that it is ready with it. Still as Mr. Marsden has only followed his ordinary practice in such cases, there is nothing to be said. This preliminary tenderness will not avail in the long run. The prospect is far from pleasant for the Pioneer or the Press either. It is believed in well-informed circles, that the case will be committed. Mr. Marsden will hardly take the responsibility of deciding so important an issue, with the prospect of another criticism in the High Court on his proceedings. It would be well perhaps for all parties and for the liberty of the Press too, in which we are chiefly interested, that the matter went before a jury. Although wishing the justice of the law to Captain Hearsey, we are naturally inspired with sympathy for the head of our craft, Mr. Chesney. Under the best circumstances, it is most troublesome for a literary man to be involved in a lawsuit, particularly as accused of criminal libel. We are not surprised to see that the original author of all this bad blood has quietly slipped out of the country. Mr. Kipling, whom Captain Hearsey identified with the writer of the account of the Congress at Allahabad, in the Pioneer, in which he was first called a "brown Captain," an offence which was avenged by Captain Hearsey on the person of the Editor, making it blue, in the latter's sanctum, in the heart of the great Pioneer office, has placed the sets and many countries between himself and Captain Hearsey and the Law of British India. He will scarcely give the offended Captain an opportunity of getting at him, either with a whip or a summons. For more reasons than one, Mr. Kipling, we believe, is not likely to be back in this country. He is one of the few men of genius discovered of late in India, and is sure of an honourable career as a man of letters in any of the Colonies or in England.

CAPTAIN HEARSEY seems at last in luck: way. He has suffered so much that no one ought to grudge him a crumb of comfort when he gets it, particularly as there is no knowing who her the silver lining just now discernible in his Kismet will endure to the end of even the present chapter. Be that as it may, let him enjoy the shining hour. His case is attracting notice in England. Already his treatment in the Naini Jail at Allahabad has been brought to the notice of the Secretary of State. His friends were ready to bring the matter before Parliament, but they preferred to give Lord Cross a quiet opportunity of learning the case. Accordingly, the Statesman containing Captain Hearsey's letter regarding the extraordinary discipline to which Dr. Hall subjected him, was placed in his Lordship's hands. Although Lord Cross said he could not interfere until the matter came before him through the proper channel of the Government of India, it is a great advantage to Captain Hearsey that the Secretary of State is acquainted with his statement.

Meanwhile, in India, the Government of the N.W. Provinces has taken up the case and ordered an inquiry, by a special officer who will examine both parties, into the charges brought by Captain Andrew Hearsey against Dr. G. C. Hall, Superintendent of the Naini Jail.

WHILE the masses here feel the scarcity of the mango crop, Madras is over-stocked with that fruit of the season.

It must even be pleasant to be called upon to discuss the mango. But in regard to things contributory to human nourishment, the reality is better than the reflection, and even at the fag end of the season one cares more for the gastronomic discussion than the purely intellectual. Still lovers of the fruit divine will be glad to learn that an exhaustive monograph on mangoes by Mr. Maries is ready. This accomplished horticultural expert, lately in the employ of the Maharaja of Durbhunga and now in Gwalior, appears to have paid much attention to this fruit and has written a work on it. A correspondent of the Statesman informs the public that his manuscript is ready and now in the hands of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society. We hope there will be no unnecessary delay in putting it in the printer's hand.

Meanwhile, "Afooz"—the correspondent in question—gives the following information :—

"Malda' mangoes are known in Calcutta only as 'Fuzli,' a big coarse fruit which I certainly class as 2nd rate fruit. The history of it was given sometime ago by Mr. Reily of the Chanchal Estate, Malda. Malda mangoes of Saharanpore, Lucknow, and other gardens in Upper India are the celebrated 'Shah Pusund' (Shah's favourite), a big, irregular shaped fruit, sometimes weighing 3lbs., and I think a better fruit than Fuzli to eat. This is also common in Malda and Tirhoot. It is marked No. 18 in Mr. Maries's list and rate 2nd class. The best Malda mango is 'Gopal Bogh,' the food of the god Gopal. This is a dirty looking small fruit, spotted and specked over with black, often reddish peach on the top and a whitish bloom, it weighs about 6 to 8 ounces only. This equals the finest Afooz from Bombay. There are several varieties very much like this, but none to equal it. It is a shy bearer generally, and not known in the market. I obtained fruits from Chanchal. Other Malda's are 'Berrua Malda,' 'Gowraya Malda,' 'Kusapat,' 'Chipka Malda,' 'Kova Pahari,' 'Subza Malda,' 'Safada,' 'Mohun Bogh' or 'Ram Pershad,' 'Jhalli Bandi,' 'Lamba Budaya,' 'Dilshaz,' the four last being very late fruits. I believe all these mangoes are well known under these names in Malda, and all were planted and many bore fruit in the model plantations laid out by Mr. Maries in Durbhungah. By the way writing about these plantations it would be well if the Agri-Horticultural Society would procure grafts of all sorts of mangoes from these celebrated gardens; such collections of fruits do not exist in any other place in India. Upwards of 150 sorts of mangoes, all good ones, are there collected from all parts of the country at enormous trouble by Mr. Maries. Most of the grafts made by him were from trees landed with fruit, so that the names of the trees are correctly given."

The Fuzli is a fraud and a delusion.

WE are glad to notice signs of activity among the Sonar Baniyas—Savarna Vaniks or caste of gold traders. Notwithstanding the foolish contempt with which the anticommercial spirit of Hindu theocracy held them in as a caste, they must, as money scribes and bankers, have played a most important part in Hindu society. Debarred from any other career, they naturally acquired the vices of a single narrow attachment. They clung to money-making until they came to vegetate in it. They lost the better qualities of mercantile men—their very enterprise and activity, until they almost justified the reproaches of the Rishis against them. We, therefore, hail with pleasure every symptom of renaissance in this essential component of our society.

At a meeting of their castemen at the house of Raja Doorga Churn Law of this city and under his presidency, the Sonar Baniyas have deemed it "necessary to establish an Association having for its object the relief of persons suffering from poverty or incurable diseases and for educating and maintaining pauper children" of that community.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Health's Defences. None save the strongest can with impunity pass through the sudden transitions from wet to dry, from cold to muggy weather so prevalent during the autumnal and early winter months. Influenza, bronchitis, cough, sore throat, or quinsey will attack those most watchful of their health; but they can readily arrest any of these complaints by rubbing Holloway's Ointment twice a day upon the skin over the affected parts, and by assisting its corrective action with appropriate doses of his Pills. This well-known, safe, and easy mode of treatment efficiently protects the invalid both from present and future danger without weakening or even disturbing the system in the slightest degree.

It is thoroughly and entirely a Sonar Bania movement and only Sonar Baniyas will find relief and employment in the Association. It has originated with Baboo Odit Churn Mullick, who has been at it for several years. Were it not for the selfish obstructiveness of the late Raja Rajender Mullick, the institution would long since have been a fait accompli. It is a queer enigma that a famous philanthropist should have prevented an unexceptionable scheme of benevolence to the members of his own tribe. And it is a fine illustration of the law of compensation, that the death of a man almost universally mourned, should be the possibility of a distinctly and eminently good work.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1889.

THE SALE OF JUSTICE.

IF loyalty is the obligation of the subject, protection is the responsibility of the sovereign. Protection is the people's due and the Ruler's duty—protection from internal as well as external aggression. This protection is not only the only substantial ground for the people's loyalty—their duty to support the Government—but forms the only justification for taxation. The people must pay for the army and navy, the Police and the Courts, which must be employed and maintained for preserving the peace, external and internal—protecting the people from enemies without and rebels within, from civil outrage and discord—the mutual aggressions of subjects, whether arising from blood-thirstiness, hate, avarice or mere mischievousness. This is an unquestionable principle of the organization called the State—most others are subsidiary or debatable. In so far as a State performs its service as the protecting agency well, it is entitled to the attachment of the citizens composing it and obtains it. Failure, on the other hand, brings on it discredit and causes dissatisfaction, culminating, according to the degree of its ill success, in disaffection. It is only where failure is not only marked but at once habitual and systematic—that is, where it is a necessary consequence of its radical maxims and method—that such an extreme impression is imprinted on the people. The British Government in India leaves nothing to be desired in respect of the first branch of its duty of protection. Peace, external and internal, is maintained to perfection. The empire is free from foreign invasion and from risings within. Even civil disorder is well kept down. Thus the most important part of Governmental functions is thoroughly fulfilled. Then, turning to the more delicate, and very difficult, part of general civil protection, we first experience signs of weakness. Protection from outrage—specially the violence or fraud of professional offenders and leagued enemies of society, is still far from completely achieved. There has unquestionably been great progress in protection. The sense of security has been growing from the third decade of the century, but Dacoity has not yet ceased and burglary and thefts are too common. The Police is untrustworthy and inefficient. The judicial administration is full of inequalities and anomalies and obscurities and obstructions. Everything must now-a-days be done through the courts, and the courts are costly and frequently presided over by uninstructed or incompetent men. Practically precluded from deliberation, encouraged to sweep off causes as if they were so many nuisances, commanded to make haste rather than make sure of correctness of decision, their function as a protecting agency is very indifferently discharged. And, worst of all, such justice as is dispensed is simply sold!

There is no occasion to start. We are far from accusing the judiciary of corruption, specially of the vulgar kind. That corruption of a sufficiently mean and dirty kind exists among our public officers, native and European, revenue, civil and criminal, cannot, after recent revelations in different parts of the empire, be gainsaid. But there has been a vast improvement in this respect. On the whole, the majority of them are free from the suspicion of avarice, direct or indirect. Not so the Government. We use the word avarice advisedly, instead of bribery. With corruption, the Government is not connected, nor is chargeable. Its offence is different, but nonetheless mean. There is no secrecy—nothing underhand. All is aboveboard, but not all correct. It practises extortion, though not fraudulent extortion. Its avarice is confessed, and it is legal. So much, though, the worse for the law! It makes a business of its courts—a trade of its function of giving civil protection. It uses its privilege of deciding the differences between its subjects for the purpose of making money. In fine, it sells justice by public advertisement.

It does not, to be sure, sell its decisions to the highest bidder. But it virtually does something of the kind. Its judgment-seat is securely guarded by sentinels, and there is no approaching it without a fee, more or less heavy. We do not allude to the gratification to the lictors and the myrmidons surrounding the house of justice, but to perquisite of the State which is the condition sine que non of a hearing. No subject is permitted to cry to the sovereign for redress from a hurt to person or credit, without this preliminary payment. A subject cannot complain of having been pounded to a jelly by a public servant, unless he is prepared to spend a Rupee at the outset. This is admitted by European philosophers to be indefensible—to the Asiatic mind it is simply atrocious. But the preliminary fee is the least part of the expense to which the suitor is, in the long run, put. The aggrieved man is not only practically forced to employ professional advocates, but every step in the progress of his complaint is attended with legal expense, without counting the illegal smart money he has to pay. In civil causes, it is far worse. The State itself levies an ad valorem duty on the amount of claim. Of course, the smart money is exacted on the same approved principle, while the services of professional advocates are equally costly. Besides, all the numerous petitions and pleadings and papers which have to be presented are taxed. Black-mail is levied on each such presentation. Or, shall we say, white-mail, considering that it is a charge imposed and regulated by law—whatever one might think of the justice or policy of that law? Between one impost and another, the pursuit of justice is a most costly luxury which only the very rich can possibly indulge in. To others, it is a ruinous quest. Considering the kind of article often dispensed, the game is scarcely worth the candle. To the poor, the costs are simply prohibitive.

The British Government derives a large revenue from its monopoly of deciding the disputes of its subjects. It has grown sogrey in this evil livelihood, that it scarcely suspects its own disgrace. It is bad enough to make the people as suitors pay for the machinery of justice, how much worse when a regular profit is made! It is not even a case of a little surplus remaining after the payment of establishments, but an absolute and unblushing trading so as to leave the largest margin of gain. The surplus is the object, or has come to be—not the maintenance of judicial establishments or the dispensation of justice. The balance is the thing—the disbursement a secondary consideration. On principle, every pice of the stamps and fees should be expended in the improvement of the machinery of justice, increasing the salaries of the judiciary and the ministerial and other auxiliary agencies, providing better accommodation, aids and arrangements for the health and comfort of all concerned, in the shape of fine court-houses and offices and out-offices and conveniences for judges, clerks, advocates, officers, bailiffs, messengers, libraries, furniture, thermantidotes, &c. If these are thoroughly well-provided, then the clear duty of Government is to remit some of the imposts or reduce their scale. Instead, the establishments are starved and crying requirements are withheld, in order to swell the unholy surplus. The late Chief Justice of Bengal felt the enormity of the practice, and endeavoured to rouse the conscience of the State. He wrote a trenchant, well-argued minute on the subject. To convert an impecunious Government, ambitious of military enterprize, was beyond an archangel's eloquence. It would require long years of hammering to awake our rulers to the consciousness of the guilt of appropriating the proceeds of judicial taxation.

THE SMALL CAUSE COURT.

THE Court of Small Causes in the metropolis affords a good illustration of official ethics on Judicial Finance. Its efficiency is not only not perfect, but almost below par. It is an engine for the manufacture of judgments, and, working by steam, it succeeds in turning out the required number of the article. Under the action of a blind force, the quality is necessarily very inferior to that of the productions of conscious deliberate human volition. Hasty justice is nasty justice. It is enough if it come up to mill average. Besides rapidity of production, mill produce has the recommendation of cheapness. This Small Cause justice has not even that merit. The reason is that the suitors are taxed out of all proportion to the expenditure for their benefit. The policy is to extract as large a surplus as possible, to be diverted to the general treasury. This is not only unreasonable, but involves an aggravation of wrong. Under the circumstances, there is no excuse for imperfection of quality of the article given to the public. The surplus ought certainly to be utilised in improving the efficiency of the Court. The imperfections of a double quick procedure might, to a great extent, be obviated by enlarged first class machinery and by employing more hands and expert hands. The liabilities of quick proceedings might be reduced to a minimum by an able and well-provided judiciary, assisted by able and honest ministerial and other auxiliary agencies. A summary system specially requires the best men and appliances to work it. And in the present case there is money enough to provide the best of every kind. The public themselves who use the court pay handsomely for all possible efficiency. But a good deal of the payment, is misappropriated to the dwarfing and impoverishing of the institution.

The Calcutta Court of Small Causes is thus a profitable concern to Government, whatever the justice doled out through it to the people. The cry of the Judges, for several years past, has been that the work has increased, that they are overworked and that they want more hands still. The Government does not find it convenient to respond to the cry in the direction suggested. Several expedients are tried, but none removes the grievance. For the true remedy is not applied—the obvious necessity of strengthening the Bench is not recognised. The Government will not slacken its grasp of the surplus. Instead of appointing additional Judges to dispose of the increased business, it adopted an artificial method of reducing the crush and relieving the judges. This was no other than to divert a great proportion of the judicial work to be made over to the executive. It was an astute measure but a retrograde one, tending to intensify the perfunctory character of summary judicature and lowering the already not very exalted credit of the Court. We allude to the change by which the head of the ministerial agency, the Registrar, was vested with judicial powers to a certain amount. Accordingly, all the pettier causes of this petty Court—the suits for sums up to Rs. 20, which form the staple—came to be dealt with by this officer. Thus, by one stroke of the pen as it were, the work of the Judges was lessened. But litigation in a growing city kept up its normal progress, and this doubtful reform failed to give permanent relief. Soon the cry for more hands was heard again. Then recourse was had to what is called the Revision system—of the famous Mr. Tom Jones of the same Court—under which one Judge took upon himself the task of finding for all the Judges their day's work. He took a survey of all the causes, postponed such of them as could be deferred, decided the ex-parte ones, leaving the other Judges free to take up only contested causes. It was a miserable expedient which contained the seeds of its own dissolution. It had no recommendation but that of novelty, and was simply impracticable. Introduced in 1887, it could not be worked for more than three months. It only added to the inconvenience of the public and retarded the stream of justice. On their visit to the Court, the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Wilson were so impressed with its absurdity, that they knocked it on the head.

In the latter end of 1886, Government addressed the Court, recommending it to reduce its establishment, if possible. Mr. Millet, the Chief Judge, replied that the establishment was poorly paid and that no hand could be spared. There was another call for reduction in 1887, when Mr. Millet was on leave and Mr. Seonce was acting Chief Judge. This was Mr. Jones's opportunity. He submitted his scheme through the Chief pro tem. The Government wanted the opinion of the Chief Judge and his associates. Mr. Millet had now rejoined his place, but was induced, after some hesitation, to give his partial support to parts of the plan, while Messrs. Acworth, Beeby and Sreenath Roy were opposed to any reduction. They argued that the scale of pay was already low and that a still reduced scale would only invite corruption. The matter is still under the consideration of Government, for nothing has been heard in reply yet. Meanwhile, Mr. Millet again went on furlough, preparatory it is believed to retiring, leaving the field open to the irrepressible Mr. Jones. Mr. Jones lost no time in reviving his plan. He took upon himself to inform Government that the Judges have now accepted his scheme and have already begun to act under it, vacancies being filled accordingly. Thus, Superintendent Warrant Département from Rs. 115 to Rs. 80. Head assistant Rs. 65 to Rs. 40. Other assistants from Rs. 50 to Rs. 30. Rs. 40 to

Rs. 30. Rs. 33 to Rs. 25. Rs. 30 to Rs. 25. Rs. 25 to Rs. 20 and Rs. 20 to Rs. 15. Burkundaz Rs. 7 to Rs. 6.

It must be remembered that Government has not pronounced itself one way or the other on the scheme, and yet it is being given effect to. We trust Government will inquire and ascertain for itself if this is so, and insist upon knowing the reason why.

We may here mention that the Appraiser draws Rs. 120 a month, his commission in addition averaging from Rs. 500 to Rs. 600 a month. The European bailiff's pay is Rs. 120, commission about Rs. 200. These and the European staff and Judges are not proposed to be touched, the pruning knife being applied to the native and the ill-paid staff.

A second trial was given to the Revision System. It failed as it was bound to do, as before. And now, notwithstanding repeated failures, it is again to be enforced. After the first failure, in another six months' time, one Judge and the Registrar were told off to revise the cases. This too was found unworkable by Mr. Millet and abandoned. The present plan is to appoint the Registrar the sole revising Judge, and to appoint a Deputy Registrar with a staff of clerks, for the Registrar's duties. This new expenditure must be met and who better suited for the sacrifice than the poor, unprotected native subordinate staff?

INTERMAHOMEDAN SECTARIAL FEUDS IN UPPER INDIA.

FOR some time past, there had been a great ferment in the town of Lucknow, owing to a serious dispute between the Shi'ahs and Sunnis. Both the sects claimed the right of offering their prayers in a particular mosque. There was an appeal to the authorities, and they in their usual way bungled over a difficulty capable of easy solution. The question ought to have been definitely settled. There should have been an enquiry as to the founder and foundation of the mosque—whether a Shi'ah or a Sunni—and in the absence of any positive proof to the contrary, the people of the sect of the founder should alone have been allowed to pray in it. But no, the authorities willed differently, and both the sects were left free to use the mosque for prayer. This was sure to lead to a conflict, for the Sunnis take serious exception to the form of the Azan (call to prayer) in vogue among the Shi'ahs, while the Shi'ahs insist upon having it. We are not well informed of the details of this quarrel, but we can unhesitatingly say that the two sects should never have been permitted to pray in the same identical mosque, as we know that, though both the sects belong to the same religion, the form of prayer of the one is highly repugnant to the other. We do not think that Protestants and Roman Catholics can be conveniently permitted to offer their prayers in the same church. The official attitude of impartial neutrality and the absence of precautionary measures on the part of the city authorities, in the beginning, led to the inevitable result. There was a bloody riot between the rival sects, in which a large number of men were seriously wounded. Numerous arrests were made by the Police, and the rioters of both the sects hauled up before the city Magistrate. The trial was long and arduous—a trial to the Magistrate himself who finally decided it on the 10th instant.

All the defendants of the Sunni sect, numbering 8, have been acquitted, while of the 13 Shi'ah defendants 4 have been acquitted and of the remaining 9, the ring-leader Ahmad Hosain, has been sentenced to 6 months' rigorous imprisonment, Asaff who had struck the Duffadar Heera Singh, to 3 months' and the rest (7) each to 2 months' hard labor. We give below a translation from the Musheer-i-Kaisar newspaper of Lucknow of the 19th instant, which will give some idea of the commotion caused by this dispute in that city.

"The local correspondant of the Oudh Akbbar writes:—

"Monday the 10th June was a very interesting day in the City Magistrate's Court. From 10 A.M., people began to come in groups. The City Magistrate was unusually late. The suspense that prevailed was worth seeing. The people were mustering strong on all sides.

At 10 minutes after 3 P.M., the Magistrate's carriage was seen coming. All was confusion for a time. All eyes were raised at once and impatient glances were thrown at the Magistrate to read, as it were, his thoughts in his face. Alighting from the carriage, he ordered the Court Inspector to clear the Court—the accused in the case were alone left inside the Court. Nobody was allowed even to stand in the verandah. As for the arrangements outside the court, 200 constables from the Lines were posted all round, so that nobody was allowed to move from his place. Inside the court, were on duty Baboo Sitaram and the Inspector of the Sadatgunge thanah and Niaz Muhomed Khan, Inspector of the Wazirgunge Thanah, and some other officers. Your correspondent was also present in the court. With the City Magistrate also sat Mr. Oliver, Secretary to the Municipality, and Sah Goburdhun Dass, Honorary Magistrate. The accused belonging to the Shiah party were called up first. The Court Inspector called out the names of the accused. Of these four persons were discharged, seven, viz.,—Nazir, Hadi, Raza Hussain, son of Ameer Ali, Chittun, Enayet-Abbas, Mehdi, and Muhomed Hussain, were sentenced, under Section 147 of the Indian Penal Code, each to two months' rigorous imprisonment. The accused Asaf, who struck Heera Singh Duffadar with a stick, was ordered three months' hard labour. Ahmud Hussain, the ring-leader of the Shiah party, was sentenced to six months' hard labour. They were handcuffed in the presence of the Magistrate and removed to the jail. About 3.30 P.M., the Court Inspector read out the names of the accused of the Sunni party who were placed before the magistrate. His worship discharged all of them, eight in number, and told them to go to their respective homes without making any noise. The people—belonging to both the parties—present at the time the case was going on, numbered about 5,000 or 6,000. The Sunnis in large numbers went to the "durga" of Shah Minah Saheb, to offer prayers of gratitude, and from thence they went to their homes quietly. At that time, the police were stationed here and there, lest, elated with their success and discomfiture of their enemies and fired with an unconquerable zeal, they did any mischief. Now the case has come to an end. Nobody was allowed bail till the evening. On the 11th, they were removed to the sudder jail."

This is not only a lamentable business but a sufficiently serious one. We trust the Government of the North-Western Provinces will take the matter up in earnest. It is not one to be left to the tender mercies of the local bureaucracy. It is never safe to allow tribes or classes or other bodies of people to settle their differences by force. The practice quickly grows into a habit—the contagion is apt to spread from man to man, from class to class. Even in Bengal or Madras, such things are demoralising. How much more so in more martial countries! The recruiting ground of Northern India is about the last place where they could be permitted. It is bad enough when Hindus and Mahomedans fall out, but when Mahomedans meet Mahomedans then comes the tug of war. These religious feuds are no new phenomenon in Oudh. They have ever been the bane of the Province inhabited by Hindus and a large Sunni population ruled by a bigotted Shiah Court. They specially disgraced the weak régime of the last King. Ordinarily, the Hindus put up with much inconvenience and injustice. If the Sunni subjects were disposed to be accommodating, the Pathan mercenaries from Central Asia were always ready to resent any offence. The streets of Lucknow were from time to time drenched with blood from the fights between the Candaharis and the Shiahs. Happily, under the strong arm and impartiality of the British, such things have been suppressed, and the lion and the lamb drink peacefully of the same fountain.

We are confident that Government will not permit their revival. But what a commentary are they on the amiable visions of an elected legislature in the immediate future in our unhappy land!

JESSORE DISTRICT.

Narail, 5th July, 1889.

Owing to the incessant showers of rain, the price of rice, which had decreased to Rs. 3, has again risen to Rs. 3-4. The Rabi crop also does not promise well. The public health is good.

A petition was lately sent to the Government, praying to put some check upon the alleged tyranny of Mr. Shelvey, an indigo-planter of Nawahatta, over the poor rayyets of the village. Our Sub-Divisional Officer went down to the place to enquire into the validity of the charges brought against the gentleman. The Sanjibani has appointed Baboo K. S. Sukul, Principal, to investigate the matter. We have the highest opinion of Mr. Shelvey, and hope the charges will be found groundless.

RESOLUTION.

The further experience that has been gained in the management of the Forest School, and in the instruction afforded at that institution, has rendered some modifications necessary in the Memorandum of Conditions promulgated with the Circular Resolutions [of the Government of India, in the Revenue and Agricultural Department (Forests) No. 12-F., dated 30th May 1887, and No. 19-F., dated 27th September 1887.] The Governor-General in Council is, therefore, pleased to prescribe for adoption in future the following "Prospectus of the Imperial Forest School, Dehra Dun," in supersession of that Memorandum:—

Prospectus of the Imperial Forest School, Dehra Dun.

There are three Courses—one in English, for candidates for the Ranger's Certificate; a second in Hindustani, for candidates for the Forester's Certificate; and a third and higher Course for candidates for the Sub-Assistant's Certificate.

2. Three classes of students are admissible:—

- (1) Government students.
- (2) Students from Native States.
- (3) Private students.

ADMISSION OF GOVERNMENT STUDENTS.

To the Ranger's Course.

3. Government students may be selected by Conservators of Forests, acting under such orders as may from time to time be given by the Local Government or Administration concerned. Such students usually receive a Government stipend.

4. Students must, on admission to the School, be not less than 18 or more than 25 years of age. Exceptions to this rule require the previous sanction of the Government of India. Each candidate must furnish a certificate of sound health, good vision and hearing, from the Civil Surgeon of the station nearest to his place of residence.

5. It is the duty of the officer who selects the candidate to satisfy himself that he is of good moral character and active habits; also that he possesses fair powers of observation, sense of locality, and such other qualifications as are necessary for an officer of the Executive Staff of the Forest Department.

6. For the above purpose, candidates may, before presenting themselves at the Entrance Examination, be required to prove their fitness for Forest work by service in the Subordinate Staff of the Department, either permanent or temporary, for a period of twelve months. Exceptions to this rule require the previous sanction of the Local Government.

7. Candidates for admission to the Ranger's Course must pass before an Officer of the School, or before a Conservator of Forests (or such other Officer as the Local Government may appoint to represent him), an Entrance Examination in the following subjects, viz.:—

- English—composition and conversation.
- Arithmetic.
- Algebra—up to and including quadratic equations.
- Elementary Plane Geometry.
- Mensuration—lengths, area, and volume.

Conservators of Forests, including the Forest Officers of Coorg and Ajmere, are required to despatch to the Director, on the 15th March in each year, an application for the number of sets of examination papers to be sent to them for the candidates of their respective Circles, or an intimation that no such papers are required. The examination papers will be forwarded from the Director's office, under sealed cover, not later than the 15th of the following month.

The examinations will be held simultaneously throughout India on dates, between the 15th and the 25th May, fixed by the Director or at the time that the examination papers are sent out. Examinations held on dates other than those thus fixed by him are treated as invalid. The candidates' written answers will, after countersignature (with date) by the Officer presiding at the examination, be returned in a sealed cover to the Deputy Director of the School. The Director will subsequently inform Conservators of the result of the examination.

To the Forester's Course.

8. Candidates for admission to the Forester's Course may be similarly selected; but, in lieu of passing the Entrance Examination laid down in paragraph 7, must furnish a certificate of having passed the Middle Class Examination in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, or an equivalent standard in another Province, as well as a certificate that they possess a competent knowledge of Urdu or Hindi.

To the Sub-Assistant's Course.

9. Candidates for admission to the Sub-Assistant's Course may be selected in the same manner as candidates for the Ranger's Course, and must satisfy the conditions required by paragraphs 3 to 5 for Ranger candidates. Unless they are University graduates in Arts, Science, or Engineering, they must pass an Entrance Examination in the following subjects, viz. :-

English---composition and conversation.

Arithmetic.

Algebra---up to and including quadratic equations, the binomial theorem, progressions, permutations and combinations, simple and compound interest, annuities.

Elementary Plane Geometry.

Plane Trigonometry---up to and including the solution of triangles.

Mensuration---Lengths, areas, and volumes.

Elementary Statics---composition and resolution of forces, moments, and the mechanical powers.

ADMISSION OF STUDENTS WHO ARE ALREADY FOREST RANGERS.

10. Forest Rangers who may be sent to the School in order to qualify themselves for further advancement either to the higher grades of Rangers, or to the class of Sub-Assistant Conservator, may be above the age laid down in paragraph 4, and are not required to furnish the medical certificate prescribed in that paragraph. They must, as a general rule, pass the Entrance Examination for admission to the Ranger's or the Sub-Assistant's Course, as the case may be; but in exceptional cases they may be admitted without passing that Examination, if the Conservator of Forests under whom they are serving can satisfy the Director of their ability to profit sufficiently by the instruction given at the School.

ADMISSION OF STUDENTS FROM NATIVE STATES.

11. Candidates from Native States must apply, through the Darbar, either to the Director or to a Conservator of Forests. The conditions for their admission are similar to those laid down for Government students. Compliance with paragraph 6 is, however, not insisted on; but it is considered desirable to depute candidates for one year's practical work under a British Conservator of Forests, prior to their joining the School.

ADMISSION OF PRIVATE STUDENTS.

12. Private persons, who may desire to join the classes, must apply for admission through a Conservator of Forests of the Province in which they reside, and must otherwise comply with the rules.

13. Private students must supply their own note-books and stationery. Books from the book-depôt are supplied to them on cash payment only. Breakages and damages of School property must be paid for at once. As security for the due fulfilment of this condition, each private student, on entering the School, is required to deposit a sum of Rs. 50 with the Director, the balance of which will be returned to him when he leaves.

14. Private students must, during their stay at the School, defray their own expenses, including the cost of travelling. Fees are not at present charged.

GENERAL RULES.

15. Candidates admitted to the School must join at Dehra Dun on the 25th June next after the date of their passing the Entrance Examination.

16. The Courses of training extend over 21 months, the time being spent as follows :--

1st July---31st October	...	At Dehra.
1st November---22nd December	...	In camp.
23rd December---5th January	...	Vacation.
6th January---31st May	...	In camp.
June	...	Vacation.

17. At the close of the Course of instruction, successful students will receive a Ranger's, Forester's, or Sub-Assistant's Certificate, as the case may be. Students of special merit may be granted certificates with Honours. Students of the Ranger's Course who fail to obtain the Ranger's Certificate, may be granted the Forester's Certificate; and, similarly, students of the Sub-Assistant's Course who fail to obtain the Sub-Assistant's Certificate, may be granted the Ranger's Certificate.

18. Students who have completed their Course leave the School at the end of March; but any student who has failed to obtain his certificate may, at the discretion of the Director, and with the sanction of the Local Government or Darbar, be retained for re-examination in June, or to complete another full year's course of instruction. Conservators of Forests whose students are about to undergo their final examinations are required to inform the Director, before the end of February in each year, as to the place to which each student on leaving the School is required to go, and as to the amount of the advance, if any which may be given to enable him to reach it.

19. The average minimum monthly cost of living at the School is calculated to be as follows, viz. :--

		Rs.
For students living in {	Ranger's Class	...
	Forester's Class	...
the Native style ... {	Sub-Assistant's Class	...

For students living in { Ranger's and Forester's Classes ... 38
the European style... { Sub-Assistant's Class ... 58

The above figures include the cost of food, ordinary clothes, uniform, rent, books, and instruments. The expenses of travelling and camping of the year are calculated to come to something like an additional Rs. 4 per mensem for each of the two first-named classes, Rs. 7 for each of the next two classes, and Rs. 10 for the last class. The ordinary travelling allowances admissible to Government students who are in receipt of the above stipends will cover these expenses.

20. All Government students below the rank of Forest Ranger must, unless otherwise permitted by special order of the Director, live in the School quarters, if rooms therein are available. The rent charged varies from Rs. 6 to Rs. 18 per annum, according to salary. Private students may be given quarters on the same terms.

21. During the Course of instruction, the Director will furnish Conservators, or Darbars of Native States, with monthly reports on the character, application, and progress of the students sent by them to the School.

22. Students are liable to the following punishments :--

- (1) Reprimand by the Teacher in class.
- (2) Reprimand by the Director or the Deputy Director at any time.
- (3) Reprimand before a Meeting, convened by the Director, of not less than three School Officers, one of whom must be either the Director or the Deputy Director. The proceedings of the Meeting will be reported to the Conservator or Native State deputing the student, and, if the Meeting so decides, a note of them will be made on his final Certificate.
- (4) The Director, acting with the consensus of the Meeting referred to under (3), has power to inflict, in addition, a fine to the extent of one-third of the salary or allowances of the student for a period not exceeding three months.
- (5) The Director, acting with the consensus of a full Meeting of the School Officers presided over by himself, has power to dismiss any student for misconduct; and a student thus dismissed cannot be re-admitted to the School.

The Director may remand any student who, in his opinion, is not sufficiently promising.

PROSPECTS OF GOVERNMENT STUDENTS.

23. Holders of the Ranger's Certificate are eligible, on the occurrence of vacancies in the Province or Circle to which they belong, for appointment to the class of Ranger; and, after five years' approved service as Ranger, they are eligible for promotion to the class of Sub-Assistant Conservator. Holders of the Forester's Certificate are eligible, on the occurrence of vacancies in the Province or Circle to which they belong, for appointment to the class of Forester. But any student who has gained the Forester's Certificate with Honours is eligible for appointment to the class of Ranger after 2 years' satisfactory service; and, similarly, any student who has gained the Ranger's Certificate with Honours is eligible for appointment to the class of Sub-Assistant Conservator after 2 years' satisfactory service.

24. No person who does not hold a Ranger's Certificate, or a Forester's Certificate with Honours, can be appointed to the class of Ranger, without the special sanction, in each case, of the Local Government. When, in consequence of the absence of qualified candidates, other persons are, under this rule, appointed to the class of Ranger, holders of the Forester's Certificate are ceteris paribus considered to have a prior claim.

25. Holders of the Sub-Assistant's Certificate are eligible, on the occurrence of vacancies in the Province or Circle to which they belong, for appointment to the class of Sub-Assistant Conservator. No person who does not hold a Sub-Assistant's Certificate, or who, having gained the Ranger's Certificate, or the Ranger's Certificate with Honours, has not put in the necessary qualifying service as laid down in paragraph 23, can be appointed a Sub-Assistant Conservator.

26. Government students are required to continue in the Government Forest Service for a period of not less than five years after their return from the School, and a bond has to be given to this effect.

27. The monthly pay of Foresters, Rangers, and Sub-Assistant Conservators under the Government of India is at present as follows, viz. :--

Foresters, Rs. 15 to Rs. 40; Rangers, Rs. 50 to Rs. 120; Sub-Assistant Conservators, Rs. 150 to 250.

PROSPECTS OF PRIVATE STUDENTS.

28. Passed Private students are eligible for appointments in the Government service; but such appointments are not guaranteed to them, and Government has no responsibility for their career after they have left the School.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE BALLAD OF PANDAVA.

(Entbehren sollst Du, sollst entbehren.)

PART I.

THE King, the great Pandava,
Sat down in his tent door ;
His brethren stood on either hand,
His wife knelt low before.

The sun sank red below the sands
That reach so wide away ;
The golden desert flamed, and died
In lilac and in grey :

"For seven years and seven again
Our sun hath set," he said,
"Too long we wander far from home,
A price upon our head.

"But thrice an Agel's voice hath spoken,
And three times have I heard
The voice that cries : 'Arise and strike !'
—And this night is the third."

The King strode out in silence
Into the desert dim ;
The Queen and his four brothers :
They hastened after him.

And all night long they wandered
Across the sandy ground ;
The King, his brethren, and the Queen,
And last of all the hound.

But, when the morning broke, the sun
Rose over tower and dome ;
And all those princes shouted,
For they knew they were at home ;

"Behold the towers of Delhi,
The dear ancestral towers !
Before the sun goes down, my brothers,
They shall again be ours !

"A hundred princes take their ease
About our fathers' bowers ;
My brothers, we are five in all :
The battle shall be ours !

"The people in the market-place
That sell their fruit and flowers,
To-day they shout another name :
To-morrow it shall be ours !

"I come ! I claim thee, Delhi,
For I am Pandu's son !"
And with the bugle at his lips
The battle has begun.

And twenty to a man, all day
The battle raged again ;
But in the dusk the Pandava
Had won his own again.

And all the people marvelled,
For they knew it was well done,
The King should have his own at last
Since he was Pandu's son !

Then for a year Pandava reigned
As none had reigned before,
Holy and just, the widow's staff,
The father of the poor.

II.

The market-place of Delhi
Is empty all day long ;
The gallant Knights of Delhi
Go by without a song.

The Counsellors of Delhi
Pass in with all of these,
To kneel within the Golden Hall
At King Pandava's knees.

"Why art thou sick at heart, our King ?
What ails thee, lord of all ?
Dost thou not reign in Delhi
Within the Golden Hall ?"

Pandava lifts his shaggy head,
Lifts up his hollow eyes
"Where are the kings of yesterday,
O light-of-heart ?," he cries

"They reigned. What was the end of it ?
They died. And what shall be
The end of us, the end of all ?
My brothers, answer me !

"Was it worth while to strive and slay
For such a little thing ?
To fill one's dreams with wrath and blood,
And only be a king ?

"Lo, since you ask me what I would,
To heal me of my woe,
I would be quit of Death and Sin !
Grant me the boon, or go !"

"I have no place among you ; past
The mountains, past the sea,
Far hence the Eternal City shines ;
I go—remember me !"

Slowly the great Pandava
Rose from the crystal throne,
And passed along the Golden Hall,
As one would fain be gone ;

But with a roar of anguish,
Like lions struck at heart,
The four Pandava brothers rose
And let him not depart.

"Go where thou wilt, Pandava,
Follow the heavenly way,
Whither thou wilt, Pandava,
But wherefore should we stay ?

"Nay, as we entered Delhi, so
We leave its holy ground :
Thou first, then we, then Draupadi,
And last of all the hound."

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

TELLURIUM had hitherto been considered a simple substance. Dr. Brauner, professor at the Czech University of Prague, has decomposed it into several elements, naming one "Austriacum." So much for the boast of Chemistry ! We, for our part, are prepared for many similar discoveries. The numerous simples with which the laboratory has of late years been crowded, are, most of them, doomed to the same fate with the poor Tellurium.

WHILE the Powers, great and small, of the earth are anxiously deliberating on the fate of Bulgaria, and even preparing armaments and inquiring after strategic points, to meet possible eventualities, a new incursion of the country has taken place by an extraordinary host from a quite unexpected direction, without passing through the cordon of the surrounding states. According to a telegram from Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria, a multitudinous army of pastor roseus has arrived and encamped in the neighbourhood of Sofia. They are not anything like the howling Derwishes of Turkey or the parti-colored Fakeers of farther East, being unclerical, indeed thoroughly secular, pastors of a pretty rose colour, with a fine voice. They are Oriental intruders. They appear exhausted and give the tract of country where they have settled the appearance of a black and red carpet. These are rare birds, in every sense, though, and Asiatics. If they ever leave their Eastern Hive, they occasionally migrate from Asia to Africa. They have reappeared in Bulgaria after twelve years.

A WIDOWED mother in New York left a minor daughter and 23,000dols. When the daughter came of age, she sued her guardian for account. The guardian shortly answered "I have spent 23,000 dols. on her education, and to-day she is the best-educated woman in New York." And without a dollar for bread and cheese ! At the best, the poor thing must be going a-begging, we are afraid. Who, in that new county of business, will wed such a prodigy, unless one of the dons of Harvard take pity on her ? We hope the lion's share of the dollars has not gone to the stomach of the guardian as the chief educator.

IN the old Laconian town of Pharis, they have unearthed some ancient tombs containing some objects in gold, silver and precious stones, and several copper vases—all of great value—and worked in the best form of Greek art.

WE read—

"In digging the foundations of the new Palace of Justice in Rome has been found, at the depth of eight metres, a marble sarcophagus bearing the name of Crepereta Triphæna, with the lid still firmly fastened with rivets of iron embedded in lead. Inside was the skeleton of a woman, upon which were found (1) a pair of gold earrings with pearl pendants; (2) a gold necklace with hooks of pietra dura; (3) a large and elegant gold brooch having a carved amethyst representing a stag fighting with a hippocriff; (4) a thick gold ring with setting of cornelian representing two hands clasped, with two other rings of the same kind, one bearing the name Filetus; (5) a ring composed of two gold circles conjoined, but movable; (6) a long amber spiral pin (7) two combs of boxwood; (8) a silver box; and a few other objects. With the skeleton lay a very delicately carved bambino of hard wood, about thirty centimètres high, and once gilt, the arms and legs being in full relief."

AT Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson, and Hodge's sale of the second portion of the Earl of Crawford's library, the best lots were :—

"First edition of the great 'Catholicon' of Balbus de Janua, printed by Gutenberg in 1460, on vellum, 300*l.*; 'Budeus,' a superb specimen of the library of the famous Diane de Poitiers (bought by Lord Crawford for 130*l.*), 305*l.*; 'Cicero on Old Age,' black letter, small folio, by W. Caxton, 320*l.*; and 'Christine of Pisa' (translated by Caxton), black letter, 1489, 235*l.* The day's sale realised upwards of 2,000*l.*"

MESSRS. SOTHEBY have also sold some original manuscripts of Lord Tennyson :—

"'The Dedication to the Queen,' 30*l.*; 'The Daisy,' 24*l.* 10*s.*; 'The Letters,' 18*l.* 10*s.*; 'Stanzas to the Rev. F. Maurice,' 23*l.*; 'The Brook,' 51*l.*; 'Maud,' 111*l.* The manuscripts had been previously valued at 200*l.*, and they now realised 248*l.*"

Lord Tennyson, we are told, has indignantly protested in the Times against the sale.

AGAIN—

"The history of book auctions scarcely affords parallel to the extraordinary price paid the other day at Sotheby's for a lot which consisted of six original drawings by R. Seymour for 'Pickwick,' a number of early impressions of the plates, and an autograph letter from Dickens to Seymour, a portrait of Seymour, and a few other items loosely arranged on five or six pages of a scrap-book. Separated from the paper upon which the prints are pasted, the entire lot could be comfortably stowed away in the waistcoat-pocket. Starting at 10*l.*, the 'hundreds' were soon reached, the biddings being chiefly between Mr. Quaritch and Mr. B. F. Stevens. The lot was eventually knocked down to the former for 500*l.*—a sum which, in 5*l.* notes, probably represents more than the actual weight of the lot itself. On June 13 the same auctioneers sold for 64*l.* an interesting and very scarce book relating to Dickens. It is 'An Account of the Origin of the "Pickwick Papers,"' by Mrs. Seymour, widow of the distinguished artist who originated the work; with Mr. Dickens's Version, and her reply thereto showing the fallacy of his statements.' This work, which was suppressed, also contains letters of her husband and other distinguished men. The Mackenzie copy of this pamphlet realised 72*l.* Another lot—'Mr. Thackeray, Mr. Yates, and the Garrick Club, the Correspondence and Facts stated by E. Yates,' with a long letter from Dickens to Thackeray, printed for private circulation—was knocked down to Mr. Quaritch for 19*l.* 10*s.*"

THE Commissioner of Lucknow has threatened the Taluqdars with confiscation of the Kaiserbagh, unless the buildings are put into repairs within six months. The Kaiserbagh in the possession of the Taluqdars has been an eyesore to the officials from the moment Lord Canning made that graceful present.

A SEPOY of the office of the Official Assignee has obtained a summons against Mr. Branson, Deputy Accountant-General lately come from Madras to Bombay, for assault. It is said Mr. Branson slapped the sepoy because he had omitted to salaam the Saheb.

"It appears that in 1833 there were only 9 workmen, and in 1848 74. In July 1888 the establishment employed 20,960 men, of whom 13,626 were at Essen. Including the families of the workmen they supported a population of 73,769 souls, of whom 24,193 lived in houses provided by the firm. There are at Essen 1,195 furnaces of various constructions, 286 boilers, 92 steam hammers of from 100 to 50,000 kilogs, 370 steam engines, with a total of 27,000 horse-power, 1,724 different machines, and 361 cranes. Of coal and coke, 2,735 tons are used daily, and 11 high furnaces of the latest constructions produce nearly 600 tons of iron per day."

THE fee of rupees ten has been reduced to one on explosives imported under a license into a British port and exported thence to another British port named in Rule 10 of the Rules under the Indian Explosives Act, 1884.

SIR F. R. HOGG, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., Director-General of the Post office in India, retired from the service from the 13th May 1889.

MR. J. WESTLAND, C.S.I., has been appointed Chief Commissioner of Assam, Mr. D. Fitzpatrick going over to Hyderabad as Resident, Mr. A. P. Howell reverting to his own in the Home Department.

ALL transit dues have been abolished in the State of the Nawab of Loharu in the Punjab.

MR. D. R. LYALL has obtained three months' leave. He will be succeeded, during that period, in the Commissionership of the Chittagong Division, by Mr. J. C. Veasey, Inspector-General of Police.

THE river Kusi and its channels within the districts of Bhagnpore and Purneah, have been declared, by the Lieutenant-Governor, as areas within which all unmarked wood and timber, and all wood and timber on which the marks have been obliterated or defaced by fire or otherwise, shall be deemed to be the property of Government, unless or until any person establishes his right and title thereto under the provisions of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) and the rules under it.

MAHARAJAH Sir Narendra Krishna Bahadr has resigned the Honorary Presidency Magistrateship of Calcutta. Does he mean to retire from public life like another Knighted Maharaja of this town?

THE Mohant of the Mirror—the High Priest of Theosophy in Bengal—having returned from the pilgrimage of Orissa, would seem to be making up for his late asceticism by a foray in another direction. We are told that "the Maharani of Cooch Behar gave a dance to her special friends at the Hermitage, Darjeeling." Our contemporary, who appears to have been one of the galaxy of beauty and fashion who tripped it on the light fantastic toe on the occasion, is able to report that "the decorations of the rooms and everything else necessary for the pleasure, comfort and enjoyment of the guests was provided in profusion."

FRANCIS RICHARD GARRETT has been sentenced to six years' hard labor for embezzling Rs. 6,037-7-3 and Rs. 500 as Post Master of Ranikhet. He had held that charge for twenty years and was latterly given to drink to which he attributed his ruin and to the Native employés under him. In passing sentence, Mr. Justice Straight addressed the prisoner thus:—

"You have been convicted of a grave public offence, and you have aggravated that grave public offence by making the most wanton and grave charges against your native subordinates. There is not a redeeming feature in your case from the commencement to the end of it. Any feelings of compassion I might have had in dealing with you on the question of sentence have been removed. Your wicked attempts to cast your own crime upon these unfortunate natives who had the misfortune to be under your control are abominable. The public service of this country cannot be carried on without native employés, and they are very much in the hands of their European superiors; and I am glad to think and to know that their European superiors have confidence in them and treat them well, and that there is a good feeling between them. Until you found yourself driven into a hopeless position by the sudden and unexpected visit of Mr. Hawthorne, you never dreamt of making any imputation upon any human being, and it was only when you found that you could not creep out of the difficulties into which by your own systematic course of percolation you had placed yourself, you bethought yourself of making that attempt. If the jury had arrived at any other verdict than that which they have, they would have recorded a perverse verdict—the evidence was overwhelming. Whether the period over which you have pursued your course of conduct is a long or a short one, you know best; but you have been helping yourself to public funds, and no doubt much of the money has gone for the purpose of carrying on your independent business. I think the Post Office are very much to blame for having allowed you to remain in one post for so long a time, and I hope it will be a lesson, as far as that Department is concerned, not to keep one man in a position such as you occupied for too lengthened a period—certainly not in such a post as Ranikhet, which is a long distance off from any immediate supervision. I have the greatest difficulty to know in my own mind what to do with you. I have on the one side a strong feeling of sympathy with a man twenty years in the public service, who has forfeited his whole life's character and lost the pension he otherwise would have got, and who, at the expiration of any punishment he may now receive, will have the stigma of disgrace attached to him—I do feel all that; but, on the other hand, you have aggravated your position so enormously by the attitude you have taken up with regard to the native employés. Your plea was going to show me some certificates of character. You must have had a good character to get into the public service, and to a certain extent to remain there. How you got hampered with difficulties I do not know, and you are to be pitied for it; but you aggravated a thousand times your position by this miserable taking to drink, which has probably been the foundation of all your disasters. I am not sure I am doing my duty in passing as light a sentence as I am going to pass upon you. If you were before a judge in England standing convicted of this offence, you would undoubtedly receive a very severe sentence indeed; as it is, I sentence you to six years' rigorous imprisonment."

The sentence passed, the prisoner wanted to have his Bible. On the Judge's direction, a large family Bible containing the record of his birth and other occurrences, was made over to Garrett.

MR. CLAYDON, in his just published volumes Rogers and his Contemporaries, has clearly availed himself to the full of the Pleasures of Memory to step into fame. Rogers the plutocratic poet, the esthetic banker, was greater as a gossip and a Meccenas than a poet. He will be remembered more as a patron of wits and connoisseurs of art who treated his friends to good dinners and better stories than as the author of sumptuous, well-illustrated volumes of poetry of tranquil beauty. Mr. Claydon shows that with the Recollections of Samuel Rogers the mine was by no means quite exhausted, though his book will bear no comparison with the great master's own.

Not the least rich of the original collection were the recollections of the brilliant Horne Tooke before whom Junius himself quailed. Here are some of the best of his sayings collected by the London Correspondent of a contemporary:—

"There are men who pretended that they come into the world booted and spurred to ride you." "Pieces of money are so many tickets for sheep, oxen, &c." "When a pension is given, or a salary, a draft is issued on the tiller of the soil." "So I understand, Mr. Tooke, that you have all the blackguards in London with you?" said O'Brien to him on the hustings at Westminster. "I am happy to have it, sir, on such good authority," replied Tooke. When Judge Ashurst said in one of his charges, "The law is open to all men, to the poor as well as the rich," Tooke remarked, "And so is the London Tavern." Lord Grey said to him, "If I was compelled to make a choice, I should prefer despotism to anarchy." "Then you would do," replied Tooke, "as your ancestors did at the Reformation; they rejected Purgatory and kept Hell." Tooke's political notoriety as an opponent of the Government brought him much annoyance. Rogers went with him one night to Brandenburg House to private theatricals, and somebody behind them said, loud enough for Tooke to hear, "There's that rascal, Horne Tooke." Tooke showed his annoyance and went home, Rogers going with him, and sitting up very late to listen to his talk. He met with singular insults in coffee-houses. One of his sayings was that, when bad times came, he should go to his garret window and take no part in them but that of a looker-on. "When the surgeons are called in the physician retires."

HURST and Blackett have issued one of the collections of legal jokes and anecdotes which are continually appearing. Sergeant Robinson, the collector, has probably been encouraged by the success of Sergeant Ballantine. Here is a story of the well-known Irish barrister Phillips as Commissioner of Bankruptcy. He

"once detected a witness kissing his thumb instead of the Testament and having rebuked the misguided person who thought that swearing created two standards of truth, he said, 'You may think to deceive God, sir, but you won't deceive me.'"

Quite Hibernian, to be sure—whether consciously so or unconsciously, that is the question.

Some of the best things in the book are fathered on Sir William Maule. On one occasion he said, "People talk about a man and his wife being one. It is all nonsense; I do not believe that, under the most favourable circumstances, they can be considered less than two. For instance, if a man murders his wife, did anybody hear of his having committed suicide?"

Mr. Sergeant Robinson relates the following about Lord Westbury. His Lordship, although known to be a staunch Churchman, was remiss in the duty of attending public worship. On being charged with inconsistency by a friend, who told him that he was bound to support his theory by his example, Lord Westbury replied, "I daresay you are right; but I am like one of the buttresses of the edifice, which are of much more service to it on the outside than the inside."

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

AN important factor in the Hyderabad politics has been permanently withdrawn. Sir Salar Jung II. died on Sunday. He was only 26 years of age and leaves a son only few weeks old.

THE Lords were opposed to the Land Transfer Bill and, in spite of the protest of Government, voted an amendment, by 122 against 113, against the spirit of the measure. Lord Salisbury found it prudent to withdraw the Bill.

For his zeal for the excited tenants in Donegal, Mr. Conybeare must suffer the three months' imprisonment ordered. The Appeal Court would not reduce the punishment nor quash the conviction. For inflammatory speeches, two more Irish Members—Mr. Thomas Patrick Gill for South Louth and Mr. Joseph Richard Cox for East Clare, were arrested in London and transported to Drogheda for trial. The charge has since been dismissed, the Magistrate considering the evidence of the policemen and witnesses unreliable. The trial of Messrs. O'Brien and Lane have been deferred to end of August next. Their Plan of Campaign having been exposed in the Special Court, the Irish Irreconcilables with Mr. Parnell as their head have fixed upon another League to be called the Tenants' Defence League to overawe the Government. The avowed object is to furnish tenants with legal advice against landlords. The ways and means are expected from members. Collections will also be made in America and Australia.

The Government intend to pass the India Council Bill this session.

The Parliamentary Committee to consider future Royal Grants consists of eleven Conservatives, two Liberal-Unionists, eight Gladstonian Liberals and two Nationalists—among others, Mr. W. H. Smith, Mr. Goschen, Lord Hartington, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Morley, Mr. Labouchere, and Mr. Parnell.

THE war in Upper Egypt develops. Two Battalions of two Regiments have been ordered from Malta to Egypt. From Cairo one hundred and forty British Mounted Infantry and an artillery reinforcement of four guns proceed to Assouan. General Grenfell has arrived there and threatened with death any native found in any way assisting the Dervishes. The Dervishes are still being pursued. Wad-el-ngumi and his force have arrived three miles to the south of Abusimbul. The Egyptian troops move up the river parallel with the enemy. The west Bank of the Nile between Wady Halfa and Assouan has been cleared of all natives dwelling there. The plan is to keep the Dervishes away from water. One thousand of them are already Colonel Wodehouse's prisoners, but their number still puzzles the gallant Colonel.

THE American cotton crop is backward. The average of the eleven cotton States is given at 87-6/10 per cent. The failure is attributed to the drought and cold of May and June. In the Gulf States, the crop has been injured by caterpillar and bollworm.

THE rains, once so scanty, have begun their work of destruction of the season. A considerable portion of the Bolan Railway has been washed away. Landslips also are reported on the Hurnai line. A native telegraphs to the Englishman on the 10th from Sibsagar that "Distress prevails in the northern part of the Sibsagar sudder division. Up to the town thousands of rayyets' houses are under water, and the whole country is presenting one vast white sheet. The water is running in a strong current over several miles of the trunk road near the town." Only two deaths are reported.

THE Hon'ble Syud Ameer Hosain resumed charge of the Northern Division Magistrate's Court on the 8th instant, after 3 months' leave, during which time, Moulvi Abdool Jubbar, the Suburban Police Magistrate, officiated for him.

Moulvi Abdul Jubbar is a tried officer of long experience esteemed for his integrity and courage. He belongs to the small batch of strong Deputies in the sense of performing their judicial duties conscientiously without fear or favour. He gave perfect satisfaction to the public in the Calcutta Police Court. It was creditable to the legal practitioners in the Court that they did not allow him to take his leave without an expression of their appreciation of his services, during the quarter that he presided at the Bench of the Northern Division.

THE Dacca Prakash still fights the Kalawars. It has entered into its defence and examined two pleaders of the local Judge's Court who do not consider the articles complained of harmful to the reputation of the complaining brothers—as regards, we believe, their position in Hindu society. But the brothers Rup evidently consider themselves demeaned in the eyes of the European community and they have applied to a European Magistrate to set them right with that community. The Dacca Prakash has virtually to contend against the European prejudice against the Hindu caste system. And that is indeed an uphill work.

WE are glad to learn that a school of Mahomedan Medicine, called the Madrasai Tibbia, has just been opened at Delhi, at the instance of Hukeem Abdool Mujeed Khan, the eldest son of Hukeem

Mahmood Khan. The latter is the great Delhi Physician whose fame has spread all over India, in consequence of his success in curing numberless cases given up by the best medical practitioners of the other Schools as incurable and hopeless.

There are large numbers of Hukeems—practitioners of the Mahomedan system—distributed in different parts of the country, who have received their medical education from various more or less qualified teachers in Greco-Arabic Science. But there has been no regular public school in India for imparting instruction in the system. There are professors in plenty, but no organized institution. This want is now to be supplied by the exertions of Hukeem Abdool Mujeed Khan, the worthy son of a worthy father, who has already established a high reputation for himself as an accomplished and successful physician.

THE Madrasai-Tibbia was opened with great eclat, at Delhi, on the 23rd June last. The ceremony was presided over by Nawab Mahomed Mumtaz Ali Khan Bahadur, Chief of Dojana, and attended by a large number of Mahomedan and Hindu gentlemen of Delhi and the neighbouring districts. The Deputy Commissioner of Delhi also was present. The Hon'ble Sir Syud Ahmed Khan Bahadur, himself originally a Reis of Delhi, came on purpose from Aligarh, and made a speech in support of the project, and a telegram received that very day from Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadur, Calcutta, was read congratulating Hukeem Abdool Mujeed Khan on the opening of the new institution and expressing his good wishes for its success.

THE Chief Magistrate of the Town has vindicated the dignity of the High Court as represented by the Original Mr. Justice Norris. He has proclaimed that no man shall drive ahead of any of Her Majesty's Judges—not even a black man with a rude rickety trap, drawn by starving diminutive tats. The third class Jehu who was lately caught red-handed in the act doubtless incurred the highest penalty of the law, but Mr. Marsden is famous for tempering justice with mercy. If the mercy of certain Magistrates is apt to be a microscopic quantity, Mr. Marsden can scarcely help that. Let us all acknowledge with gratitude that he did not order the rash misguided driver to be drawn and quartered, nor even exhibited in the pillory all through Black Town. He has only sentenced him to one month's hard labor for driving his carriage and pair across the brougham of the judicial luminary, thereby damaging the brougham and endangering the safety of its occupant.

THE High Court (Justices Trevelyan and Beverley) have upheld the Magistrate's order on Hajee Noor Mahomedan for maintenance of the child born of Bismilla Jan, whose paternity the Hajee disclaimed altogether. Messrs. Woodroffe and Garth had been retained by the Hajee, but they, after the manner of counsel, failed to appear, being engaged elsewhere, and Mr. Phillips was then and there instructed to oppose the Magistrate's order. Messrs. Gasper and Henderson appeared in support of the rule issued on the Magistrate. Mr. Phillips contended that when the Magistrate held there was no marriage between Noor and Bismillah Jan, he should have dismissed the claim for maintenance for an illegitimate child, at least an opportunity should have been given for meeting the new charge. The Magistrate was wrong in applying his own knowledge of the defendant in support of his argument of the paternity of the child based on similarity of appearance between Noor Mahomed the father and Noor Ahmed the son. The similarity of names, again, on which the Magistrate laid stress, was, according to Mr. Phillips, mere accident, which could not enter into any serious argument. Lastly, the distance of time between the birth of the child and the institution of the claim for maintenance—3½ years—was completely ignored by the Magistrate. The High Court agreed with Mr. Phillips as regards similarity of appearance and name, two strong points in the Magistrate's judgment, and with the Magistrate in the other points commented on by Mr. Phillips. The Judges had no doubt that Noor Ahmed was the child of Noor Mahomed and that the lower Court was right in making the order for maintenance in the case. It was certainly wrong in not compelling the attendance of the father to examine in court the similarity of the persons of the father and son, but probably it wished to spare the father the humiliation of personal attendance in an ugly contest on behalf of the child he disowned. The rule was consequently discharged.

Holloway's Pills.—Sudden transitions from heat to cold, or from raw inclement weather to oppressive climates, favour the development of manifold diseases, which may in most instances be checked and rendered abortive by an early resort to these purifying, regulating, and strengthening Pills. This well-known and highly esteemed medicine affords a safe and easy remedy for almost every constitutional wrong which unhealthy climates, rapid changes, or dietetic errors, can engender, and effectually removes any weakness self-indulgent habits may have induced. In all conditions of the system bordering on disease such as are indicated by apathy, listlessness, and restlessness, Holloway's Pills prove especially serviceable in begetting the vivacity of mind and body appreciated by both sound and sick.

DEFALCATIONS to the tune of eight thousand Rupees, have been discovered in the cash, in charge of Kedernath Mookerjee, the Head Clerk of the Office of Superintendent of Political Pensions, and Mr. Bolton has, at the instance of Moulvie Abdool Jubbar, called upon the Baboo, to make good the amount missing. It is strange that large sums of money are allowed to be kept in the hands of a subordinate ministerial officer, who gave no security for good conduct except the favor of his European chiefs.

THE Lieutenant-Governor starts next Monday for Patna. "The rains have come in well" and, as the Commissioner of the Division continues, "have put an end to most of our troubles, but have brought some new ones with them." Mr. Boxwell sums up the report on the scarcity for the fortnight ending June 30th, thus:—

"The coming of the rains has relieved us of all anxiety in Shahabad, Gya, Patna, Sarun, and Chumparan, and has so far improved prospects in Firohpoor that we need have no fear for the result. But in the worst part of the affected area in both districts, Mozufferpore and Durbhunga, a new trouble has arisen—famine or almost famine rates of food and cessation of import, with a large number of people already enfeebled by want of sufficient food. This mischief the district officers are quite able to meet."

MR. GOODRICKE has been fortunate in his forced retirement. The Government has sanctioned the amount (Rs. 400) to which his length of service entitled him. He had applied for more, for he had sacrificed his health in the service of his employers. Mr. Goodricke might as well have pointed to over a lac of rupees which his severance from the post of Collector of Income tax has enabled Government to add to the revenue.

DR. DAVID BOYES SMITH, formerly of Calcutta and latterly Professor of Military Medicine in the Army Medical School at Netley, died on the 3rd June, of a tumour of the brain. He will be remembered as one of the earlier sanitary reformers in Bengal and an accomplished and amiable physician.

Dr. David Boyes Smith was a distinguished student of the University of Edinburgh, at a time when that city had still some pretensions to be the Northern Athens, when its Medical School was second to none in Europe. Endowed with a robust constitution and fired alike with a passion for adventure and zeal for science, he readily went on an expedition to the Arctic regions. Returning with health unimpaired, he entered the Indian Medical Service. He was, we believe, an Assistant Surgeon in charge of the Base Hospital at Delhi, and it was there that he got the spinal affection which troubled him all his life and, doubtless, was the earliest change in his nervous system which ended in his death from brain disease. The publication by him of some papers on sanitary statistics early brought him to the notice of the N.-W. P. Government and led to his appointment at Mussoorie. Here, in 1862, he started, we believe, at any rate edited with credit, a sturdy political weekly called the Hills. We never knew Dr. Smith, but at this time we were in Oudh giving shape and permanence to a brother Baboo's idea of that Association which has done so much for the Talookdars as a class and so much more for individual Talookdars. Among our other duties we "coached" the English organ of the Society. Within a short time of our assuming the Lucknow journal, the Hills complimented us on the marked improvement visible in our paper. Soon after, after the unfortunate manner of our cloth, we fell out and came to blows—with printer's ink. Long and earnest were the controversies in which we became plunged. Not an issue of either paper but contained some dispute with, or some fling at, the other. Neither side gave up a single point. Latterly, as usual, the tired combatants descended to pick holes in each other's grammar and orthography. Neither editor had the smallest notion of who his assailant might be, except that one was a European and the other a Hindu. And this went on for months together. But not for a moment was there the least loss of mutual respect—not an insolent or ungenerous expression passed. The Hills' writer was never brilliant or eloquent, but always effective. He had no humour properly called, but a large fund of dry wit which served him in good stead. But his greatest merit was the wonderful temper and courtesy he maintained towards a native opponent in a protracted and vigorous literary warfare. That showed the man. He was a model of an Indian Editor.

He next began the Indian Medical Gazette which still carries on its good work and is the only successful medical publication in India. He was not long suffered to be locked up in the distant Doon. His reputation had so steadily advanced that the way was cleared towards a more important and lucrative field. It was no small distinction to be brought to Bengal as the first Sanitary Commissioner. He then became successively Civil Surgeon of Patna, of Howrah and again of Dacca. He officiated as Principal of the Medical College and Professor of Medicine while Dr. Chevers was on leave, obtaining the permanent appointment on Dr. Chever's retirement.

His last days of service were clouded by a great persecution. His fame and success had made him many enemies, those of his own profession being the worst. Sir Ashley Eden having come to the throne of Bengal burned to be a reformer. He had long since made his peace with his old butt the planting interest, and wanted a weaker victim. His secret medical adviser offered him the doctors in superintendence over the Hospitals, and the Lieutenant-Governor seized the opportunity. There was laxity no doubt, and Sir Ashley made the most of it. Dr. Smith, conscious of his integrity, fought for the honour of his department, and only irritated his ruler. He then took furlough and went round the world with General Sir Henry Norman, lately Governor of Jamaica and now of Queensland. On his return, he found the question of hospital expenditure had been gone into by a Committee presided over by Mr. Justice O'Kenealy and directed by Surgeon-General Payne. He did not take quietly the changes that had been introduced or the reflections which he thought had been cast on himself and his predecessors. So he did not hit it off with Dr. Payne. He resigned the Principalship in consequence, reverted to the Army and then retired altogether from the Indian Medical Service. He married and set up as a general practitioner in Calcutta. His great abilities, his large experience and his upright ways made him a general favorite. Then was offered to him the Professorship of Netley.

A fare-well dinner was given him ere he left, at which Dr. Coates, his successor in the Principalship of the Medical College, presided, a proof that, though opposed to each other on Hospital management, the two Doctors were always friends.

He wrote many papers on medical and sanitary subjects.

He leaves a wife and daughter badly provided for.

CAPE POLITICS AND SIR HERCULES ROBINSON AND SIR JOHN POPE HENNESSY.

THE modern Hercules had strayed beyond the pillars which marked the limits of the peregrinations of his ancient prototype or rather name-sake. He had gone far, far down the coast, below the Line, to the extreme South, where the Atlantic and the South Indian Oceans meet in mutual but angry embrace. After tarrying there some years, and treating the gaping inhabitants to some exhibitions of doubtful valour, he has left the Cape, without performing all his labours. At any rate, the Augean stable remains uncleared. Nay, he had stirred the puddle to such perfection that nobody could be induced to take his place. He primed the forward party of the Colonists with impracticable hopes which, without being, within a reasonable space, ever fulfilled, must always be a difficulty in the side of administration. In his parting speech at the Cape, the High Commissioner was understood to favour their pretensions not only to the absolute control of the existing colonies, but also to the sway over all the extensive territories beyond, won and maintained by Imperial sacrifices, although the authorised report a good deal disguises the matter. He thus managed to carry away the good opinion of the South African "patriots." But the Home Government experienced great difficulty in finding a successor. The post went a-begging. Luckily, a bold man has at last come forward to undertake the perilous mission.

The High Commissioner, we see, has managed to alienate his best admirers. He had hitherto been the ideal Colonial Governor of the Settlers throughout the Colonies and Dependencies of Great Britain. He was regarded as the antithesis of Sir John Pope Hennessy, the protector of the native races and the upholder of the Law and the representative of the Righteousness of England. By his persecution of that able and upright public servant, he finally endeared himself to all the more selfish Colonists throughout Greater Britain. Sir John Hennessy's triumphant vindication of his administration of Mauritius against the conspiracy of the Robinsons and the Clifford Lloyds, clinched by his late success in the libel suit against the Times, was the first severe blow to the Herculean cult. His farewell African demonstration has given the finishing stroke.

We were agreeably surprised to read the following excellent editorial note in the Englishman of last week:—

"Sir Henry Brougham Loch's acceptance of the Governorship of the Cape has relieved her Majesty's Ministers from a difficulty which they were beginning to find embarrassing. It is no secret that the appointment has been offered to at least half a dozen people, some of them persons who under ordinary circumstances would hardly have been deemed equal to its responsibilities, not one of whom could be induced to become Sir H. Robinson's successor. For this singular unwillingness to accept a position of considerable dignity with a befitting income, however, the retiring Governor, and not the Colonial Office, appears to be answerable. Sir H. Robinson is the most distinguished advocate of what is known as the 'forward' policy in South Africa, and in that capacity has formulated the demands of the Cape Colonists for dominion over the whole country between Capetown and the Zambesi in language which no prudent English Minister could endorse. What he desires is nothing less than the gradual, but not long delayed, conversion of South Africa into a second India, to be conquered by British arms and at British cost, but to be handed over as soon as acquired to the Colonial Government, in which the predominant influence happens to be neither British nor Native, but Dutch. How Sir Hercules came to persuade himself that his preposterous proposal would be adopted is not quite clear, but so far as can be inferred from his public utterances he believes it to be the only alternative to separation and the rise of a great Dutch-African Republic which would oust England from the southern half of the Dark Continent for ever. It does not seem to have occurred to him to count the cost, or to consider whether, when we have obligingly handed over a vast new territory to the people of the Cape, they would be likely to become better subjects than they have been in the past. Lord Salisbury and Lord Knutsford had to look at that point, and their decision, as might have been expected, was against having anything to do with an unnecessary scheme of aggrandisement for which England would have to pay while the Cape would reap all the profit. Sir Hercules thus lost his chance of becoming the Warren Hastings of South Africa, and the blow to his ambition was too great to allow of his remaining at his post. He resigned; and the awkwardness of the situation he had created at Capetown was so generally recognised that no one in England could be found to take his place. The appointment of Sir Henry Loch, who has at last been brought over from Victoria, marks the final defeat of the policy of forward, but will not, it is to be feared, improve the temper of the 'Afrikaner' party."

We have nothing to add to the above just remarks. The regular readers of that paper cannot, however, have forgotten the songs of a different tune—the pæans to glorify the strong god in the Colonial Service. How when the High Commissioner came over to Mauritius to inquire into the complaints of and respecting Sir John Pope Hennessy, and soon plunged himself a willing prisoner into the arms of the unholy conspiracy against the righteous Governor and left in a hurry without doing his work or even giving Sir

John an opportunity for explaining matters and proving his case, and reported against him, our contemporary supported its hero and adjudged the experienced and accomplished Governor a firebrand and an incapable sentimentalist. In justice to it, we are bound to say that the Englishman was not alone. Our Native brethren of the quill are not familiar with Colonial politics and have indeed very hazy notions of the situation and statistics of Mauritius or Seychelles, or the difference between Guiana and Guinea or between the several Guineas, New and old. But almost the entire Anglo-Indian Press, then still under the influence of the feelings by the controversy on the Ilbert Bill, voted with one voice for the rampant High Commissioner and against the honest and truly liberal Governor of Mauritius. Reis and Rayyet was about the only journal in India which stood up for the well-tried public servant condemned without a hearing. While others swallowed every ex parte statement and every insinuation of his enemies against him, we refused to believe without proof that he had been guilty of injustice and highhandedness against the Colonists, far less subverted the constitution and plunged the island in a strife of races, out of a maudlin humanitarianism in favour of the blacks. We knew that elsewhere he had been just, and expected him to be so in Mauritius. And so the event proved. Sir John made a triumphant defence. He not only proved his own case to the hilt, but took the war into the enemy's camp. He exposed the intrigues of Mr. Lloyd and demonstrated the Herculean animus, showing how his rectifying the mischief of the Herculean régime in Hongkong as Governor after him and overturning his policy, had made the High Commissioner his lasting foe. Long before the decision of the Home Government, we came into possession of all the material documents and were able to set the Indian public right. But there was no sign of repentance in any of our contemporaries. Perhaps, their offence was too fresh. We are glad, however, that the truth is at last making way. The Englishman is the first to show a better disposition. Now that Hercules is unmasked, there is a prospect of justice for his victims. Soon we expect to see Sir John Hennessy recognised as one of the ablest and most just and liberal Governors that England has ever sent out to rule her numerous colonies and dependencies.

INTERMAHOMEDAN SECTARIAL FEUDS IN UPPER INDIA.

WE have in our last issue given an account of the great sensation latterly created at Lucknow, between the Shiah and Sunnis of that city, owing to the use by the Shiah, at one of the mosques of that town, of certain additional words in the Azan (call to prayer) which were highly repugnant to the feelings of the Sunni community, leading to a great row between the two sects, and causing bloodshed. The Police and the authorities had to interfere and a large number of men of both sects were arrested and a number of the followers of the Shiah sect after a lengthened trial were convicted and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

In the course of this week, we have come across the proceedings of another case of a similar and perhaps a more aggravated nature, between the Shiah and Sunnis of Allahabad. We here give the particulars from the Morning Post of Allahabad:—

"A sensational dispute, ventilating the differences of the two sects of Mahomedans, the Sunis and Shias, has been before the Allahabad courts for some time. In this case, one Moulvie Mahomed figures as the plaintiff, and the two defendants are Syed Mahomed Aga and Mir Khorshed Ali. The case first came up on the 18th of June, 1887, in the court of Pundit Inder Narain, Moonsiff of Allahabad. The plaintiff's pleaders were Moulvie Sher Ali and Mahomed Husain. The defendants were represented by Messrs. Gordon and Dillon, barristers-at-law, and Mr. Mahdho Pershad. The claim of the plaintiff was that the stone fixed by the defendant No. 1 in his mosque should be taken out, and that the defendants should be prevented from uttering the words 'Khalifa-i-bila fasl' (immediate successor) in the 'Azan' (summons to prayer). The defendants objected to the claim as being groundless, and stated that the suit was one of prejudice, and that there could be no interference as to modes of worship. The Azan was not a departure by the defendants; that, admitting that the plaintiff was grieved by the proclamation of the words as pleaded, the defendants were more grieved by their withdrawal. It was elicited in the hearing of the case that the defendants built a mosque on or about the 14th of June, 1887, and on the arch thereof engraved the following words: 'La ilaha illallah Mahomed ar-rasul allah Ali wali allah wasi rasul allah khilafat wali ullah bila fasl,' which means 'there is no other beside God, Mahomed is his apostle, Ali is his saint and executor of the will of the Prophet and Caliph without any one intervening.' The defendants call aloud these words in the Azan. In this proclamation the words 'Khilafat wali ullah bila fasl' are contrary to the religious belief of the plaintiff. It was generally known and admitted in this case by the statements of both parties, that the Shias consider Hazrat Ali as the khalifa (successor of the Prophet), and after him they acknowledge eleven other Imams as successors to the 'kingdom.' The first of them (i. e. Caliphs according to the belief of the Sunnis.—ED. R. & R.) is Hazrat Abu Bakr Sadiq, the second Hazrat Umar, the third Hazrat Osman, and the fourth Hazrat Ali whom they consider as successors to the Prophet of God. According to the views of the Sunnis, the khalifat, succession, ceased after Hazrat Ali. The words 'Khilafat wali ullah bila fasl' admittedly meant that Hazrat Ali, the apostle of God, was first khalifa, or successor, without any intervention. This faith was opposed to that of the Sunnis in provoking 'tabarra' (curse). Therefore the plaintiff, as a Sunni, could not tolerate in any case, either to hear these words, or to see them openly engraved on the mosque. According to his allegation in the plaint, 'it wounded his heart and the hearts of the entire Sunni community.' The plaintiff also alleged that the mosque was endowed property, and, as such, open to Sunnis and Shias alike. The plaintiff further supported his claim on the grounds of partnership with the plaintiff. After hearing the arguments of both sides the Moonsiff, in a very long judgment, passed an order, the translation of which is as follows:—'That the plaintiff's claim, according to reference on oath, be decreed in this way, that the defendants be perpetually prohibited from calling out the words 'Khilafat wali ullah bila fasl' at a time and in any prayer of any time, and the claim to the stone fixed be dismissed. The defendants' costs to be charged to the plaintiff, who will bear his own costs.' Against this judgment there was a cross-appeal, which is now before Mr. F. E. Elliot, the district and sessions judge. Mr. Colvin, barrister-at-law, with Messrs. Simeon and Madho Pershad, support the appeal of the defendants, and the plaintiff is represented by the same pleaders who appeared in the lower court."

It seems in this case that the Shias have, in addition to the objectionable words in the Azan in a particular mosque, affixed a stone slab on the arch of that mosque, containing an inscription, even more obnoxious and insulting to the feelings of the Sunnis than the Azan.

The case was tried by a Hindoo Moonsiff, who appears to have decided that the Shias should be perpetually prohibited from calling out the objectionable words in the Azan. But we cannot understand the reasons which induced that officer to allow the stone slab with the objectionable inscription to continue on the arch of the mosque.

The Moonsiff ought to have discovered that the inscription on the stone was a standing source of annoyance to the feelings of every Sunni going to that mosque or passing along that way.

We are well aware that the verbal use of certain objectionable words (called the 'Tabarra') by the Shias in the presence of Sunnis, has always been the cause of a great deal of conflict between the rival sects at various towns of India, almost invariably ending in broken heads.

But this is the first instance that we have heard of an inscription affixed in a prominent place at a mosque, which is calculated to invite objection from the Sunnis and to give them cause for annoyance and dispute. We are not aware of such an inscription being prominently affixed to any Shiah mosque in any part of India.

The effect of such an inscription would be similar to a tablet placed at the door of a Protestant church, within the sight, of every passerby, in which the Pope is described as an imposter, or an inscription in front of a Roman Catholic church damning Luther and Calvin and Henry VIII.

We are not quite sure if the affixing of such a stone slab, may not be an offence under Section 298 of the Indian Penal Code, which provides that "Whoever, with the deliberate intention of wounding the religious feelings of any person, places any object in the sight of that person," shall be punished with imprisonment and fine.

By giving prominent notice to this matter, our object is to draw the attention of Sir Auckland Colvin to this very unpleasant dispute between the two sects. Our firm hope is that he will make a thorough enquiry into this question, and promptly put a stop to the causes leading to such quarrels before it assumes formidable dimensions.

Before concluding, we would advise Hindu and Christian Judges and Magistrates, dealing with religious disputes between the two rival Mahomedan sects, to make a thorough and exhaustive enquiry into the relative merits of the religious differences of the parties before passing the final order. This is the only way to avoid mistakes.

THE LATE BABOO DWARKA NATH DUTT.

BABOO DWARKANATH, of the Chorebagan Dutt, of Calcutta, banian to Messrs. Ralli Brothers, died at his new residence at Shampooker, in the native town, on Thursday last, at the age of 48. He always looked older than his years, a consequence of diabetes and other complaints. In due course consumption came with the dread summons. He might have delayed execution by a timely flight to the sea or at least a better climate and a suitable regimen. But he scarcely believed in European doctors and their recommendations, and clung to his employers, trusting on the favour of the gods, to whom he was more than ever unremitting in his pujals, to save him. But Siva and Sakti failed him. After a final struggle of three months he gave his soul to his Maker. His end was more comfortable than his life. An orthodox Hindu, with feeble health, careful of all the minute observances and endless prayers and fasts of his faith, his life was necessarily a good deal one of torture. As such, he ought, towards the close, when least capable of command or resistance though most in need of comfort and tender attention, to have been hurried on the shoulders of men unaccustomed to such burdens to the bank of the river, to be more or less summarily despatched. We are glad that he was allowed the benefit of an easy death at home, in the midst of his near and dear ones. Europeans cannot possibly comprehend all that is involved in all this. We for our part admire and respect and bless those who achieved this feat.

Baboo Dwarka Nath Dutt has left a widow and four sons, two of them grown up. The banianhip of Ralli Brothers continues in the deceased's family. He had trained his eldest son Babu Dhirenhanath in his business and the firm had accepted the son for the father while in his sick bed.

The second son Hirendranath is a promising young man still at College. He graduated with distinction at the last B. A. examination of the Calcutta University, standing, in two of the subjects, at the head of all other competitors, winning medals and a first class scholarship. We hope he will take better care of his health, which is not equal to his aptitude for knowledge.

The deceased cultivated no interest besides business. Hence, there is not much to say for, or about, him. The family scribes themselves, who have promptly and liberally supplied the press, have evidently been at their wits' end for want of materials for their obituary notices. Fortunately, there is nothing against the subject, which is more than can be said of many another who has not a fraction of the business of the deceased. Not having any taste for general society, his intercourse was necessarily confined to his numerous dependants and would-be dependants. For friends he had the far-seeing wights who had an eye to his Rupees as well as the large patronage at the disposal of Messrs. Ralli Brothers' Native manager, and such other wedding-guests of Prosperity, to use an expressive Bengali phrase. Such company cannot be improving. That is the moral of the life just closed. We draw it not to criticise the good man who is gone beyond the reach of earthly praise or blame, but, what is of more practical moment, to warn the living who have our best wishes. Baboo Dwarkanath was not fifty when he died, yet he was essentially a man of the Past. As a Hindu of the old class, it was enough for his honour to be regular in his devotions, unflinching in the celebration of the thirteen Festivals in the twelve months—to use another Bengali expression—sumptuous in his feasts, and liberal in his gifts to Brahmans and beggars. His sons are youths of the Present and will be of the men of Future. Let them betimes study and cultivate a higher ideal.

In this connection, we cannot help noticing the strange behaviour of a contemporary. The Indian Mirror's notice of this incident almost adds a new terror to death. It has certainly dealt a left-handed blow to the survivors, at a time when they are the objects of commiseration of every well-regulated mind. The offence may be unwitting, but its effect is all the same. Our contemporary has contrived to make the mourning family ridiculous. The praises of the obscure dead in the corners of newspapers are obviously inspired, if not actually paid for as advertisements. Such accounts of the deceased as appear must, of course, be furnished by relatives or friends. But no journal that professes to employ an editor or sub-editor, ever can swallow the whole camel offered. Not so our contemporary. It sticks at nothing, however offensive, and it has stomach for the entire zoology of the land in every stage of composition or decomposition. Uncaring for choice or selection, it knows no pruning—no omission, far less alteration: Recomposition is out of the question. The patient hack carries whatsoever burden is imposed on its back. More exemplary than the proverbial back, this hack never complains of the straw that breaks the other's spine. It adopts with a good face everything brought to it and coolly offers it without disguise as without compunction. Thus, it has printed a couple of notices of the recent death, because it received two, without any effort at combining them, or even at harmonising the two accounts. And it naïvely tells the world that it received two, thinking that a sufficient excuse for inflicting either, much less both, without recast or revision, upon the reader. That is, of course, its customary way. It is at the best a bad way, one of which any respectable paper ought to be ashamed. But, in the present instance, it amounts to an outrage on the family—perfectly unjustifiable, because absolutely gratuitous. There was no earthly occasion to display to the world their solicitude for the reputation of their lost head—to show clearly and specifically how, at the very first moments of their grief for the departed, they had been at the pains to compose not one but two different obituary notices of him. If the notices may be supposed to emanate from outside friends, the character of these effusive effusions still must cause the members of the family humiliation and pain. They are conspicuously exhibited and numbered seriatim. No. 1 in especial is ill written to a degree, to begin with. It is conceived in the worst taste, surcharged with the exaggerated expression of a grief which might become the widow and sons and nearer relations and particular friends of the deceased and even the Brahman recipients of his bounty, but which others have no business to feel and would be hypocritical to pretend to, and which would be extravagant and eminently foolish in public journalists. In publishing these writings as received and adopting them so to say and yet stamping them as outside communications, the Mirror, so far from lessening, has simply aggravated the mischief. It has made a mockery of the whole business.

The two might easily have been reduced to one, at any rate. They might be regarded as the produce of the same mint, one as an afterthought, intended not to supersede the previous one but to supply its deficiencies. The second notice, as pitched in a moderate key, is a fair piece, as well written as any of the Mirror's own, and it might have been adopted editorially, to the saving of all this unnecessary trouble and annoyance.

Notwithstanding the "heavy heart" with which the "sad death" and the "melancholy event" is recorded, there is too much obtrusion of self-consciousness for genuine grief.

For melancholy, silent maid,

With leaden eyes that love the ground, would scarcely, at the very outset, and in the same breath with the assertion of sorrow, care to dwell with the eye of an upholsterer or decorator on the architecture of the death-spot, with its puerile ornamentation of chess-board statuary for want of living sepoy guards. That "picturesque residence at Shampooker" in the midst of the bustees and slums of Black Town reduces the whole thing to bathos. Nor is that the only touch of absurdity in the notice.—But enough of this unpleasant episode of a sad event.

THE PAKPARA RAJ SUIT.

BENGAL and the Bengal Government are singularly fortunate in the Chief Secretary. By all accounts, he is a sterling man. His antecedents are all in his favour. He early earned his Companionship of the Bath by pluck and prudence on a difficult expedition. Had it not been for his enterprise, courage, and management, the mission to Soopool Lal would have failed like some others in that and other regions, or even might have been a scandal like the Eden embassy to Bhootan. The Deputy Commissioner not only succeeded in the specific undertaking, but, by his good administration, left a good name on the Eastern Frontier. He only wants ambition and advertising to make a great figure. His recent elevation to the Knighthood of the Indian Empire, though thoroughly deserved, must have been as great a surprise to him as to a good many. It is not such true men that are usually selected for the honors of the world, Sir John Edgar avoids ostentation, and loves to do his duty in silence. Yet, he is never wanting in social amenities and is ever ready to devote his good offices to the good of the people of this country in all possible ways, whether or not in his direct line. Thus, though a stranger, he lately tried to save the Pakpara family from the ruinous cost and bitterness of the litigation then, and we may say even now, pending in the High Court. It was a thankless task, in which success was most uncertain and the risk of displeasing all parties most imminent, yet he calmly undertook it and took a lot of trouble—to find it all for nothing. After all, the unfortunate cousins renewed the fight in court. There, it so happened however, that Judge Norris added his weight to the negotiation—on which Kumar Inder Chunder had set his heart—for a less expensive settlement of disputes between the contending litigants. The suit came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Norris on Monday the 8th April. A rule nisi had been obtained by Mr. Gasper on behalf of the Plaintiff Kumar Sarat Chunder Singh for the appointment of a Receiver. Messrs. Evans and Bonnerjee appeared to shew cause on behalf of Kumar Inder Chunder Singh. The Advocate-General and Mr. O'Kinealy represented Raja Poorna Chunder Singh. Mr. Pugh put in appearance for Ranees Puddomukhee, widow of the late Raja Protap Chunder Singh, father of the Plaintiff, Mr. Phillips represented the infant defendant Sirish Chunder Singh, a son of Raja Poorna Chunder and the adopted son of the late Kumar Grish Chunder, the eldest son of the late Raja Protap Chunder. Messrs. Woodroffe and Gasper appeared in support of the rule on behalf of the Plaintiff. Mr. Evans contended that the suit was not maintainable, in the face of the Agreement dated the 1st September 1887, by which Raja Poorna Chunder and Kumar Inder Chunder and Sarat Chunder, for themselves and as executors to the estate of the late Grish Chunder, bound themselves to refer all matters in dispute between themselves, including the partition of the joint property, to arbitration, and that, although a clause in the Agreement throws the whole cost on the recusant party in case a suit was brought, yet the Agreement is a bar to a suit if the conditions are not observed. A question now arose whether two counsel could be heard for one party. After a consultation with Mr. Justice Traversan, Mr. Justice Norris decided to hear both. The Judge wanted to hear Mr. Woodroffe before allowing Mr. Evans to go into the merits. Mr. Evans had other grounds and threw out the hint that those supporting him might be heard before Mr. Woodroffe, and suggested the appointment of a common manager under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Advocate-General said the infant was bound by the clause about arbitration and therefore Plaintiff could not object on that score. Mr. Phillips would take no part in this dispute, but only wished that if there was to be a partition it ought to be carried out least expensively. Mr. Pugh had nothing to say against the course proposed by those who shewed cause, but as there was no provision in the agreement for a share to his client, and as there might be difficulty in obtaining it in the event of the case being withdrawn by permission, he would ask for specific directions for a share. Mr. Woodroffe said Puddomukhee was entitled to a share, but the agreement makes no provision about it. He narrated the history of Section 21 of the Specific Relief Act and Section 28 of the Contract Act. Section 28 of the latter Act has been modified by Section 21 of the former. Section 28 is the substantive law and what follows simply modifies that. He then read the exceptions, and the repealed part of the section, and went into the history of the Act. The Judge interrupted Mr. Woodroffe, saying he could not allow him to refer to the Objects and Reasons given in the reports of the Council. After some further argument by Mr. Woodroffe, the Judge suggested that a Receiver be appointed and the suit withdrawn and the matters in dispute referred to two arbitrators with an umpire, without raising any questions of law at all. Mr. Woodroffe would have an arbitrator appointed in the suit and suggested the name of Mr. Belchambers. The Judge shewed a disinclination to discharge the rule, for then there might be an appeal and considerable delay and expense. He would prefer a Bengali gentleman of the bar for the partition of the estate who would command implicit confidence of both sides, as he would not like to see the old estate frittered away. He would order the arbitrator to proceed de die in diem. He wanted to know if the parties agreed. Mr. Woodroffe asked the Court to appoint a Receiver and an arbitrator. The Court next adjourned for parties to consult and agree.

On the Court reassembling, Mr. Evans announced that he was willing to accept Mr. Phillips as arbitrator, and Mr. Rajnarain Mitter as Receiver and manager on Rs. 1,000 a month. Mr. Woodroffe added "by consent of all parties." The Judge then declared that the course proposed was for the benefit of the infant defendant. Here Mr. Woodroffe suggested some matters to minimise the delay and expensiveness of partition proceedings which reflect very much on the discreditable system now ruling. It is time enough the Law Member took up the subject and devised some plan to save the existing Hindu joint families from the all absorbing law costs. Mr. Woodroffe would have Mr. Phillips as the sole referee. In case Mr. Phillips retired from any cause, he would have a second person appointed with equal powers who should not begin de novo, power being reserved for separate reports. He wished that the arbitrator be not at liberty to walk over the properties with his host of clerk, interpreter, engineers and attorneys of the parties to swell the costs on the plea of making himself acquainted with the subject of partition for a thorough and impartial division. Authority should also be reserved to call on parties to furnish the arbitrator with valuation lists of all items, such valuation lists to be taken as conclusive of value against them, also to call upon the Receiver to furnish the arbitrator with all information in his power. The arbitrator is to be left free to divide in any manner he pleased, and as far as possible to allot to each person whole estates. The arbitrator should have power to state cases—such as questions which may arise as to debutter property and maintenance of Mr. Pugh's client.

Mr. Evans would make Mr. Phillips the sole arbitrator on all questions, as all were agreed that he was perfectly competent to decide such questions which Mr. Woodroffe would reserve. The Advocate-General was willing that Mr. Phillips should decide whether a property was debutter or not and all questions of stridhan, amount of maintenance and all. Mr. Justice Norris ordered accordingly. Each party to bear his own costs, the infant's costs being paid out of the infant's property. Mr. Mitter was appointed Receiver without security, quite free to appoint and dismiss officers, and to lease out property. He is also to collect the rents of the debutter property, but to keep a separate account pending the decision of the arbitrator.

THIRTY YEARS OF INDIAN FINANCE

BEING

Extracts from the "Memorandum on some of the results of Indian Administration," prepared at the India Office and lately presented to Parliament on the financial history of the last thirty years in India.

Finance.—The thirty years now under review began when the financial difficulties caused by the Sepoy Mutiny were at their height; between the years 1857 and 1862 those troubles caused a great excess of expenditure over revenue, and an addition of

Rx. 42,100,000 to the public debt of India. In the year 1861-62 equilibrium was practically restored to the finances. For the purpose of the present remarks it will be best to take the years before and after the financial disturbance caused by the mutiny. In the year 1856-57 the total revenue of India was Rx. 33,378,000, and the year closed with a deficit of Rx. 474,000. During the 20 years previous to the Mutiny there had been 14 years of deficit and six years of surplus, yielding a net deficit of Rx. 18,626,000, and an addition of Rx. 16,737,000 to the debt. During the 25 years from 1862-63 to 1886-87 there were 14 years of surplus, and 11 years of deficit, yielding a total surplus of Rx. 6,169,000. For the purpose of this reckoning the sum of Rx. 7,829,000, set aside between the years 1881-82 and 1886-87 to meet future liabilities on account of famine relief, has been treated as surplus. The debt of India on the 31st March 1887 was Rx. 92,654,000 and £84,228,000, or about 177 millions in all. But against this should be set 78 millions of capital spent on railways, 25 millions on irrigation works, and 7 millions on loans to Native States or local bodies; this outlay yields upon the whole a net return of about 5 per cent. The public debt of India, apart from capital thus invested, is therefore 67 millions, as against 51 millions before, and 93 millions after, the mutiny period. The reduction of the real burden of the debt has been achieved by spending in prosperous years large sums on reproductive works, and by investing the sums set aside against future famines either in the public stocks or in reproductive works. At the end of the mutiny period the rupee debt bore interest at rates ranging for the most part from 4 to 5½ per cent., and it was difficult to borrow money in England for India under 5 per cent. In 1888 the Indian debt bears interest at rates ranging from 3 to 4½ per cent.; the conversion of 53,261,820*l.* India 4 per cent. stock into a corresponding amount bearing only 3½ per cent., having been very recently effected; and during the present year money has been raised to pay off Indian loans or to pay for railways at the rate of 3-1/10 per cent. in England and of 4 per cent. in India.

Income and Expenditure.—The total revenue of India in 1886-87 was Rx. 62,859,000, exclusive of railway earnings and municipal funds. This is nearly double the revenue of the period before the mutiny; yet the increase is almost entirely due to the growth of revenue under old heads. The only new revenues are the income tax, the provincial rates, and the forest receipts; they yield in all about Rx. 3,500,000, which sum is not much greater than the yield of the customs, salt, and inland duties abolished at different times during the last twenty-five years. New local cesses and other imposts for local, municipal, and port improvements have been imposed since the mutiny; but they are expended entirely by local bodies on local objects, such as roads, harbours, hospitals, and town improvements.

The current expenditure of the year 1886-87, apart from capital outlay on railways and from local or municipal funds, was Rx. 61,492,000, which shows a very large increase over the expenditure of Rx. 33,852,000 in the year 1856-57. This increase is due partly to the fact that revenues and charges are now shown "gross," whereas in former years some heads were shown "net," partly to enhanced outlay on public works of all kinds, partly to the increased Army charges and partly to the silver difficulty described in the next following paragraph; but it is mainly due to the growing requirements of a civilised and improving administration. The interest payable for capital spent on reproductive works is larger; the pension list has increased; the land revenue administration is more elaborate; there are many more courts of justice and more police; the outlay on post offices and telegraphs has grown; the expenditure on education, on hospitals, on forest administration is many fold larger than it was in 1856; the standard of wages has risen; the average salaries paid to educated Native officers of all ranks have more than doubled, while the salaries of but few European Civil officers have increased, though the value of salaries paid in silver has fallen for the purpose of savings or expenditure in Europe. In order that the administration of India should be improved in accordance with the growing requirements of the present time, very much of this increased expenditure was absolutely unavoidable. Special commissions or inquiries are frequently instituted to check and reduce expenditure, and in this way economies are effected or increase is checked. The guardians of the Indian exchequer are constantly occupied in resisting proposals for additional expenditure, even though such proposals are shown to be in themselves reasonable and beneficial. But, with all this, the cost of a civilised government tends to increase, as is seen in England and other countries of Europe, and the increase has been more rapid in India, where such a government is of comparatively recent growth. The financial difficulties caused by the fall in the gold value of silver, and by the enhanced cost of the Army, have compelled the Government, both in India and in England, to take very stringent steps for restricting expenditure and preventing further increase.

Current difficulty.—During the last fifteen years the task of administering the finances of India has become much more difficult by reason of the fall in the value of silver as compared with gold. Ever since India has been a dependency of Great Britain, a considerable expenditure on account of India has had to be incurred in England. Three generations ago India paid what might have been called tribute, just as the Dutch East Indies do at the present time. But the days of such tributes from British India have long passed away; and the English expenditure of the Indian Government is on account of interest on so much of the public debt as was borrowed in England; on account of interest on guaranteed railway capital, nearly all of which was payable in gold; on account of stores, arms, and material for railways, troops, and public Departments; on account of the depôts and despatch of British troops for India; and on account of pensions to retired public servants and soldiers. About 15 millions sterling has, in these ways, to be spent in England on account of the Indian Government, and this has to be paid in gold, while the Indian revenues are raised in silver.

For nearly a hundred years, up to 1871, ten rupees of Indian money could on the average be exchanged for one pound sterling of English money. And at that rate Rx. 15,000,000 (or fifteen millions of ten rupees) would suffice to cover India's yearly liability of 15 millions sterling in England. But since 1871 silver has been practically demonetized in Europe; India and China are now the only great countries that freely coin or absorb silver; and the relative value of silver, as compared with gold, has gone steadily down. During the present year the sterling value of the rupee has been as low as 11.4d., as against 2 shillings, the usual value of former times. At this reduced rate it would cost India Rx. 22,500,000 (or twenty-two and a half millions of ten rupees) to meet her liabilities of 15 millions sterling in England. Thus the Indian exchequer may have to provide for the service of the year, on account of charges in England Rs. 7,500,000 more than it would have had to provide under the exchange rates of former times; and the charge thus arising fluctuates, from year to year, or from month to month, in accordance with the silver market, to an extent that the Indian financial authorities are wholly unable to foresee. By borrowing for railway extensions or other purposes in India instead of in England, future aggravation of the silver difficulty is to some extent avoided. During the present year a strong Royal Commission have been considering the currency difficulty, which was alleged to have injuriously affected trade. The great charges caused to the Indian Treasury by the fall in the gold value of silver account in great measure for the present difficulties of Indian finance; they form the principal reason why deficits have sometimes occurred in recent years, why the income tax has been revived and salt duties have been enhanced, why the rice duty has not been taken off, why outlay on public improvements has been restricted, and why some authorities advise the reimposition of customs duties on importations in India.

Financial system.—Before 1858 the absolute control of all the finances throughout India, down to the smallest detail, was in the hands of the Supreme Government. Not even a messenger on a rupee a week could be permanently engaged without the sanction of the Governor-General in Council; and detailed projects for even small and urgent works had to be submitted to the Government of India. There were no Budget Estimates published annually; and though expenditure was vigilantly restricted, and accounts were carefully audited, detailed grants of money were not fixed for each head of service, against which grants expenditure could be checked and brought to account. By Act of Parliament in 1858 the entire control of the revenues both in India and elsewhere is vested in the Secretary of State in Council; but as a matter of practice he delegates a large portion of this power to the Government of India under rules and regulations laid down from time to time.

In 1860 Mr. James Wilson introduced the system of annual Budget Estimates, with sanctioned grants for each sub-head in every province and district. Under this system Budget Estimates for the Empire are compiled from the sanctioned Estimates for each province and department; and the final Estimates are made public before the beginning of the year, together with the accounts and revised Estimates of the two preceding years. When the Budget Estimates of any year involve legislation for the reduction or increase of taxation, the Estimates are laid before the Legislative Council, whose sanction is sought to the projects of law brought forward. Every department and official is rigorously bound to keep expenditure within the sanctioned grant, or to report at once for orders if unforeseen circumstances, such as failure of crops, famine, or war, prevent the fulfilment of the sanctioned estimates of revenue, or necessitate excess outlay beyond the sanctioned grant. Behind the control of the Government of India is that of the Secretary of State for India in Council, who has laid down the principle that without his sanction no new office carrying a salary of more than Rx. 3,000 a year can be created, no serious departure from the sanctioned Budget Estimates is permitted, and no large scheme involving fresh expenditure can be launched. Mr. Wilson's system, with certain modifications of detail, is still in force. From the time when he made his Budget speech in February 1860, the Indian Budgets or projects of law relating to financial measures of the year have been discussed on 18 occasions in the Legislative Council, and have on 11 occasions been published without such discussion.

Provincial Finance.—As the business of the administration increased, it was found increasingly difficult for the Supreme Government to exercise a detailed control over every item of expenditure throughout the Empire. Although the Budget system imposed a strict limit on expenditure during any year, yet at the end of each year the Local Governments were constantly pressing that more funds should be devoted to administrative and other improvements in their provinces. Lord Mayo's Government in 1870 decided that wider financial responsibilities and powers might advantageously be delegated to the Local Governments; they transferred to the provincial authorities the entire management of certain heads of civil expenditure, allotted to each Local Government fixed grants to pay for these services or Departments, and left them full discretion to spend those grants to the best advantage, subject to Budget rules and to the reservation of the powers of the Secretary of State. At the same time a more complete control was delegated to Local Governments over expenditure from all funds raised for local purposes. It was found that his partial provincialisation of the finances saved much correspondence and friction, conduced to efficient administration, and led the Local Governments to introduce important economies and improvements that might otherwise have been indefinitely postponed.

In 1877, and again in 1882, the provincial system was carried much further; the remaining heads of civil expenditure, as well as the irrigation canals and some of the State railways, were placed under the financial control of the Local Governments. At the same time, the interest of the provincial authorities were still further increased in the development of the revenue by the delegation to them of the management of all heads of provincial revenue, and by allotting to them shares of that revenue instead of a fixed money grant, to meet the provincial expenditure. As the provincial finance system now stands, the Supreme Government keeps under its own control the opium, salt, customs, post office, and telegraph, tributes, mint, and currency receipts, and also the expenditure under those heads, on the army and military works, on political relations, on the public debt, and on certain trunk railways. The administrative control of other heads of revenue and expenditure devolves on the Local Governments. In round numbers and exclusive of railways, the Supreme Government keeps the control over Rx. 22,000,000 of revenue and Rx. 44,000,000 of expenditure, including payments in England, while to the Local Governments is delegated the control of Rx. 42,000,000 of revenue and Rx. 20,000,000 of expenditure.

Neither the Secretary of State in Council nor the Government of India is divested, by the provincial finance system, of responsibility for the finances or for the administration of provincialised revenues and departments. By the Budget rules, under provisions enacted by the Legislature, and by means of constant reports, they maintain control over the proceedings of the Local Governments. They reserve the right of modifying the provincial finance arrangements either periodically or when special need arises.

Paper Currency and Mint.—The three Presidency banks had a note circulation which reached Rx. 3,317,000 in the year 1860, and which was hardly current outside the cities of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras. In the year 1862 the private note circulation ceased, and the Government introduced a paper currency on the basis of complete convertibility into silver. There are now eight circles of issue, each of which gives in exchange for money notes ranging from Rs. 5 to Rs. 10,000 in value. Notes can be cashed up to any amount at the circle and head-quarters; and they can be obtained or cashed in moderate quantities at most of the district treasuries in the circle. The value of the currency notes in circulation, which began with Rx. 3,690,000, amounted in March 1888 to Rx. 16,424,000; for some years previous it had kept at about 14 millions without showing permanent tendency to advance. The service performed by the note circulation is more considerable than the foregoing figures might imply; for the returns of the past year show that from April 1887 to March 1888 Rx. 83¼ millions worth of notes were issued by the currency department for cash, while Rx. 80½ millions worth were cashed at currency offices and agencies. The Currency Act allows a part of the silver received for notes to be invested up to a maximum of Rx. 6,000,000. The full amount has been invested in Government securities for some years past; and the interest yielded by this investment amounts to Rx. 250,000 a year, while the expenditure of the Currency Department amounts to Rx. 37,000 a year.

Before the year 1858 there were three mints in British India. By reason of the railway communications and of improvements in mint processes and machinery, it was found possible to close the Madras mint, and to do the work of the country with two mints. The Indian mints now work as well and as economically as the present state of scientific knowledge permits, and minor improvements or economies are being introduced from year to year. The total value of the silver and copper coined in British India from 1859 to 1887 inclusive has been Rx. 188,098,000; the heaviest coinage in any one year was Rx. 16,329,000 during 1877-78, the year of the great famine, when large quantities of silver were sent to the mints either by importers or from hoards and jewellery in the distressed districts.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know; and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because he little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE BALLAD OF PANDAVA.

[Concluded from p. 326.]

PART III.

The priests and all the people
Are out by Delhi Gate,
And silently they watch the King
Who leaves them desolate.

But never to the left hand,
And never to the right,
And never backwards turns the King ;
And his face is changed and white.

And such a shining in their eyes
Has dazzled men, they say,
Who, having seen too bright a light,
See nothing else away.

Not one of all that company
Of men that weep and yearn
Not one of all that company
(Seeing those eyes that burn)
Not one of all that company
That dares to say, " Return ! "

But long they look, and hard they look,
And very long they wait,
Till but a wandering speck of white
Is seen from Delhi Gate.

IV.

The sun burns down from morn till night,
And underfoot the sand
Blisters the feet of them that go
Unresting through the land.

Far off the sea, a shield of steel
Shines cruel and accurst,
And fills the blazing air with brine
That keeps them aye athirst.

" Oh, turn a little while, Pandava,
Tarry and turn thee round !
Thy wife that was so fair and kind
Lies dying on the ground ! "

" My way lies on in front, brother,
I may not turn aside ;
She loved another more than I,
And, therefore, hath she died. "

" Oh turn, by all our love, Pandava,
For lo ! at thy right hand
Our youngest one, our Lionheart,
Lies senseless on the sand ! "

" My way lies on in front, brother,
I may not turn aside ;
He gloried vainly in his strength,
And, therefore, hath he died. "

" Nay, hear me now at last, Pandava,
The twins, the crown of grace,
Lie dying in each other's arms
And ask to see thy face ! "

" My way lies on in front, brother,
I may not turn aside :
Too well they knew that they were fair,
And, therefore, have they died. "

" Nay, I, thine other self, brother,
I sink upon the sand,
Oh say, what was my secret sin !
Oh, reach thy helping-hand ! "

" My way lies on in front, brother,
I cannot help thee, I :
Thou deemd'st thyself more wise than God,
And, therefore, must thou die. "

Straight on goes King Pandava
Alone but for the hound,
He goes towards the Heavenly Gates,
Nor ever turns around.

V.

When seven days were come and gone,
Pandava fell asleep
Beneath a palm tree on the sand ;
And his sleep was sound and deep

And when he woke at last, abashed,
While still the dawn was bright,
Lo ! at his feet an Angel
Stood in a rush of Light

" Lo ! I am here, Pandava !
My chariot waits for thee !
And gladly would that King have gone,
But his hound moaned long and dree.

" Fain would I come, thou Angel,
But lo ! I am not free ;
I cannot leave my faithful hound
• Who mourned so long with me. "

" Oh, thou art a loyal master, King,
If he is a loyal hound,
Wert thou as true to them that lie
Unburied on the ground ? "

" The dead, they sleep at ease, I think,
'Twas they abandoned me.
My faithful hound had never died
In my necessity.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

"Through heat and cold, the days of thirst,
The dreary nights and dim,
He went with me; and now, Angel,
I e'en must go with him!"

"—Nay, call thy hound to thee, O King,
In heaven he is no hound!
He only is a faithful soul
Whose service knew no bound.

"Oh, call thy hound and mount with me
My chariot tarries long."
And gladly would that King have gone,
But his heart mourned sore and strong

"Fain would I come, thou Angel,
But I must stay behind;
I cannot leave my dead brothers,
My wife, the dear and kind.

"As I forewent the joys of earth
So Heaven I now forego,
And as I left my dead brothers,
Thee must I leave also."

"Nay, dry thy tears, O King, for still
My chariot waits for thee:
Lo! at the gate of Heaven
Thy dear ones shalt thou see.

"They stand around the Throne of God,
Like lilies dear and white;
But thou shalt enter Heaven alive,
Among these souls of light.

"They stand around the Throne of God,
Like roses white and fresh;
But thou shalt enter Heaven alive,
Still in thy robe of flesh.

"Lo! thou shalt enter Heaven alive,
Because thou didst forego
More utterly, more deeply,
Than any man may know."

He ceased: a trembling took the earth,
The skies were strange to see,
And lo! the heavens opened,
The stars shouted for glee.

One lightning flash from Earth to Heaven
And by the stricken palm,
There was for miles no living thing,
Only the endless calm.

Nor shall the like again be seen
Of all the saints that strive,
No other King Pandava
Shall enter Heaven alive.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

MR. A. MACKENZIE, C.S.I., goes on two months and sixteen days' leave. The Hon'ble R. J. Crosthwaite, Judicial Commissioner, acts during the period the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces

THE two Members of the Board of Revenue, Lower Provinces, are now formally permitted to exercise generally all the duties, powers, and authority vested in the Board collectively. Accordingly, the Honourable F. M. Halliday will have independent power in the department of Land Revenue. That includes revenue, survey, settlement, land registration, land improvements, the sale or lease of waste land and Government estates, the management of wards' and attached estates, the collection of cesses, the realization of arrears of revenue, and the recovery of public demands, rent suits, embankments, pensions, the examination, enrolment, &c., of revenue agents, putni sales and the supply of provisions for troops. Mr. F. B. Peacock, now Mr. J. Beames the other officiating Member, will be lord over the departments of Miscellaneous Revenue, including excise, assessed taxes, salt, opium, customs, stamps, and stationery, tolls and canals, the partition of estates, and the acquisition of land for public purposes.

THE dog-tax has been sanctioned for the Cantonment of Quetta and fixed at one rupee, per calendar year, for every dog of the age of six months or more. It will be recovered from the person or persons owning or having charge of such dog but not from any warrant officer or from any non-Commissioned officer or soldier of Her Majesty's regular forces. They are exempt as also persons not residing for more than thirty days in a year. The tax is payable on the first day of March and recoverable by a summary proceeding under the Code of Criminal Procedure.

THE preliminary and final tests of the competitive examination for admission into the Superior Accounts Branch of the Public Works Department for the current year will begin on the 5th August and 18th November respectively, at the Thomason Civil Engineering College, Rurki, and at the Office of an Examiner of Accounts of the P. W. Department as may suit the convenience of the candidates who have received nominations.

THE Magician Mr. S. J. Kilby has charmed his way up to Simla. He will now draw his pay from the Department of Finance and Commerce. Mr. W. P. Vanspall, Inspector, Preventive Service, will perform the additional duties of Superintendent, Customs Preventive Service and Sulkeah Salt Golahs, and Mr. R. Drake, Sub-Deputy Opium Agent, will act both as Superintendent of Stationery and Stamps and Collector of Income Tax.

BABOO MOHENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE, Deputy Collector, Howrah, has been accepted as Personal Assistant to the new Commissioner of Excise under the Board of Revenue. Baboo Pran Kumar Das, a rising young officer, had reckoned on this post, but meanwhile the family seem to have wearied of the department of publicans and sinners—rendered more than ever undesirable, we suspect, from the fierce light of public discussion, here as well as in England, which has of late been let on it—and he cast a longing eye on another similar office at the Presidency. No sooner desired than got, he recently found himself smuggled into a Personal Assistantship of the Presidency Commissioner, to the amazement of Baboo Tariney Kumar Ghose, who was shunted out instantly, and not, we are constrained to add, to the credit of the Commissioner, still less of the Bengal Office.

MR. A. U. FANSHAWE has been confirmed as Director-General of the Post Office of India.

MR. H. A. D. PHILLIPS does not go back to Rajshahi. He is Gazetted for Dinagepoor.

THE Bengal Government has been enabled to do some justice to Baboo Durgagaty Banerjee. The Baboo has been confirmed as Deputy Collector of Calcutta and Superintendent of Excise Revenue. He has infused new vigor into the Departments and removed many abuses.

THE Jail in the Town of Bardwan will be extended. Eleven beegahs of land have been declared under the Act. Has there been a fresh importation of budmashes?

THE Army and Navy Gazette thus comments on the present movements of Stanley and Emin Pasha:—

"Some portions of the latest news respecting Mr. Stanley are not very intelligible, and at present it is quite impossible to understand where the gallant explorer is, or what he has been doing. But it is plain that he was alive and well quite recently, although his expedition seems to have suffered terribly, and we may expect to hear of him from Mombasa—the chief station of the British East African Company—in the course of the next few weeks. Both he and Emin Pasha appear to be forcing their way down to the East Coast, but as to what route they are taking, or what force they have at their disposal, we are in absolute ignorance. It is certain, however, that the district through which Stanley and Emin would have to pass to reach the East Coast is most dangerous. It has of late been the centre of the Arab movement of which so much has been heard, and which must be regarded as one of the effects of Mahdism in the Soudan, although in all probability it was greatly intensified by the action of German officials in the neighbourhood of Zanzibar. In ordinary circumstances the life of a European in these regions would not be worth an hour's purchase, but, fortunately, Mr. Stanley's influence with the native tribes has always been most remarkable, and, in addition to this, he seems to have the assistance of Tippoo Tib, whose influence with the Arab slave-traders is enormous. Stanley and Emin must, too, have a powerful force, that is if Emin is bringing away his Egyptian and black soldiers, a force that ought to be quite strong enough, we should think, to beat down any opposition that might be offered. Before the summer is over we shall probably hear of the final success of one of the most difficult and daring undertakings ever attempted."

AN amorous swain of a young farm labourer at Villenouvelle, near Toulouse, asked his master for the hand of his daughter. For this impertinence the fellow was dismissed from service. He took it very seriously to heart, and had his revenge by murdering the father and mother as well as the labourer who had replaced him in the labour of the farm. Nor did he spare the poor girl whom he had proposed to make his wife. What a horrible brute for a Christian or civilised country to produce!

It is said, early next spring, he contemplates another journey further north, and if that prove successful, he will make for the North Pole itself.

THE Lick Observatory, Mount Hamilton, boasts of the largest telescope in the world. The United States Naval Observatory, Washington, keeps a telescope of 26-inch lens; the University of Virginia has one of the same calibre; the Imperial Observatory, Pulkowa, Russia, has still more telescopic power by 4 inches; but the Lick Observatory outdistances them all by its 36-inch telescope. These are all by Mr. Alvan G. Clark, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is now engaged on a yet larger telescope, of 40-inch lens, for the University of Southern California. The cost has been estimated at 100,000 dols. Mr. E. F. Spence, of Los Angeles, has given enough funds to guarantee this large sum. The glass plate from which the lens is to be ground is now being made in Paris by M. Mantois. It is expected the lens will be completed in 1892.

We hope this great advance in telescopic power will be more fruitful of discovery than hitherto. The great Rosse monster has proved a disappointment.

THE Silly season of collectors has been abolished in America, and there is mourning among the caterers to bibliomaniacs. The Book-Lover of New York says "It is rapidly becoming an established custom with Americans to discard all kinds of hobbies during the summer season." The monthly will be accordingly suspended during the hot months.

HERE are more of Mr. Serjeant Robinson's reminiscences in the just published Bench and Bar. There was a Judge at the Old Bailey named Arabin who was a famous breeder of that variety of intellectual zoology called bulls.

Thus, in sentencing a prisoner, he once said—

"'Prisoner at the bar, if ever there was a clearer case than this of a man robbing his master, this case is that case.' He also told a prisoner that he should have 'a chance of redeeming a character that he had irretrievably lost.'"

Again, in passing sentence on another prisoner, he claimed to temper justice with mercy, saying—

"It is in my power to subject you to transportation for a period very considerably beyond the term of your natural life, but the court, in its mercy, will not go as far as it lawfully might go."

THE Statesman's Srinagar Correspondent reports a story current there. The State Council from Srinagar sent a telegram to Radhakishen, the present Governor of Jammoo, (sometime Governor of Ladak) to order the Chief Judge at Jammoo, Babu Dassedram, to come up to Srinagar at once. The Baboo wanted a few days' time to go as he was suffering from ill health. The Governor reported accordingly, whereupon an order came from the Council dismissing the Chief Judge. The latter called on the Governor and called for the authority of the Council to dismiss him. It is said that the Governor told him that the Maharaja was now a cipher and the Council all in all, and that he must obey the Council. The Chief Judge thereupon turned round upon the Governor and questioned his authority to speak thus of the Maharaja. He called for the order appointing the Council and refused to give up office till the Maharaja's orders to the Council to dismiss him were shown. He then repaired to the Maharaja who was at Jammoo and reported what had happened, and afterwards arrested the Governor for the remark he had made against the Maharaja. The Governor has been set at large, but the Judge is still in office.

That is a mere story, we believe—highly exaggerated, if not utterly unfounded.

It is said that Muckly the Man of Munmon, of America, and his wife are about to sue two London journals for libel for insinuating that they came by their fortune by questionable means. Here is a prospect indeed for the lawyers and the quidnuncs.

THE late proceedings at the Mansion House, in honor of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava and Earl of Ava, have been received throughout Great Britain in a spirit most flattering to his feelings. The whole press, without regard to party differences, have endorsed the "ovation," and the criticism on his Lordship's own utterances on the occasion have been generous to a degree. Yet, there has been no lack of appreciation of the merits of the general questions involved in a judgment on the late administration. The annexation of Burma was felt to be a difficulty by his best friends. Thus, the Leeds Mercury, notwithstanding its warm sympathy with the demonstrations of honor in the ex-Viceroy's favor, does not hesitate to say—

"Burmah, thus far, is rather a reproach than a glory to the English name. It was in November, 1885, that Upper Burmah was annexed by us, and it cannot yet be pronounced to be even approximately pacified."

THE same journal concludes its eloquent and well-merited éloge on the late viceroyalty in these words:—

"What we have really done, notwithstanding nearly a century of experience in India, and more than thirty years of experience in Lower Burmah, has been to commit blunder after blunder; to demonstrate an inconceivable incapacity for the suppression of, and the discrimination between the real and the imaginary, dacoity; to alienate the orderly and the peaceful, and to aggravate into bitterness the patriotism we ought to have done our utmost to conciliate. We have more than once signalled some of the notable blunders that have marked our mismanagement, and amongst them the disbanding at the outset of disaffected troops without disarming them, and the subsequent carrying out of a ruthless and indiscriminating disarmament of townsmen and villagers. The fatality still clings to us. The latest of the so-called measures of pacification seems to rival the worst of its predecessors. The Times' correspondent at Rangoon says 'the Deputy-Commissioners throughout the upper province have been granted power summarily to compel the inhabitants of the smaller villages to leave their homes and transfer themselves to larger villages. This measure, which, by massing the villagers in greater numbers, is supposed to place them in a better position to resist dacoits, often involves for the villagers the necessity of moving many miles and abandoning their crops. These forced removals entail so much hardship and loss on the people that they are migrating to the lower province in great numbers.' The Rangoon Gazette and the Mandalay Herald equally condemn this measure. 'Villagers who for generations have depended on certain occupations, which the locality of their old villages enabled them to follow, have been removed to places where the pursuit of any occupation by which they could earn their bread was rendered impossible.' No wonder that this is described by the Press as an 'absolutely unaccountable policy,' and one that is resulting in 'an unjustifiable amount of real and avoidable distress, and in rapidly depopulating the upper provinces.' No wonder also that the Mandalay Herald adds, 'This particular policy of the local Government specially deserves the attention of the House of Commons.' We trust that Mr. Bradlaugh will persist in his avowed dissatisfaction with Sir John Gorst's recent reply to his question respecting our rule in Burmah, and will call the attention of the House seriously and resolutely to this—though not only to this—latest manifestation of the unwisdom with which the welfare of the Burmese and the honour and the interests of the English Empire are being damaged and imperilled. If Sir Charles Crosthwaite should really be about to retire, it is earnestly to be hoped that the Government may at last be able to nominate a Chief Commissioner who will know how to take up responsibilities which have been thus far most unhappily misplaced."

It is satisfactory to know that the provincial press of England, which is now practically more important than the metropolitan journals, keeps an intelligent watch over at least the larger transactions of the Indian Empire.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THEY are talking in the Mother Country of the prospect of a normal prorogation of Parliament and no autumn session.

The cotton manufacturers, at a meeting in Manchester, have resolved to work for a month half time.

Mr. Parnell has given a new turn to the Parnell Commission. All the counsel on his side have been withdrawn. On the announcement, on the 16th, by Sir Charles Russell that he and Mr. Asquith had been instructed to withdraw from the case, Sir James Hannen said that Mr. Parnell continues under the jurisdiction of the Commission.

The Whitecappel murders have not ceased. Another dead woman was found, on the 16th, in Castle-street, with her throat cut and body lashed horribly. The Police have not yet spotted any murderer. They have not to seek him far, we suspect.

The mobilisation has commenced of the British Navy at Spithead for the grand review and naval manœuvres next month before the Emperor of Germany.

Mr. Gladstone suggested a compromise for the Royal grants and the doubling of the grant to the Prince of Wales to £80,000 per annum. The Government have agreed to the compromise with certain reservations.

Lord Salisbury, at a private meeting of Conservative organisers at the Tower Hamlets, has expressed the opinion that the only means of preserving peace was for the country to be thoroughly armed.

The French Chamber of Deputies has voted sixty-one million francs for better coast defences and for more ships.

As a check against Boulangism the Chamber has passed a Bill forbidding any one to stand for more than one constituency.

The Committee of the Senate has finally ordered the trial of General Boulanger, Count Dillon, and M. Rochefort for conspiracy to overthrow the Republic. The General is further charged with gross malversation.

The Chamber has closed its sessional labors.

In Egypt, the Dervishes continue to cause anxiety. They have taken up a strong position at Khor with 2,500 fighting men. General Grenfell called upon Wad-el-Njumi and his Dervishes to surrender, but the bearer of the message got a beating and was sent back without a reply. A reply has since been received reminding the General of the fate of Hicks Pasha and General Gordon.

SIR Evelyn Baring, in a letter to Lord Salisbury reporting the progress in Egypt, says that though the reforms so far undertaken have been in a great measure due to the English military occupation which supports the British advice in Egyptian affairs, frankly admits the cordiality with which the Khedive and his ministry have introduced improvements.

THERE have been several and serious landslips in Simla. A condemned and untenanted three-storeyed house in the bazar, near the Ripon Hospital, has been carried away by one of the slips.

LORD LANSDOWNE has offered, during his stay in India, five silver and two bronze medals to successful female medical students in connection with the Lady Dufferin Fund. He might have spared the bronze bagatelle. Depreciated silver is the cheapest metal for the British Mogul to descend to.

THE Calcutta Lady Dufferin Hospital Fund has been enriched by Rs. 20,000, out of the balance of the local Jubilee Fund.

SIR STEWART BAYLEY, accompanied by the Revenue Secretary Mr. C. E. Buckland, the Private Secretary Mr. P. C. Lyon, and the A. D. C. Captain Currie, started on his Patna tour by the ordinary up-mail on Monday evening. The party dined at Burdwan and arrived at Bankipur at nine next morning. There were present at the platform, Mr. Boxwell the Commissioner, Mr. Tweedie the Judge, Mr. Kemble the Opium Agent, Mr. Faulder the Collector, the Maharaja of Hutwa, Dewa Jaiprakash Lal of Doomraon and others.

THE Chief Secretary Sir John Edgar has gone to Orissa to enquire into the distressed condition of the Tributary Mahals.

MISS EDITH MABEL DUFF has been sent back to prison. The N.-W. P. High Court considers the punishment already suffered, too short for her secret love, and open horror, of a native torch-bearer—musalchi. The particulars will be found in the following judgment of the Chief Justice:—

"The Hon. the Chief Justice (Mr. Justice Straight and Mr. Justice Tyrrell concurring): Edith Mabel Duff was convicted by the Joint-Magistrate of Allahabad on her own confession for having committed perjury in a statement which was made to the Magistrate on the 6th December 1888, in which she charged one Mr. Edwards with being the father of her illegitimate child. On that statement on the 6th December 1888, a summons was issued to Mr. Edwards to show cause why an order in bastardy should not be made against him. The girl Duff had been in the service of one Mrs. Gordon. That statement, as far as we know, she persisted in until it was withdrawn by her formally on the 8th May 1889, when she went before Mr. Elloy, the Deputy Magistrate, who had heard her application on the 6th December. On the 8th May last she retracted what she said on the 6th December 1888, and said that a musalchi, and not Mr. Edwards, was the father of the child. Arising out of this original statement of hers, a prosecution was instituted against her step-father, Mr. Stewart. He, assuming that her story was true, appears to have written the letter in respect to which he was prosecuted for defamation. In the course of the prosecution, the evidence of Mrs. Gordon on the 16th January 1889 was taken on commission. Mrs. Gordon's evidence shortly was that the girl Duff had confessed to her that this musalchi was the father of the child. It is almost impossible to believe that the girl Duff was unaware of Mrs. Gordon's evidence being taken: and it was not until the eve of Mr. Stewart's trial for defamation in this Court that the girl went before Mr. Elloy to withdraw the application she had preferred for maintenance of the child. The girl was charged with the offence of perjury with regard to the statement made by her on the 6th December 1888. The case came before the Joint-Magistrate of Allahabad on the 31st May 1889. On that occasion she pleaded guilty, and threw herself on the mercy of the Court. The Joint-Magistrate's judgment was as follows:—Miss Duff pleads guilty. As the facts of the case stand, it does not seem to be a very serious offence. In consideration of her age, nineteen years, and sex, the only sentence will be a week's simple imprisonment. We know the facts of the case as before the Joint-Magistrate, which were that the girl had given birth to an illegitimate child; that the father of that child was a musalchi; and that, in order to mitigate as far as possible her misconduct, she wilfully and deliberately went before Mr. Elloy, and, upon oath, stated that Mr. Edwards was the father; that he had seduced her whilst she was under his roof and in his employment. The Joint-Magistrate could have seen nothing from the fact that the girl was only nineteen years of age, or in the fact of her sex, to induce him to think that one week's simple imprisonment was, in the interests of justice, likely to be a sufficient or deterring punishment. It is to my mind a most wicked offence. The public must be protected against repetitions of offences such as this was. We think that the girl's evidence was aggravated by having persisted in it until the time had arrived when Mrs. Gordon's evidence on commission was taken. We have considered carefully what ought to be done in this case. Speaking entirely for myself I might say that I consider cases of perjury, particularly where character is concerned, should be dealt with severely by courts of justice; and had it not been for the fact that I see before me a girl in delicate health, I would have been disposed to suggest a severer punishment than that which we have decided to inflict. The fact that she is only a girl of nineteen years of age, or that she put forward before the Magistrate her innocence and inexperience and distress, does not weigh with me at all. The more apparently innocent and youthful a girl is who makes a statement of this kind, the more likely the public is to believe that statement is well founded, and we pass upon her an enhancement of sentence amounting to three months' simple imprisonment."

We can understand the difficult situation in which the poor girl was placed, and in some measure almost sympathise with her. How could she avow such a degrading connection as she had embraced? But she had no excuse for ruining the innocent. Her callousness is frightful. She deliberately lied away the honor and liberty of a fellow Christian who had done her no harm whatsoever. She has got her desert only. It is right that an example has been made of her. It is a relief to find that the High Court, without succumbing to a maudlin sentiment in behalf of weak woman, has had the courage and firmness to do full justice. The protection of society required such a stern measure.

THE Braided Wire Company brought an action against Thompson and Co., the eminent corset makers, for infringing their invention in bustles, the object of which was to provide a light, cool, and elastic bustle, or dress improver, of novel construction, which should be graceful in outline, easy on the wearer, and durable in use. The invention was further described as composed of a tubular section or sections of braided or plaited wire secured to the waistband. Mr. Justice Kekewich decided against the plaintiffs, holding their patent to be invalid. The Judges of the Court of Appeal reversed Mr. Justice Kekewich's decision, and the majority of the Judges of the House of Lords have now agreed with the Court of Appeal, so that the American Company's patent is upheld. Heaps of ladies' dresses and dress improvers—different styles of bodices and busks—were produced in Court—to the profound edification of the grave and reverend seigniors of the Bench, who pored over them with the solemnity of the experts of the great House of Thompson—the melancholy for which tailors are famous. All the mechanism and mystery of female attire, was—without the least immodest suggestion—laid bare to be the sport of male furies paid to kick up a row over it, and the object of the graver deliberation of the Bench. It might be an overwhelming disclosure under certain circumstances and in particular cases, but it is to be presumed there was no danger in the present instance, either to the female world or to the rather effete, gray-beared wiggery on the bench. The Lord Chancellor said :—

“It is certain that the thing itself, a bustle, is old, and was made of horse-hair and whalebone, and other elastic materials, before the date of the plaintiff's patent. A pillow or pad is neither more nor less than a pillow or pad, and even if it could be truly alleged that a pillow or pad had never been used as a bustle before, it would need strong argument to convince me that placing a pillow or pad behind the female waist, to stretch out a dress, was a subject matter for a patent.”

Lord Watson, on the other side, was much more appreciative. He had evidently taken his wife into counsel. He spoke quite in the language of Thompson's advertisements, saying that “the result of the plaintiff's invention was a complete article, light, effective, not likely to get out of order, and capable of being manufactured and sold cheaply.”

THE Magistrate of Allahabad, Mr. F. Porter has been commissioned to enquire into the complaint of Captain Hearsey against Dr. Hall. Next Monday has been fixed for the purpose. But the Captain is unable to be present at Allahabad that day, as his case against the editor-in-chief and printer of the Pioneer comes on before our chief Presidency Magistrate on Wednesday following. The Captain is also anxious that charges of cruel treatment against the Superintendent of the Naini Jail should be investigated by a Government other than the N.-W. P., and has appealed to the Governor-General-in-Council to that effect. The Captain has therefore asked the Magistrate of Allahabad to postpone his enquiry till the reply of the Supreme Government. That is an idle request, seeing that the Magistrate is under the orders of his Government. Practically it is all the same whether that official listens to the Captain or not. He cannot proceed with the inquiry without Captain Hearsey, unless indeed he is specifically commanded in that behalf. He will report Captain Hearsey's reply to the Lieutenant-Governor. But we do not suppose Sir Auckland Colvin will, at this stage, order such a useless thing as an inquiry behind the party aggrieved. It is doubtful whether the hero of the hour will be as successful with the Government of India as he has been with the Calcutta High Court. The ordinary course would have been to address the Government of the Upper India. But Captain Hearsey has received so little fair-play from the officials of the North Western Provinces that we can well understand his reluctance to have anything to say to any of them. Anyhow, even a well-founded grievance of that kind will scarcely postpone the constitution.

Two days ago, we heard, from a source which we had no reason to suspect, that the Pioneer was anxious to compromise the case in the Calcutta Magistracy. This so well tallied with our own speculations—our wishes as well as expectations—that we the more readily believed our information. We were told that a letter had gone from Allahabad to lawyers in Calcutta to ask them to effect an amicable settlement. Here, however, we see no signs as yet. At any rate, Captain Hearsey has heard nothing. There has been a request made to him to dispense with the personal attendance of Mr. Dare, the printer of the Allahabad paper, which has been generously complied with by the complainant. That is all.

As members of the Press we are interested in this matter. The less of press prosecutions the better for us all. We would therefore naturally see this matter made up between the belligerents, before active hostilities broke out. The Pioneer can derive no benefit from the issue of this litigation. There is no triumph in store for it or its Editor—the utmost it can hope for is to escape the clutches of the law. As for Captain Hearsey, he only seeks the vindication of his honor. For this, he has been taking all this trouble, far away from home and family and children.

BROTHERS Rup and Raghu are the luckiest dogs going—to use an expressive colloquialism. They are having a continued run of fortune.

First the Garib apologised to them for having represented native opinion, not wisely but too well. And now the editor and the printer of the Dacca Probash have been sentenced to imprisonment. The accommodating Magistrate Mr. Hare has prescribed one month's simple imprisonment and Rs. 500 fine for the editor and one day's nominal imprisonment—that is, till the rising of the Court—for the printer—the latter, who had basely deserted his master and gone over to the enemy, having been recommended to the mercy of the court by the complainants. The editor was bailed out and an appeal on his behalf has been made to the Judge.

THE Crawford scandal, as was to be expected, has led to other scandals. The Blue-book on the subject has arrived in India. Its most notable content is a confidential report which ought never to have been allowed to go out of the secret drawers in the Secretary of State's bureau. We are not surprised that the Inspector-General of Police, Mr. H. T. Ommaney's elaborate narrative has roused the passion of Bombay. He not only hints at foul dodges, but makes open charges against many good individuals from Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy and Mr. Chiplonkar of the Poona political association called the Sarvajanic Sabha. The Parsis as a race are condemned. They are concerting plans to clear themselves. In justice to the Inspector-General, we must say he does not spare his own people. The whole atmosphere of Bombay is corrupt. Mr. Ommaney has certainly displayed extraordinary courage and devotion. His report is the best vindication of the good faith and singleness of purpose of the Bombay Government in this arduous Crawford business. We publish elsewhere some extracts from Mr. Ommaney's memoranda.

THE Governor-General in Council has accorded his permission to the Calcutta Municipality to raise the debenture loan of fifty lacs of rupees, at an interest not exceeding five per cent, for the new central road from the Howrah Bridge to the Sealdah Railway station. It is not proposed to raise the amount all at once, but in instalments as found necessary, and for terms not exceeding five years. The original plan of acquiring extra lands to sell for meeting the cost of acquisition and construction has, we believe, been partially abandoned. Owners giving up to the Municipality, free of cost, the necessary land for the road, will be left unmolested in the enjoyment of the remaining portions of their holdings. That will reduce the profit from the sale of surplus lands.

WITH the Chief Justice for Vice and virtual head, and a lot of lawyers of every grade, from Judges to Pleaders, on its governing board, they are naturally tending to make a regular Chancery of the University.

On a requisition from sixteen members, there was, on the 29th June, a special meeting of the Senate of the Calcutta University “to appoint a Special Committee to enquire into the cause which led to the very unsatisfactory results at the last Arts Examination of the University, and to report thereon to the Senate.” In the absence of the Vice-Chancellor (Sir Comer Petheram,) Mr. Justice Trevelyan was voted to the chair. On a call from him, the Registrar, Mr. Tawney, read the notice convening the meeting. The reading over, he begged to point out that, under the byelaws, “No question shall be considered by the Senate that had not been in the first instance considered and decided by the Syndicate.” The Chairman thought it would be a pity if no business could be done at that unusually large meeting, and invited the members to point out the way, if any, out of the difficulty. There was a discussion as to the rights of the Senate independent of the Syndicate. Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee contended that the byelaw was intended for ordinary business as a matter of convenience, that it could not govern a special case, and that the Senate was above all byelaws. It could initiate any action. He was loath to disappoint the members who were present that day. He therefore formally moved that the meeting proceed to the business of the day. There was no want of a seconder, among so many who had been attracted by the subject of the notice. Mr. Justice Trevelyan now felt himself called upon to exercise the right of the Chair. He was not sure that the ordinary rule about public meetings applied in the present instance. The question was one of construction of the bylaw and he was not convinced by the argument of Mr. Bonnerjee. The Senate could not arrogate to itself the power, which the Vice-Chancellor alone possesses, of calling a meeting. He therefore could not allow the subject to be considered at that meeting. Mr. Bonnerjee reminded the chair that the meeting was called on a requisition by the Vice-Chancellor himself. Thereupon the meeting descended to a desultory conversation which was brought to a head by Dr. Hearnle moving an amendment for adjournment, which motion was seconded and lost. Mr. Macdonald next moved a further amendment that the matter be referred, under the bylaw, to the Syndicate. Several members spoke on this amendment, Raja Pearymohun Mookerjee being of opinion that the votes of the majority could not decide the question—the interpretation of the bylaw, that the Vice-Chancellor had called the meeting and he was the proper and responsible interpreter of the laws of the University, and that the Registrar's objection was too late. Mr. Bonnerjee, barrister-at-law, could not accept the opinion of the Raja Pleader. The Vice-Chancellor, if not a Chief Justice, could not command that obedience. An Engineer Vice, for instance, would be nowhere. Mr. Rowe, who had spoken once, would now have "one more word"—always an ominous preface, but Mr. Bonnerjee rose to order. Mr. Rowe attempted again and the Chairman formally ruled him out of order. In reply to Mr. Bonnerjee, the Chairman was not prepared to say that he had the power to say that that meeting should go on. He believed he had the power to decide as to the rules of procedure at the meeting itself. At the same time he was not sure that his power went farther. Bred up in the profession of the English law, he was not allowed to rely on his own judgment but must always have authority to go upon. Unfortunately, a brand new institution like the Calcutta University is necessarily a pauper in case-law. Its archives are deficient in Reports. He could find no precedent. Speaking from his unsophisticated understanding, he was free to say that it would be desirable for the Chairman if he had the power. The motion and the amendment were then put to the vote. The hands raised seemed equal. Mr. Bonnerjee suggested division; which done, the result shewed that Mr. Macdonald had carried the day. Mr. Rowe had not yet done with his one word, and now he made a last despairing effort. In the midst of cries of order, he delivered himself of a really notable bantling but stone dead, vociferating that at that moment there was no Vice-Chancellor. It was to no purpose, but the reminder if protracted in time might have been a source of some embarrassment. Mr. Bonnerjee enquired of the Chairman what was the effect of the amendment carried. The Chairman replied that the Requisition has been referred to the Syndicate for consideration. Mr. Tawney remained victor in the field. After all, the Senate conformed to the bylaw pointed out by the Registrar. We hope the incident will open the eyes of these Fellows to the necessity of a radical reform of the University by legislation.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Vicissitudes of climate, exposure and hardships, tell heavily on soldiers and sailors, sowing the seeds of diseases which may ultimately break up the constitution. Naturally careless of their health a word in season may avert many evils, and may cause them to resort to timely measures without any difficulty or publicity. Holloway's effectual remedies are so suitable, and are so easily adapted for the varied complaints to which our soldiers and sailors are liable, that a supply should always be obtained before proceeding abroad. It may with confidence be stated that many a valuable life might have been saved, or confirmed cripple prevented from begging in the streets, if Holloway's remedies had been used in time.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1889.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN'S LAST DELIVERANCE ON THE NATIVE STATES.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN'S lecture at the Royal Colonial Institute, last month, was a most unfortunate one. He entirely misrepresented and exaggerated the conditions of things with our native Princes. The mischievousness of his views would have been incalculable were the source which the statements came from less tainted. But the lecturer, if an authority in these days at all, is not unprejudiced and sober authority. Always an embarrassment to his employers and supporters, his best friends must now, for their own credit, shake him off. It is pleasing to know that even the Times had some qualms of conscience as to the accuracy and sincerity of the statements made by the disappointed Knight of Central India.

The Times says Sir Lepel "watched the proceedings of native courts too closely, and has been too much engaged in controlling them to be entirely unbiassed;" and further adds, "his judgment is in most cases extremely severe." Severity is no name for the assertion: it is unjust, and without a foundation of truth and, I think, very questionable, if such vulgar plain-speaking at the present moment was politic.

If not interesting to Indian readers, it was at least amusing in more than one sense. No one doubted Sir Lepel would vigorously throw himself body and soul into his subject. This every one in India knew was certain, and, as a matter of fact, Sir Lepel's address has some interest, is suggestive, and will probably be read and inwardly digested by those who know the speaker while in India to have had no feelings in common with the natives of the country other than those of Upper India. He left no doubt upon the minds of his hearers what the native Princes of India might expect were he in a position to deal with them. Fortunately for the native Princes of India, they may rest in peace so far as Sir Lepel's retributive bluster is likely to affect them, or his extraordinary opinions to weigh against them with the public at home outside the circle Sir Lepel invited to hear him. I cannot help expressing my surprise that Sir Lepel Griffin, while claiming for himself the position of an authority on public questions in India, would descend to use language which cannot be characterised other than vulgar. But that he should have been able to retain a respectable audience to listen to the wholesale abuse he poured on Maharajah Pertab Singh and all belonging to him, was simply marvellous, and indicative of the change that is coming over the taste of European society for that which is vile and vulgar.

After invidiously ridiculing the idea that the native States of India were a combination of States anxious to throw off the English yoke and regain their lost freedom, as has been represented from time to time by our annual globe-trotting gentry, his meaningless condemnation of the Mahomedan States is as untrue as it is unjust, unless he meant to remind the Indian Government of Bhopal where, a few years ago, a deal of seditious writing and correspondence was brought to light through Sir Lepel's agency. There are no two men living beside Lord Lytton, and Sir Lepel himself, who know better than they, that the Mahomedan States are second to none in loyalty, love, honor, and regard for Victoria, Queen-Empress of India, notwithstanding so few of the good things in the giving or Government fall to members of the Mahomedan community. No one seeks to deny that there are abuses and misgovernment in the native States, evils to be remedied, and a thorough cleansing of all iniquities sadly wanted. It is remarkable that Sir Lepel did not inform his hearers what measures he himself adopted to purge Gwalior, Bhopal, and Indore, during his incumbency as Agent to the Governor-General for years. I think I am not out of place here in submitting, that, if Sir Lepel had any desire to be just, he should have enlightened his audience as to the steps he himself had inaugurated and what he felt was still wanting to bring about something approaching a decent and tolerable government in Native states. But, instead, he hurls a wholesale indictment against all and sundry minus the Sikhs and Rajputs. Did the Foreign Office at any time ever attempt to reprove Sir Lepel for introducing any improvement in the administration of the States under his rule? Rather, is it not the truth that the Viceroy condemned from time to time his imprudent and high-handed measures which constantly resulted in friction with the State officials, never producing other than improvident results?

I would not have your readers imply, that Sir Lepel Griffin's rule in India was a failure. What I do mean to say is, when he was running his Indian career he did not keep sufficiently close in touch with the Native Courts to which he was accredited, therefore, less value attaches to his statements, on the subject of the lecture now under review, than otherwise would. Opinions differ as to his conduct in Bhopal. But I am very much mistaken if Government were not more than usually satisfied with the manner he performed his duties at that Court under very difficult circumstances indeed.

From first to last, Sir Lepel is infatuated with Dalhousieism. He urges a repetition of the Dalhousie régime. From such a course, nothing short of disaster to the Empire can emanate. But I cannot believe that either Lord Lansdowne or any future Viceroy of India will listen to the ravings of men, whose authority cannot be accepted as trustworthy on this or any other subject. Had we been shown how to remove existing evils and bring about some salutary results, Sir Lepel Griffin would have earned the support and good wishes of every well-thinking man in India.

The lecturer's reference to Cashmere at the present moment is most ill-conceived. It is particularly inopportune. A mad chimerical project must materially embarrass the Government of India when the fact is borne in mind that Sir Lepel only recently ceased to be intimately connected with the administration of India. The position he held would certainly lend weight to the sentiments he expresses. The same sentiments from any ordinary three months' tourist would be comparatively harmless. But Sir Lepel is an old Indian, and was only yesterday one of the British rulers of this country. It is now matter of history that he left India and the Service unregretted, though perhaps himself regretting. Although, before departure, he had irretrievably damaged his reputation for sobriety of judgment with most men, yet there are unfortunately Englishmen, both in India and England, who still hold some respect for his opinion. It is from this standpoint I view his untimely ventilation of the Cashmere question, so wildly attempting to deceive and mislead the people of England. His chimerical colonization scheme of placing three millions of Englishmen in the Happy Valley, can only add to the feeling of uneasiness respecting the Government of India's ultimate intentions now exercising the minds of the native community of India, and may naturally be interpreted as practically expressing the authoritative desire to annex Cashmere. His bare asseveration that "the Maharajah has been deposed and Colonel P. Nisbet is now paramount in Cashmere," coming as it did from one who had long been a great British political in India, was highly impolitic. Referring to the colonization of Cashmere, Sir Lepel's main arguments are based upon what he has chosen to term the scandalous misgovernment of the country under its present ruler. But the picture drawn by Sir Lepel and laid bare before his audience, was neither accurate nor just.

Irrespective of anything Sir Lepel Griffin or any one else may say now or hereafter, I own our duty is simple, Be just with wisdom, and maintain strictly our treaty engagements with our Native Princes. Few will fail to recognise our responsibility as the Paramount Power to watch over the feudatory States, and the necessity to prudently check misgovernment and oppression. But surely to secure to the independent States this benefit, it is not necessary to absorb their territory, to plunder and rob their treasuries, and to set the respective members of the families adrift as paupers on starving pittance. The adoption of such extreme measures of reformation can scarcely be regarded as the work of a Christian Government of the Nineteenth Century. A few months back, when Maharajah Pertab Singh was set aside and Colonel P. Nisbet made ruler in his place, I then said the thin end of the wedge had been inserted. I did not then suspect that Lord Lansdowne would drive it home, as it is now being done. In a word, what the sword did and is still doing in Burma, the pen has been made to do in Cashmere.

Day by day we are voluntarily weakening our position in India, by estranging ourselves from the Native Chiefs whom we should conciliate. They, together with a peaceful and happy population, are our stronghold. Another £63,000,000, already spent on our Scientific Frontier, will not hold India against external invasion, if we are unable to suppress internal disturbances. We are ourselves making the enemy's way to invasion and conquest feasible and easy. By a persistent plundering of our Native Princes, sympathy will be excited for the invader of the masses of the people of India. Thus Sir Lepel Griffin is corroborated in his statement of honor that treasure exists in some parts of India. At the same time, a warning comes in time with a certain ring of truth in it. General Scoboleff has said that "any strategist or politician must admit that an expedition to India is not only possible, but does not even present any particular difficulty." The note of warning thus rung out by Scoboleff should claim the attention of those to whom the safety of our empire is committed. If sympathy from within for the invader without once takes permanent hold, the Indian Empire is doomed. We must thank Annexation for bringing about the downfall of the British Empire.

ZHO

LORD MACAULAY AND HIS NEW EDITIONS

APART from his high position in English literature, Lord Macaulay has a peculiar charm of character and intellect. He was an English one of our greatest Anglo-Indians. He was the first and best of English Education in India, and the author of that great work, History of England, the vicissitudes of a great man's life, with many a great man's life, became law for all India. Any one respecting him has a naturally considerable interest in Indian eyes.

Mr. W. Fraser, K.C., has contributed to the Indian Archives, a Bar, an article on Lord Macaulay. He gives to the world some letters of the noble author hitherto unpublished. These do not, to be sure, furnish any fresh light on his life, but simply a supplementary picture presented by his diaries and correspondence published in his Life by his nephew. But any scrap from that pen will always have a value. Macaulay's letters in special are valuable as literature, being free from the vices of his more ambitious work. They are all carefully worked out, with an eye to ultimate publication. But the confusions and the very form of private correspondence dispose to nature and dispense with the stilt usually adopted to lend dignity to public appearances. Like most writers, Macaulay improved as he went along, and reached the climax of classical chastity and urbanity towards the close. As a general rule, his History and Oratory are better than his reviews, and his letters than his speeches and English. The letter now offered are interesting in themselves. They carry their authenticity on their face, being in accord with the known facts of his career and thoroughly characteristic. Here are some extracts from a letter dated Calcutta, 1836—the first contains a good description of the British public servant in India, and the second gives an instance of the persecution from his family which dogged him through life:—

"The great majority of the members of the services here seem perfectly willing to pass their lives in India, and those who go home talk with very little pleasure of the prospect before them. This is not strange, for they generally come out at eighteen or nineteen. Their banishment is their emancipation. The separation from home is, no doubt, at first disagreeable to them; but the pain is compensated to a great extent by the pleasure of independence—of finding themselves men, and, if they are in the Civil Service, of finding themselves rich. A lad who, six months before, was under strict discipline, who could indulge in few pleasures for want of money, and who could not indulge in any excess without being soundly scolded by his father and his pedagogue, finds himself able to feast on snipes and drink as much champagne as he likes, to entertain guests, to buy horses, to keep a mistress or two, to maintain fifteen or twenty servants who bow to the ground every time that they meet him, and suffer him to strike and abuse them to his heart's content. He is surrounded by many money-lenders who are more desirous to supply him with funds than he himself to procure them. Accordingly the coming out to India is quite as often an agreeable as a disagreeable event to a young fellow. If he does not take his furlough—and not one civil servant in three takes his furlough—he remains in India till he is forty-five or fifty, and is then almost unfit for England. He has outlived his parents; he is estranged from his early friends. His children, who have been sent over to England at six or seven years old, are estranged from him. He is a man of consequence in the East. In Europe he knows that he will be considered as an old, yellow-faced bore, fit for nothing but to drink Cheltenham water and to ballot at the India House.

Our relative is an abandoned liar; he called on me at the Albany a few days before I left town, and began haranguing about his plans touching the water supply. I cut him short by telling him that his disreputable life, his frauds, his insolence and ingratitude to myself, and the manner in which he had abused my name by employing it to cheat innkeepers, and to obtain admittance to public men, had determined me to have no more to do with him. He stormed and ranted and blasphemed, after his ordinary fashion. I told him that my purpose was unalterable, but at parting, as he had said that he was in want of money, I put a cheque for 20*l.* into his hand; he took it, and went on declaiming, 'I do not want your money; the just God knows that I hate money, I despise money—money is the root of all evil.' He then thrust the root of all evil into his pocket and walked away."

Whatever may be the opinion formed of Macaulay's official services to India, he will never be forgotten and never we fear be forgiven, for the unfortunate literary revilement of the Indian people in general and the Bengalees in particular, to which he was seduced by his love of word-painting and character-portraiture. Here, in the recesses of his private correspondence, is a confession which overturns all his elaborate structure of the singular infamy of the natives of India. Lying at all events is no monopoly of the darker races. Nuncoomar was no exceptional monster which could be produced only on the Pagan banks of the Ganges. For, here we discover an accomplished British Christian vagabond. It is clear that a Macaulay could be "an abandoned liar," leading a "disreputable life" of "frauds, insolence and ingratitude."

Another letter is dated at a most interesting period of his life—on the eve of the publication of the first instalment of his magnum opus. He was then living at the Albany, "leading a college life in London with the comforts of domestic life near me." For, though he was single, he was not alone, having his sister Hannah and her children, whom all he loved with all the affectionateness of his nature, and regarded the latter as almost his own. After a long and tedious literary voyage, he had at last come before land. His History was ready. On the 17th November 1848, the last sheets went to America, and Messrs. Longman & Co. were making arrangements for the immediate issue of 3,000 copies as a first edition. Macaulay had after a long time got a holiday, which he was employing characteristically in reading the Greek historians to compare his work with them and amusing himself with that charming garrulous old snob Samuel Pepys. The publication of the History was fixed for the 1st day of December. There is no entry in his Diary published in Sir George Trevelyan's book between the 25th and the 29th November. The following letter brought to light in Temple Bar may be taken to supply the hiatus.

"Albany, London, Nov. 27, 1848. -I have been working intensely during some months on my history, rising at day-break, and sometimes sitting at my desk twelve hours at a stretch. This work is for the present over. On Friday next, Dec. 1, we publish. I hardly know what to anticipate. Everybody who has seen the book—that is to say, Lord Jeffrey, Ellis, Trevelyan, Hannah, and Longman—predict complete success, and say that it is as entertaining as a novel; but the truth is, that in such a case friends are not to be trusted, and book-sellers, after they have struck a bargain, are even less to be trusted than friends. The partialities of an author for what he has written is nothing compared to the partialities of a publisher for what he has bought. However, a few weeks will show. You will probably see the book first in the Yankee edition. A New York house has given me two hundred pounds for early proof-sheets. Longman is to pay me five hundred a year for five years in consideration of the privilege of printing six thousand copies. This is a very pleasant addition to my income; and if the book succeeds I shall probably find literature not only a more pleasant but a more gainful pursuit than politics."

The History appeared as announced on the 1st December. And the anxious misgivings of prudence or modesty fled fast like mist before the blazing sun of popularity. On the 4th December, we find him correcting for a second edition. The first 3,000 copies were nearly all sold. It was an unprecedented success. No wonder that, at the end of three months, we find him writing in one of the just-published letters—

"Albany, London, March 3, 1849.—We are all well and prospering; the sale of my book has been enormous, twelve thousand copies in three months—none of Sir Walter's novels went faster; the demand still keeps at four hundred a week, and we are going to stereotype. I expect to make some thousands pleasantly enough by this success."

All that agrees with the entries in the Life.

DACCA.

July 17, 1889.

Dacca is preeminently a place of party feelings; there are heart-burnings and dissensions even among some of the responsible men of the town. Rivalry in so far as it helps to keep up a spirit of emulation is no evil, but oftentimes it defeats many a noble cause. Here is an instance.

The Dacca public were not a little exercised by the defamation case instituted by brothers Rup Lal and Raghu Nath against the Dacca Prakash and the Garib newspapers. But now all is over. The poor are always helpless, whether they are in the right or in the wrong. We were not therefore surprised in the least when Babu Barada Sankar Das of the Garib offered an apology to the Banker brothers. But Babu Guru Ganga Aich of the Dacca Prakash has been rather severely dealt with. I do not mean to say that he was not guilty at all. If it is necessary to catch the hare before attempting to make hare soup, it is as necessary for a journalist to make sure of his facts before he commits himself. But Babu Guru Ganga seems to have forgotten it. I think, after all, that the law could be lenient on this occasion. Babu Guru Ganga has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500 and to one month's imprisonment. This is certainly too much for him. The printer has been sentenced to only one day's imprisonment. Several witnesses were examined and many important issues were raised; but the impertinent editor must be punished and so he has been. I am sorry I cannot give your readers a full account of the proceedings of the case; that would be too lengthy for the limited space of your journal. But the inquisitive reader may find it for himself in some of the newspapers of the town. I have already said that the Dacca Prakash had very few friends to help him. His advocate was an old gentleman in whom the ardour of youth has been exhausted, nor is he a very able member of the local bar. But the counsel for the prosecution included among others Mr. Barrow, Babu Ananda Chandra Roy and Sarat Chandra Ghosh. It is evident that a large sum of money has been spent. It is a pity that our wealthy men should spend their money in this way. From them we expect a great deal and we do so reasonably. They can help an industrial enterprise, establish educational institutions, conduct political agitation and so on; but they are not ready enough for these.

The result of the Dacca Collegiate School has been exceptionally happy this year. Fifteen students have passed in the first division, of whom eight have secured scholarships. What is more, four general scholarships have been secured this year. This reflects great credit upon the teaching staff. The Dacca Jubilee School is the most flourishing of all the private institutions here, one of the boys has won a scholarship of Rs. 15 and another of Rs. 10. The number of successful candidates is 29. This good result, as I am told, is mainly due to the efficiency of Babu Bissessar Banerjee, M.A., the headmaster. The school is a conspicuous instance of Hindu self-help in the matter of education.

MONGHYR.

Jamalpore, July 14.

The Jynthee Bridge on the Chord Line, E. I. Railway, below Madhupur gave way all of a sudden about a fortnight ago, causing some of its piers to be washed away. In consequence the trains had to be diverted to the loop line, much to the inconvenience of the travelling public. Since this arrangement, the working of the Loop has doubly been increased and the station staff and others concerned are now seen to be laboring hard ceaselessly for days and nights right through. In spite of all these precautions, no less than three cases of accidents to mail, passenger, and goods have occurred at Barherwo, at Raneegunge and on the 13th instant between Peerpointee and Colgong respectively. In all these accidents fortunately no lives were lost, though several passengers were hurt or injured more or less. Owing to the present train system of working via Loop, amongst other irregularities, the detention in the first place and the longer hours of travel by rail by slow or mixed trains, are chiefly felt at this time of the year. Particularly the 3rd class passengers are inconvenienced by scanty carriage accommodation, many of them have to be left behind at stations for want of room in the ordinary trains. The discontinuance of loop mail and the amalgamation of that with the chord, as also the slow passenger trains will no doubt seriously tell on the finances of the company, as regards coaching traffic, till the break has been repaired.

The commodities and eatables are now being sold at famine rates at this station. The climate of the place now may be said to be pretty fair.

THE OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE IN THE CRAWFORD CASE.

THE correspondence in the Crawford case, issued on Wednesday as a Blue-book, makes public not only the records of the proceedings against the incriminated official from first to last which have already appeared in the Indian papers, but also a number of hitherto unpublished reports and other documents which were before the Bombay Government, and no doubt largely influenced its opinion in regard to his culpability on the main charge of corrupt dealings and sale of offices. It appears from a despatch of the Bombay Government dated March 15 (p. 199 of the Blue-book) that one important charge on which the Government had a strong prima facie case against Mr. Crawford--that is, an alleged bribe from the Rajah of Akalkot--was not brought before the Commissioners. The circumstances were peculiar. The case was not ready when the Commission sat in October, and on Nov. 16, 1888, the Bombay Government inquired whether the Government of India objected to the case being submitted to the Commission. On Nov. 23 the Government of India telegraphed that multiplication of charges were in its opinion undesirable, but that if the Advocate-General considered it desirable to formulate the charge and the Commissioners consented to hear it, the Bombay Government was free to exercise its direction in proceeding with it. The despatch says:--"On Dec. 3 last a Commission, as drafted by counsel, was issued to the members of the Commission, then sitting in Poona, appointing them Commissioners under Act XXXVII. of 1850 to inquire into this additional case. The Hon. Mr. Justice Wilson, member and president of the Commission, declined, however, for the reasons assigned in his letter of Dec. 5, to sit upon the new Commission, and in these circumstances we decided not to attempt to proceed further with this charge." The reason given in Mr. Justice Wilson's letter was that it was open to grave question whether the order for an additional inquiry was not contrary to the letter of the law, and he thought it certainly contrary to the spirit of the law and the intentions of the Legislature. He hinted at "other reasons of a very grave character," but as he did not disclose them, it is not worth while to ask what they were. In the result what seems to have been one of the strongest cases against Mr. Crawford was thus burked by the refusal of the president of the Commission to entertain it. Among other papers published in this batch are two confidential memoranda which contain some curious information, and will probably excite a good deal of comment in Bombay. One is Inspector-General of Police, Mr. H. T. Ommanney's remarkable personal narrative of the manner in which the Crawford inquiries were carried out. These notes, he says, "cannot fail to be of interest to the Government, and may be found to yield some information that can be turned to practical account both now and in the future." The memorandum does certainly disclose matter of the highest interest, but to an unofficial mind it is difficult to conceive with what motives or through what indiscretion the Secretary of State has allowed it to be made public. Mr. Ommanney frankly discusses the difficulties which were placed in the way of his investigations (pp. 252, 253). They divulge a curious and far from assuring state of affairs in Indian society. Mr. Ommanney first gives the text of the guarantee of immunity he was instructed to offer the native officials for evidence. It ran as follows:--

"Mr. Ommanney is empowered to promise immunity from prosecution to any person giving evidence, and, in cases of payments for promotion or to obtain or avoid transfers, may guarantee immunity from official or departmental punishment or loss, subject to the stipulation that the evidence given is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

We now give extracts from Mr. Ommanney's memoranda, pars. 6, 7, 8, and 9:--

"6. It will be well to explain at this place that from the very first there has been no difficulty in discovering cases in which bribes have been paid to Mr. Crawford or his agents. It is no exaggeration to say that many cases were notorious, and that the agents were persons widely known as conducting the particular business. Natives of almost all classes knew these things. Europeans only for the most part had no definite information, either because they were indifferent, or did not know how to make inquiries, or had scruples about doing so. It is only by a considerable effort that an Englishman can bring himself to throw out to a native that a British officer of the highest position has been guilty of dishonest or disgraceful conduct. Again, it is no new thing to assert that we regard natives as a class as untruthful, and only too ready to say what they think will please a questioner who occupies a position of authority over them. We all know these things, and in a spirit of fairness we are in this country shy of inviting attacks on any one. This feeling is in a large degree answerable for want of exact information on the part of Englishmen. But it is the fact that in native society the system of bribery pursued by Mr. Crawford and very many specific cases were notorious. It may be that Mr. Crawford's seductive manners blinded many and disinclined them to listen to stories that showed him to be actually dishonest. Still the inquiries have shown that there have occurred crises at different times when the truth would have been discovered if British officers had shown confidence in native gentlemen of position and respectability, and availed themselves of the information and assistance which they alone could afford.

7. The difficulty, then, was not to discover cases. There were floods of information. Notwithstanding that Mr. Crawford held a high place in native regard, was feared by some, and had earned the gratitude of many by conferring favours of various sorts, there were plenty of people ready to tell stories of his corruptions. It was when a story would implicate the teller himself in the act of giving that the fear of the law rose up before him and his mouth was closed. A public servant saw penalties superadded to those imposed by the law; he would not only be thrown into prison, but he would lose his appointment and the preference that he had paid for with money, in many cases honestly acquired. And the revenue suitor, probably a watandár, could not see what he was to gain by confessing that he had given a bribe.

Mr. Crawford's official position, his supposed influence in high quarters, his known ability, and his strong following of greedy and unscrupulous agents deterred many, especially Government servants, from appearing as open accusers.

8. There were in Mr. Crawford's case external difficulties of various kinds. It is now learnt with certainty that nearly all the native public servants of a certain standing in the Revenue and Police Departments of two divisions of the Presidency were more or less implicated in, or had connived at, the system of corruption that Mr. Crawford had been carrying on for very many years past. The plague had spread to other departments also, and attacked many who were not servants of Government. The Judicial service, chiefs of native States, landholders, bankers, pleaders, and people of inferior standing were infected. Watandárs all over the country had suffered. It was not confined to any one of the numerous castes which are to be found in the two divisions, but had attacked all without distinction. However opposed to one another in sentiments, even to the extent of dislike or hatred, neither Lingayat nor Parbhu could point at the Brahman, nor the Parsee at the Mussulman, nor the common Kumbi at any. Among this mass of abettors scattered over the whole country side it was to be expected that there should be many who would exert themselves actively to crush inquiry by preventing witnesses coming forward. In Poona itself such men were numerous and influential, and when the inquiry became public a few acted in concert. This party made a very effective opposition and damaged many cases. Men of position in Poona, who might have rendered me valuable assistance, found themselves under the necessity of holding aloof for fear that acts of their own, which were at least questionable, should not be brought to light.

9. Opposing influences of a more obscure and unexpected kind came into play. The conservative old-fashioned class in native society spread the idea among those of more liberal and just ideas that, whatever show Government might make, it was after all a Government of Englishmen, and they would never proceed to extremities against one of their own class; the inquiry would inevitably recoil on the heads of informers and witnesses. Witnesses have themselves expressed this opinion to me in very genuine fear. The same conservative class argued that a man who paid a bribe was a fool to confess: the thing was done; let him stick to it; he had done no harm to any one, and would lose what he himself had gained. There were also certain politicians who carried considerable influence. They pointed out that these exposures must depreciate native character and lead to the postponement of constitutional privileges. Some even argued that corruption in high places was a good thing, since it afforded the means of procuring benefits from Government which would not otherwise be conceded, and they were able to point to specific instances in support of their opinions. This undercurrent of intrigue carried away much evidence that might otherwise have come to the surface."

Further on Mr. Ommanney returns to this subject in par. 78:--

"78. Before concluding this narrative of the inquiry, I think it will be as well to say a few words in further explanation of the position that I have referred to in various places. It must, in the first place, he clearly understood that the whole of the Parsee community, which includes all the people who know most about Mr. Crawford's financial arrangements, were in the opposition. From Sir Jamsetji Jijibhai down to Merwanji Pleader and the proprietors of the Deccan Herald every Parsee was a passive or active obstructionist. Mr. Nowroji, the mail contractor, alone afforded me every facility for the examination of his books. I had occasion to make inquiries of Mr. Edalji, a wealthy merchant of Kurrachee, who lives in Poona for his health, about a promissory note that had been sold to him by Mr. Spiers in connection with the Sawant case. Mr. Edalji let me promising to let me know the date of the transaction, a very important point, but I received a letter from him regretting he could not tell me the date more exactly than that it was within a certain six months. The note was one for 2,000 rs. and carried interest, and I say frankly I don't believe Mr. Edalji was unable to trace the date of the transaction. I tried to get a footing among the class through a Parsee police inspector who was by me at the time, and I attribute my failure to something more than the inspector's stupidity. I do not think it necessary to go into further detail on this subject; but it deserves mention, lest the Parsees, who have succeeded in preventing themselves being mixed up with Mr. Crawford, should get credit, which they most certainly do not deserve, for superior morality.

The active obstructionists among the Parsees, as far as I can discover, were Merwanji Pleader and the proprietors of the Deccan Herald. They were hand-and-glove in a great deal of the dirty work of Mr. Crawford's defence. From July 22 I kept up a watch on Mr. Crawford's visitors, and Merwanji was constantly there. The unfair attitude of the paper referred to, with its false and garbled reports and news, is sufficiently notorious.

Mr. Sitaram Hari Chiplunkar, the secretary of the Poona Sarvajanic Sabha and proprietor and editor of the Dnyan Prakash, was another active adherent of Mr. Crawford. The first open attempt to intimidate witnesses was made in the columns of the paper at the beginning of Hanmantrao's trial, and the efforts have been steadily sustained in this and other newspapers as well up to the present day. He would argue in private that whatever Mr. Crawford's methods may be, his official acts have encouraged the aspirations of the people and procured for them substantial benefits, and the present exposures must damage the reputation of the people of India.

Mr. Kupuswami Mudliar and the other gentlemen of his race, Mr. Gangaram Bhaui Mhaske, Mr. Kalavde, and Mr. Narayan Chintaman Soman, Assistant Commissioner, S.D., all assisted in disseminating fears and encouraging (?) witnesses. One member of Mr. Kalavde's household, and another connected with Mr. Chiplunkar, were regular frequenters of Mr. Crawford's house for all the months of the inquiry. Mr. Shridhar Vithal Dade busied himself in the affair in various ways. At first he appears to have been taken into Mr. Crawford's confidence, and he was entrusted by Hanmantrao with the letter addressed to Gangaram Bhaui Mhaske, in which Hanmantrao repudiated connection with Mr. Crawford in illegal practices. For some reason, best known to himself, he has retained the letter in his own possession. He then counselled Hanmantrao to abscond, as he himself had done when charged with bribery, and let the storm blow over. In consequence of his having given this advice, Mr. James Crawford turned him off Mr. Crawford's premises with some roughness. He subsequently, for reasons which are not yet clear to me, put forward Ganesh Narayan Sathu, who, it may be mentioned, is a pensioned servant of the Bombay Municipality, to complain against the mamlatdars. The man is a mischievous busy-body, and has done a great deal of harm. He is very vain of his own abilities, and was, I am informed, annoyed at my not having sought his assistance in the inquiries.

These remarks do not pretend to exhaust the subject of opposition. There has been a notorious and well-understood activity in other quarters which has created difficulties that wear a more serious aspect than did those which the local mischief-makers succeeded in raising."

Secondly, in a confidential memorandum by Mr. J. A. Baines, p. 285 et seq., the following passage occurs (par. 1):—

"During the present inquiries anything done by Mr. Crawford during his Municipal Commissionership in Bombay has not yet been touched. The circumstances connected with his exit from that position have long been condoned, and those entrusted with the investigation saw no reason for raking up old stories. At the same time, from what is currently talked about in that city, there seems little reason to doubt that Mr. Crawford during the above period not unfrequently distributed official favours on corrupt considerations, and had the reputation among the natives of the middle and upper classes of being a man who was willing to requite officially any obligation conferred upon him in his private capacity."

Similar statements were made about Mr. Crawford's proceedings as collector of Kolaba, Ratnagiri, as Commissioner, S.O., &c. The wonder is how Mr. Crawford was permitted to pursue his infamous career so long unchecked. Very little appears in this correspondence with reference to the corrupt mamlatdars. The telegram on the subject has, we believe, been already made public. In the despatch of the Bombay Government dated March 15, 1889, the only reference to this matter is as follows:—

"In conclusion we beg to add that we have directed full inquiry to be made into the cases of the officers who have been suspended from the exercise of magisterial functions, and have also called for report concerning the other officers holding magisterial powers who have admitted having made payments to Mr. Crawford or his alleged agents, or who are believed to have made such payments though denying the fact, and that we propose to institute hereafter such further inquiries as may be deemed necessary to enable us to review with full knowledge the position and relations of our subordinate administrative service. We shall then be able to report to your lordship fully on the subject of that personnel and the measures taken by us to secure its proper working."—The Overland Mail, June 28.

Public Paper.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Home Department (Public),— dated Calcutta, the 4th March 1889.

Read---

Home Department Circular letter to Local Governments and Administrations, Nos. 19---860-869, dated the 6th May 1878.
Despatch from Her Majesty's Secretary of State, No. 78 (Statistics and Commerce), dated the 8th November 1888, paragraph 4.

RESOLUTION.

In paragraph 2 of Home Department circular read in the preamble, it was ruled that no official letters to Her Majesty's Government or to the Government of India, and no resolution or other official paper that would in ordinary course be reported to either of those authorities, should be made public by Local Governments until the interval had elapsed which was required for their transmission to the superior authority. It was added that if, in cases of rare exigency, this rule had to be transgressed, telegraphic intimation of the circumstances, with explanation, should be sent to the superior authority. Similarly communications from the Government of India to subordinate Governments were not to be made public until the interval above described had elapsed, save under exceptional circumstances, the occurrence of which would in each case be explained by telegram to the subordinate Government concerned.

2. The Secretary of State for India has now ruled that no document which forms part, or is likely to form part, of a correspondence between the India Office and any other Government Office in England, shall be published without communication with His Lordship. The Governor-General in Council accordingly directs that this rule shall be strictly observed in future.

3. It may be here explained that the rule contained in paragraph 2 of Home Department Circular letter of May 1878 was not intended to apply to departmental administration reports, but extends only to resolutions or official papers of the nature of the communications to the Secretary of State or to the Government of India, referred to in that paragraph, that is to say, to resolutions or official papers which call for orders from the authority addressed.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following :—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river :—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye :—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting :—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

MURIEL.

BENEATH the sheltering oak she lay,
And dreamed the love-long afternoon,
That blent the burning height of day
With the cool eve of royal June.

What are her dreams of?—Nay, who knows
Whereon the perfect maiden dreams,
Steeped in the perfume of the rose,
Lulled by the murmur of the streams?

Her longing life before her lies,
Her puzzled childhood dies behind;
And many messages surprise
Her soul from flower and cloud and wind.

What are your dreams of, opening bud,
Whose happy blossom blooms so fair,
When through the blue veins the red blood
Flows on as freely as the air?

Sweet Muriel by the garden-oak,
Unconscious of her nameless charm,
Half-hears the fairy echoes woke
By bangles dangled on her arm.

Without—the loving Sun doth kiss
Mouth, cheek, and brow unchidden on:
Within—the music seems to miss
The lovely face he looks upon.

For, seated by the piano soft,
Old tunes her sister's touch recalls,
Whose harmonies some sprite aloft
Repeats along the drowsy walls.

Dream! Muriel, dream! half-knowing yet
Whose image fills thy candid eyes,
Yet all unable to forget
The first sweet secret's first surprise.

He waits and works long miles away,
Who touched the pure heart's virgin springs:
And something, from the dawn of day,
For both a mystic burden sings.

The angel that upon her smiles
In June's own leafy temple down,
His few short hours of leisure wiles
Away within the sultry town.

One thought—one angel—and one heart,
Forgetful of the world of sense,
Knit lives so seeming far apart
In one bright bond of innocence.

Wait! Muriel, wait! an instinct true
Straight through the void of man has flown,
To pick from out the world, for you,
A soul as loyal as your own.

And so she dreamed, and so she lay,
And so the waiting message fell
Along the changes of the day,
Upon the face of Muriel.

L'ENVOI.

TO MY BIG DOG.

O Poetry! great is the mission
Which colours thy passionate track:
But how are thy fancies Elysian
Dispelled by the voice of 'John-Jack!'

He lies on the floor at St. Leonard's,
While my genius I try to display;
But the more my ideas travel pen-ar-ds,
The more he will snore them away.

He snorts, and he snorks, and he snoreth,
Like the satisfied dog that he be:
And my Muse so sonorously boreth,
That she'll grant no more favours to me

His tail too,—by Jove he can whisk it,
Which is rough upon bards that have none.
He thumps for a bone or a biscuit,
And all inspiration's undone.

I thought that my notion was splendid,
The stanzas so fluently ran.
But I don't know how Muriel ended,
And cannot think why she began

He's at it again! so distracted
On Poetry turn my back.
Bored audiences never enacted
Such eloquent snores as 'John Jack'

2. Whenever any estate or share of an estate situate outside Calcutta has been sold by the Official Receiver, such sale shall be notified by such Official Receiver to the Collector of the district in which such estate or share of an estate is situated.

3. Whenever probate or letters-of-administration is granted by the Court, and it appears, either from the application, or is otherwise brought to the notice of the Court or the Registrar, that any revenue-paying estate or share of such estate situate outside Calcutta is included in the estate of the deceased in respect of which the probate or letters-of-administration is granted, the Registrar shall notify the grant to the Collector of the district in which such estate or part of an estate is situated."

THE Lieutenant-Governor has directed that, subject to the exceptions specified in the second schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, and to the provisions of any enactment for the time being in force, all suits of a civil nature, of which the value does not exceed one thousand rupees, shall be cognizable by the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah.

THE phrases "area of holding" and "rent of holding" in the form of rent receipt prescribed under Sec. 56 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, heading 4, have been ordered to be altered into more comprehensive "name and area (if ascertainable) of tenure or holding" and "rent of tenure or holding."

IN the Secretariat Clerical Service of the Government of Bengal, vacancies up to 3 months have been excluded from the operation of Rule 10 of the Rules regulating the appointments, the heads of departments being left free to exercise patronage and fill up such temporary places.

THE examination for appointment to the Superior Accounts Branch of the Public Works Department, prescribed in paragraph 2 of Public Works Department Resolution No. 19 A. E., dated 25th January 1889, now applies to the Traffic Department of State Railways.

A HABERDASHER, in Vienna, was brought up before a magistrate and fined for offering for sale in his shop a number of handkerchiefs, which displayed the portrait of the late Crown Prince Rudolph and the date of his birth and death.

BISHOP MEDLYCOTT, the local head of the Romo-Syrian Church of Malabar, sued, in the Court of the District and Sessions Judge of Trichoor, for a declaration that the Church of Our Lady of Seven Dolours at Trichoor was subject to the spiritual and ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Pope, on the ground that in 1812 when it was constructed it was dedicated to and held in trust for purely Romo-Syrian purposes. In opposition, the Chaleo-Syrian community claimed the Church as their exclusive property, and contended that it never acknowledged the Pope but only the sway of the Patriarch of Babylon, and that the suit was barred. The Judge held that limitation applied, and dismissed the suit with costs.

MR. Edward Sims, Manager of the Banarapore Indigo Factory, was accused of having caused the death of a native Sohun Meah, a servant, by pushing the man off a high verandah on to a row of bricks and also striking him. The medical evidence showed that the man had a diseased heart, that the shoulder and one of the scalp-bones on the right side behind the ear were broken. Mr. Hall, on behalf of Government, prosecuted, and Mr. Kennedy defended the accused. It was contended that Mr. Sims had not touched the man, and that Mr. Sims had unnecessarily been dragged into the case by the Police whom he constantly reported. The Magistrate of Mozufferpore, Mr. D'Oyly, has committed the case to the sessions, under sections 201, 304 and 325. Mr. Sims is out on bail.

A BOMBAY telegram says:—

"For some time past a number of low-caste butchers not allowed to have stalls in Municipal markets have been purchasing buffaloes which the authorities of the Municipal slaughter houses at Bandora refused to kill for human consumption, the purchases being effected outside Municipal limits. After sale, it seems to have been the custom of the purchasers to convey the animals to Coorla, where they were slaughtered and the flesh subsequently brought into Bombay by either road or rail, and sold at cheap rates. A leper was in charge of a bullock cart loaded with buffalo flesh of the description mentioned; he was sitting on the meat."

The leper and another butcher were arrested and prosecuted. The leper was fined Rs. 50 and the other Rs. 20 each. The leprous man suffers more for his disease. Does the law of Bombay make leprosy a municipal offence? In Calcutta, within the municipal area itself, cattle are butchered outside slaughter houses and sold in the markets. Such meat finds its way into the municipal market as well.

ONE Archibald Little has obtained the permission of the Chinese Government to navigate the Upper Yangtze, the right being reserved in the Chefoo Convention of 1877 for British subjects.

M. CHARDONNET is engaged on producing silk from cotton. The method is to treat it with a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acids—in gun-cotton—then dissolve it in a mixture of alcohol and ether and some perchloride of iron or protochloride of tin and tannic acid. The solution is then run through a small tube or fine holes into water prepared with nitric acid, with the result that the fine fluid filament is solidified and forms a thread resembling silk and equally strong and elastic. The colouring is easy enough. The inflammability of his silk now puzzles the professor.

PROFESSOR BROWN SEGUARD, of Paris, thinks he has discovered "the art of not growing old." He says he has been able to transfuse the vigour of youth into the aged and the debilitated. After experiments of kinds, he has come upon an expedient of inoculating man with the nerves of young animals. He has proved his method on himself which has made him ten years younger.

LORD WALSINGHAM has sent to the London Zoological Garden the Leaf Insect. It is an inhabitant of the Seychelles and so thoroughly resembles nature that it is not easy to distinguish the insect from the leaf.

THE last Parliamentary register gives a total of 5,982,353 electors for the United Kingdom—namely, in England and Wales 4,653,736, (comprising 2,704,035 in the counties, 1,934,414 in the boroughs, and 15,287 in the Universities), in Scotland 574,072 and in Ireland 754,545.

THE death of Father Damien of the loathsome disease has revived the question of leprosy. They have started an organization in England under the presidency of the Prince of Wales, under the name of the Father Damien Memorial Fund Committee, to perpetuate the memory of the deceased Father and to study and investigate the disease in different parts of the world. It has been resolved to expend 500l for a memorial; also to establish a fund, to pay for the treatment of cases of Indian leprosy in the United Kingdom; to endow two studentships renewable for three years, one student to make Europe the field of his investigation, the other to study the disease in China, the colonies, and elsewhere; to invite support in India, through the Viceroy; and to appoint a commission to proceed to India for the purpose of investigating the disease there.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON denied in the House of Commons that England was not free to take her own course in any war between France and Italy.

By a motion for adjournment, Dr. Cameron elicited the view of the Secretary of State on the question of the corrupt Mamlutdars. Lord Cross is not prepared to withdraw the immunity granted by the Bombay Government, but if the matter was left to him he would do justice. That satisfied the Doctor and he withdrew the motion.

Verdict has been recorded in favor of the defendant in Mr. O'Brien versus Lord Salisbury, in which the plaintiff claimed ten thousand pounds for damages for alleged libellous expressions in his Lordship's speech at Watford last March.

Mr. Parnell has received the freedom of the City of Edinburgh.

The Parnell Commission has closed as regards the taking of evidence and stands adjourned to the 24th October. Before the close, Mr. Parnell deposed that Egan had made away with all the books of the Land League and the documents had been destroyed. He would not allow the present financial resources of the League to be disclosed, as future political movements might depend on them. Moloney, once a clerk, however, produced four of the account books and testified to £94,000 being unaccounted for.

The Select Committee on the messages from the Queen for provision for Prince Albert Victor and Princess Louise of Wales finally agreed to increase the allowance of the Prince of Wales by £36,000 per annum, reserving to Her Majesty the right to ask for grants for her other grand-children. It is also reported that the Queen has waved that question. There will be a Radical opposition of course to the increase recommended.

The Queen's Bench has, after all, upheld the Bow Street Magistrate, Mr. Bridge, in his refusal to grant summons against the Duke of Cambridge.

The ex-King Milan has returned to Belgrade. He was cordially received by King Alexander and the Regents.

The insurrection in Crete is expanding. The insurgents have expelled the Turkish authorities at Vamos and Cidonia and burnt the archives of Government. The peasants have fled to Retimo for refuge.

THE Lower Danube at the Iron Gate will be freed of its rocks which obstruct navigation. Under orders of the Hungarian Government, the Minister of Public Works at Buda-Pesth has invited tenders for their effacement.

THIS week's mail brings the intelligence that no less than fifteen native Indians have been called to the bar.

COLONEL THOMAS ERSKINE ARTHUR HALL, commanding the troops in Mauritius, has been appointed to administer the government of the colony and its dependencies in certain events. What are these last? Are they immediate?

THE ignorance in respect of Persia displayed by the British Press in its comments on the visit of the Shah, is scarcely creditable to the nation which has such interest in the East. The papers regard Naseruddin as a Brummagem Darius or a nerveless Nadir, and his kingdom as a state bordering on savagery. In point of fact, he belongs to the advanced type of Oriental rulers of the day, and his country has greatly improved under his rule. The Statesman points out—

"In the capital there are excellent trainways, the streets and public buildings are lighted by electricity, there are also very fine boulevards and an opera-house, and so perfect is the police organisation that large amounts of treasure are despatched by caravans for long distances guarded by only a couple of soldiers. Our private advices state that the Shah has gone to England with an eye to business, and hence his visits to our chief manufacturing towns. His Majesty is particularly desirous, we are assured, of obtaining the services of some skilled agriculturist to assist in improving the agricultural processes in vogue in his dominions, which stand in need of reform."

THERE is sensation in Ceylon over a minerological discovery, which may yet cause a revolution in the trade in gems. A poor Mahomedan digger has tumbled upon luck in the shape of an invaluable block of stone. This is a monster cat's eye of an incredible size. It is a strange story, this man's digging experience. Like others, he obtained the usual license by payment of the ordained Rs. 10, and proceeded to work. At the outset, he met with disappointment only. He worked with zeal, but to no purpose. He dug and dug, from day to day, from morn to noon, from noon to dewy eve, all in vain. For all his care and constancy, he turned up nothing worth possession. Not the faintest ray of light from the rock he broke or the debris of earth and stones he washed, cheered his longing sight. Still he persevered, hoping against hope. At length, Lakshmi—the Goddess of Fortune—relented. The hour of reward came, with a cat's eye which sold for £1,000. That was compensation for all previous troubles and disappointments. For one in his circumstances, it was indeed wealth. It proved the veritable tide in his affairs which leads on to fortune. The first success encouraged him to fresh and redoubled exertion. Soon he was gratified by a find which produced double the sum. And then he made his superlative discovery which fairly staggered him and takes away the breath of the whole civilised world. It is a block of gem of about 7lbs! This throws into the shade every other triumph of digging. All the great giants of Gemnology are poor figures before this monster. The most famous jewel in the world—the historic gem which dazzles on the State turban of the Empress of India—is now shamed into insignificance. Verily, the hyperbole of the Koh-i-noor is reduced to prosaic fact. After this some luckier dog may one of these days come upon an actual Mountain of Light. And no bad thing would it be for our poor vain world, for then that would put an end to the barbarous fashion of wearing little bits of rock. All the wonders of Sanskrit and Arabic naturalists seem to be in fair way of being verified. If we mistake not, the Ajtyeb al Muklukit mentions a whole Hill of Light.

The Ceylon diggings seem to be particularly rich. Cat's eyes worth £40 to £100 are continually being disposed of. A company has been formed for buying them on the spot. They offered £19,000 for the monster cat's-eye of 6lbs. 6 rupees weight. But the Mahomedan digger would not part with it for the sum, saying he could make £40,000 by cutting his block into 40 separate gems and selling each at £1,000.

CHANCERY is Chancery still, though Eldon is no more. There is just now a characteristic litigation in that English Equity which is divorced from Law—which has been carried to the House of Lords.

"The chief feature of this formidable case is the extraordinary number of the 'authorities' with which counsel on both sides have armed themselves. Mr. Rigby heads the list with ninety-six volumes, Sir Charles Russell boasts of sixty, Sir Horace Davey, who leads on the other side, has over forty cases to quote, and the juniors bring the total number of reports used in the case up to three hundred. At the close of the day each counsel finds himself walled in by the volume: he has carelessly placed around him, and energetic clerks are forced to dig as it were their employers out of the piles of books in which they bury themselves."

THE pot is again at the black kettle. Last Monday's Englishman has a leader specially railing at some poor Indian cultivators for their belief that the Banniahs are able to prevent rain by insulting the Gods.

But, mylord Anglaise, permit an amicus curiæ of these ignorant Indian clodhoppers to remind you,—mutato nomine de te fabula narratur? Horace as an old acquaintance may have lost credit, but Huxley is living, and is continually knocking at the door of your mind. Surely, you cannot have forgotten the Professor's spicy articles in the Nineteenth Century, in which he shows that you all are no better than—Your poor Indians. What a character he gives you and your people! What of the Gadarene pig bedevilment business? Do not the vast majority of your readers believe in it as Gospel truth? Not an English newspaper in India noticed the professor's articles, none certainly dares to meet his reproaches, so universal is the credence given to the fables he scoffs at. How exactly your own words describe the enlightened men of the West. "Poor credulous mortals, they would believe any thing that was told them in the name of religion. Through all the generations of their faith they have cultivated a faculty of mental effacement which makes it easy for them to believe in the most palpable absurdities."

There is little to choose between fables and fables. Our advanced Indian boys are often amused at the credulity of the leaders of Anglo-Indian public opinion.

The Statesman, in its leader of Wednesday, gravely refers to the Deluge as a historical fact that happened not more than 104 generations ago. One would have thought that Noah and his floating menagerie had been relegated to the list of fairy tales, and that to have mentioned the Deluge seriously would be an insult to its readers. But apparently the old Jewish myth is still as firmly believed in as any of our local superstitions are by the most ignorant rayyet. At any rate, we-Indians have no monopoly of the article.

OUR English journals are very far from perfection in any respect. Our vernacular journals are many degrees more deficient in all that constitutes the pride of the press. But there is below the deep a lower deep, and that has just been reached by a Bengal paper which unfortunately boasts of the largest circulation. This paper—the Bangabasi—had lately come under the deserved castigation of a leading Bengali magazine edited by Mrs. Janoki Nath Ghosal (Calcutta Secretary to the National Congress) under her maiden name Swarna Kumari. She is the daughter of the venerable head of the Original Brahmo Church Baboo Devendra Nath Tagore, son of the famous Dwarka Nath Tagore. She is the sister of Mr. S. N. Tagore, C. S., Bombay. She lately presided at a lecture at Sholapore, in the Bombay Presidency delivered by Mrs. Sorabjee. Her magazine is called the Bharati. This is how the male Bangabasi retorts upon the criticism in the Lady's periodical—we quote the paragraph with pain and loathing:—

"The lady Sarna,—not she of Sonagáchi but the other one of that ilk of Jorasanko—has been at our back. Why this has been so, we have not been able to rightly understand. The public also will not, perhaps, understand it, for the matter is an enigma. We are astounded. Our taste is vicious, our disposition and nature bad. Knowing all this, is it proper to quarrel with us, seeking an opportunity? Then, again, does she not know that we have latterly become a little religious? We will bear anything, but we will never raise our arms against a lady. Otherwise, in literary matters we could venture to say that, not to speak of women, it is not easy (for anybody) to bear the thrusts of our pen. Why does she unnecessarily disturb us?"

That is the way in which a Bengali journal dares to speak of a lady of great respectability and belonging to one of the first families in Bengal. It is impossible to translate into a foreign tongue all the foul innuendos of the original. For the benefit, however, of our European readers, we should say that "she of Sonagáchi" is the famous courtesan, Sarna Bye, judicially though stupidly characterised some years ago as the "Lola Monter of Calcutta." Such is the chivalry of a Bengali journal which is understood to enjoy a large circulation that it cannot speak of a highly respectable lady without coupling her name with that of a Bazar-woman. Writers of this description richly deserve to be horse-whipped in the gaze of the whole town. Unfortunately, in the present case, the meekness of the family insulted and the true Brahmanic forgiveness of its venerable head screen the offender from just chastisement. Our very shoes should not be permitted to be wrapped with such a print.

And this is the journal that is straining every nerve and devoting all its enterprise and every art and artifice to pile the agony on the head of the Mohant of Tarkesswar! This the paper that has taken up to purify Bengali society! Alas, for poor Bengal!

AMONG so many of the lords of the forest—of quality and fashion now assembled at Paris attracted by the Exhibition, it is satisfactory to find that our Prince of Wales is the lion. His Royal Highness has worked up "our good neighbours" into astonishing good humour—on easy terms.

They are in raptures with a Prince who can not only sign his name but writes a neat hand. But their enthusiasm has no bounds when they learn that he is so wide-awake a sleeper as to be suspected almost of insomnia.

"When the Prince of Wales and the party who with him made the ascent of the Eiffel Tower a short time ago, signed the visitors' book in the office of an aerial newspaper, the Frenchmen were agreeably surprised at the extremely neat hand-writing, not only of the Princess, and of Prince Albert Victor and Prince George. But this accomplishment is trivial in comparison with one which has been discovered in the Heir Apparent by a writer in the Gaulois, namely, that not only can he sleep at any moment he desires, but 'go off' with his cigar burning, and kept it alight till he wakes again."

We hope the good Prince has no Ramasamy jugglery in store for the Parisians, for fear of their bursting in delight.

After all, the credit lies not so much with the Prince as with the people. The whole reminds us of "the kinder skies where gentler manners reign."

Gay sprightly land of mirth and social ease,
Pleas'd with thyself, whom all the world can please,

* * * * *

So blest a life these thoughtless realms display,
Thus idly busy rolls their world away :
Theirs are those arts that mind to mind endear,
For honour forms the social temper here
Honour, that praise which real merit gains,
Or even imaginary worth obtains,
Here passes current ; paid from hand to hand,
It shifts, in splendid traffic round the land :
From courts to camps, to cottages it strays,
And all are taught an avarice of praise ;
They please, are pleas'd, they give to get esteem,
Till, seeming blest, they grow to what they seem.

THE medical gods, like the educational ones in general, are at best but a base species of divinity. But if they have not usually the pretensions of the true Civilian Olympians, some who are permitted to live in the sublime heights of the Himalayas, are apt to catch the infection of the lordly genus. At any rate, they are up to any ill usage against the Baboo beasts of burden under them. Here is as discreditable a story as any in the general Civil Administration.

In May 1869, the Government of India approved of a proposal of the Inspector General of Hospitals, Bengal, to hold biennially on the first May and first November, an examination of Sub-assistant now Assistant Surgeons, for promotion to the higher grade, on the completion of the 7th and 14th years of service. The rule about the examination is thus laid down in the circular Memo. No. 50 of 15th September 1868.

"The Deputy Inspector-General will then transmit the Sub-Assistant Surgeon's name to this office, when the Principal of the Medical College will be instructed to request the professors of the respective subjects of examination to prepare the necessary questions. These will then be forwarded under the seal of the Principal to the Deputy Inspector-General, who will transmit them (unopened) with his dossier to the President of the Examining Committee, which will be convened (as usual) under the order of the Officer Commanding. The papers will be opened by the President of the Committee, in whose presence the answers will be written by the candidate. The questions, together with the replies, will be returned to the Deputy Inspector-General (who will forward them to the Principal of the Medical College). Together with the result of the Committee's own viva voce examination of the candidate. It is expected that the Committee will satisfy itself in this way of the candidate's general intelligence and report accordingly."

In Calcutta, the examining Committee consist of the Professors of the Medical College, the President being the Principal.

Under these rules, Assistant-Surgeons Kali Krishna Bagchi, Aushoke Krishna Shaha and Pertab Chunder Ker appeared at the examination of the 1st May 1889, at the Calcutta Medical College. The examiners—the professors of the Medical College, headed by the Principal the final authority under the rules—passed them, and informed them accordingly. Their success at the examination brought the Assistant-Surgeons but a brief joy. In June, every one of these passed examinees was individually "directed to hold himself in readiness for written re-examination any day he is called for." This call of the 17th June was all the more extraordinary as coming from the Principal of the Medical College—the head of the officers who examined and passed the Subs. It was followed up by a direction on the 19th "to appear for his promotion examination at the large College Theatre to-morrow at 12 O'clock"—"his promotion examination" being the ordeal he had already passed through successfully. The Assistant-Surgeons very properly refused to appear at the examination of the 20th, without being informed of the reasons of this second examination. In reply to this protest, they were summoned by the Principal of the Medical College on the 26th June, when he read to them the following memo. from the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, Bengal, dated Darjeeling, the 22nd June.

"The written answers given by the above mentioned Assistant-Surgeons to the professional questions put to them at the last Septennial Examination held in May last do not appear to the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals to represent accurately their own knowledge of the subjects of examination. He has therefore drawn up a few questions which he wishes the Assistant Surgeons to answer in order to test this point.

The Assistant-Surgeons will understand that this is a distinct order from the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals that they are to re-assemble and answer the written questions which he has now asked Dr. Coates to put to them."

The matter had now grown more serious and alarming. The reason given for re-examination opened up a new vein of mysteries. The Assistant-Surgeons could not but read in the order an imputation on their character and on the honor of their professors and examiners. The Inspector-General had, evidently, exceeded his authority in framing a new set of questions and asking the Subs to answer them. Anyhow, the Assistants considered themselves bound, for preservation of their honor, to decline the re-examination by Dr. Hilson. This resistance only enraged the more the Olympian wielder of the destinies of the poor natives in the Department—and he fulminated his wrath in the following strain:—

"No. A.

From—The Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals for Bengal.

To—Brigade-Surgeon J. M. Coates,

Principal, Medical College, Calcutta.

Dated Darjeeling, the 27th June 1889.

Sir,—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of the 26th instant to which I replied on the 27th as follows:—

Your telegram of yesterday. Suspend at once from all duty and until further orders Assistant-Surgeons Kali Krishna Bagchi, Aushoke Krishna Shaha, and Pertab Chunder Ker, relieving them by supernumerary Assistant-Surgeons.

2. I beg to request you will now call upon Assistant-Surgeons Kali Krishna Bagchi, Aushoke Krishna Shaha and Pertab Chunder Ker to give any explanation they may have to offer for having wilfully disobeyed an order of the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, communicated to them through you, calling upon them to answer certain questions which he had sent to you in order to test their professional knowledge.

I have, &c,
(Sd.) A. HILSON, M.D.
Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, Bengal."

Dr. Hilson is not only stern but appears to be just. He asks the Assistant-Surgeons for any explanation they have to offer to enable him to pass his final orders. We understand the Inspector-General refuses to accept the reasons for what he still considers disobedience of order, and has recommended their dismissal. The Bengal Government, as usual, endorses the order of the Inspector-General. We believe the matter has gone up for the final orders of the Indian Government. We hope justice will be done in the serene atmosphere of Simla.

As might have been expected, there has been an explosion over the Inspector-General Ommaney's Report which so unfortunately leaked out from the India Office through Parliament. The elders of the aggrieved Parsee community promptly bestirred themselves to prevent a needless exacerbation, and the Government has shown due appreciation of the situation.

Sir Dinshaw Manockji Petit, representing the Parsi community of Bombay, applied to Lord Reay for such balm as His Excellency the Governor could give to the wound inflicted on that community by the publication of Mr. Ommaney's confidential report on the Crawford scandal. The good Governor, in reply, "assures them that the feelings of the Government towards the Parsee community are absolutely unchanged and that nothing has occurred which could in the slightest degree warrant the Government not to repose in the Parsee community the confidence to which it is entitled by its past history. An officer addressing a confidential report to the Government is in duty bound to express his own opinions freely, irrespective of the views entertained by the Government. The silence of the Government with reference to those opinions expressed in such documents cannot be construed as approval or adoption. It must be clearly understood that Government does not put on the passage of Mr. Ommaney's report from which the words quoted by you are taken, the construction given to it in your letter."

THE papers are full of leprosy. What is the cause of this disease, whether it is contagious, is there any cure for it, should the lepers be segregated, are some of the questions discussed. One reports that garjan oil has been found efficacious in the treatment of the disease and quotes cases. Dr. Hilson, Inspector-General of Hospitals, Bengal, points out, from personal observations in the Agra Leper Asylum, that garjan is no more corrective than sweet oil. It is the friction and not the oil that causes a temporary absorption of the leprosy deposit in the skin. He found the treatment efficacious to a considerable degree in both the anæsthetic and tubercular forms of the disease, but not a complete or permanent cure. In 1877-78, the Royal College of Physicians expressed the opinion that leprosy was non-contagious. The Bengal doctors also worked up the garjan oil. They administered it both externally and internally and arrived at the same conclusion, that the friction and nutrition improved the patient. The skin became less rusty and sensation was partially restored. Discontinuance of the oil, however, brought on discoloration and retirement of sensation. The oil had not exterminated the bacilli occupying the nerves. The friction and the nutrition had only modified the course of the disease. Mud friction is equally successful in improving the patient. The shampooing is the thing.

A new experiment is being tried in Calcutta and elsewhere. Jeyes' disinfectants are gradually finding favour and proving the claim to their efficacy advertised. The disinfectant, in the various shapes of fluid, soap and ointment, has been found successful in the treatment of leprosy. Whether it can permanently cure it, time alone will show. That it can relieve the patient considerably is already visible. The Government Superintendent Dr. Beaven N. Rake reports on the 8th February 1889 to the Surgeon-General on Leprosy (published in the Trinidad Royal Gazette of May 1, 1889)

"I have lately been trying Jeyes' fluid (Creolin) a good deal at the Asylum. In 5 per cent. solution I find it rapidly heals the eczema so often complicating leprosy. It also is an excellent stimulant for indolent leprosy ulcers. In case of gangrene it completely reduces the smell. After excision of leprosy tubercles I find pure Jeyes' fluid (Creolin) useful as a caustic to hinder recurrence. I am still making observations."

Again—

"I have now tried the Fluid in numerous cases at the Leper Asylum, and am very well satisfied with the results.

(1) I have used the pure solution for the purpose of destroying the exuberant leprosy granulations and leprosy nodules of the skin. After excision of such growth I have found the Fluid useful in reducing the granulations to the level of the skin, and so promoting cicatrization.

(2) I have used the dilute solution at a strength of about 2 to 5 per cent. as a lotion, dressing leprosy ulcers and, in cases of eczema, complicating leprosy. In many of these cases I have noticed a rapid improvement after the use of the Fluid. The granulations become more active, and the ulcers begin to cicatrize at the edges. In one of the lepers obstinate eczema, which has resisted other applications, was rapidly dried up after a few applications of the dilute solution. The eczema recurred when the liquid was discontinued, but can now always be checked by a re-application. In fact the patient asks to recommence the treatment."

In Calcutta, the medical officer in charge of the Leper Asylum tried the medicine and reports thus under date the 14th June:—

"Jeyes' Perfect Purifier was tried on a few lepers with bad sores. It seemed to have a good effect, the sores put on a healthy appearance, factor was corrected, and after a time healthy granulations sprang up. With regard to Jeyes' Ointment, it was tried on a European leper, who had a sloughing sore near the right ankle; the sloughs rapidly separated, the offensive odour disappeared, healthy granulations began to form, copious healthy discharges took place."

In our immediate neighbourhood, the experiment has been very successful. Only this morning, we examined one under treatment. He has experienced much and extraordinary benefit. He had been in a horrible condition, but he has wonderfully improved under the Jeyes preparations alone. Nothing else, in European or native treatment, had done him the least good. A few swellings in the extremities still trouble him, but the innumerable characteristic knobs and marks that had covered other parts of the body have entirely disappeared. The burning sensation throughout the body is now confined to the lower extremities. There were no ulcers.

It cannot at all be pretended that in these cases, the improvement is due to friction. This patient had tried the mud friction for six months, but it did him no good. These cases should be medically watched.

WE have for sometime been receiving a new diglot, started at Poona last year, called the Sudharak or Reformer. It is a small broadsheet of four pages, of five columns to the page, mostly in Marathi with scarcely half a page of English. We are no judge of Marathi, but from the conduct of the English columns, we presume it to be of the best. There is inequality of course, the correspondence in special being very inferior. But much of the "leading" English is admirable. There is, for instance, a chaste vigour in the style of the article of the 22nd instant on Mr. Ommaney's Note, which every cultivated reader will enjoy. It is the natural expression of the mature thought which the writers bring to the discussion of public questions. Our only complaint is that we are put off with too little of a good thing. A weekly dole of two columns has a tantalising effect. No doubt, two such columns are more agreeable and more nourishing than ten of indifferent stuff. Better far to live upon half-a-page of the Sudharak than to wander through a whole file of, say, the Mirror. But if we could coax our entertainers to grant a more liberal indulgence, it would be a gain indeed. The Sudharak may at least give as much as the earnest Parsee Truth or rather "Truth-teller" the glorious Rast, whose English fraction now ranks with the ablest and best-esteemed English newspapers in the Presidency. Our new contemporary of Poona should present only English typography on the opening page, with the sole exception of the Marathi name. Even for that matter, the latter might be reduced with advantage—in quantity not quality—not nomenclologically but typographically. We recommend no verbal departure but an external attenuation. The hideous "black letter" Devanagara on the top is a perpetual offence to the eye. It might be reduced to two-thirds or three-fourths all round, without affecting the identity, and the Romanised name enlarged. The translation may be dropped altogether or relegated to a parenthesis below the proper name, thus—(The Reformer), without the anomaly of "or."

Reverting to our contemporary's contents, we must seriously warn it against its last correspondent. That rodomontade on Cashmere affairs by a Sad Mind plunged in literary lunacy, ought never to have been admitted. Not only is the manner execrable, but the matter is crude beyond measure, and, what is worse, insanely seditious. Its saving virtue, indeed, lies in its insanity and puerility. Yet even this kind of drivel, specially when appearing in respectable organs, may cause mischief, by inoculating the young and the ill-instructed with absurd notions on great and delicate questions of policy. We own that the editor's own comments are differently conceived than the sighing of the weeping willow of a friend whom he has given such undeserved prominence. But what is the good of a jar of poison diluted with a teaspoonful of antidote? We are sure, for one mature reader who catches the purport of the editor's philosophical deprecation of his correspondent's wild wailing over a doll's inevitable fall, there will be a hundred Poona boys who catch the Correspondent's sad infection. It is easy to disregard such an anonymous communication as a trifle, but it is such unfortunate trifles, thoughtlessly introduced, which, neutralising the patient labours of sober men, give our Press a bad name and estrange the Government and European society from our people.

It is more pleasant to dwell on our contemporary's own special work. Mr. Ommaney's Note is a most delicate subject, particularly for a Poona journalist, but it has been treated adroitly, with frankness yet without offence. The writer has had the courage to support the Inspector-General in the main. That officer's ability is so abundantly evident in his Report that none but the most blind could ignore it. The Sudharak, however, does him the justice to vindicate the purity of his motive. The article rightly thinks the publication will do good. It notices also with just satisfaction Mr. Ommaney's appreciation of Mr. Bhim bhai and, above all, of Mr. Pendse. We heartily join with the writer in his trust that Government will recognise the latter's abilities and the high moral calibre shown throughout the matter by him. That the Inspector-General's remarks about the Parsee obstruction are a little too sweeping, is admitted. The Poona Sarbajanaik Sabha is defended at the expense of its great Secretary.

"The Inspector General of Police must have however known that the Sabha was in no way responsible for what Mr. Chiplunkar personally did, that it had done its best to dissuade him from keeping up intimate relations with Mr. Crawford in the peculiar position which he occupied, and that to mark its displeasure of his (Mr. Chiplunkar's) conduct, it had even gone the unfortunate length of refusing to allow him to continue its Secretary, and it would therefore have been well for Mr. Ommaney, if he had not described Mr. Chiplunkar in that way. He could have certainly put in a good word for that body and it would not have been ill-deserved."

The Rast Goftar, as the leading Parsee organ, of course, approaches the subject from a different standpoint, and is naturally very sore. But it speaks with admirable moderation as well as with striking ability. Our contemporary's remarks are trenchant and, from its point, convincing.

MR. MARSDEN has washed his hands of the Hearsey prosecution of the Pioneer. He would not entertain the complaint at first. But when the High Court interfered, he was all meekness and ordered summonses against both the editor and the printer, without even calling on the prosecution to prove publication in Calcutta which alone could give the Magistrate jurisdiction. By consent of the prosecution, he had dispensed with the personal attendance of the printer. The case came on on Wednesday, when Mr. Henderson with Mr. Ledlie, instructed by Messrs. Remfry and Rose, appeared for Captain Hearsey, and Messrs. M. P. Gasper and Alston (Allahabad), instructed by Messrs. Sanderson and Co., appeared for Mr. Chesney, who pleaded not guilty. Mr. Henderson opened the case by reading the five charges he would wish to be framed. He would then read to the Magistrate the section of the Penal Code governing the case, but the Magistrate stopped him short by declaring his mind that it was eminently a case for the jury and he would not try it. Mr. Henderson evidently was not prepared for this abrupt ending of his labours and reminded the Magistrate, that unless a prima facie case were made out, it could not go to the jury. Mr. Gasper, while appreciating the Magistrate's opinion, asked the Court not to commit the case before the prosecution had made out a case or there was some reasonable chance or probability of a conviction. Mr. Marsden said he meant to say that he would not dispose of it if a prima facie case were made out. Mr. Henderson submitted he was prepared to prove a prima facie case, that he would prove Mr. Chesney was editor and Mr. Dare printer, and that if he could prove publication, he would be able to prove them guilty. It rested with them then to justify their conduct or to prove that what appeared in their paper was for the good of the public. He then referred to the assault on Mr. Chesney by Captain Hearsey, the Captain's prosecution and conviction which provoked the matter now complained of. He contended that Mr. Chesney had no cause to vent his bile on the Captain after he had been punished at his instance. Having sent the Captain to jail, it was most cowardly, unmanly and un-English of the Pioneer editor to attack him when he could not retaliate. With these introductory remarks, Mr. Henderson examined an assistant of Messrs. Newman and Co., who swore that he had sold two copies of the Pioneer to the complainant. The Captain now stepped into the box and informed the court that, though a resident of Mussooree and Dehra, he had been residing at Calcutta for the last two months and handed to the Court the copies of the Pioneer purchased from Newman & Co. Mr. Gasper had now his turn, and under his cross-examination led the Captain through his past career from his resignation under compulsion from the Army down to the last Congress in which he took part. The Captain was in a great measure prepared to meet the bullying counsel. He spoke to his seven previous convictions. He caused merriment and sensation by the narration of his deeds and misdeeds. He freely gave out his opinions of men and measures formed by the treatment he had received from officials. The Court was beginning to be weary of the trial of strength between the bar and the box, and Mr. Gasper had scarcely gone through half the cross-examination, when Mr. Marsden said he would not go into the facts of the case but must commit it at once. Mr. Gasper, as he always is, was so confident of his case that he had carefully arrived at the opinion that the nine jurymen who would convict his client must all come out of the most violent ward of the Bhowampore Asylum. He was willing to rest his case on the cross-examination of the complainant and would ask the Court to bear with him a little longer for another hour and a half. But the Court had sat out its usual hours, and adjourned the case to next day, Thursday. That day the Captain remembered that the Courts of the N.-W. P. including the High Court, which he had denounced wholesale the day before, had not always been opposed to him, for he had successfully prosecuted two or three cases. He was more outspoken this day. It was a great joke, he said, when he swallowed a promissory note he had executed in favor of a bank on which money was still due. He called Sir Henry Ramsay—who certainly did not bear the highest character—the greatest blackguard that ever lived. The cross-examination over, there was a brief parley between the Magistrate and Counsel as to re-examination and the putting in of a register showing that Mr. Chesney was the editor and Mr. Dare the printer of the Pioneer. Mr. Gasper now addressed the Court. He contended that there was no case to go to a Jury. To say that Mr. Chesney was guilty was as true as that he the counsel should be committed for murder. The complainant had no reputation to lose. It is an impossibility to make out a thing which does not exist. He did not see how you can harm a thing which has no existence. The Magistrate would not be the judge Mr. Gasper asked him to be. Now Mr. Henderson withdrew the charge against Mr. Dare. Mr. Marsden then committed Mr. Chesney to the next Sessions beginning on the 21st August. Mr. Gasper now admitted that Mr. Chesney was the editor of the Pioneer, though not the writer of the articles complained of. He admitted responsibility but pleaded not guilty, and reserved his defence.

THE ABUSES OF PASSENGER-BOATING IN BENGAL.

DURING the protracted inquiry on the ill-fated Sir John Lawrence, among the many abuses discovered, was the singular absence of any decent method in filling these steamers with passengers. It appeared that, before the departure from port early in the morning, a perfect crowd of boats full of intending passengers attacks the vessel from all sides. There is endless noise and confusion in the attempt of each of these boats to penetrate through others to reach the side of the steamer. Many of course fail in the attempt. At last a broad cordon of such boats may be seen surrounding the vessel, the passengers coming in the more distant ones trying to make their way through the nearer ones up to the steamer's deck. There is a fearful risk to limb and life—to say nothing of convenience—in the prevailing hurly burly. Accidents are not unfrequent: our wonder is that they are not commoner. The scene is repeated on the conclusion of the return trip. It has just been described by a correspondent of a morning contemporary, and it is such as any civilized community ought to be ashamed of. We had hoped that with the exposure before Mr. Reily, there would be an end of these revolting practices. In sad truth, they flourish as before. And we are supposed to have a River Police! And what is the Government about? Is it waiting for another big disaster before rousing itself up to another brief period of spasmodic activity? We hope the Native Press, which so miserably failed in its duty on the occasion of the loss of our Royal George, will now do something to retrieve its honor by insisting on an immediate reform.

The dingi nuisance is not confined to the arrival and departure of the pilgrim vessels. It exists at all the landing-places throughout the port—indeed, throughout the country. It is a common feature of passenger traffic in Bengal. It occurs in the filling and emptying of every passenger steamer or steam-boat in mid-water. This obviously points to the remedy. Stop the taking in and the discharging of freight of human flesh in mid-stream isolated from the land, and you end the evil. Establish the vessel's direct communication with the shore, and there will be no room for mischief. Wherever vessels are moored abreast of a wharf or jetty and receive passengers from, or deliver them on land direct, or across a bridge, there is no complaint. At Goalundo, Naraingunge, Dacca, and similar termini, there are jetties for the Railway steamers. So have the great steamer companies like Macneil & Co. If these jetties are not always fully utilised in the hurry of taking in or discharging passengers, specially at intermediate stations, that is a laxity which ought to be, and may easily be, suppressed. The intermediate agency of boats, is at least an anarchic convenience which ought to have no place in a civilized system.

But the dingi nuisance is a much wider evil. As an adjunct to the traffic of passenger vessels, the dingi or country wherry is a comparatively small evil, and, such as it is, it is capable of easy prevention. Not so the dingi as an independent conveyance in itself for passenger traffic. Although, at most country ports and river marts and towns and townships, the dingi or country passenger boat has been superseded by steam launches of small draught for the conveyance of men between the principal centres, yet the primitive craft still flourish and will continue to flourish. The dingi or country boat is the natural feeder of the steam navigation. And it supplies its deficiencies. Accordingly, the sum total of the traffic by this craft is infinitely vaster than the passenger traffic of the vessels propelled by steam power. Now such scenes as those witnessed by the Indian Daily News's correspondent at the arrival of the pilgrim steamers from Chandbally, are a well-known concomitant of the country boat passenger traffic. By well-known, we mean well-known to those who know the country and the masses of its population. The lordly who have their own sumptuous arrangements for travelling—the rich and self-absorbed in general may not stop to enquire earnestly, but few who are accustomed to pass and repass through the country and especially to embark or land at ghats or landing places in town and country, can not have failed to notice the way in which the watermen secure their fares. It is a monstrous process. Intending passengers are literally pounced upon by these river eagles. These passenger-fishers even go out a long way from the water and lie in wait for their prey at the corners of great thoroughfares and at street crossings. No sooner thy smell a rat, we mean a passenger, than he is doomed. They are there and then down upon him as legitimate game. First his luggage is secured, any bag or box or other article he may happen to carry with him is wrested out of his hands. Then he necessarily follows his tyrant. Often there is competition for the same wayfarer, and then the scene is far more lively. The poor man, by way of anticipation, is actually seized and pinioned and carried away prisoner into the boat. Or, there is a mad wrestling between the rival combatants literally over the victim, to the tattering of his garments and injury to his person. The poor man calls aloud for help in vain. The Police always, at the first symptoms of approaching difficulty, keep out of the way. And we patriots are too respectable to lift a finger in such an obscure cause.

We take this opportunity of appealing to the Lieutenant-Governor. Sir Stuart Bayley has a fine opportunity of doing a distinctly good work with the greatest ease. This is no subject of controversy. No vested interests are involved. With a little zeal, he could advance the happiness of the boat-going population of Bengal.

The following is the cream of the letter signed "An Eye-witness" in the Indian Daily News :—

"On arrival of the Chandbally steamers, and before they are made fast to their respective buoys, the dinghee-wallahs, eager to secure as many trips as possible with passengers, put off their dinghees and hover round the vessels, by which the navigation is dangerously impeded, and one wonders how commanders of these vessels navigate through such a crowd of boats around them. No sooner do the boatmen get a chance of boarding the vessel, than they pounce in wild confusion upon the poor exhausted pilgrims (exhausted by long pilgrimage and privations enhanced by sea-sickness on the voyage), dragging them by their arms whether old or young, and actually throwing them into the dinghees as so many cattle or goods. Very often two boatmen, having each hold of an arm of a passenger, pull in contrary directions. I believe several accidents have occurred through this state of lawlessness. I have myself on several occasions seen passengers nearly slip into the river between two dinghees, but fortunately for them nothing can loosen the grip of a dinghee-wallah till he secures the passenger for his dinghee."

INDIAN ARCHITECTURE.

Too much cannot be said on a subject of this kind, because of its strong bearing on the national life of India, as well as its reference to a form of architecture, which, if not so graceful as that bequeathed to us by the Greeks, is peculiarly impressive, majestic, and representative of the genius of this country.

It would be impossible to revive the old Egyptian and Assyrian forms of architecture, to which the Hindu bears a striking resemblance, because those peoples have vanished from the face of the earth. But with the Hindus it is otherwise; they as a nation exist, and the arts, sciences and social observances of their ancestors are, though in some cases in a modified, and in others a debased form, still maintained. There may be a difference of opinion as to how far the old Hindu architecture might be assimilated with what Western civilisation requires in the way of house-building; but those whose minds are free from prejudice must admit that it is desirable that the Hindus should be persuaded to revive all that is finest in old forms, thus giving an outward and visible sign of national feeling, at the same time blending with them what is best in regard to utility in European construction. It needs no great knowledge of architecture to shew how such results have been achieved in other countries, where genius has blended distinct attributes, while preserving national individuality as a whole, and at the same time meeting the requirements of social progress.

Every lover of Indian Art should strive to bring the people back to study the majestic buildings reared by their ancestors, and if this were done we should see, in place of the dull prosaic and at times hideous types of the Public Work Department, structures reflecting the genius of the Hindus and appealing to the sentiment of that part of the population, who have not forgotten that they are a distinct people.

For this reason, we are always glad to seize upon any little opportunity that may present itself for enforcing this lesson, that there must be a wedding of Hindu forms of architecture with Western principles of sanitation, if the former are not to disappear for ever.

Mr. B. R. Harrington recently published an art volume entitled "Portfolio Studies from Ancient Hindu Architecture," which were highly praised not only by nearly every section of the press, but by eminent artists, and especially by those who could appreciate the admirable ingenuity with which he has contrived to bring his Studies to answer modern requirements, while keeping the unique and regal forms of the Ancient Hindu genius. Mr. Harrington's cry is that of Artists in Egypt and other parts of the Earth. "Why use an exotic Architecture, tame, ugly and utterly unsuited to the climate and surroundings of the country, when you have the glorious models of the past for your guide?" The best of the Portfolio photolithographs have been produced from Mr. Harrington's fine water-color paintings, which for depth of tone or supple feeling can scarcely be surpassed and are well worth study. The grandeur and dignity of Hindu Architecture are well represented in these designs, and why the people should foolishly follow what for India are the vain practices of Europe, when they have such models before them, can only be accounted for on the theory that they consider imitation the best form of flattery.

They are not alone in this respect: for the great ones among the Arabs have forsaken the noble Saracenic architecture, with its elaborate and graceful tracery, for palaces resembling barrack rooms, and the trumpery construction of Paris.

In his Studies, Mr. Harrington has been so successful with his plan for reviving the old forms of Indian architecture and assimilating to the necessities of modern civilisation, that it is to be hoped he will continue his work and produce new designs "which will justify the end" he and all true lovers of Art have in view. Whether he will ever attain that end or be as "one crying in the wilderness," it is not for us to say, but must rest with those who are leaders in their generation and influential among their people, to determine.

O.

THE SAMANNOY AT SIMLA.

MONEY will do wonders in every civilised country—the more civilized the people the greater the influence of money over it. The enlightened West, of course, adores it. In the Far West beyond the Atlantic, they have given its representative coin a significant name. The Almighty Dollar hits the truth "to a £." Here, out in the East, the depreciated Rupee itself is powerful enough—specially among the civilised. The poor Indian may possibly fail to appreciate its full majesty, but the enlightened Briton never. Mr. Allan Hume knows this as well as any other man—nay, a great deal better perhaps. As a brither Scot and, above all, as son of old Joe Hume of the House of Commons, he knows thoroughly how far a coin will go and how much it will fetch. The National Congress, with its giant proportions and its empire-wide ramifications, is, in a great measure, the creation of money—originally his money, for the most part. He had been an observant student of Irish politics in recent times. He had seen what an effective agitation had been set up by a few determined heads with the funds raised among the Irish at home and abroad. And he utilised the hint to give his native fellow-subjects of this country a similar political organization, for the redress of their grievances and the attainment of their rights. In doing so, he naturally estranged his own fellow-countrymen in the East. Redress of native grievances almost necessarily involved the creation of a European grievance. Native rights could be attained only at the expense of European privileges. Still money is a miracle-worker, and even a fire-brand might retain a fair share of popularity by spending on "society." But Mr. Hume was too much absorbed in haute politique to have much taste left for social dissipation, and all his wealth was needed to support the serious and difficult mission in which he was embarked. Now he has established his organization and has got some other men also to pay its way, he has found leisure for the amenities of social life, and can again spend on them. It was time enough too to recover caste among his own people. And he is now paying the usual penalty, so well-known among us in Bengal as samannoy. He has announced as many as three balls for this Simla season.

Hitherto Mr. Hume was an eye-sore. His very name could not be mentioned to ears polite without an opprobrious epithet. His best friends could speak of him only apologetically. He had a craze; he was even mad. Others who had never had the entrée of Rothney Castle and its magnificent conservatory, its ferneries and its collection of orchids, scarcely cared to mince the matter. They bluntly denounced him as dishonest, denationalised, unEnglish, not even, North-British. He was a rebel, of course. All that did not exhaust the force and plenitude of Anglo-Indian appreciation. The most unkindest cut of all was, that he was Baboo Hume, to be classed with such vermin as Robert Knight and Henry John Stedman Cotton.

Mr. Hume probably never felt much uneasiness at these outpourings of passion. He knew he was safe—in his money. He knew his men too well to despair of his position. There was no permanent ostracising for the leading Anglo-Indian grandee. The revival of his popularity was only a question of revival of his social expenditure. The grandee had only to revive his parties to appease Mrs. Grundy and her progeny of both sexes.

And the angels in pink and the angels in blue,
In muslins and moirés so lovely and new,
What is it they want, and so wish you to guess?
But if you have money, the answer is Yes.
So needful, they tell you, is money, heigh-ho!
So needful it is to have money.

It is a waste of resources, perhaps. It is certainly peculiarly extravagant in a serious-minded Scotch Theosophist turned Hindoo Patriot in late life. We are afraid his good father, who was so careful of the nation's pence, poring night and morning over the purposely confused accounts presented to Parliament, had he lived to this day, would have disowned so denationalised and degenerate a scion of his family. But, after all, it is a question of strength or means. The hemorrhage that will prostrate one man, may only relieve another. There are many men who are decidedly the better, for themselves and for the world, for a copious venesection. What between his pension and his accumulations, from before the Mutinies—by the bye, in 1857, the East India Company's notes and paper were cheaper than green-backs ever were in America during the War of Secession—the expense is nothing to a man of Mr. Hume's calibre.

As for that, pass the bottle, and d—n the expense!
I've seen it observed by a writer of sense,
That the labouring classes could scarce live a day,
If people like us did n't drink, dance, and pay.
So useful it is to have money, heigh-ho!
So useful it is to have money.

Probably, at this time of life, and with his other engagements, Mr. Hume cares little personally for dancing and flirting. But he cares for his Congress, and for Lord and Lady L. This is the first Simla season of a new social régime, and it is necessary for each to continue his caste tradition. Those who had fallen off from fashion must enter appearance. Mr. Hume is only following his own precedent on previous advents.

They may talk as they please about what they call self,
And how one ought never to think of one's self,
How pleasures of thought surpass dancing and drinking,—
My pleasure of thought is the pleasure of thinking.
How pleasant it is to have money, heigh-ho!
How pleasant it is to have money.

TWO TOWNS OF EASTERN BENGAL. A CONTRAST.

A visit, either on business or for pleasure, to any or more of the several towns of Bengal, is not only highly enjoyable by itself but also profitable and instructive. Travelling has always been considered of the highest value, and though some of our own men have gone far and wide without having seen and known the land of their birth and the country of brilliant traditions in the past, yet Bengal yields to none in presenting those natural phenomena and excellent sights which find admirers in every land and clime in the thinking and the contemplative soul and delight the mind's eye and feed the imagination. Whether for knowledge or information, or for study of human nature, there are various opportunities and ample materials if you only know how to utilise them. A steady and constant worker, an earnest and persevering guide is alone wanting; and there seems hardly any necessity, considering the enormous expense, except for a desirable and lucrative employment on return, (which is even now a doubtful game), to cross the ocean and get outcasted and otherwise divorced from social intercourse with one's fellow-brethren. For external polish and "bastard" refinement, a visit to foreign countries is not worth the trouble, whatever the denationalised man "once" of our own "kith and kin" may say to the contrary. It has been remarked often and often that all our towns look so like each other—they present no difference at all. Admitting this to a certain extent true, it will be found that points of dissimilarity and contrasts are very numerous withal. Take for instance Dacca, the old capital of the Mogals in Bengal and a city celebrated from remote antiquity, and the small beautiful town of Comillah, situate on the borders of the Tipperah Hills. Dacca is situated on low plains almost on a level with the sea and not far from the great rivers of Bengal; Comillah, on the other hand, is on a high elevated land not far from the Burma range of mountains which runs from the borders of Assam to Burma. The climate of the former is damp and depressing; that of the latter cool and delightful. Cotton and good rice are grown in the one, while to think of growing cotton in the other would be considered as playing the part of the man in the moon. Nature made these two towns after her own capricious and varying mood, and Art but followed Nature. Except the few buildings of recent years within living memory, almost all the houses in Dacca are ugly and ill proportioned, shutting out light and air, and very low. The roads are very narrow and small, with dirt, filth and refuse in addition. The arrangement of the town is also defective in other respects. In the beautiful little town of Comillah, there are few pucca houses indeed. But the ordinary thatched houses and bungalows with spacious compounds, nice gardens attached to each family dwelling, large trees lining its neat broad roads, and numerous tanks, present a sight quite different from what one sees in Dacca. It is rather sparsely populated, and that is exactly why it has retained its natural charms and is free from impurities of all sorts. There is an appearance of cleanliness about Comillah which one hardly finds in any other town of Bengal. In fact, Comillah seems to be a lovely little town where Nature reigns supreme and has free play, while in the other she is crippled by Art. Comillah however commands no excellent view from the riverside,—the river Gumi passing by her is a small rivulet and almost dries up during the hot season. Dacca has certain redeeming features of her own. Dacca is a very important place, and is the second town in Bengal. The people are more advanced, as the phrase is current now-a-days. She carries on excellent trade in articles manufactured and made by her own artisans. She has outlived her own ancient reputation as the country of fine muslins and nice works of embroidery and jewellery. On the other hand, Comillah is a rustic town where people are more honest and religious, not like a class of men at Dacca well-known for frivolous levity, idle gossip and sensuality of every kind. Comillah is also fortunately free from "the great sin of great cities" which is a rank disgrace to the other. In ruins and antiquities, Dacca is decidedly superior. Comillah can only boast of one or two instances in that direction.

THE MAHOMEDAN LITERARY SOCIETY.

Few Englishmen outside the official circle connected with India are aware of the remarkable movement which has been going on during the past twenty-five years among the Bengal Mahomedans with the aim of bringing themselves more into contact and sympathy with Western culture, and of securing for their community a recognition of its just weight and influence from the Government. We have before now in these columns glanced at the causes which tended to push the Mahomedans into the background and give almost all the advantages of liberal education to the Hindus. The abolition of Persian as the Court language in 1836 and the Indian Penal Code struck at Mahomedan influence, and old biases and prejudices among themselves hindered them from seizing promptly upon the facilities for acquiring a modern European education of which the Hindus so sagaciously took advantage. Hence the influence of the Mahomedans as a potent factor in Indian society threatened except in the Native States to dwindle to a position which might, under a reaction, have developed some awkward and perhaps serious complications. Fortunately, some enlightened men among them, who had emancipated themselves from the idea that Mahomedanism was forever to restrict itself within the circle of its own tradition, determined to make an effort to arouse among their brethren a taste for Western science and letters, and an ambition to hold their own against the Hindus who were flooding the offices in the administration open to Natives and monopolising whatever political and social advantages could thus be acquired. A movement was started at Calcutta in 1863 by the present Nawab Abdool Lutef, who was supported by several eminent Mahomedans, in particular the late Moulvie Mahomed Wajeeh, head professor of the Arabic department in the Calcutta Medressah, for forming a Society to promote in their community the study of Western science, history and letters, and watch over their interests as a powerful body in relation to the Government. During the twenty-five years of its existence this association, of which the Nawab Abdool Lutef is secretary, has been actively engaged in stimulating and awakening the Mahomedan mind in India, and has done work which is familiar to all Anglo-Indians, and has again and again been handsomely recognised by the Indian Government. The leaders of the movement have striven to bring home to their co-religionists the policy of falling into line with the modern ideas and the progressive impulses which were carrying forward the society around them, and threatened ere long to leave them stranded and helpless behind. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the "Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta," which was celebrated in the early part of this year, afforded an opportunity for recording and reviewing its operations, and the excellent résumé prepared by Nawab Abdool Lutef showed how much had been done during the quarter of a century to improve the Mahomedan position. No one, indeed, can turn over the brief recital of its history in the pages of this report, without noting with satisfaction what a remarkable change the Society has contributed to effect in the spirit and the views of the Mahomedans, not alone of Bengal, but of India. Despite many obstacles from within and without, the leaders of the movement have been instrumental in quickening the languid ambition and stimulating the culture of a community which represents some of the best vigour of the old Indian life, and is full of possibilities for the new. To Englishmen the movement ought to be more than interesting; to the Imperial Government its influence and progress are essentially important. The breaking down of the barriers which kept millions isolated from European ideas, and the awakening in them of a desire to take their share in the improvement of Indian society, in the formation of opinion, and in official life, are indeed consequences pregnant with good hope to our future government of India. Successive Viceroys have wisely shown their sympathy with the Society's aims, and accorded an intelligent encouragement to its operations. At times they have consulted it as the most authoritative exponent of Mahomedan opinion. Many of the most eminent Anglo-Indians have testified to the value of its work, and expressed favourable judgments of its intellectual and political bearings. The latter are, as may be imagined, of special importance; for on the material content and loyal disposition of the Mahomedans of India depends in no small degree the safety of our Peninsular Empire. Sir Frederick Roberts, in a letter he addressed to the Secretary in March last affirmed that the Society had his sympathies "because he recognised how good and powerful an influence it exercises in the cause of loyalty and order." The men who started this institution, which is now the most influential representative of Mahomedan opinion in India, have acted no less to the advantage of the Imperial rule under which India has progressed by leaps and bounds towards a higher intellectual life and a better material condition, than to the elevation and improvement of their own great community. They have started a grand experiment, which must have vast and far-reaching results upon the future of Mahomedans all the world over. At this moment, when efforts are being made at home to create the impression that Indian Mahomedans sympathise generally or to a large extent with the objects of the so-called National Congress, it is particularly pertinent to notice that this representative Society has more than once expressed in strong terms its dissent from the spirit and aims of that agitation. In the letter which Nawab Abdool Lutef addressed to the Congress in 1886, on behalf of his committee, after testifying to the anxiety and readiness of the Government to promote the interests of all classes so far as might be consistent with the requirements of the various nationalities---a reservation of the highest significance, in relation to all schemes for altering or modifying the conditions of Indian rule---he wrote :---

"The members of the Mahomedan Literary Society regret that they do not feel justified in the interests of the Natives of India, and of the Mahomedans in particular, in participating in any demonstration of the kind contemplated by the Reception Committee (of the Congress). They are more confirmed in this opinion seeing that, as in the past, all classes have the constitutional right of addressing Government and receiving careful attention from them. This has been the case with such representations as the Mahomedan Literary Society have, from time to time during nearly quarter of a century, felt it expedient to address to the Government in the interests of their co-religionists. . . . The Mahomedan Literary Society, representing the Orthodox Mahomedan community in India, which forms the bulk of the Mahomedan population, are not disposed to accept hasty proposals, however well meant, which have a tendency to revolutionise time-honoured institutions and to bring about changes which are novel, and which they consider unsuited to the exigencies of the India of to day and the various conflicting interests in it."

This letter prevented the entire Mahomedan community of Bengal and Behar from taking any part in the Congress at Calcutta. In 1887 a telegram of like purport from Nawab Abdool Lutef was sent to the Congress at Madras, and was borne out by the general abstention of influential Mahomedans of Lower Bengal from taking part in the proceedings. At Allahabad there was a similarly significant demonstration. It requires a good deal of hardihood on the part of Congress advocates in Great Britain to assert in the teeth of the evidence thus afforded, by this leading association in India, of the feelings of the Mahomedans towards the revolutionary schemes of the Congress, that Mahomedan opinion is on its side. Much of the above is ancient history. It is none the less relevant at the present moment to the discussions which are going on of plans for introducing quite too prematurely some ghostly imitation of European representative institutions into the supreme body which legislates for all the varied nationalities and religions of a populous continent. This association is doing a wise and valuable service in endeavouring first and chiefly to raise the intellectual, and with that the moral standard of the Mahomedans of India. It shows its wisdom by striving to prepare its co-religionists to take a more efficient place under the existing system, and to enlarge the scope of their influence by scientific and literary culture. The leaders are shrewd enough to see that in the premature adoption of Congress "reforms," the Mahomedans would be relegated to a secondary position, if they were not overwhelmed by the numbers and the activity of the Hindoo population. From this point of view the work of the Mahomedan Literary Society may be said to have only commenced, and it has before it, we trust, a useful career of patriotic labour and impulse.---Homeward Mail.

A SPECIAL MEETING

OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF CALCUTTA,

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight—"she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

A YEAR OF SILENCE.

["In some of the United States, the local Congress does not meet every year."—BRYCE.]

OH for a year of silence ! Could we go
Each to our quiet desk, or house, or field,
And cease our babbling ; plough, and reap, and sow,
And read old books, and ransack treasures sealed
Of learning, writ in ages long ago !
Then let some strong-souled Gordon take the field
Of action ; while the masters, "they who know,"
Would ravage Time its honeyed stores to yield !
That were as dreamland ! Pulpit, senate, mart,
Suddenly silent ; only Nature heard
With her still music, or her prophet's word !
The while the noisy blusterer would depart.
Where men talk least, his year of grace to spend,
To learn his ignorance and his manners mend !

THE OLD HOUSE.

IN through the porch and up the silent stair ;
Little is changed, I know so well the ways ;—
Here, the dead came to meet me ; it was there
The dream was dreamed in forgotten days.

But who is this that hurries on before,
A flitting shade the brooding shades among ?—
She turned,—I saw her face,—O God ! it wore
The face I used to wear when I was young !

I thought my spirit and my heart were tamed
To deadness ; dead the pangs that agonise.
The old grief springs to choke me,—I am shamed
Before that little ghost with eager eyes.

O turn away, let her not see, not know !
How should she bear it, how should understand ?
O hasten down the stairway, haste and go,
And leave her dreaming in the silent land.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

A CHEMIST, by name Dufresne, in a letter enclosing a bank note for £40, offered the jurors in the Paris Exhibition of his class £80 each, if he received a gold medal. Dufresne was ordered out as an exhibitor. His downright business like operation was not to the taste of these pure judges of arts and inventions. We rather suspect this chemist cracked a practical joke to expose the favoritism of the jurors.

SHRIPAD BABAJI THAKUR, Sessions Judge, Shikarpur, died at Shikarpur, on the 22nd July, of paralysis. One of the first batch of Indians who passed the open competition in England—after the pioneer Bengali, Satyendra Nath Tagore—he was an honour to the Mahrathi community. But only intellectually. He had scarcely the stamina of the race of Sivaji. He was only 42.

THE Akhbar-i-Am and the Koh-i-Noor, both of Lahore, accuse each other of receiving Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 7,000 respectively from the Maharaja and his brother Prince Amar Singh of Cashmere. Both the newspapers have gone to Court for satisfaction. By this mode of cleaning their foul linen in the street, they will scarcely advance the cause of the Native States or the credit of the Native Press.

THE Maharaja of Ulwar has bade adieu to Simla, exhausted doubtless by his stay of about three months in the rarified atmosphere of Capua.

THE Parsee Matrimonial Act provides against specific impuissance in the husband and against "physical causes" in the wife. In Surat, one Heerjibhoy Pestonji has prayed for divorce from his wife on the ground of her "not being in womanhood."

A CHOWKIDAR on the E. I. Railway, Howrah, in charge of the goods shed, has been fined Rs. 7, by the Deputy Magistrate. A consignment of piece-goods was found cut open and goods to the value of about Rs. 44 extracted while he was enjoying himself in the arms of Morpheus. For this unseasonable gallantry, he was charged with gross neglect of duty.

The sleeping fox catches no poultry, according to high authority, and the sleeping fox of the Police might play into the hands of his confederate knight of industry. The constable in question had any share in the spoil, he would not feel the fine. If not, he would recoup himself on the public.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

We may be thought to dwell at too much length on this little incident. But our remark may be a useful hint in administration of criminal justice as well of the Police.

ONE Radha Churn Dass was committed to the Magistracy by Mr. Justice Norris for perjury, for having persistently asserted before his Lordship that he never attested a receipt and that the signature on a subpoena was not his. In the Police Court, Radha Churn, on the advice of Mr. Manuel, his defending Attorney, pleaded guilty. Mr. Manuel explained that his client had misunderstood the pardon offered by the Judge, on condition of admitting his signatures, in the High Court; he believed that such admission would only criminate him the more and he stuck to his denial. Mr. Manuel asked of Magistrate Marsden the same leniency that Judge Norris had shewn. The Chief Magistrate took time to consider. Overnight he discovered that there was increase of perjury in the land, and so he sentenced Radha Churn to three months' hard labour.

GUL Muhamad, a head constable, in the Dera Ismail Khan district, has been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment. After the manner of the Police in that district and in conformity with practice, he kept a man confined in a private dwelling, for over two weeks, and tortured him to extort a confession. To escape from the cruelty, the confined man strangled himself to death. The compulsory suicide opened the eyes of the authorities, the constable was tried, found guilty and convicted. The policeman knew that he had committed no offence. He had only followed the usual practice. It was no illegal confinement when the restraint was not in an organized hawalat. He unburdened himself accordingly to the Chief Court, for reversal of the wrongful order made on him by the District Magistrate. The Chief Court confirmed the sentence as an exemplary punishment.

BRIGADE SURGEON J. G. PILCHER, late of Howrah, now of Darjeeling, officiates as Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, North-Western Provinces and Oudh, for Deputy Surgeon-General W. R. Rice, M. D., on privilege leave.

SURGEON WILLIAM OWEN, M.D., and Surgeon Dhormadas Basu have attained chirurgical majority. Both are able officers, though, we confess, we have no special reason to congratulate them. The service examination having been abandoned since 1879, when three European examinees failed, promotion of the Covenanted officers to any vacancy now depends on mere length of service.

MR. G. A. G. SHAWE goes on three months' privilege leave and Mr. C. H. DeMello, Assistant-Engineer, first grade, Cossye Division, officiates as Under-Secretary to the Bengal Government in the P. W. D.

THE office of Superintendent of Works, Calcutta, is a thing of the past—from the 20th July, the Akra Division, the Calcutta Workshop Division and the Burrakur Iron Works being transferred to the charge of the Superintending Engineer of the Western Circle. The Akra Division itself has also been abolished from the commencement of this month, the manufactory being leased out, and negotiations are in progress for similar transfer of the Iron Works. Lieutenant-Colonel G. F. E. S. Neill, M.S.C., who negotiated the contract for Akra, has obtained two years' special leave preparatory to retirement.

MR. W. D. BRUCE retired from the service from the 30th March 1889. Has he explained his conduct in connection with the private fees Mr. Bushby received for advising on the repairs of the lost Sir John Lawrence?

WE are officially informed that—

It is reported from Jeddah that the Vali of the Hedjaz who used to force all Indian and Javanese pilgrims to buy a copy of the Koran at a fixed price, has been removed and that his successor has received special instructions from the Sublime Porte to reform the Hedjaz and to root out all the evils which prevail there, and which, while detrimental to the interests of the pilgrims, lower the prestige of the Sultan in the eyes of the Mahomedan world. He is reported to have taken steps to carry out these instructions.

KUMAR GOPENDRA KRISHNA is Gazetted to act as Magistrate and Collector of Furreedpore, Baboo Kedarnath Roy, from Alipore, being posted to Sealda.

A NATIVE Deputy Magistrate Jagat Bundhoo Bhattacharjee has passed an examination in the Sonthali language and gained the reward of Rs. 1,000.

BABU BRAJENDRANATH DE, of the Bengal Civil Service, has won a Degree of Honour in Sanskrit in the first Division and the authorized donation of Rs. 5,000. We hope there will be no rush on this Honour on the part of other Native Civil Servants, or else it may be abolished or, at any rate, the grant reduced to insignificance. The country should not forget how in the teeth of pledged faith, the marks for Sanskrit and Arabic in the Civil Service competition were significantly reduced immediately on Mr. Mano Mohan Ghose (now a senior barrister in our High Court) passing the Examination, in London, with special credit in Oriental classics.

THE Gazette of India of the 27th publishes the terms on which grants of land may be given to approved applicants undertaking to introduce emigrants from Chutia Nagpur and Behar, including the whole of the Patna Division and the Districts of Bhagalpur and Monghyr.

MR. J. WESTLAND, C. S. I., assumed charge from Mr. D. Fitzpatrick, C. S. I., as Chief Commissioner of Assam, on the 16th July.

THE tenders for the new 4 per cent Loan amounted to Rs. 7,22,43,500. The minimum rate of the accepted tenders is Rs. 99-14, tenderers at that rate receiving 77-78 per cent. of their applications. The loan is to be issued at an average of Rs. 99-14-11-49. In other words, for the two hundred lacs on which interest is to be paid, the Government receives Rs. 1,99,86,967-8.

GOVERNMENT property is free from import duty. Under an interpretation of that rule, contractors to Government are saved the duty on spirits imported by them for the use of the Government departments. The Madras Government now thinks differently. The contractors have been called upon to pay the usual duty. It is argued that at the time of importation, the spirits are not Government property. The Government of India has been applied to for the final order.

NOW that the freshets are on, the Port Officer has warned ship-owners, agents and masters not to allow vessels to leave the port during the next spring tides, from the 10th to the 15th August.

SIR HENRY HARRISON is pushing on the new Central Road. The declaration under the Act having been made, and the sanction for the 50 lacs loan obtained, the Deputy Baboo Kali Churn Ghose has now been especially deputed to assess compensation as he thinks proper. The Lord save the owners!

THE fee for the Sanskrit Collegiate School is Rs. 3, one hundred students, sons of bond fide pundits having the privilege of paying only at the rate of Re. 1. There are only 130 pupils in all. To popularise the institution and encourage Sanskrit learning, the Principal of the College had recommended the reduced fee of Re. 1 for another hundred respectable Hindu boys. Simultaneously with this recommendation, the Director of Public Instruction received an offer from Baboo Jodoo Lal Mullick on behalf of his relative the newly created Ranee Raj Kumari Dassi to establish an endowment fund for the payment of the fees of 50 Hindu students at the same school at Re. 1 a month. The offer is not unconditional. The Baboo and the Ranee reserve to themselves or the trustees of the fund to be created the selection of the students to be called "Baboo Pran Kissen Mullick's scholars." They must be respectable but not well-to-do, the selection being subject to the approval of the Principal of the College. The Lieutenant-Governor has thankfully accepted the offer and has invited similar benefactions for the encouragement of students in Sanskrit learning. The Government resolution lays stress on the regular payment of the Rs. 50 by the trustees to the Principal of the Sanskrit College. We believe the offer of the "Maisadal block" of the Eden Hindu Hostel, noticed in our last, is due to the political sagacity of the Principal. We doubt not Mahamahopadhyaya M. C. Nayaratra will be able to discover another benefactor for the remaining Rs. 50 for the school, and thus entirely relieve the Government of the duty of considering his recommendation which has been for the present postponed pending the report on "the effect on the numbers, and popularity of the Sanskrit Collegiate School of the arrangement now sanctioned."

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Queen had been suffering much from lumbago and rheumatism when the last mail left. Yet she was present at the Garden Party at Marlborough House in honor of the Shah. She had the help of a stick and the Prince of Wales' arm.

It was rumoured that Her Majesty had been medically advised to take a trip to her Indian possessions. The rumour has been officially denied.

Shah Naseruddin has turned his back on England, and Emperor William has come in. Prince Albert Victor leaves London for India on the 19th October in the P. & O. Steamer Arcadia.

AT the Lord Mayor's banquet on the 31st July, the Premier scouted the idea of English abandonment of Egypt unless she was strong enough to hold her own both against domestic and foreign foes. That opens out a long vista, indeed! England, Lord Salisbury said, could not be an idle spectator of the events in Eastern Europe, to the loss of her influence with the nations. He was not very apprehensive of war—for the terrible issues of modern warfare were by themselves a check on war itself and a guarantee of peace. Previously, in the House of Lords, he had expressed satisfaction with the conduct of the rulers of Bulgaria. The aspect of affairs in the East generally was encouraging, and there was less tendency on the part of the European potentates, both great and small, to speculate on the possibility of troubles in Turkey.

At Birmingham, Lord Randolph Churchill expressed a pessimist view of the situation. He advocated the evacuation of Egypt to secure the friendship of France and Turkey, and restrict British responsibilities in view of the approaching war in Europe.

Modern war is no doubt a forbidding prospect to the nations, as the Premier averred, but then better far a bloody and decisive encounter and a recast of political geography than this warlike peace which gives no rest. Peace, Peace, where there is no trust!

THE Cretan difficulty is being solved. England is anxious that the island shall continue a Turkish possession. Her Majesty's ship Albacore has arrived there. Sarkinsky Pacha has been recalled and Riza Pacha appointed temporarily Governor-General of the island.

Mr. Labouchere's amendment opposing the grants recommended by the Royal Grants Committee of the House of Commons, was rejected by 398 votes against 116. The two Agencies report differently the fate of Mr. Morley's amendment—objecting to any increase in the burdens of the people without an assurance that no further grants will be made to the Royal Family. According to Reuter—"The House afterwards divided, with the result that the amendment was rejected by a majority of 221 votes, 355 having voted against, while only 134 voted in favor of the amendment. Sir William Harcourt and the leaders of the Opposition voted with the minority." The new Central News thus reports the debate—"In the debate which followed, Mr. Chamberlain took the opportunity to retaliate upon Mr. Storey and other Radicals who attacked him during the early stages of the subject in Parliament and denounced the Radicals as the Nihilists of English politics. The House divided—for the amendment 555; against 134." These telegrams were published on Wednesday. Till now, none of the two Agencies has contradicted its own report. That is only possible in India.

THE Civil List of Queen Victoria stands at 385,000*l*. Besides, she receives about 100,000*l*. the revenue of the Duchy of Lancaster and has the income of her own private property. George I enjoyed an allowance of 700,000*l*. Unlike former sovereigns George III, George I and Queen Anne, Queen Victoria has never run into debt and never asked for extra grants. Since the ascension of the present Queen, the exchequer has benefitted by 15,000,000*l*, the net surplus revenue of the Crown lands. For the year ending March 31, 1889, the payment to the exchequer on this account was 430,000*l*.

THEY have passed a law in France against official corruption' nicknamed Wilsonism. They have prescribed five years' residence in jail for accepting money for procuring decorations, appointments, or other State favours.

THE Boulangists made the elections for the Council-General extraordinarily exciting. To prove his popularity among his countrymen, the General stood for about four hundred cantons. By the latest news, he has won twelve and the Conservatives twenty-six Republican seats.

DR. TANNER has been sentenced to one month's imprisonment for assaulting Inspector Stephens in May last and to three months' for defying the court. Home opinion however does not seem to regard the Doctor disgraced as a rowdy, as the finer sense of Mr. M. P. Gasper and his uncoguid clientele of the officials and their defenders out in the East, are disposed to regard the unfortunate Hearsey.

LORD Cross announced in the House of Lords that thirteen Commissions in the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery would be offered to students at Cooper's Hill College.

THE Postmaster-General Raikes has informed the House of Commons that France and Italy have consented to a further reduction from the 1st of January in the transit charges of the Eastern mails and the acceleration of trains between Modane and Brindisi.

LORD NORTHBROOK has interested himself for the abolition of the unjust silver plate duty on Indian wares. He moved in the Upper House for production of the papers, and denounced the duty. Lord Cross, fully aware of the injury done to the Indian trade, assured the House that he would give Mr. Goschen no peace until he had repealed the duty and modified the laws for compulsory hall-marking. The repeal is now a question of months only. A retired Viceroy is worth more on Indian affairs at Home than a dozen amateur politicians.

The Earl of Fife experienced his first favours as a son-in-law elect of Royalty by being created a Duke—the Duke of Fife.

The marriage of the Duke with Princess Louise of Wales was solemnized on the 27th July at the Buckingham Palace chapel. The marriage presents number 600, valued at a sixth of a million sterling.

JAPAN is being coaxed to open her whole interior to British trade. A terrific earthquake has devastated the island of Kiouisiou in the district of Nagasaki. It was at first reported that six hundred persons were killed. The casualties are now put down at 30 killed and 80 injured and many houses destroyed. It is just possible though that these docile Pacific Islanders have in this, as in so many other things, taken a leaf out of the book of the Atlantic Islanders.

SEVEN hundred deaths from heat apoplexy in three days! Such is the news from Bokhara.

IN a previous issue we gave an account of the bloody riot which had taken place between the Shias and Sunnis of Lucknow, owing to their sectarian differences, and of the decision of their case by the city Magistrate. It appears that the Sessions Judge had upheld the judgment of the city Magistrate, and the convicted defendants had preferred an appeal to the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The result of this appeal is thus described by a contemporary:—

"The Judicial Commissioner of Oudh has dismissed the appeal of the Shias, whom the Sessions Judge of Lucknow held were mainly instrumental in fomenting the late riot in that city. Rightly as these men have been convicted, there is a strong opinion in local circles, in the second city of the united provinces, that the persons sent to jail were after all but tools in the hands of men of position whose names have not transpired, and the very large sum of money which has been subscribed by their co-religionists for the defence of the prisoners and for the support of their families while they work out their sentences, gives colour to the opinion."

We have not yet heard the result of the appeal in the Allahabad case of a similar character, the particulars of which also we gave in a recent issue.

We trust that Sir Auckland Colvin will give his special attention to these cases, and with his usual vigour, adopt measures, which may prevent the possibility of the recurrence of such unpleasant and demoralizing disputes.

WE congratulate our Young Egyptians. Their beloved beach is not to be annexed to the Punjab. Only the reason for noninterference is somewhat alarming. The main consideration which has guided the Government of India in its decision is that Sind is not a frontier province. That seems to suggest that Government is in for the Scientific Frontier and its twin calamity the Forward Policy.

THE Government of India has fixed longing eyes upon Dwarka and Porebunder in Kattywar—ports with good strategical situations. Negotiations have been opened for their transfer to British India in exchange of other lands. Modern Annexation is not the downright honest thing of old. It descends to many little shifts and ways.

THERE is weeping and wailing in the Jain community of Azimgunge and Baloochur in Moorsshedabad. Two young men belonging to two of the wealthiest families of that community took "French leave" of their guardians and started for England by the last mail steamer. They are Inderchand Dhoodooria and Inderchand Nahata, the son and the son-in-law of Rai Bahadur Boodh Singh Dhoodooria.

The first intimation their friends got of their departure, was in a telegram sent by them from Bombay at the time of the starting of the steamer on Tuesday last. It is suspected that they have carried away about Rs. 30,000 from their homes, unknown to their guardians. Their only companion and guide is Baboo Prosunno Kumar Sen of the Brahmo fraternity. They are both aged 20 or 21 years.

KEDARNATH MOOKERJEE of the office of Superintendent of Political Pensions, has made good the Rs. 8,000 found short in his account. We trust a thorough enquiry will be made and the matter sifted to the bottom. Like the father, the son in charge of the market collections, is free from the obligation of security for good conduct.

MR. A. P. HOWELL retires from the Service from the 13th instant, heart-broken, to seek relief in the dainty ditties of Catullus and the pungent epigrams of Martial. In his natural revulsion from an ungrateful country, he may even go the whole hog to Rome. In any case, we hope literature will gain by his forced divorce from active life.

MR. F. J. ROWE, a professor, officiates as Principal of the Presidency College. The Government must prepare itself for abuse from our friends of the native press for neglecting the superior claims of the lucky son-in-law. The Syndicate of the University has had its share already for preferring Mr. Rowe as Registrar. The favorite of Fortune has unquestionably acquired an official claim to promotion by incompetence.

THERE is to be another change in the Personal staff of the Presidency Commissioner. The evil genius of the office has come back renovated for fresh mischief. Poor Prankumar Das has been condemned to rusticate on a month's leave. On the expiry of the period, he goes to Burdwan, Baboo Annoda Proshad Ghose coming back to Calcutta and Baboo Abinash Chunder Mullick rejoining his old place at Baraset as sub-divisional officer.

WEEK before last, Baboo Durgagoti Banerjee was confirmed as Deputy Collector of Calcutta and Superintendent of Excise Revenue. This week the Calcutta Gazette announces his confirmation as Collector of Stamp Revenue, Calcutta. This shews how they manage the matter in the Bengal office. That was an oversight, of course, as the previous omission not to appoint him permanently, some months back, when Mr. Goodricke sent up his papers, was another. Some wise one in the Secretariat was evidently under the impression that no orders could be passed till Mr. Goodricke's application for pension had been sanctioned. But in his sympathy for him or his, he entirely forgot that the latter's was a forced retirement.

A greater anomaly and jobbery is still being practised on a native Judge of the Small Cause Court. Although Mr. McEwen's connection with it has ceased for several years, yet he is permitted to draw a larger portion of the pay of the Small Cause Judge in addition to that of the post he occupies in Rangoon, and the Judge in Calcutta is starving on half pay. We try as much as possible to avoid the habit of native writers of making invidious comparisons. But we really cannot help believing that, if this latter had not been a native, he would long since have received his due. There would have been such a hue and cry in the Anglo-Indian press, if a European had been the sufferer! Of course, no native officer in any department would have been allowed to draw several hundred Rupees per mensem in excess of his pay for four years.

HERE is an instance, which has not appeared in any of our contemporaries, of how University examinations in Bengal are managed. In the last B. A. Examination, one Mahesh Chandra Das who took the Arts course with Sanskrit for his optional subject, appeared from the Metropolitan Institution. He failed. On the "cross-list," however, he is put down as having taken mathematics for his optional subject and passed in it. Well, having failed in the aggregate alone, Mahesh may, after all, be proud of passing in the subject of which he has been perfectly innocent since he crossed the Rubicon of the "Little go." It may be only an oversight of the office which has never enjoyed an enviable reputation, and which has evidently not improved since the Clerk was dignified with the grandiose designation of Assistant Registrar and patronised with an absurdly fat pay (not to speak of perquisites) larger than the emolument of his superior officer. Other inaccuracies, equally adverse to public confidence in the University examinations, have been pointed out in other papers as well as by individual sufferers. The examiners—a sorry lot of late years—have their share of lapses too. Altogether, between the authors of Questions and the appraisers of the Answers and the office, they contrive to make a pretty mess of the whole business. We trust the committee appointed at the last Syndicate will do their work in a thorough spirit.

A KAYET marriage in the Allahabad District has ended in a most melancholy incident, the grievous consequences of which are far from being exhausted yet. Eight miles from the capital of the North-Western Provinces, is the village of Fettehpore, where Lala Anantaram, Sub-Judge of Cawnpore, has his home. There were great festivities, much feasting and rejoicing at the place early in July, on the occasion of the wedding of the Sub-Judge's son. Besides the people of the locality and immediate neighbourhood, the connections of the family from more distant parts, as well as the Lala's friends from Cawnpore and Allahabad assembled. The Kayasthas of Behar and Upper India have little affinity, in their social and domestic manners, with the Kayasthas of Bengal Proper. They rather approximate to the European standard. Given to the use of stimulating food and drink, they are more gregarious, and their enjoyment of society is hearty and demonstrative. Their tribal meetings, at which refreshments and liquor are offered and freely partaken of, are not the lifeless things of their brethren of down country. At their feasts, of course great quantities of meat and drink are consumed. They usually make a night of any of their evening entertainments. They certainly enter into their enjoyments with spirit. Their festivities are really festive. We are therefore all the more sorry to hear of the unfortunate ending of the auspicious gathering of so many of our fellow-countrymen, including many respectable men, in the village of Fettehpore.

There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Upper Hindustan had gathered then
Her beauty and her Lalury, and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
A thousand hearts beat happily; and when
Music arose with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes look'd love to eyes which spake again,
And all went merry as the marriage-bell;

But hush! hark! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell!

At Fettehpore, the sound did not strike quite as a rising knell, nor was it anything so deep as that which disturbed and in fact dispersed instantly the Duchess's ball at Brussels, because there was no cannonading in the neighbourhood since Havelock and Neil worked up their way to Cawnpore in 1857. But it was sufficiently ominous to disturb the whole company. While joy was unconfined, a disagreeable whisper spread from mouth to mouth and ear to ear, to the effect that the Prima Donna of the ballet, we mean the leading Ansuese of the Bayadery corps—the proudest among the many professional women, good, bad and indifferent, either from the adjoining country or invited from distant cities to perform on the occasion—had lost all her jewellery worth some three thousand Rupees. It was at first treated with incredulity by those who were plunged in the festive proceedings and were minded to make the most of them. But soon all doubt was dispelled. The news was too true. There had been a serious robbery there and then in the camp of joy. There was an uproar as the company broke up suddenly without ceremony. The host and his friends proceeded to inquire into the awkward incident. The Police of the local station of Nawabgunge arrived. All were at the end of their wits. These were possibly not very well prepared for detective ingenuity by the prevailing merry-making. At any rate, they made a mess of the whole thing. They were not wanting in promptitude or energy, but these seem to have been misapplied. We do not hear that the loser has gained anything by them. The missing jewellery has not, we believe, been found. Meanwhile, there is a serious charge against the host (Lala Anantaram), the Police, the dancing girl and others of torture. Not the least melancholy part of the matter is, that the guests themselves were not protected from oppression and indignity by this judicial host. Indeed, two of the guests were the victims of the brutality employed against them to extract a confession.

THE vanishing Rupee is not the only grievance of our European fellow-subjects in India. All Nature seems in league against them. A new enemy has appeared to add to their torments. In fact, a new race of Pindaries, more formidable than any recorded in history, has made them the butts of unavoidable depredation.

A Family in Park Street were the victim of constant thefts, in broad day. The lady of the house was specially wild in consequence of the loss of fancy articles from the drawing-room. Servants were watched, but to no purpose. At last, the Detective was invited. He was as much at sea as the inmates. As if in defiance of the Police, a theft occurred during his presence in the house. While he was at lunch with the family, the master missed his silver mounted meerschaum from the teapoy on which he had left it. The lady nearly fainted from this crowning attack of the mysterious enemy. Surely, the philosophical old native valet had early hit the truth, who said that that enemy was no other than the common enemy of mankind. The Devil was in it, without question, and he was on them, with a vengeance. What had the poor Police officer to oppose to so irresistible a conclusion? Nothing—absolutely nothing, except perhaps his miserable a priori doubts. But what is the value of idle speculation before facts? The discomfited Police logician himself confesses:—

"I never felt so small in all my life. I went about the room examining the doors and trying to discover a means of entrance to or exit from the room, other than by the stairs. It was no use. There was no other outlet or inlet except through the windows, and in that case a ladder would be necessary. And no one would have the temerity to use a ladder in broad daylight. The only other alternative was by the stair-case, and I felt confident no person could have ascended or descended the stairs while we were at lunch without being seen. I went towards one of the open windows which looked out on the garden and compound. The gentleman of the house followed my example, and in a bantering tone enquired if I was examining the ground for foot-prints. 'No,' said I, smiling, 'there is little chance of discovering foot-prints on a soorkee road.'"

The poor Detective searched the whole grounds with his practised eye, but in vain. So far as he could judge no thief had come into the garden nor entered the house. He was about to give it up in ignominious despair. For it was a European family and he dared not to escape by the stereotyped Police formula under difficulties—to deny the robbery or to suspect the master or mistress of a trick on the other. But Providence protects the honour of the worthy, as our Bengali saying goes. When the famous Detective was about to beat a retreat with a white lie of a promise to call again, light came from an unexpected quarter. He says:—

"While we were standing talking a crow came hopping along the walk until it got right under the window. Here it stood still, turned its head on one side, and after regarding us for some time with a quizzical expression, commenced to caw! caw! caw! It then hopped to a spot where the gravel appeared loose and began to peck and remove some of the broken soorkee with its beak. It would stop occasionally, cast a side glance towards the window and caw! caw! caw! My companion at once suggested, half jestingly, that there might be something in the crow's movements, which, if followed up, would lead to the discovery of his lost and much prized meerschaum, so we both went down to the compound and examined the spot to which the crow had directed our attention. We found nothing of course. By this time the crow had been joined by two or three of its companions who were evidently in the secret; for they seemed to enjoy the fun immensely. They hopped about the compound and began to peck wherever they found the gravel loose. We followed their movements for some time. But finding they were evidently intent upon drawing us as far away from a large tree that grew so close to the house you could almost touch the branches from the drawing-room window, we gave up the chase. On returning to the house I happened to look up the tree and discovered a crow's nest in one of the branches. I remarked to my companion 'That,' pointing to the nest, 'accounts for the conduct of the crows. They have evidently young ones up there and were no doubt trying to distract our attention from the tree.' 'Very good,' said my companion, 'let us see, for the fun of the thing.' A servant was called and told to mount to the nest. He did so, and found it filled, not with young crows, but with the missing ornaments from the lady's drawing-room, including the silver-mounted meerschaum lost during the time we were at tiffin!"

Such is the sensational narrative published with acut in the leading columns of the Planters' Gazette. As regards its claims to attention, they are below those of the miracles in Nature and art circulated by the American press which have at least the merit of originality and genius. The Indian account is a pure imposition on the editor and a presumption on the illiteracy of the Anglo-Indian public. Our contemporary's Own Crow is a poor imitation of the immortal Jack-Daw of Rheims. The whole, in plain terms, is a condensed prose rendering of the famous verse.

HAVING lately had occasion to notice with befitting sharpness the activity of a barrister member of the Town Corporation in espousing, at the municipal board and afterwards in the press, a grievance contractual (to speak in legal phrase)—the claim, that is, of a farmer under the municipality—we are glad to have so soon an opportunity of offering our good fellow-citizen the amende honorable, though in another connection.

"FATHER JOHN," irreverently styled "Johnny" (he is, at any rate, the Father of our local Joannies) has at length walked into glory unquestionable. He has made himself famous, as befits a barrister, in a right legal way—if not professionally, at least juridically. It is something to be a hero at any rate. Friend Johnny is Jack the Giant-Killer of the hour. He has floored the great Excise Department in the interest of Free Trade. He has approved himself as the man and Magistrate after the heart of the publicans and sinners. He has secured the right to a colossal statue of well-filled bottles raised on a pyramid of hogs-heads for pedestal. Meanwhile, his own supplies of liquor ought to be absolutely free. What vendor—on the sly so ungrateful as to withhold the muzzur due to the Champion of Liberty without License!

THE Calcutta Honorary Bench is not a very strong "cast." Our Justices are a miscellaneous lot, including nephews and cousins and cousins-German and British and Indian and not a few flunkeys and tift-hunters snobs and noodle. They not unfrequently deal out the proverbial "Justices' Justice." But there are a few good men and true—lawyers not only in name and lay men better than many lawyers—who contrive to save the general credit of the whole body. Of this finer leaven is Mr. J. G. Apar. It is, however, given to few barrister members of the unpaid Magistracy in any country, by a single decision, to earn such a triumph as Mr. Apar has just achieved. A Full Bench of the High Court could not have done more than what this Honorary Magistrate has accomplished. By one blow Mr. Apar has struck down an administrative abuse sanctified by the unbroken consuetude of more than a generation and upheld by the absolute consensus of a hundred magistrates, paid and unpaid, professional as well as lay. The well-aimed shot has felled more than one enemy. In demolishing the unauthorised aggressions of the Abkari, Mr. Apar has virtually condemned the free and easy methods of British Rule in India, in its executive as well as legislative side. He has likewise, of course, practically exposed the laxity of the judiciary and the whole legal profession.

The case will be carried up to the High Court. A Bow-street dictum cannot be final—will not be allowed to be the law. But Mr. Apar's judgment is strong enough to meet any ordeal. The defence may have failed to do itself justice—the Magistrate will scarcely be blamed. Be that as it may, there must be Reform as the result, and probably fresh legislation. Mr. Apar's credit as the vindicator of the Liberty of the subject will remain.

THE Chief Magistrate, on the prosecution of Government, sentenced one Leopold Shein to imprisonment for retailing liquor on a wholesale license. The detection was in the usual way by marked coins. Chiefly to secure these coins, the Police and the Excise officers forced into his house, made him a prisoner and seized his goods. Shein brought a counter charge against the Police Inspector Merriman and the Excise Superintendent Siddons and Excise Sub-Inspector Heard for criminal trespass, using criminal force, &c. Mr. Marsden having expressed a certain opinion in connection with this charge, he was asked not to try this case. It was thus made over to the Honorary Magistrate Mr. J. G. Apcar—Clerk of the Crown. After a rather lengthy hearing, Mr. Apcar has found the defendants guilty and convicted them all for criminal trespass under Sec. 44; Siddons and Merriman for wrongful arrest under Sec. 342; and all of them again for use of criminal force under Sec. 352, of the Indian Penal Code. These do not however exhaust the category of their offences. The defendants have been further convicted under Sec. 69 of the Excise Act. We are sure the learned Magistrate might have heaped other Sections of the all-absorbing Penal Code on the heads of the accused. But he has spared them that criminal load. Nor has he followed the precedent of that ornament of the Bengal Civil Service, the late Billy Buckle (as he was familiarly named) of awarding sentence under each of the sections enumerated. He has contented himself with ordering punishment for using criminal force only. To make it "deterrent and to mark his sense of the scandalous and improper proceedings that have taken place," he has, however, sentenced Siddons to pay a fine of Rs. 200, Merriman Rs. 100 and Heard Rs. 25.

Mr. Apcar finds there is no law to justify trespass into a liquor-vendor's house and for his arrest for retail sale under a wholesale license.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1889.

THE AUTOCRAT OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

"Ah! my son, thou knowest not with what little wisdom the world is governed," said an aged statesman. It is not for the profane vulgar to speak irreverently of a Minister of State, else we should call the Swedish Chancellor a fool who affected to despise his own caste. He was a sad misanthrope. He must have been excommunicated and deprived of benefit of clergy. He certainly deserved to be punished for Scandalum magnatum. At best, he could speak only of his miserable land. At any rate, there is nothing but wisdom in Simla. Those there who govern the world below spend their time in deep thought. They never engage in theatricals nor keep favorite officers and officers' wives up there who are good at acting and singing, nor do they indulge in balls, parties, picnics, races, games or levity of any sort. It is all hard work, hard thinking and the highest wisdom is the result.

Bengal somehow did not get on well with the Inspector-General of Hospitals, who came from other Provinces. One of them, it is well-known, "chucked up" Bengal altogether, and when another was sent, he too was found to sit unhappily on the guddi. Then Sir Ashley Eden, who knew how to govern if any man ever did, insisted on having a man appointed who knew Bengal. But this was not allowed to continue. The wisdom of Simla set aside Bengal wishes and appointed another foreigner, and a precious Interloper he proved himself. It is not saying too much that he neither suited those below him nor those above him, and he ceased to be consulted altogether. Dowbs must be taken care of, however, and again an outsider is sent us by the wiseacres in cloudland. He knows not Bengal nor Bengalis and naturally thinks that good men, good work, and good arrangements can only come from the far North-West.

As regards examinations, his duty is to send on the examination papers of the Bengali Assistant Surgeons, with the decisions on them by the officers appointed by Government, unopened to the powers above. But he opens and reads them and finds several answers have the same expressions, and some bits of them exact words of the text books. He does not know that Bengali students read and read and reread text-books till the ipsissima verba of the authors come naturally out of their pen points. Two of them using the same expressions is no proof that they have copied from each other or from the books there and then, in the examination hall. The idea is preposterous and betrays the simplicity of the sceptic. Indeed, the precautions used in the examination, one of which is that the presiding officer sits at the same table with the examinees, precludes all possibility of any such mutual or external help. Surely, the great Inspector-General does not suspect the officer on guard of collusion.

But the great man must be satisfied anyhow. To test the Assistant-Surgeons, the new Inspector-General institutes a new examination of his own and takes upon himself to set the questions, neither of which is within his province. Verily, the Inspector-General is a law unto himself.

He is both astonished and annoyed that the Bengalis wont walk into this trap. What Bengali would do so? Suppose they did and this judge, who had already decided that they were criminals, again decided in the same way, they could not say a word. But with such a judge they could expect nothing else, and so they are not to be decoyed into convicting themselves. In his wrath at being disappointed, the Inspector-General coolly recommends that these Assistant-Surgeons be dismissed from the service, for disobeying an order he had no authority to give.

It is on record that all the Professors of our colleges and teachers in our Hospitals will, in future, be replaced by men from other Provinces, even perhaps from other Presidencies. Foreign favorites are to fill the best appointments down here and to teach men they know not, among whom they have not grown up, and because these are not exactly like the students they were elsewhere accustomed to take to, suspecting and disliking them and then worrying them out of their hard-earned situations. Doubtless, the Inspector-General was omnipotent in the mofussil, but he is not so here. He forgets that this is the capital of the Empire—in the heart of Bengal, and that he has to deal with a sensitive people well up in their rights as in their duties. We fear that many troubles are in store for the Bengalis ere more than Beotian wisdom comes to us from the medical powers that be.

A VICTIM OF ANNEXATION IN BURMA.

THE approaching leave taking of Sir C. H. T. Crossthaite, K. C. S. I., Chief Commissioner of Burma, on medical recommendation, reminds me of a promise he made, when last in Calcutta, to a certain Burman, one of ex-King Theebaw's late ministers, to allow him to return to his native country at the end of this year. Ex-Salay Myoze, the late Hlay-thin Atwin Woon of Mandalay, has now been detained in Calcutta for over three years, and no offence of any kind established against him. He was in Theebaw's time a man of great influence, which, if he had not seen his way advantageously to be loyal to the English Crown, could have given very considerable additional trouble in the pacification of the province, had he not taken up our cause unreluctantly on the fall of the Burmese administration. He was then, and is now considered by Colonel Sir Edward Sladen to be a capable and trustworthy man.

Soon after the occupation of Mandalay by our troops and the speedy deportation of Theebaw and his consort, proclamations were sent out to all outstations recalling all officers in command of men opposing our troops. In such a crisis, it was not easy to get men to lay down their arms and return peacefully to Mandalay, but nearly all under the immediate command of the Hlay-thin, obeyed him and he returned to Mandalay. Soon after his arrival in Mandalay, his services were utilized by General Sir Henry Prendergast whom he accompanied to Sagain, Ava and other strongholds below Mandalay, and completed the dismantling of the Forts, on one occasion recovering with the assistance of troops supplied him by General Sir Harry Prendergast a large sum of specie, collected by Theebaw's revenue officers, and about to be made away with. Returning to Mandalay, he brought about the death of the rebel Prince Kyoo Nyo, a son of the late War Prince and heir-apparent who gave, up to his death, endless trouble, and at the hands of some of whose followers subsequently I was myself made a cripple for life. I can express no sorrow for Kyoo Nyo, neither can I take any objection to the mode the Hlay-thin Atwin Woon followed to make him shuffle off this mortal coil, which was as follows.

Colonel Sir Edward Sladen had for some time been pressing the ministers of the Hhlootdaw, to do something for their own credit, and his, as few beside himself supported the Hlootdaw then, and he had only succeeded in making himself unpopular particularly with the Rangoon Press. The Hlay-thin Atwin Woon determined, I have no doubt, to show his loyalty, got together a number of men with muskets and at once sent them over the river to Sagain, where he had heard Kyoo Nyo was encamped. They joined the Prince handing over arms and ammunition as a guarantee of good faith. They made a party of themselves in the Prince's camp, and one night purposely created a disturbance, shot the Prince dead, and returned to Mandalay. Immediately after the rebel party broke up at Sagain. Now, on the principle that everything is fair in love and war, I contend the death of Prince Kyoo Nyo was perfectly legitimate, and can be adduced as an act of service to the British Government, what the Hlay-thin did was in accordance with the usages of war.

Unfortunately, the Hlay-thin had an enemy in a jealous unscrupulous Assistant Superintendent of Police, who swore to the Hlay-thin giving false information. But Sir Edward Sladen knew his man and stood by him. Meantime, in February 1886, Lord Dufferin arrived at Mandalay. The Hlay-thin Atwin Woon together with the other ministers of the ex-King were received in open Durbar, and at his Excellency's departure again assembled in the Durbar Hall the ministers had their final lesson read to them. The Police officer was relegated to Lower Burma for inefficiency. The Hlay-thin Atwin Woon craved of Sir Charles Bernard permission to come over to Calcutta to see the Viceroy. Permission was granted, he came, and, without a why or forewhere being assigned, he was then told he must not return to Burma without the permission of the Foreign office. The loyalty of the Hlay-thin has never been questioned by those who had the best means of testing it. He possesses the most flattering testimonies of the highest officers of his loyalty to the British Crown who accompanied the expedition in 1885, and yet he is prevented from returning to Burma notwithstanding the members of his family are permitted to come and go as they think fit.

Here is an example of patience and endurance rarely met with amongst Burmans, certainly never met with amongst his oppressors. Few in Calcutta know the circumstances under which the Hlay-thin Atwin Woon is detained. He is not a prisoner, is not under police surveillance, he may go to any part of the world he chooses, but must not without the consent of the Foreign office return to Burma. For over three years, without any offence having been charged against him, and without a single pice having been paid towards his expenses, he has in the most arbitrary manner been compelled to remain in Calcutta, and is at this moment driven to the greatest possible straits in keeping up a respectable appearance—in truth he has from time to time mortgaged his own and his wife's jewellery. Compare with the Woon's case that of the Limbin Prince residing in Dhurmtollah, who, after having for years eaten the salt of our Government as a Myook in Lower Burma, on the fall of Theebaw, fled to Upper Burma, raised the standard of rebellion against our authority! He was captured red-handed in open revolt, relegated to Rangoon, luxuriously lodged and cared for, and subsequently deported to Calcutta in custody, lodged in comfortable quarters under police surveillance on a fat allowance, he drives on the strand, and lives in a style he could never have hoped to have done but for the happy thought of waging war against the Queen. I am constrained to ask the Government of India—Wherein lies the equity of so violently opposing elements as in the two cases under notice? The Imperial Government at home would not dare detain a subject, as the Government of India has done ex-Salay Myoze late Hlay-thin Atwin Woon, without formulating a charge of some kind. To compel him to live in exile at his own expense is not only arbitrary but cruel to a degree. In 1888 the Hlay-thin petitioned the Government of India for an allowance, but they declined to grant his prayer. His expenses monthly have been Rs. 500, paid by himself. I hope Lord Lansdowne will cause enquiry to be made into the case of the Woon, and ere Sir Charles Crosthwaite quits Burma, if but for a few months, recoup the Woon for the immense outlay he has been put to in residing in Calcutta, and permit him without further hindrance to return to his native country.

THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE.

THE Victoria Institute or Philosophical Society of Great Britain, is one of the most thriving learned institutions of the day in the metropolis of the British Empire. For this position, credit is due to the Council, the soul whereof (we wish we could say which) is the Secretary. The Victoria is lucky in the possession of a "crack" executive. Its Honorary Secretary, Captain Petrie, is a model of such an officer. His untiring zeal and intelligent energy have brought his Society to the front, making it popular with society in general as well as esteemed of the learned. By the latest account, there are at home and abroad 1,300 members on the list, including many of the greatest names in science.

Our readers will doubtless remember the annual meetings as noticed of late years in our paper. They have been noticed generally throughout the world, thanks to the pains taken by the Secretary in promptly sending out in all directions the minutes. These are well worth attention. Altogether, the Society is in good hands. The personnel marks its status, and the proceedings are worthy of the personnel. The President of the Royal Society—the acknowledged chief of all the learned societies in Great Britain—does not disdain to accept the post of command of the new institution. In fact, the present President of the Royal is also President of the Victoria. The last anniversary held, on the 1st July, was more than usually interesting. The interest commenced at the outset with the announcement of a message from the Emperor of Brazil. His Majesty is not only a crowned head, but has really a head to boast of. He is indeed a sort of Western Akbar delighting in philosophical inquiries and chiefly in discussing the highest theological problems of the hour. The Society may well be proud of the sympathy of so enlightened and accomplished a monarch. The regular business began with the reading by the Honorary Secretary of the annual report, on the motion of Sir Henry Barkly, G.C.B., F.R.S., seconded by Admiral Sir Leopold McClintock, F.R.S., the arctic explorer, it was adopted. Then the Address of the Rev. Professor Sayce, the Assyriologist, on the latest results of active inquiry in his special department of archæology, was read. The Professor not being able to attend in consequence of the death of his father, his paper was read by proxy in the person of the Rev. Dr. Wright, a friend and a fellow-worker in the domain of Biblical antiquities, who has published a work on the Hittites—a subject, by the way, with which Dr. G. W. Lietner, late of the Panjab, sought, a few years back, to familiarise the Indian public. The address is a first-hand contribution to human knowledge. Mr. Sayce went towards the end of last year to the spot in the East to see the latest excavations and the things disclosed and decipher the inscriptions. The result of his observations and readings are embodied in his valuable address.

We shall not follow the author in his recital of the conquests of Amenophis III, as unfolded in the stones lately exhumed. To the Christian world, the most agreeable announcement in the Address that the difficulty in Biblical history caused by the identification from the hieroglyphics of Ramesis II. with Pharaoh of the Jewish oppression, was an imaginary bugbear. Mr. Sayce boldly scouts the critics who deny the historical character of the Pentateuch. He says:—

“The Tel el-Amarna tablets have already overthrown the primary foundation on which much of this criticism has been built.”

We do not suppose the Professor will insist on the literal actuality of the Hebrew cosmography. If he does, he will do so as a Christian and a clergyman, not as an archæologist, for the simple reason that the question is beyond the province of his speciality. It may not be absolutely beyond human ken or rational speculation, but it is certainly beyond Assyriology and Egyptology and all human history whatsoever. And beyond these, Mr. Sayce's opinion does not count for much in particular. Nor do we think the Professor holds to the orthodox view of the authorship of the Pentateuch. The Books are certainly not the work of the Prophet to whom they are attributed in Christendom. Englishmen in general are taught from their infancy to believe in Moses's authorship, because they are printed in the authorized version as the Books of Moses. We are surprised to see that in the magnificent edition of the Bible, profusely and learnedly annotated and illustrated, lately issued by an enterprising American firm which has obtained a medal for it, the Five Books are so attributed. Moses could not have written them, unless he wrote as Valmiki is traditioned among the uncritical Hindus to have composed his Raman history by vision prophetic, before the birth of his hero. But whoever wrote the Pentateuch, we had never any doubt Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—As winter advances and the weather becomes more and more inclement and trying the earliest evidences of ill-health must be immediately checked and removed, or a slight illness may result in a serious malady. Relaxed and sore throat, quinsy, influenza, chronic cough, bronchitis, and most other pulmonary affections will be relieved by rubbing this cooling Ointment into the skin as nearly as practicable to the seat of mischief. This treatment, simple yet effective, is admirably adapted for the removal of these diseases during infancy and youth. Old asthmatic invalids will derive marvellous relief from the use of Holloway's remedies, which have wonderfully relieved many such sufferers, and re-established health after every other means had signally failed.

that, in the more historical parts, it contains much authentic material. Such is the case with the Hindu scriptures, grotesque even to absurdity as are many of the stories in them. The scepticism which would summarily dismiss the ancient Hebrew narratives enshrined in the Bible as unworthy of credence, is a remnant of the irrational rationalism of the Eighteenth Century. The speculations of the Volneys and others are not without their counterparts in the extreme section of the comparative philologists and mythologists, which sees in primeval history merely a collection of solar allegories and similar curiosities. Modern research, however, is steadily vindicating the authenticity of the ancient annalists, whether Hebrew or Hindu.

The most important part of the Address remains to be noticed. It is that in which the Professor fixes the place of Assyria in the ancient history of Western Asia and North-Eastern Africa. He makes the Babylonians as a sort of French of their time, their capital the capital of Civilization.

“From them we learn that in the fifteenth century before our era,—a century before the Exodus,—active literary intercourse was going on throughout the civilised world of Western Asia, between Babylon and Egypt and the smaller states of Palestine, of Syria, of Mesopotamia, and even of Eastern Kappadokia. And this intercourse was carried on by means of the Babylonian language, and the complicated Babylonian script. This implies that, all over the civilised East, there were libraries and schools where the Babylonian language and literature were taught and learned. Babylonian appeared to have been as much the language of diplomacy and cultivated society as French has become in modern times, with the difference that, whereas it does not take long to learn to read French, the cuneiform syllabary required years of hard labour and attention before it could be acquired. We can now understand the meaning of the name of the Canaanitish city which stood near Hebron, and which seems to have been one of the most important of the towns of Southern Palestine. Kirjath-Sepher, or ‘Book-town,’ must have been the seat of a famous library, consisting mainly, if not altogether, as the Tel el-Amarna tablets inform us, of clay tablets inscribed with cuneiform characters. As the city also bore the name of Debir, or ‘Sanctuary,’ we may conclude that the tablets were stored in its chief temple, like the libraries of Assyria and Babylonia. It may be that they are still lying under the soil, awaiting the day when the spade of the excavator shall restore them to the light. The literary influence of Babylonia in the age before the Israelitish conquest of Palestine explains the occurrence of the names of Babylonian deities among the inhabitants of the West. Moses died on the summit of Mount Nebo, which received its name from the Babylonian god of literature, to whom the great temple of Borsippa was dedicated; and Sinai itself, the mountain ‘of Sin,’ testifies to a worship of the Babylonian Moon-god, Sin, amid the solitudes of the desert. Moloch or Malik, was a Babylonian divinity like Rimmon, the Air-god, after whom more than one locality in Palestine was named, and Anat, the wife of Anu, the Sky-god, gave her name to the Palestinian Anah, as well as to Anathoth, the city of ‘the Anat-goddesses.’”

Perhaps the most interesting announcement made in the paper was that of the discovery of probably the oldest libraries in the world. The Egyptian King Ozymandias, who has earned so to say a second cycle of immortality in the beautiful sonnet of Keats, had hitherto been reputed as the first collector of books on a large scale. Here now we have a library, proved on the best evidence, three thousand five hundred years old.

LEPROSY.

Report of Her Majesty QUEEN KAPIOLANI's visit to Molokai, by H. R. H. PRINCESS LILIUOKALANI, July, 1884.

TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING:

SIR,—I have the honor to submit the particulars of Her Majesty's visit to the Leper Asylum on Molokai whom, in obedience to Your Majesty's wishes, I accompanied thither. The steamer Waimanalo having been placed at the disposal of Her Majesty by Hon. J. A. Cummins, the party embarked early on Saturday, the 19th of July, 1884, leaving Honolulu at 3 a. m. that morning.

The weather proving favorable on Monday morning, we left that port for Kaulapapa, reaching our destination in the afternoon. At 4 p. m. the party consisting of Her Majesty the Queen, Hon. J. Cummins and lady, who were in attendance upon Her Majesty; Dr. Edward Arning, M. D., and Mr. C. B. Wilson, Comptroller to my household, landed and were received by Ambrose Hutchison, the Assistant Superintendent, Rev. Father Damien, and Rev. Father Albert, who escorted the party to a house where a large number of the patients were assembled.

The Hon. J. A. Cummins addressed the people and stated the object of the Queen's mission among them.

Her Majesty then arose and with the usual salutation of “Aloha Oukou,” briefly addressed them as follows:

“With love I greet you all. My heart-felt sympathy and that of His Majesty the King, your Father, is with you in your affliction. The King has sent His Sister the Heir Apparent, to accompany me in this mission, to show his love to you. I also bring to you the love of the people of Honolulu, the ladies and gentlemen, natives and foreigners, and those of the other islands who have assisted me in raising the necessary funds and contributions for your relief.

"I have been made familiar with your letters to me, and petitions to the Legislature, and whatever remarks you may have to make we will be pleased to hear them while we are with you.

"The principal object of this mission to your Asylum is to know your condition, and to render such assistance as may be necessary for your comfort."

The people were much moved with the Queen's remarks. The assembly standing during the address. At the conclusion of Her Majesty's remarks, Kailikapu made the following address, "Your Majesty, Your Royal Highness, and gentlemen, I must, first, on behalf of my fellow sufferers, express to you our warm and heart-felt feeling and thanks for this exhibition of your tender love and affection towards us, your afflicted people. I have been an old inmate of this Asylum and this is the second time I have been removed from Honolulu to this place, where I suppose I must remain like my afflicted fellows to linger out a miserable existence without a hope of cure; away from the comforts of home and the society of family and friends. Since my last removal to this place, by a close observation of the workings of the disease here, I have become thoroughly convinced of the non-contagious nature of the workings of the disease here. Instances are numerous here where men afflicted with the disease have been accompanied by healthy wives, who have lived with them, and nursed them for years until death, without the wife becoming affected by the disease, or in the other case the husband. Children, too, have been born of diseased parents and reared among the lepers, without contracting the disease; several such cases are among us now. Such being the case I cannot see how the disease can be called contagious or why we are segregated in an isolated place, where our most urgent wants are but poorly supplied. Poor food, insufficient as regards quantity, and want of proper care and nursing, are prominent among the ills of which we have to complain, and if the Government cannot supply these as they are supplied to us when at home, they should return us whence we came.

"Our rations consist of 21 lbs. of paiai, 7 lbs. of beef, and 1 lb. of sugar per week. Of this 7 lbs. of beef, 5 are often made up of bone. This is sufficient for one person only for three days, and the remaining part of the week he has to go without food. Those living at Kalaupapa have to travel five miles to get their rations, and there being no means of conveyance supplied, such as are too feeble to travel that distance, and have neither horses of their own to travel on, or friends to assist them, are often deprived of food. Many poor, disabled people too are unable, in their feeble and mutilated condition, to prepare their own food after they have got it. When the rainy season sets in the streams would be swollen, and these feeble ones would sometimes be so exhausted that they were unable to cross the stream on their way home, and therefore had to wait until the storm and freshet subsided before they were able to cross. From this cause many have taken cold, and died in consequence.

"An order for six dollars' worth of clothing is allowed per year to each patient, which they get filled at the store of the Board of Health. This is altogether insufficient. One woolen shirt and a blanket is all it will buy. On account of being thus poorly supplied with clothing, some die of cold, especially in the winter months. One great need also is wholesome water to drink and use for preparing food. Now we have to go three miles for water and pick it ourselves, and very often we are compelled to use the brackish water from a well near the beach.

"I will also speak of another matter—that is of the healthy children amongst us. Why are such children (many of whom are well grown, and without any sign of the disease about them) allowed to remain here and become patients through contagion? Why are they not taken elsewhere and properly cared for?"

The second speaker, Mr. Kahanapule, said: "Greeting to you our Queen, and to your Royal Highness and gentlemen: By the request of the patients now residing at Kalaupapa and Kalawao, I was selected from among their number to draft a petition in their behalf to be presented to the Legislature, now in session, in which was made a statement of our needs and a prayer for relief—a duty I was glad to perform. The confidence they have placed in me to act in their behalf, I now avail myself of on this occasion to make known to you what I believe to be our sorest needs; I speak in the interest of these people you now see around you, and more especially of those in crippled condition, unable to be present to meet you upon this occasion, and of those who would have joined with us in showing our appreciation of the great love you have shown to us in the willingness with which you have crossed the dangerous ocean to meet us, and hear our appeals and relieve our necessities. Our needs are many. Foremost among them is the necessity of clothing, some one with authority to settle our difficulties, and satisfactorily dispose of them. At present we have to submit without appeal to the arbitrary ruling of the Agent of the Board of Health, and are often incarcerated for alleged offences in a summary manner, and without a hearing of the case.

"It is the desire of many of us that a resident judge should be appointed, who will always be present to hear and determine in a proper manner many of the little grievances between the members of our colony, and also be empowered to punish justly any offence against the peace and good order of our community. Our general superintendent visits us only once during each quarter of the year, and remains altogether too short a time to make such investigations as are necessary to the end of justice. Especially frequent are desertions in married life, and the annoyance suffered on this account is great. Many, to-day, amongst us are living in adultery because they feel secure in their removal from the reach of the law. With the general Government I have no actual fault to find, as every endeavor is being made to provide for our numerous wants; but I do blame the Board of Health for its laxness in carrying out a proper system of supplying those wants which have been liberally provided for by the Government. Our paiai, for instance, is landed at Waikolu Gulch, about five miles distant from Kalaupapa, and the patients of that part are necessitated to pack it themselves all that distance. This is a grievous task to many, while to those who are weak it is an impossibility. The place of landing, too, is so situated, and the road to it impassable, that in stormy weather travel there becomes actually dangerous, and at times pack-horses, together with their burdens, have been washed away and drowned, and men too have barely escaped with their lives. In such an event, those to whom the food belongs are necessitated to go without their supply until a new lot has been received. After the paiai is obtained many of the more crippled are unable to prepare it themselves, and can have no water to mix it with unless they are willing to use the brackish water near the beach, which is entirely unfit for any such purpose.

Those who prefer it may, in lieu of paiai, have 9 lbs. of rice and 7 lbs. of hard bread per week. They are compelled to make the change when the poi supply is short, or when they are unable to go that long distance for paiai. But such food is not satisfying, even when we have eaten our fill with other kinds of food we were not satisfied. Poi is our natural food, and nothing could take its place. Kokuas who help the patients have to be fed out of their rations, and when this is the case the weekly supply of food is not more than sufficient for three days, and the unfortunate one goes part of the time hungry. Many of the patients have kokuas to prepare their food for them, otherwise they would, and sometimes even do, die of starvation. What the previous speaker has said in regard to the insufficiency of warm clothing and the number of consequent deaths is perfectly true. If the Government intends to keep us here, let the Board of Health be instructed to exercise a better care over our wants. Each of us has an allowance of $6 a year."

Mr. Ambrose Hutchison, who is Under-Superintendent of the entire Settlement, said: "Being myself an employee of the Board of Health, I feel it my duty to uphold the actions of the Board where they are defensible, but at the same time I feel it my duty to my fellow sufferers here that I should speak plainly of matters as they are. I concur in the statements made by the previous speakers with reference to the food supply, and the mode of delivery. Their statements are not exaggerated. For those who are so crippled as to be unable to attend to their own wants a hospital is provided; but their prejudices against the institution prevent many of them from availing themselves of the comfort there afforded. Their dread of the place may be easily explained, when we take into consideration the fact that it was formerly a practice to send along with each patient, by the same conveyance, the coffin he was soon to occupy. Add to these things the fact that no proper care or nursing is provided, and the horror of the place so generally entertained by the patients is easily explained. The great want here is the institution of more approved nursing facilities. The hospital patients should be also supplied with better accommodation generally, and be provided with a more appropriate place in which to take their meals. If to such provisions were added that of a resident physician and an efficient staff of nurses, the main source of objection would be removed, and then they might enter the hospital willingly instead of avoiding the place as they do now. Could some Sisters of Mercy be induced to come up and remain among us, as is now the case at Kakaako, it would certainly be a great blessing. The nursing is now performed by kokuas who receive no pay, and whose heart is not in their work, and amounts to nothing so long as they attend to the wants of their own people. They go and come as they please, and patients suffer much from their neglect. One thing I would like especially to call your Majesty's attention to, and that is among us are a number of children born of diseased parents, who themselves are entirely free from all symptoms of the disease."

Taking in his arms a little girl about ten years old from the crowd, the speaker said: "Here is one of them, and there are here between fifty and sixty just such cases as this, and at various ages. These should be kept aloof from the diseased, and properly cared for in a separate asylum, and not be allowed to remain where the chances are of so many of them becoming patients by contagion. I would urge upon the Queen and the Heir Apparent to have this matter attended to, and to allow the weight of their elevated positions and the great influence they possess to bear upon the Board of Health, in order to bring about the realization of so worthy an object. In conclusion, I can only express my hope that this royal visit may be pregnant of future good, and may prove the harbinger of an improved moral and social condition among us."

Two other speakers followed in substantially the same strain as the two first speakers; one of them, a young man of the age of thirty years, spoke at length upon the proposition for the appointment of a resident judge, and told a piteous tale of the infidelity of his own wife, and his want of means of redress. He had no other complaints to make against the Board of Health. What was done for them was perfectly satisfactory, and they were all well provided for. A murmur of disapproval was at once raised, and interfered with the continuation of his remarks.

After making such visits as time would allow among the tenements of Kalaupapa, Her Majesty and company proceeded on horseback to the main settlement, arriving at about 7-30 o'clock P.M. There quarters were provided for the Royal Party by Mr. Van Geisen in a new house lately built for the special accommodation of visiting physicians. At supper the Rev. Father Damien was a guest.

After breakfasting on the morning of the 22nd, the party consisting of Her Majesty, attended by Hon. J. A. Cummins, Dr. Arning, Mr. C. B. Wilson, Mr. J. H. Van Geisen, and the undersuperintendent Mr. Ambrose Hutchison began to inspect the houses of the patients.

In the first place visited there were nine patients, one of which was a very bad case. He had been twelve years at the settlement and nine in the Hospital; his age being about 60 years. Three were about the age of 30 years, and the remainder boys between 15 and 7 years of age.

To questions put by Her Majesty, they complained that their bedding, (only mats,) was too hard, their covering insufficient to keep them warm at night, and their food was neither properly prepared nor always sufficient in quantity. They complained also of neglect at the hands of the kokuas, to whom were detailed the work of administering their medicine and dressing their sores.

They also expressed their desire for the attendance of a resident physician who could prescribe for them in the many cases of intercurrent diseases, such as bowel complaints and other troubles which were frequent among them. When questioned as to the conduct of the visiting physician, they said that his visits were so short, and his work so hurried that no practical advantage was to be derived from them.

In the second ward were ten patients ranging in age from 25 years to 70. Most of these cases seemed to be of the anæsthetic form of the disease, there being but comparatively little distortion of features. In the majority of these cases fingers and toes were either entirely wanting or in process of amputation, rendering the victims almost entirely dependent upon the help of others. Some had bound up their own ulcerated extremities themselves after a primitive fashion. To the question asked whether or not such ulceration could be healed, by appropriate treatment, Doctor Arning answered in the affirmative, qualifying the treatment, however, by saying that in some cases the healed surfaces might again take on ulcerative action, that being the natural tendency of the disease.

These patients uttered the same complaint as those previously visited; but complained especially of the neglect of the kokuas and the difficulty they often experienced of getting a sufficiency of water regularly supplied them notwithstanding the fact that there was an abundance of water on the premises.

The third ward contained eleven patients, five of whom were 60 and 70 years old, three about 35 years of age, and the remainder between 17 years and 20. One aged 25 years had totally lost his sight, and all his fingers and toes. This result of the disease required him to be fed by another patient of the ward. Among those was the old man Nakahuna, well known to all old residents of Honolulu as a vendor of Hawaiian curios there a few years since. He has had the disease about four years, and has been an inmate of the Hospital at Kalawao for three years.

Worthy of remark is the case of a woman named Kealahua, whom we met in this ward. She came to the settlement about 14 years since with her leper husband, who died there about seven years ago of the disease. She herself is robust and to all appearance without any symptoms of the disease about her, and is engaged by the Board to do the entire washing for the patients at the Hospital, at a salary of $10 per month. She has been the mother of four children, one of whom died of acute disease without having developed leprosy, another of leprosy, the remaining two now living lepers.

The fourth ward contained ten patients, all of whom were women. Of these eight were between 19 and 30 years of age, and two about 65 years. Among them was a young girl of about 10 years who had accompanied her leper grand-mother there. This, after a careful examination by Doctor Arning, was pronounced to be free of leprosy symptoms, and her removal recommended. The great complaint here seemed to be of the insufficiency of warm clothing and comfortable bedding.

The fifth ward contains two rooms, in one of which were six young men between 16 and 20 years, all of whom were inveterate cases. In the other room were two native boys and two Chinamen. One of the boys was threatened with blindness from the disease. Insufficiency of warm clothing was also their complaint.

The sixth ward was occupied by one patient only, who was in the last stage of the disease. He was horribly deformed in features and his eyes totally blind. He seemed to be undergoing intense suffering and was muttering, throwing himself about in the wildest manner. Doctor Arning was called in and gave him a draught which seemed to give speedy relief; and at the end of half an hour he was sleeping quietly. Such cases as this prove the value a resident physician might often be.

In the seventh ward were four very bad cases. One in particular was noticed, where, though the face showed little disfigurement, the whole trunk was a mass of inflamed or suppurated tubercles which emitted an offensive smell unbearable to stand. In noticing this patient the Doctor observed that with proper medical treatment, such cases as these might be greatly alleviated and a great deal of unnecessary suffering be prevented.

In the eighth ward were three boys, between the ages of 14 and 17 years, all bad cases. They seemed diffident and had no complaints and nothing otherwise to say.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY SONNETS

In Memoriam.

FATHER DAMIEN

"Gloria et honore coranasti eum, Domine!"

Dead, say they? of thine own sweet accord,
Who thro' long years a dying life didst lead,
And only now, we know, dost live indeed.
Thy task accomplished! Now canst thou afford,
To rest and go with joy to thy reward,
Oh, lepers' friend, who didst—'twas all thy care—
Nurse their vile bodies and their souls make fair;
Them loving for dear love sake of thy Lord.
Hero and martyr of that glorious band,
Of saints immortal, where few greater are,
For greater love than thine, sufferance more grand,
Few mortals proved: to that bright calendar,
Another blest name hast thou added, and,
Faith's heaven adorn'd with yet another star.

ROBERT STEGGALL.

LOUIS BLANC.

THREE SONNETS TO HIS MEMORY

I.

THE stainless soul that smiled through glorious eyes,
The bright grave brow whereon dark fortune's blast
Might blow, but might not bend it, nor o'ercast,
Gave for one fierce fleet hour of shine, the skies
Thrilled with warm dreams of worthier days to rise
And end the whole world's winter; here at last,
If death be death, have passed into the past.
If death be life, live, though their semblance dies
Hope and high faith inviolate of distrust
Shone strong as life inviolate of the grave
Through each bright word and lineament serene
Most loving righteousness and love most just Crowned, as day crowns the dawn-enkindled wave,
With visible aureole thine unfaltering mien

II.

Strong time and fire-swift change, with lightnings clad
And shod with thunders of reverberate years,
Have filled with light and sound of hopes and fears
The space of many a season, since I had Grace of good hap to make my spirit glad,
Once communing with thine: and memory hears
The bright voice yet that then rejoiced mine ears,
Sees yet the light of eyes that spake, and bade
Fear not, but hope, though then time's heart were weak
And heaven by hell shade-stricken, and the range
Of high-born hope made questionable and strange
As twilight trembling till the sunlight speak.
Thou sawest the sunrise and the storm in one
Break: seest thou now the storm-compelling sun?

III.

Surely thou seest, O spirit of light and fire,
Surely thou canst not choose, O soul, but see
The days whose dayspring was beheld of thee
Ere eyes less pure might have their hope's desire,
Beholding life in heaven again respire
Where men saw naught that was or was to be,
Save only death imperial. Thou and he
Who has the heart of all men's hearts for lyre,
Ye twain, being great of spirit as time is great,
And sure of sight as truth's own heavenward eye,
Beheld the forms of forces passing by
And certitude of equal-balanced fate,
Whose breath forefelt makes darkness palpitate,
And knew that light should live and darkness die.

THE Parsees have not given up the Ommanney grievance. They are not well pleased with Lord Reay's reply to Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit's letter, and propose to hold a public meeting at Bombay and to adopt a formal protest for presentation to the Secretary of State, the Viceroy, and the Governor of Bombay. They are also discussing the advisability of suing the Inspector-General for defamation.

MAHARAJA RAVANESWAR Prosad Singh Bahadur of Gidhour and Raja Ram Narain Singh of Khyra have offered to the Government Rs. 2,000 each, for sanitary improvement of the town of Deoghur-Baidyanath. These sums were originally intended for the Shivagunga tank and the scheme for the drainage of the town. The Maharaja of Durbhunga having, however, taken upon himself to supply the cost of these, the present donations will be applied for the improvement of the Jalsar tank and for a ghat on the Shivagunga tank.

THE Maharaja of Cooch Behar has contented himself this year with summering at Darjeeling.

WITH the quasi annexation of Cashmere, Sir Mortimer Durand has earned his furlough of one year. When he avails himself of it, the Under Secretary W. J. Cunningham will act the full Foreign Secretary.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

It is said that at the next vacancy in the Administrator-Generalship in Bengal, the office will be broken into as many jurisdictions as there are local Governments. A greater relief will be to break up the nest of consecrated eagles and lesser birds of prey who rule it and the allied offices in Calcutta.

BARRACKPORE will have a temporary respite of 80 days from Lieutenant-Colonel W. Hopkinson. During this period Mr. R. C. Sterndale—the Government would not style him Major in the Gazette—will, in addition to his own duties at Dum-Dum, act as the Cantonment Magistrate and Judge of the Small Cause Court at Barrackpore.

THE Bombay municipality has ordered a weekly return of houses that collapse in the city under the monsoon. In future, they will allow no more jerry buildings.

MR. Henry Lemesurier, late Agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, has succeeded the late Mr. R. W. Crawford, as Chairman of the East Indian Railway.

A Review of Therapeutics published on the Continent gives some instances to show that the greater mortality of late years from hydrophobia is due more to the dread of the disease than the disease itself, and that fully four-fifths of the deaths is traceable to "nervous hydrophobia" or "lyssophobia." On the other hand, the disease can be put out by persistent efforts. We quote from the Lancet:—

"A striking instance of this is preserved in the records of the Montpellier Academy. Two sisters were bitten by a dog that was rabid, or supposed to be so. One of them went away immediately afterwards to Holland, and remained there for ten years without developing any of the symptoms of the disease. At the end of that time she returned and made inquiries about her sister, of whom she had heard nothing during the whole time she was away. She then heard that she had died shortly after they had parted from one another. This brought back to her remembrance the circumstance of the bite, which she seems to have forgotten; and, believing that it must have been the cause of death, she was seized with such great alarm about herself that she was attacked with a malady which was very much like hydrophobia, and died in a terrible fit. As, according to Trousseau, the effects of the virus of rabies only endure for a single year, this death at the end of ten years must have been due to spurious or nervous hydrophobia. Again, a gentleman's dog bit a number of sheep while out for a walk with his master, and the same day, while swimming in a river, the animal got drowned. Shortly afterwards the gentleman was informed that several of the sheep had died, and he then remembered that the dog had been licking his hand the same morning it had bitten the sheep. He fancied, too, that he could detect some scars on his hand. He was seized with fright, and did not dare to touch water or to shave himself. He fully believed he had got hydrophobia, and took to his bed and was quite delirious for some days. A medical man did his best to calm his fears, but without success; however, after being repeatedly assured that if he had been the subject of hydrophobia he would have died at once, he took courage and recovered. Not only may the real disease be simulated by the nervous imitation of it, but, in some instances at least, it would almost seem that the true disease, even after it has begun to show itself unmistakably, may by the persistent effort of the will be shaken off. It is reported that Dr. Bartelemy, a well-known French physician, was one day bitten by a dog, and, though the wound was immediately cauterised, felt, some ten days afterwards, the commencement of throat spasm and difficulty in swallowing, which suggested to him that he had been seized with hydrophobia. He made up his mind to carry on his avocations as usual, and to go to the theatre and into society just as if nothing had occurred. He did so, and six days later the last signs of the terrible symptoms entirely disappeared. Another instance is given of a scientific man who, after being bitten by a rabid cat, experienced pains in the arm and spasm in the throat. He, too, made up his mind to face the matter like a man and to brave it out. He consequently went out hunting, and although the pain in the arm was excruciating, he walked about during the whole afternoon. In the evening he was better, and by the end of the week he had quite recovered. The article referred to points out that men of undoubted courage have doubtless succumbed to the disease, but that, nevertheless, to put a bold front on and face the matter out greatly increases the chances of safety."

Verily, the brave Europeans are preposterous cowards under these minor circumstances of life!

MR. E. J. S. WHITE, nephew of the late President David White, has suggested to the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association

"1. That it is desirable that all members of the Association should be distinguished from the European and Native Christian communities and from non-Members, by a modification of costume, in the direction of economy, adaptation to the Indian climate, and suitability to Indian surroundings.

2. That it is desirable that all members of the Association should mark their Indian nationality by the adoption of Indian surnames.

3. That it is desirable that all members of the Association should employ Eurasians in preference to Natives as domestic servants."

It is raining cats and dogs at Mussoorie. At 11 A.M., on Saturday week, it began and down to the middle of Tuesday it was still going on vigorously.

"THE organisation and employment in war of native cavalry" is the subject for the next year's prize essay of the United Service Institution in India.

THE leprous maina has travelled down to Travancore. That Government has called for reports from the Division Peishcars on the number of lepers and measures to check the progress of the disease.

It is in the air that publication of confidential State papers will be made a cognisable offence in India—as it is in England.

THE safe in the Telegraph office, Mhow, containing cash, stamps and message drafts valued at three lacs, was found broken open and the contents removed. Two native employees are under arrest on suspicion.

THE Madras Chief Magistrate has fined a native Rs. 5 for spitting on the floor of the Court premises, with the alternative of 10 days' rigorous imprisonment.

A MADRASI wife has sued her husband for restitution of conjugal rights.

IN January, the Bank of Bengal discovered that there was in circulation a copper coin not of Her Majesty's mint. At Allahabad city, the Police have just arrested three men in the upper-story of a house at work for the imitation coin. The three coiners wonder that they have been committed, for their coin was never debased but always of the full weight of the current piece.

A MAID-SERVANT, long in the service of a Pleader in Jessore, has laid criminal information against a local muktear for defamation. She complains that the Muktear has spread a report that she was of the caste of Suvarnanabik whereas she belongs to the Gandhabanik whose touch was not pollution to the superior Hindus. It is said she was threatened with loss of service unless she established her caste in a court of law.

A NATIVE has been fined two hundred rupees at Poona for an unauthorized lottery.

DEPUTY Collector Muthusamy Iyer has just been suspended by the Collector of North Arcot, for improper pecuniary transactions with the Mohunt of Tirrupaty. There are Muthusamy Iyers and Muthusamy Iyers.

SETHAPATHY NAIDOO in 1882 was a Tahsildar at Conjeeveram. He was criminally charged by some Brahmans of Vadakapett. He was tried by the Judge of Chingleput and acquitted, while some of his prosecutors were punished. In a couple of years, however, he was found guilty of extracting some important documents in their transit to the Magistrate's Court, and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. There was an appeal. The sentence was reduced to one year by Mr. Justice Iunes and Mr. Justice Moothooswamy Jyer. Mr. Justice Kernan held a different view of the prisoner's guilt and disagreed with that of his colleagues of the Madras High Court. "Some time after this," says the Madras Mail, "the Streeloka Runjee made certain reflections against the ex-Tahsildar and went so far as to insinuate that Mr. Justice Kernan had had a secret sympathy for the Tahsildar and hence his favorable opinion towards the Tahsildar." The Tahsildar has sued, in the Small Cause Court, Uppa Moodelly, the printer, and Sodagopa Chattri, the proprietor, of the vernacular paper for damages. The Plaintiff has already examined Mr. Justice Kernan, and other high officials await their turn.

WE have already informed our readers of the prosecution against the Kohinoor by the Akhbar-i-Aam, both vernacular papers of Lahore. From the deposition of the complainant, Pandit Gopi Nath, editor of the latter, it appears that "the defamatory statement published in the Kohinoor is to the effect that complainant visited Pondicherry in connection with Dhulip Singh's manifesto, and interviewed two Punjabis there, who are suspected to be Dhulip Singh's agents in India."

AFTER quoting our paragraph of last week on the injustice done to a native Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court in leaving him to starve on half pay while Mr. McEwen, now for many years Recorder of Rangoon, is allowed still to draw several hundred rupees a month on account of his former office on the bench of the Calcutta Court, the Indian Daily News writes:—

"If the facts are as stated, there is certainly just ground for complaint, not on account of the native officiating judge only, but in the interest of the Calcutta community in general. On no ground is the payment of 'several hundred rupees per mensem' from the revenue of the Calcutta Small Cause Court, to an official whose work is wholly performed in and for and should be paid by Burmah, defensible. Surely there must have been some strange oversight. We should hope that it only needs to have attention called to such an 'anomaly and jobbery' for a stop to be put to it at once. If the salary of the Recorder of Rangoon is not sufficient for Mr. McEwen, and it is thought desirable, as we believe it is in the opinion of Rangoon, to keep him there, let his proper salary be raised. But the money earned by the Calcutta Small Cause Court should go to pay its own working staff; or if not required for that purpose, should be employed in some way for the benefit of the local community, as by being added to the not-too-well-stocked treasury of the Bengal Government, or helping to reduce the Small Cause Court charges."

THE Judges of the High Court are anticipating the Long Vacation. Mr. Justice Trevelyan has left for home on one month's leave, to rejoin the Court after the Poojahs. Mr. Justice Prinsep, without leave, is enjoying himself at Darjeeling since the middle of last week. Mr. Justice Norris is unwell and unable to attend Court. The Chief Justice himself, although attending Court, is not sufficiently recovered to properly attend to his duties, and has booked himself for home, leaving on the 5th September. Mr. Justice Hill accompanies his Chief and master and on return rejoins his own place in the N.-W. P. as Government Prosecutor.

THE Thakur had a serious encounter with the Purohits of Gogasar, a village in Bikanir territory. The Thakur was wounded, his three men killed, and a large number more or less wounded on both sides. Thirteen Purohits are under arrest.

THERE has been a prodigious quantity of bad Bengali bile and in different printer's ink spilled over the squabbles of a couple of new schools in the most cantankerous of the Districts of Bengal Proper. The founders are respectable men, those of one being the well-known Brahman landlords, the Roys of Lakoota, sons of the lamented Raj Chandra Baboo. Their quarrel kept up with spirit on both sides rather pleasantly occupied native society on the spot, which found in it a welcome relief from its everlasting litigation. The Calcutta papers freely opened their columns to the parties to denounce each other. They used the privilege without stint, the more so as both had applied to the University for recognition of their new collegiate status and passionately wished it denied to the other. Both have gained their honourable object and have been disappointed in only their meaner aspiration. A truce to evil thought and idle bickerings!

Both the Barisal rival institutions, the Brajamohun Institution and the Rajchandra School, have been affiliated to the Calcutta University in Arts up to the First Arts Standard.

AN Indo-Portuguese clerk has been charged near Bombay, with embezzling Rs. 1,200. Defalcations amounting to Rs. 8,000 have been discovered in connection with the Tansa water-works.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

IT is said that the Russian Government has sanctioned another six millions of roubles for General Annenkoff to complete his Asiatic Railway project.

SIR James Fergusson has assured the House of Commons that the insurrection in Crete is no revolt against authority but is the visible bloody outburst of the contests between the different political factions. The Sultan, however, is alarmed at the proportions the factional fights have assumed. There is complete anarchy and conflicts between the insurgents and Turkish troops are constant. The Russian ambassador at Constantinople has addressed himself to the Porte expressing anxiety for Russian subjects in the island and hope that it will be able to cope with the situation there. The Greek Government has addressed a note to the Powers for intervention in Cretan affairs and restoration of order, coupling the request with active naval preparations to protect her own subjects in that quarter. No reply has been received to that note. The several Powers are not disposed for any concerted action, but it is believed they will not allow the Cretan question to assume a more serious aspect. A Vienna telegram says that the Porte proclaims a state of siege in Crete.

THE Servian troops have been called out for inspection. Many connect this move with the movement of the Bulgarian troops on the frontier. According to the Times, the Porte too has called out 80,000 Turkish reserves to meet any contingencies in the Balkan states.

IN reply to a question in the Lower House, Mr. Smith said that Government could not instruct the Egyptian Government like any British Department, nor were they disposed to recommend the occupation of old Dongola and Berber. The English policy in Egypt remains unchanged, and, according to promise, the Egyptian frontier will be defended.

GENERAL Grenfell has obtained the thanks of the Upper House for his action in the Soudan. He reduced the Dervishes to straits. They collected 3,000 strong near Toski, and, after prayers, gave battle, but were utterly routed. The General managed to draw out the entire Dervish army. The fight was long and severe for seven hours. Colonel Wodehouse with his infantry drove the Dervishes from hill to hill. The Dervishes made stubborn resistance and desperate charges with their cavalry. Colonel Kitchener's cavalry crushed the flanking movements attempted by the Dervishes. Wad-el-Njuni and twelve Emirs were killed and fifty standards taken. One thousand Dervish prisoners and wounded are now at Toski and other refugees are coming in. The Egyptian loss was seventeen killed and one hundred and thirty wounded, including one British killed and three wounded. Wad-el-Sand, the only Mir, escaped with two hundred men and sixty water camels to the hills above Bellana, and was making for Matuki. The Egyptian troops have occupied Sarras. General Grenfell returns to Cairo to-day.

THERE have been grand doings in England in honour of the German Emperor. The Marquis of Salisbury has been given quarters at Osborne during the Emperor's stay in England. The Imperial yacht Hohenzollern passed Dover on the 1st under salvoes from the shore batteries. It arrived off Spithead the next evening and was welcomed with a royal salute from the British fleet extending over five miles. The Prince of Wales escorted the Emperor on shore and at Osborne the Queen herself waited to receive the Imperial guest and her grandson. The same day, Emperor William was Gazetted Honorary Admiral of the British fleet. The Emperor, accompanied by Prince Heinrich and the Prince of Wales, privately went on board and inspected some of the leading types of ships in the British fleet off Spithead. In return of the compliment of Honorary Admiralty, the German Emperor has appointed Queen Victoria Honorary Colonel of the First Regiment of German Dragoon Guards (which will henceforth be known by her name) and the Duke of Cambridge Colonel of a German Infantry Regiment. The Naval Review at Spithead, for which they had been preparing for some time, on the 5th was a brilliant success in fine weather. The Queen herself passed in the Royal yacht Albert along the line of ships amidst loud and enthusiastic cheering. The fleet has since dispersed for the manoeuvres. On the 7th there was a review at Aldershot of 30,000 troops. The Emperor was very much pleased. After the March past His Majesty highly congratulated the Duke of Cambridge and Sir Evelyn Wood on the condition of the force and the manner of the manoeuvres. The weather was equally propitious on this occasion and added to the splendour of the scene. At the luncheon after the review, the Emperor expressed his agreeable surprise at the progress of the British Army since the review at the Jubilee of the Queen, and paid a high tribute to the Volunteers whom it was impossible to distinguish from regulars. His Majesty also expressed a hope for the long continuance of the ancient fellowship existing between the armies of England and Germany.

At the dinner on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert on Tuesday night, the Prince of Wales, in proposing the toast of the Emperor, rested his reliance on the army of Germany and the navy of England for the peace of the world. In reply, the Emperor considered the British fleet to be the finest in the world, and modestly claimed that the German army was equal to the German wants. He believed the efficiency of the German Army and the British Navy was a most important factor in the maintenance of the peace of Europe.

On Friday, Emperor William bade farewell to the Queen and England.

IN view of the stations for the proposed Pacific Telegraph Cable, the British Government has annexed the Union and Phoenix groups of island lying near the Equator in the Pacific Ocean.

THE India Council Bill was read a second time in the House of Commons on the 2nd. In a motion which was not carried, Sir George Campbell asked for a full enquiry into the formation and working of the Council. He was supported by Dr. Hunter and Mr. Bradlaugh. Sir Roper Lethbridge advocated Indian representation on the Council, which, he thought, should not be weakened to increase the despotic power of the Secretary of State for India. In the absence of Sir John Gorst, the Hon'ble Mr. Stanhope replied. The present occasion was not one for discussion of wider questions and that the Indian representation in the Council was an independent question which required the fullest reflection.

The Royal Grants Bill has passed the Lower House.

THE British have at last shown imagination worthy of their world-wide empire in their engineering projects. Sir Edward Watkin has evidently taken a leaf out of the book of Ferdinand Lesseps. The sensation of the week is a proposal for a joint-stock company. A scheme of a direct railway line from London to India via Kurrachee has been submitted to Lord Cross. In the absence of the Channel Tunnel, it is proposed to start the Railway from Calais or Boulogne, proceeding direct to Gibraltar over the existing lines as far as possible. From Gibraltar to Tangiers, the railway train is to be carried by a vast broad-beamed boat. From Tangiers the line will run eastward along the north Coast of Africa, through Egypt on to the Persian Gulf to Kurrachee, where it will join the Indian lines.

ATAS for poor France, there is no silver lining in her horizon! While the efforts of her patriots are strained to save the Republic from the intrigues at home, the rampant enemy without has stolen another march on her. Her Krupp is in danger of suppression by the great Machiavelli of the age. The famous gun foundry of Cail under the direction of Colonel de Bange, which is scarcely inferior, if not superior to the German Establishment of Herr Krupp, gave invaluable support to the defence of Paris during the War, and after its conclusion supplied the requisite ordnance for the strengthening of the national artillery, is about to go into liquidation. The Company has declared no dividends for two years. The patience of the shareholders is exhausted and they are winding up the concern. This seems characteristic of French restlessness, but it does not speak much for French patriotism. They showed more steadiness under a worse trial in the Suez Canal. Is their spite against the German despoilers of their country less ardent than their desire to avenge themselves on their British victors at Waterloo? It is not that. The poor French are helpless in the matter. They have been neatly "sold" by Machiavelli. The milliards paid to Germany by France as the price of peace—peace! peace! alas! where there can be no peace—the ever-wakeful, argus-eyed watcher over German interests, Prince Bismarck, has sedulously though quietly been investing in various ways against the rainy day—the inevitable war. One of his investments was to introduce himself into the Cal Company benami, by purchase of shares in the stock market in the names of his creatures. Having secured enough interest and, of course, power in the concern, he has been able to force it into liquidation and to shut up shop. Who will blame him? It is a poor piece of business, to be sure, which does not commend itself to the notions of honourable conflict taught by Kshattriya Chivalry in India. But commercial Europe doubtless considers it all right. Poor France herself is trying against the foe many a petty trick, for want of courage for a bold game yet.

It is a strange world. Well might Antony, in the agony of grief for a friend cut off by a conspiracy of envy, ambition, treason and ingratitude, exclaim—

O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason!

We certainly "live in an inverted order." The Christian is not unfrequently a Pagan in practice—the mild Hindoo may be a rampant rowdy—the weak Buddhist a bloody barbarian. The grand old Roman is scarcely recognised in the superstitious sneak who represents him—the Greek is an ignorant "coward slave" whom the descendants of the Goths are vainly trying to lift up from the mire. The justice of Civilization denounces patriot guerillas as brigands. The religion of Civilization is—to deride at all religion—faith in atheism. The charity of Christendom hounds the elect of God—the countrymen of Jesus—into the generous arms of much-abused Islam. Truth is the distinctive virtue of only savages. The Police are more often a pest than a protecting agency. And honour reigns where you least expect it—among the chivalry of industry, Pindara chiefs and so forth.

THE price of perfidy is being paid to the pice. It is not enough for the good of Cashmere that Maharaja Pratap Singh has been put on pension. Raja Ram Singh has been displaced and Raja Amar Singh installed as President of the Council. Who next? And what?

THERE is a melancholy humour in the announcement that the birthday of the shelled Maharajah of Cashmere was celebrated with the usual pomp on the 10th July. The usurpers were in unusually good humour. By order of the Council, a number of prisoners were released in honour of the occasion. The people will be reminded of the trick of killing the sacred cow and seeking absolution by a present of a pair of shippers made from the leather to a Brahman.

ANOTHER melancholy illustration of the order of inversion predicted by the Prophets of the Puranas. The Amrita Bazar Patrika lately delivered a characteristic piece of criticism on the efforts lately made to raise a little subscription in favour of Mr. Judge, the poor old tea-planter who had earned the gratitude of the Anglo-Indian community by his championship of its cause under the famous nom de guerre of "Britannicus" in the Ilbert Bill Controversy, to enable him to recruit his health, if possible, at a hill station. Our brother feelingly exclaimed, Why did not the man die? The renowned Bengali editor thought it a mistake to help him in his hour of sickness. The man who more than any other helped to defeat us in that memorable struggle, did not deserve to live. The event seems to justify the native publicist. Poor "Britannicus" has succumbed under the relentless Sudra's curse. The Gods and Brahmans could not save him. Britannicus gave up the ghost at Darjeeling on the 29th of last month. It is to be hoped that it will not by way of revenge descend on the head of our brother. We can only pray for him, but of course that is of no use in these days. He is better able to defend himself. It will not be an unequal match. Indeed, the living A. B. has the advantage of the dead B.

Poor Mr. Judge died at the Eden Sanatorium at the age of 73. A large number of Europeans, chiefly planters, attended the burial.

QUOTING our indignant protest against the Bangabasi's unprovoked brutal attack on the noblest and most accomplished Hindu lady in the land, the Tribune remarks:—

"Truly says Reis and Rayyet 'our very shoes should not be permitted to be wrapped with such a print.' It is not the true Brahmanic forgiveness of the venerable head of the family which alone has screened the offender from chastisement, but the meanness and insignificance of the author of the vile effusion. It is not for a man of the Maharshi's position, or for a woman of the insulted lady's position, to take notice of such effusions from the Calcutta gutters. The Bangabasi is a disgrace to the Bengali name. We do not object to its denouncing the Congress (as well might a dog bark at a lion), defending idol-worship, infant-marriage and other sanatan institutions, but its constant vile attacks and viler insinuations against the noblest men and institutions are highly objectionable. It is a shame to Bengal that this paper is said to have the largest circulation of all Bengal papers. All Bengalis should boycott the paper, if they have any sense of self-respect. To what depths has not Hinduism fallen to have for its champion a journal of this character, for Bangabasi pretends to be the prop and pillar of Hinduism in Bengal. Hinduism was the religion of men, of men who spoke and acted and behaved as men, who honoured women; and its present champion delights in nothing so much as in wallowing in the mud of disgraceful abuse and insinuations."

Meanwhile, here in Calcutta, the shoe seems to have gone home. Dancing deliriously in pain, the object of the castigation, like the condemned man in the Gulistan, is exploding in ill humour and elaborate abuse in his native gibberish against the castigator, proving incontestably the appropriateness of the treatment prescribed.

AGAIN—

"Reis and Rayyet truly remarks:—'This is the paper that has taken to purify Bengali Society! Alas, for poor Bengal!' But Bengal has another Defender of the Faith and purifier in our young friend of Hope. He talks of the lady as a blue-stocking, and of the Bangabasi's vile coupling of the lady's name with that of a bazar-woman a jeu d'esprit (a piece of witicism)! A man who looks upon such vile allusions as pieces of witicism can have a moral sense only of the level of that of the Bangabasi. And our friend is another defender of the sanatan faith, for he tells us he is 'a guardian of the Zenana,' and we know he is a guardian of 'caste' also, for did he not purify his inner man by swallowing the five tasteful products of the holy cow on his return from America? What wonder that he should faint at the prospect of Brahmo ladies visiting Hindu homes? He sees in the proposal a dire calamity than that which has befallen Hindu homes from the visits of Christian ladies!"

We may here remark, en passant, that the dead set which is now being made against the Mohant, is a disgrace to Bengal. It is on the face of it a villainous conspiracy of some astute speculators to which a few respectable men who ought to know better have fallen dupes.

IT is a relief from the baseness and bickerings, the calumnies and quarrels of man, to turn to our contemporary's next editorial note. "A thoroughly reliable correspondent sends" the Tribune "the following most pathetic and interesting account of a dog's intelligence and faith":

"I had a little fox terrier, a little larger than a hare, very much like a fox, being of the same color, size and make. A woman gave her to my wife, when she was only about two weeks old. My wife fed her with her own hands, and by and bye she grew into a very pretty thing. The dog was wonderfully intelligent. When my eldest boy fell dangerously ill, she hardly left his bed-side, and gave up all her frolics and play and seemed to feel with us our sorrow and anxiety. When I fell dangerously ill the poor dog took it badly to heart, never stirred from my bedside, would not go to where my wife and others had their food, but would take her food when I took mine by my bed-side. In the summer we slept out in the compound, and the dog kept up all night, placing herself on the side of my wife's palung, as if she understood that a woman requires watch and protection more than a man. She was the cleanest and tidiest thing in the world—would never for all the world satisfy the calls of nature in the presence of people. When some two years back, we left Lahore for some time, we had, to save the cost of carrying the dog, resolved to leave her with a friend. We knew we had left her behind; but what was our surprise when, as soon as the train had left the Lahore station, she presented herself to us in the carriage with a half-joyful and half-fearful and apologetic air. We saw that she must have smuggled herself into one of the carriages conveying our luggage and then smuggled somehow without our knowledge into our railway compartment. I will conclude now by giving the story of her pathetic death. We last year again left Lahore, and we forcibly left her here with a gentleman. I had my misgivings: I feared she would pine away to death; but I was very hard up for money then, and her journey to and fro would cost no less than Rs. 30; and so we left her behind with a misgiving and an anxious heart; for she was as dear to us as a child. About a fortnight after our departure, we received a note from our friend with whom we had left her that she had died on the 10th day after our departure, and that she had pined away and starved herself to death, refusing all food. There is not a fact exaggerated here. My wife burst into tears when she heard the news. She had been like a child to her for seven years. My eyes also grew misty. Are not dogs truer and more faithful than men?"

It is time enough that we seriously mend our notions and language and our treatment of God's creatures. It is arrant injustice to call such beings as that dog brutes—brutes that perish. It is we who are brutes, not they. If the conduct of that poor dog does not indicate a rational soul—a soul of the noblest—the word has no meaning. If there is a reward for truth, constancy and fidelity, that dog who pined away unto death for his master, will assuredly go to Heaven. Nor is that a solitary instance. Dogs are habitually more noble than men. Cats too are good. We have woefully misunderstood them. We have a noble and refined lady in a cat and Tom, her late husband, was really a gentleman.

THE same paper noticing the negotiations now going on for the free entry of British merchants and British goods into the interior of Japan, remarks—"Then Japan's independence is doomed."

All Asia is doomed. The editor will remember our native proverb to the effect that it is all the same whether Rama kills or his rival, Ravana. Death is death and no mistake, whatever the weapon used. Alien rule is alien rule, for all its veneer. Kingdoms and empires of the East await dismemberment and partition between the nations of Europe, unless God in his Providence sends a great calamity to that continent to keep it occupied at home, or raises heroes and men of genius in this to preserve it from falling a prey to the foreigner.

THE Health Officer of Rangoon—Mr. T. F. Pedley, M. D., on a short visit to Calcutta, was shewn our narrow lanes and bustees by our Health Officer. He was struck, as who will not he? with their unhealthiness. He has recorded, in a letter to the Englishman, his experiences of a morning walk through these places.

"I was shown through some miles of streets, so narrow that two gharies could not pass each other, and from which branched off in every direction a marvellous network of narrow passages and alleyways, between large brick houses and low mud and wattled huts, with down-take drain-pipes, open house drains, gullies, gratings, and latrines in every direction. Many of the streets and most of the narrowest thoroughfares, in some of which two stout men could scarcely pass, were encroached upon by door steps, house drains, hanging verandahs, and jutting roofs. I was shown some bustees with their foul tanks and fouler surroundings, others in which tanks had been recently filled with manure and garbage, a stall of milch cows, the liquid filth from which stall flowed into wells from which the beasts, and probably their milk, are watered, crowded brick dwellings of good proportions, but dirty and dilapidated, the lower floors reeking with sewage, some of them said to belong to members of the Corporation. Some of the bustees looked as if they had with their occupants been picked up by a giant hand from some dirty country village and carefully deposited in what at some time might have been the compound of the adjacent big brick house. All this, and much more impossible to describe, in the very heart of a great city, still rapidly growing in wealth and population.

The atmosphere of the locality even at that hour, 7 to 8 A.M., seemed saturated with sickly odours and gases which enervated one and created an insatiable longing for pure air. How thankful we were to get out of it all, and meet the slight breeze stirring across the Maidan; it was as refreshing as cool spring water to a thirsty traveller.

My friend seemed quite knocked up, while I have paid for my curiosity with four days' diarrhoea and malaise."

That is true every word of it. But cui bono? That is very much the state of things in most parts of the world. If Mr. Simpson or his fidus Achates Dr. Pedley were tomorrow installed as the new broom or great scavenger in London, he would doubtless be able to give as harrowing an account of the barbarism and filth of the capital of British Civilization, just as counsel for a fee are able to make a monster of a man of the strictest probity. It is only a trick of the profession.

The remedy he proposes is to "give breathing space and fresh air among these teeming myriads: clear at least one-fourth of them and then dwellings out of the city." He thus describes "the method by which in the rising city of Rangoon the evils above mentioned have been and will be avoided, and which will give it (though far now from what it should be) a pre-eminence among the healthy and well arranged cities of the East."

"Fortunately the planning and laying out of the town lands fell into the hands of men of practical common sense views. The land was divided into oblong blocks of about seven acres (I have not the exact figures), between which alternated streets of 100 feet and others of 50 feet in width. These run north from the river bank, and are crossed by streets 100 feet wide, running east and west. The Government in a weak moment allowed the original plan to be modified by the introduction of 30 feet streets running north through the blocks, but that is the width of the narrowest street. Further, parallel with the streets and between the backs of the houses running the length of the blocks are strips of land retained by the Government and called drainage spaces; all latrines about on them, and in them conservancy operations are carried on, the new sewers laid, and all house connections made in them. In future, dustbins and receptacles for garbage will be placed in these spaces, so that the streets may be kept clean and neat. Encroachments upon streets or drainage spaces are zealously guarded against; a few balconies three or four feet wide have been allowed, but only in 100 feet streets. It was decided by the Municipal Committee some five years ago that in future no new street should be less than 50 feet wide, and the land over which the town is extending to the eastward has been marked off in accordance with this resolution. Under such a system works of drainage, sewerage, water supply, and lighting are more easy and cost less, passenger and vehicular traffic is unattended by inconvenience, and the public health has a better chance. Many of your readers will remember the town of Rangoon as a place of evil smells. I have seen both, and am glad we have nothing which can 'come up' to what exists in Calcutta, but then Calcutta has had a hundred years' start."

He of course bears testimony to the good work done by Dr. Simpson. His conclusion is that "a legion of Health Officers and Sanitary Inspectors can do little unless some of the ground is cleared."

AS we are going to press we receive intimation by telegraph that the inquiry into Captain Hearsey's charge against Dr. Hall has been postponed till after the conclusion of his case against the Pioneer.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY returned from his Behar trip on Thursday.

MR. J. Lambert, C. I. E., replaces Lieutenant-Colonel G. F. E. S. Neill, M. C. E., resigned, on the Calcutta Municipal Board. The new law has done away with the autocracy of Sir Henry Harrison as Chairman of the Corporation and Commissioner of Police, the two offices being separated. It is now the turn of his whilom Deputy in the Police. The nearest approach to the old plurality prohibited by law has now been practically attained somewhat—the Commissioner of Police and Municipal Commissioner rolled into one. It is a formidable official monster that has been manufactured. It will be irresistible on the board. Its "ditto" to the Chair will certainly be invaluable to it. The magician had better pay court to its own Frankenstein betimes.

A SLIGHT mistake crept into the para in our last about the two young men of the Jain community proceeded "home." Underchand Nahata is not the son-in-law but the nephew, of Rai Bahadur Boodh Singh of Moorshedabad.

THE Crusade against the Doorga Pooja, the National Holiday of Bengal, is gathering strength. The Comptroller-General has joined the camp of the malcontents—by the backdoor. Of course, he will be received with open arms, and Gay will be made gay among the few minor speculators in Calcutta who affect to be merchants though living from hand to mouth, and their sons and daughters. Miserable reward to balance the curses, loud and deep, of a whole people! He has ordered that the Paper Currency office shall not be closed while the Bank of Bengal remains open during the long vacation.

The ukase of this Brunmagem Czar of the Financial Department is ready, but it has not gone forth. It will be announced at the nick of time, to prevent explanation or entreaty or appeal. The whole conspiracy is worthy of the cause and the base men engaged in it. Cannot Lord Lansdowne give a lesson to these petty tyrants of the poor and dumb myriads? Lord Dufferin would have quickly turned gay to grave. The Viceroy would do well to look up the history of the question.

OUR readers are certainly familiar with the antecedents of Mr. G. M. Currie of the Bengal Civil Service. That he should have cut fantastic capers and played such pranks to the delectation of all admiring on-lookers, during the late Administration, was not, perhaps, matter for much surprise, considering that the Lord of Belvedere was not only a brother Civilian but that that brother was his uncle in the bargain. The tenderness with which Civilian uncles and cousins-german and brothers-in-law always shield from serious consequences their scape-grace nephews and cousins and wife's brothers, is notorious. But then it was hoped, although it was hoping against hope, that with Sir Steuart Bayley at Belvedere, even Mr. G. M. Currie would play the part of the Prodigal returned. It seems, however, that this young man on the wrong side of forty is past reclamation. Very recently, some of his pranks at Howrah were the subject of comment in all newspapers. Not content with his past achievements, on Monday last, while sitting as Municipal Chairman hearing assessment appeals, he won a new feather to his cap by administering a sound kick to a respectable old Brahman of the priestly class, a representative of one of the oldest families of Bajé-Seehpore, in the presence of more than fifty persons. His covenanted dignity having been disturbed with the noise made, it is said, by his own chuprdis in attendance at the verandah of the municipal office, Mr. Currie jumped with brutal nimbleness from his seat, came out, and with some choice and very gentlemanly Indian vernacular expressive of his relationship with the Bengalis—although the veriest dregs among them would decline the honor even if the legal fraternity he affected were allowed to be reversed—used his shod foot against the unhappy and innocent victim, though, perhaps, his hands applied at the ears for a pull, strong or tender, was the treatment sanctioned by the custom of the country. Seriously speaking, is there none to check this little autocrat, this unworthy representative of a Service that is never weary of proclaiming its virtues? Captain Hearsey has stopped the slanging of suitors and practitioners by presiding officers in the country courts of Upper India. The evil seems to have passed to down-country until it emerges on the other bank of the river right in front of the Lieutenant-Governor's Palace. When Civilian out-sala the very cabbies of Bengal, it is time enough to seek a remedy. Our people had better ask Captain Hearsey to settle for some time in this part, when he has settled his account with the Pioneer.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1889.

CAPTAIN HEARSEY.

CAPTAIN or no Captain, Andrew Hearsey is the hero of the hour. If he is for the moment much misrepresented, he shares that fate with many and greater men. To have brought the great Pioneer to book—to have brought down the literary Gazi of Government—the Defender of the Faith official and of the almighty Bureaucracy to court, far away from his throne and his capital in the West to Calcutta, to be tried as a criminal, is itself no small feat. For a poor friendless man, shunned by his own kith and kin, it is a grand achievement. It should not be supposed that we have any bias in his favour. We are not conscious of any, beyond a sentimental sympathy for a weak man struggling with superior forces. Indeed, as regards the more heroic of the Captain's proceedings, the bias is all the other way. Like several others of the native press, we did not support him in his trespass into the Pioneer office and assault there on the Chief Editor. To begin with, there was undoubtedly a fellow-feeling for a brother, and he a leading brother, into the bargain, of the craft. Not a wholly unselfish sympathy, perhaps. We could not possibly relish the prospect of journalists having to meet the argumentum baculum—a species of logic in which we had not taken high honours. We have, we confess, a deliberate objection, except in dire extremity, to citizens taking the law into their own hands, as making for anarchy. But what chiefly swayed us was a settled contempt for, and an instinctive horror of, rowdyism. The mild Hindu is no myth, and the mild Hindu in us voted against the formidable retired warrior. We wrote, as we are accustomed to think, like Oriental gentlemen, without any unmanly apéry of Europeans and their demonstrative methods of disputation or amusement.

European opinion, we knew, must be different—opposite. The British, in particular, do not believe in the nonsense of not taking the law into their own hands. Their first philosopher characterises revenge as a sort of wild justice, and they love justice to themselves too dearly to stick at the wildness. With all their enlightenment and love of order, their native instinct comes out under personal provocation. When themselves injured, neither the Lord Chief Justice nor even the Lord Jesus restrains them. They become strangely oblivious of their superior self and their higher responsibilities, careless of consequences, human and divine. Then the codes and the scriptures alike walk out of their heads, and the Celt and the Pict comes out at their extremities.

Thus the European view of Hearsey's adventurous raid into the Holy of Holies of the Pioneer office, was necessarily very different from the native feeling. He had done after his people. We strongly suspect Mr. Chesney himself in the deepest recesses of his heart to cherish a respect for his enemy. In point of fact, we believe him British to the backbone, and in identical situation he would certainly act alike. This is no mere speculation. It has been placed beyond doubt by actual occurrences. When Mr. Chesney's own temper was tried by abuse of a neighbour journalist, he proved no better or worse than his late assailant, so far at least as intention went. If he could not carry out his purpose, that was no fault of his. The spirit was ready, but the body failed. He caught a Tartar. Going to gather wool, he came away shorn. In return for vituperation in the newspaper, he went out armed with a whip to flog the writer. He was compelled to beat a hasty retreat, leaving his arms and accoutrements and parts of his uniform behind. That is one of the chances of war. His courage is beyond question. The great Editor disdained to use his practised pen against a war of the pen.

He would not be an Englishman if he did not. The old General his father would disown an unworthy brat. We do not know if he has a wife and children. From his masherlike appearance in the dock, and, above all, his conduct of the Pioneer, we should say he is wanting in those necessary adjuncts to good temper and happiness and to correct and genial views of men and things. If he has them, they would be unhappy under the circumstance. If he was not yet married, and did not know how to appreciate his chastiser, he had better not try to be. No true-hearted English lady would receive his advances.

But what Englishman, or for that matter European, will not do as Hearsey did or Chesney attempted towards his vilifier. At any rate, who, having done so, will be ashamed? It is only the wise Asiatic that will shrink from a personal encounter as a vulgarity, and the Asiatic has oftener been a slave than a free man. We Indians are not the proper judges of such matters.

It is the same with the other acts of violence to which Captain Hearsey, in answer to Counsellor Gasper (whose interrogatories were throughout prompted by Mr. Ross Alston of the Allahabad bar brought down on purpose by the Pioneer), so glibly deposed. The list may appear formidable to mild Hindus and spiritless Mahomedans, but it is nothing to the true Briton. No doubt, the "sprees" and "larks" and escapades of a whole life condensed into a small compass by the ingenuity of Counsel, may have a staggering effect even upon unwary Europeans. Captain Hearsey himself may have felt for a moment, under the catechism and invective of the Burke of the Calcutta Old Bailey, as if he was the greatest villain under the sun. But it was only the effect of the focus of the magician. Soon he must have recollected that there was a worm digging up all the worst garbage of thirty years—of indeed the whole of his conscious career. And then, it has to be remembered that he was not allowed to explain matters at all. We are sure Captain Hearsey will be able to clear up many points. The public has only heard one side of the story, and those who are judging him from it are doing a great injustice.

A MAHOMEDAN GRIEVANCE AND MATTERS MAHOMEDAN.

ON Thursday last the 8th instant, the grand festival of the Mahomedans called the Eed-uz-zohra or Buckreed passed off with the usual clat, but in many of the families in the Town and Suburbs, the joy and hilarity observable on this festive occasion in previous years, had been much curtailed by the heartless curtailment this year of the vacation in the Calcutta Medressah from 5 to 2 days. Ever since the Medressah was founded by Warren Hastings in 1870, the students have enjoyed 5 days' holiday in the Buckreed festival, but for some reason or other, which has not been given out, the Principal Dr. Hoernle has cut them down to 2 days and thus given unnecessary offence to the entire Mahomedan community. The Mahomedans feel this curtailment keenly, as it is chiefly the children and through them the elders of the households who enjoy the festivities on these joyous occasions. They protest against this reduction, when in fact 12 days' holidays are allowed during the Doorgapoojas in that Institution, in which there is not a single Hindu student and only one Hindu teacher. The Mahomedans complain that the Institution is closed when their boys do not require any holiday at all, and have to waste their time; while at a time when their social and ceremonial duties require their presence at home, they are compelled to attend the school. The Principal, being a German missionary, ought to be careful, that his conduct towards the boys placed under his charge, is not construed into an inclination on his part to interfere with the religion of his wards. We reminded that a great deal of objection was raised at the time of his appointment to this post, on the score of his being a missionary and the son of a missionary.

There was a Sessions case pending before Mr. Beveridge of the 24-Pergunnahs, in which one Darogha Muatabar Ali Khan, alias Bheekun Khan, one of the prominent officials of the late King of Oudh's establishment, was the defendant, having been charged by Mr. Upton, the Governor-General's Agent, with theft of certain articles alleged to belong to the Estate of the late King. The trial commenced on Monday the 5th instant and concluded on the evening of Thursday the 8th. The witnesses on both sides were almost exclusively Mahomedans, and although the presiding officer was asked not to take up the case on Thursday owing to the Buckreed, he refused the application. Mahomedan witnesses were thus forced to attend Court on a day on which religious and social duties wanted them elsewhere—at mosque, at home and the houses of neighbours and friends. It was a most arbitrary exercise of the authority of the Court and a great and unnecessary hardship to these witnesses. They had loyally accepted Her Majesty's summons to attend and assist the administration of justice by her Judges and scrupulously obeyed. But in obeying the call of the Court, they certainly never reckoned on reaping disgrace and damnation. But whether they reckoned or not, they got both, thanks to the stolidity or incapacity for sympathy of the British Judge. The witnesses who came down all the way from Oudh, as they made the greatest sacrifice of all in assisting in a case in which they had no personal interest, must have felt their situation under the enforced attendance on the sacred day the most keenly. How the Mahomedan community regard the business may be easily understood. It was unfortunate that the date of the trial was originally fixed without taking into consideration the possibility of its not being concluded during the 3 days before the grand Mahomedan festival. Mr. Beveridge is known to entertain strong ideas against the Christian religion. It would not be fair to him to conclude from this one instance that he does not care for the religious feelings of the Hindus and Holloway's Pills and Ointment are remedies which should invariably be taken by travellers in search of health, pleasure or business. Many deleterious influences are constantly at work in foreign climes, tending to deteriorate the health; these and the altered conditions of life will entail on those who travel the necessity of carefully attending to early symptoms of disease, and they will find the use of these remedies to be highly necessary, the action of the Pills being purifying and strengthening and of great service in cases of fever, ague, and all inflammatory diseases, whilst the Ointment is a sovereign cure in cases of piles, bad legs, bad breasts, wounds and ulcers. Holloway's remedies do not deteriorate by change of climate.

Mahomedans who have to come before him as suitors or witnesses.

That case of theft of silver articles valued at Rs. 2,000, before the Sessions Judge Beveridge, was committed by the Deputy Baboo Bunkim Chunder Chatterjee. The real prosecutor was Kedarnath Mookerjee, the Head Assistant of the Superintendent of Political Pensions, and the chief witness his son Monmothnath Mookerjee, the collector of the late king's landed property. It was finally disposed of on Thursday. The father and son as well as other witnesses for the prosecution broke down entirely in cross-examination, and so were 2 or 3 of the poor King's Begums, who had been examined by Commission. The Judge without calling for the defence charged the Jury for the verdict. The Jury at once returned a verdict of not guilty and the accused was discharged.

As far as our information goes, the expenses in this prosecution have come up to 4 or 5 times the value of the alleged stolen property. And this amount would most probably have to be paid out of the King's Estate.

We trust the Government of India will enquire into the matter and specially why the prosecution was started solely on the assurance of the Assistants who cut such sorry figure in the witness box.

It is satisfactory to note that the old practice of the Indian Press to ignore the Mahomedans as a component part of the population and to pass over their grievances, is giving way to a better disposition. When our patriots found that the world at large regarded a National Indian Congress without Mahomedans a very much of a misnomer, their organs took to calling the Mahomedans all sorts of names. Bullying having failed to bring them into their fold, they have since commenced coaxing. Our European friends saw their opportunity in the defection of the Mahomedans and set to make friends with them. Since then, the Anglo-Indian Press has been paying more attention to Mahomedan matters. The Mahomedans do not yet support to any appreciable extent the English papers, yet these do not disdain to send reporters to the mosques and Imambaras on the occasion of any festival or meeting. All this is very good. Unfortunately, the European journalists' knowledge is not equal to their good disposition. The leading Anglo-Indian organ in Calcutta has found space for a long account of the late Buckreed, but the narrative is disfigured by a most extraordinary statement. We are told that on the day in question at the mosques in town, the khutba was read and that the khutba pronounced blessings among others on the king of Dahomy. The writer himself is surprised at his own discovery, as well he may be. Where he got his information, we are at a loss to imagine. The custom is to bless the Sultan of Turkey, the Defender of the Faith and guardian of the Holy Cities. Had there been a recognised Mahomedan sovereign of India, he would have come in for his share of the good wishes of his co-religionists. But the Sultan of Dahomy of all places is a huge joke. The Indian Mussulmans, or for that matter those of Arabia or Turkey, are not aware of the existence of Dahomy.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.—JULY 31, 1889.

IMPERATRIX v. HARRILAL DALPATRAM.

Mr. Justice Scott :—This reference turns on the construction of section 73 of the Municipal Act (Act VI of 1873) applicable to this Presidency. That section empowers any Municipality "threatened or visited with an outbreak of any epidemic disease," "to take such measures as may be deemed necessary to prevent, meet, mitigate or suppress any such outbreak." In order apparently to prevent any abuse of this wide discretion, it is further provided that measures under this section must be first sanctioned by the Governor in Council or an officer authorized by him. It appears that the Municipality of Ahmedabad received a report from their medical officer that the city was threatened with cholera and that the suppression of caste-feasts was a necessary measure. The sanction of the Governor in Council was obtained and under the powers conferred by section 73 an order was promulgated in the city by posters on the walls prohibiting the holding of caste-feasts when over thirty persons were to assemble. The defendant in this case infringed this rule and was fined under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code twenty-five rupees for disobeying the order of a public servant empowered to promulgate such order. The Magistrate, whilst he held the order within the powers of the section, still felt a doubt on the subject and referred the question of its legality to the High Court. That question turns on the construction of the words "take such measures as may be deemed necessary to prevent, meet, mitigate or suppress the outbreak." The words are no doubt of wide and general character whilst the powers they confer are to be exercised for the safety of the public and only at an exceptional time of public danger. But can they be taken to cover an order interfering with the right of every citizen to the control of his private life and the use of his own house and placing an interdict on people meeting together to eat and drink in their own houses? Special measures for the health of the town such as sulphur fumigation, daily flushing of sewers, insistence on good house sanitation, isolation of infected districts and other similar steps to be taken by the authorities themselves, come more naturally within the meaning of the terms of the section. Indeed the words to take such measures imply in themselves something actively to be done by the Municipality rather than any limitation to be imposed on the private rights of the citizens in their relations of daily life. If stringent rules as to the conduct of private life generally, and as to the consumption of food in private houses in particular, were contemplated, the Legislature would have found apt words to express their meaning. Terms of command and prohibition would have been used such as occur in section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Moreover the Legislature would have provided a special penalty for the infringement of the rules thus made as was done in other sections in the Act. Section 74 enumerates the sections of the Act intended to have penal effect and this section is not in the list. The absence of penalty and the primary sense of the words "to take measures" both are in favour of the section being construed to mean acts of the Municipality itself rather than any unusual restriction of private rights. The section may, however, be construed in two ways. Firstly the words "take measures" may be limited to acts on the part of the Municipality to be done by them such as those we have described. This interpretation need not necessarily involve any infringement of the common law rights of the subject and is also the more natural meaning of the words used. But secondly, the words "take measures" are so vague and general that they may be extended so as to cover commands to do acts, and prohibitions to abstain from acts, which would otherwise be within the common law rights of the subject. This second construction is the one that must be applied to this case to justify the order in question. Yet such a construction of general words is contrary to the rules which govern the interpretation of all statutes. The rule applicable to this case is clearly expressed as follows:—"The general rule in exposition of all Acts of Parliament is this, that in all doubtful matters and where the expression is in general terms, they are to receive such a construction as may be agreeable to the rules of common law in cases of that nature; for statutes are not presumed to make any alteration in the common law, farther or otherwise than the Act does expressly declare; therefore in all general matters the law presumes the Act did not intend to make any alteration; for if the Parliament had had that design, they would have expressed it in the Act. (Viner's Abridgment Title Statute). As the second construction is contrary to this rule of interpretation and against the primary meaning of the words, we are unable to accept it. The Court ought not to strain an Act in favour of an interference with private rights which is not justified by the primary sense of the language. If caste feasts, in private houses are to be prohibited, the intention of the legislature to that effect must be shown either by express words or by necessary implication. That intention cannot, in our opinion, be read in the words before us. We think, therefore, the Municipality has exceeded its powers in issuing this order. The conviction and sentence must be reversed and fine returned.

Public Paper.

EMIGRATION TO FRENCH GUIANA.

From---The Government of India, Revenue and Agricultural Department.

To---The Government Bengal, General Department.

Calcutta, dated 22nd March 1889.

Adverting to the correspondence ending with my endorsement dated 22nd February last, I am directed to forward a copy of the despatch from the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India, and to state that the Government of India will be glad to be favoured with any remarks which the Hon'ble the Lieutenant-Governor may wish to offer on paras 2 and 3 of the despatch relative to the question of re-opening emigration to French Guiana.

From---The Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India.

To---His Excellency the Most Hon'ble the Governor-General of India in Council.

Dated India Office, London, 31st January 1887.

In continuation of my despatch dated 13th December last, and with reference to the emigration letter from Your Excellency's predecessor in Council of the 4th ultimo, which I have not communicated to the Foreign Office, I transmit, for your information, copy of the Special Report on Indian Immigration at Cayenne prepared by Her Majesty's Consul on statistics furnished by the new Commissary Protector of Immigrants.

Your Lordship's Government will now be in a position finally to decide whether the emigration from India to French Guiana can be re-opened, and on what conditions.

Should Your Excellency in Council be willing to renew the emigration, you will of course insist that a properly qualified Consul is maintained in Cayenne as formerly, and that no expense is to be incurred from Indian revenues in connection with his salary or office or otherwise.

From---Government of Bengal, General Department.

To---Government of India, Revenue and Agricultural Department.

Dated 15th May 1889.

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 22nd March 1889, with its enclosure, in which the question of permitting the renewal of emigration to Cayenne is re-opened and the Lieutenant-Governor is given the opportunity of making a further representation on the subject.

In reply, I am directed to say that the Lieutenant-Governor does not consider that Consul Wyndham's report of the 8th December last affords sufficient ground for modifying the opinion expressed in my letter dated the 19th April 1888. In view of this fact that, as far as the information of this Government goes, the last batch of emigrants to Cayenne was despatched from Calcutta in January 1874, the statement made in the report that 66 immigrants had not completed their contract in 1888 affords further evidence of the tendency in that colony to prolong the period during which natives of India are kept under indenture. The statistics of mortality now given are certainly favorable, but they can refer only to the survivors after many years of residence---persons who must either originally have been exceptionally adapted to the climate, or have become so in the course of time. Consul Wyndham gives the regulation rate of wages which, judged by a colonial standard, appears to be somewhat low and is not as advantageous as that which prevails in Burma, while prices are stated to be very high. On the whole the Lieutenant-Governor considers that the prohibition of emigration recently passed in regard to the French Colonies should continue to be enforced in the case of Cayenne, the one to which the strongest exception has always been taken.

LEPROSY.

The Lock-up was next visited. The building is about 10 by 15 feet in dimension, and contains two rooms about 6 feet long and 9 feet wide respectively. These are poorly ventilated by small iron gratings situated on the leeward side of the building. In one were two Chinamen, both sentenced to one month's confinement on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon upon one of their countrymen. In the other was confined a native, named Makahui, sentenced for burglary in the store of the Board of Health, and abstracting therefrom money to the amount of about $240, his partner in the crime one Naai by name, had terminated his own life shortly after sentence, by suspending himself from the gratings of his cell.

The cooking arrangements are commodious, cleanly kept, and convenient; a cooking range being supplied sufficiently large to do the cooking for 150 persons. The poi room is also spacious and clean.

As numerous descriptions of the settlement generally, and of the Hospital in particular, have heretofore been published, it will be unnecessary to give a further description. But here I may say that great credit is due to those in charge for the very neat and cleanly manner in which everything connected with the premises is kept.

After leaving the Hospital premises, the party next visited the store-house, situated not far distant from the Hospital and immediately across the road. Upon a close observation of the stores, all the articles provided appeared good, with the exception of the sugar, bread and salmon, the last mentioned article being so mouldy and soft as to be unfit for use; the sugar dark and dirty, of about No. 3 or No. 4 quality; and the bread tolerably good for medium bread, though inferior to that supplied to the Oahu Jail.

There are about 14 head of cattle butchered per week. Allowing (which according to the statement of some butchers is a large average) that each bullock weighed dressed, 350 lbs., and seven pounds per week of beef to an individual, the amount of beef slaughtered would supply only about 700 people; whereas, there are at the settlement, including the kokuas, a population averaging between 850 and 950 souls.

The arrangements for slaughtering are most primitive; and the water supply insufficient for the cleansing of the meat. Arrangements, however, are now being made, whereby this defect will soon be remedied. A new reservoir is now in process of construction near to the place of slaughtering and designed to be filled from pipes connecting with the valley supply.

The next subject which engaged the attention of the party was an inspection of schools under the charge of the Rev. Father Damien. The buildings occupied for this purpose are supplied by the Board of Health, one of which is used for a boys' school and the other for girls, being situated in near proximity, and on the opposite sides of the roads. But are within the vicinity of the mission church.

In the girls' school are sixteen pupils in all, ranging in age from 9 to 17 years. Among these was the young girl Luahiwa, of whom mention was made by Dr. Fitch in his late Biennial Report. Of all these scholars she bore the worst marks of disease. Out of these children there were four between 9 and 11 years of age who exhibited no external signs of the disease; but one, upon careful inspection by Dr. Arning, was declared to be in the incipient stage of disease.

In the boys' school were twenty-six pupils, all of whom were well marked with the disease.

The pupils of each school are separately lodged and fed. They are all either orphans or friendless, and are under the immediate care of Father Damien and a native woman named Kuilia, not herself a leper.

After leaving the school the party proceeded on horseback for the purpose of inspecting the old and the newly proposed sources of the water supply of the Settlement. The system now in use, and which has been so almost since the establishment of the Settlement, has its source in the valley of Waialeia. It is now recognized by the Board as inadequate to the needs of the place, and a proposition has been made to bring the water from Waikolu Valley—about two miles further on. Waikolu is the place where the paiai supply of the Settlement is landed and dealt out to the patients, being about three and a half miles from Kalawao, and five and a half from Kalaupapa. After traveling the road to this valley one is forcibly struck with the force of the universal objections made by the patients of the great distance they have to travel for their food.

The water supply here is abundant and never-failing, and capable of supplying the needs of a town larger than Honolulu. The scenery of this valley is grand. The numerous cascades darting out in all directions from over the lofty precipices, the spray gracefully falling among the dense shrubbery and covering the green foliage as with gems of pearls. A sight seldom seen or surpassed in magnificence and beauty.

In the valley are several acres of land now lying idle which might be utilized, at a small outlay, in the cultivation of taro and other products for the use of the Settlement. The landing of two boat-loads of paiai during the sojourn of the party there afforded an opportunity of realizing the fact that a number of complaints, already enumerated, were not without foundation. The stream was so swollen by the rains which had been unceasing during our visit that, after a difficult landing had been effected, it was still more hazardous for the animals with their heavy packs, and they had to be forced to cross over the stream.

After staying in the valley for half an hour the party took the opportunity of inspecting a proposed new landing about half a mile from the Hospital, thence returning to Kalawao and visiting on the way every house to be seen. Most noted among the houses visited were the dwelling of Kaulamealani, Napua, Kuanea and Kii. The two last named individuals were pitiable objects indeed, and entirely dependent upon the friendly assistance of their neighbors for what help they received. Their fingers and toes were almost entirely gone with the disease. With suppurated hands and stumpy fingers they had improvised rude bandages for relief. Hospital accommodations and aid were clearly needed, but in reply to the question put to them, they said that they had a horror of entering the Hospital.

Her Majesty, as well as others of the party, was much affected at the touching sight of these two old women, utterly unable to help themselves, and promised every exertion on her part toward the removal of any objection that might really exist in the institution, and that efforts hereafter should be used to render the place attractive and not repulsive. As there was little time to spare, and as Her Majesty had promised to address the people of Kalawao before leaving, she bade the sufferers a kind adieu, and the company wended their way toward the settlement, arriving at the store where the address was to be given at three o'clock that afternoon. A large number of patients had gathered. Her Majesty proceeded to address them similarly as upon the previous occasion at Kalaupapa. At the conclusion of her address, she was heartily cheered by the people. A few among them responded to Her Majesty's remarks, but as they were of similar tenor to those previously given, it will be unnecessary to quote them here. Upon our final parting, three cheers were given for their Majesties the King and Queen.

Before leaving the house at Kalawao, the party engaged itself in planting several seeds of alligator pears and mangoes, taken from a large supply of such fruit seeds as had been brought by Her Majesty for distribution among the people.

The landing was finally reached at about half-past seven o'clock p. m., after Her Majesty had made a slight detour in order to visit an extinct crater whose basin is partially filled with sea water by a subterranean connection with the ocean. Before leaving the place, however, Her Majesty again visited every tenement in the neighborhood. Incidentally I would mention an interview which took place at the landing between one of the party and Kelikapu, one of the former speakers, several others being in the company. This man claims to have contracted the disease from vaccination, it having appeared about four years after. He asserted that through the same agency all of his schoolmates had died of the disease. In speaking of other matters, he said, that a great deal of bad management existed, rendering a loss to the Government of about one-third of the cattle driven to slaughter over the precipitous road from Kalae, and thought it would be far less expensive on this account to land them from vessels at Kalaupapa. He said there was ample pasture in the district for several hundreds of cattle.

He disapproved of the appointment of a resident judge, saying that such an office was unnecessary, and that such an idea had only originated in the brain of one who was looking forward to his own appointment. A foreigner, he said, would never suit as undersuperintendent of the settlement, as, owing to prejudice, his actions would often be misjudged, and trouble of a serious nature might ensue. Natives would be more likely to overlook or condone the fault of one of their own race, than would be the case if the offender were a foreigner. He said that the present overseer Mr. Hutchison was in every respect a good man for the position and universally esteemed in the settlement. He thought there was urgent need of more Hospital accommodation, and medical attendance and nursing. He said that not the least among their difficulties, was that of obtaining wood for fuel. As it was now the patients had to travel far and climb the mountain themselves to get it.

A SPECIAL MEETING

OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF CALCUTTA,
under Act II. (B. C.) of 1883,
WILL BE HELD IN THE TOWN HALL,
on Thursday, the 15th August 1889, at 4 P.M.
TO DISPOSE OF THE UNDERMENTIONED BUSINESS.

1. To approve the Resolution passed at the Adjourned 5th Ordinary Meeting of the Commissioners held on the 5th instant that the Secretary's salary be raised to the maximum salary of the appointment as it exists, viz, Rs 800 per mensem, with effect from the 1st April last.

NOTE.—In bringing this forward for confirmation at the Adjourned Meeting held on the 5th instant, it was overlooked that Section 44 Act II (B.C.) of 1888 requires such business to be transacted at a Special Meeting.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridun Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

OLD-MAID'S MUSIC.

ALL down the long, narrow street
The windows were wide all day ;
The musks and the pinks smell sweet
In the boxes over the way.

The night is a night of June,
When the summer flowers are born,
And, above, a sickle moon
Hangs over the coming corn.

No sigh of the past is there,
And the silence spellful feels :
When out on the dreamy air
The Old-Maid's music steals.

It seems like a story told
That must fill the eyes with tears,—
So sweet, so wistful, so old,
That ditty of fifty years !

Even as I listen and hear,
Those years roll back between,
And the long ago draws near,
Till I look on what has been.

And a sound of footsteps rings,
And the shadows move below,—
While she lifts her voice and sings
That ditty of long ago.

And I see two figures pace
Together, with lingering feet ;
And now 'tis a girl's white face
That looks down the empty street.

And I see her lean and gaze,
And the crowd is black below,—
But the Old-Maid sits and plays
That ditty of long ago !

* * * *

'Tis light in the narrow street,
To-day is the longest day ;
The musks and the pinks smell sweet
In the boxes over the way.

GEORGE HOLMES.

The Spectator.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD'S PERSIAN LYRIC.*

All in a Garden fair I sate, and spied
The Tulips dancing, dancing side by side,
With scarlet turbans dressed ;
All in a Garden green at night I heard
The gladsome voice of night's melodious Bird
Singing that " Love is Best ! "

The shy white Jasmine drew aside her veil,
Breathing faint fragrance on the loitering gale,
And nodded, nodded " Yes !
Sweetest of all sweet things is Love ! and wise !
Dance, Tulip ! Pipe, fond Bird, thy melodies !
Wake, Rose of loveliness ! "

" Yet," sighed the swaying Cypress, " who can tell
If Love be wise as sweet ? if it be well
For Love to dance and sing ?
I see—growing here always—year by year
The Bulbuls die, and on their grassy bier
Rose-petals scattering ! "

All in that Garden green the Rose replied :
" Ah ! Cypress, look ! I put my leaves aside ;
Mark what is mid this bush !
Three blue eggs in a closely-woven nest,
Sheltered, for music's sake, by branch and breast !
There will be Bulbuls ! hush ! "

All in that Garden green the Bulbul trilled ;
" Oh, foolish Cypress ! thinking Love was killed
Because he seemed to cease :
My best-Belov'd hath secrets at her heart,
Gold seeds of summer-time, new buds to start ;
There will be Roses ! peace ! "

Then lightlier danced the Tulips than before
To waftings of the perfumed breeze, and more
Chanted the Nightingale :
The fire-flies in the palms fresh lanterns lit ;
Her zone of grace the blushing Rose unknit
And blossomed, pure and pale !

Holloway's Pills.—Weak Stomach.—The wisest cannot enumerate one quarter of the distressing symptoms arising from imperfect or disordered digestion, all of which can be relieved by these admirable Pills. They remove cankerous taste from the mouth, flatulency and constipation. Holloway's Pills rouse the stomach, liver, and every other organ, thereby bringing digestion to that healthy tone which fully enables it to convert all we eat and drink to the nourishment of our bodies. Hence these Pills are the surest strengtheners and the safest restoratives in nervousness, wasting, and chronic debility. Holloway's Pills are infallible remedies for impaired appetite, eructations, and a multitude of other disagreeable symptoms which render the lives of thousands miserable indeed. These Pills are approved by all classes.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THEY break up camp at Simla on the 31st October, and the offices reopen in Calcutta on the 1st November.

THE Viceroy visits the Khyber and Quetta and is expected in Calcutta on the 30th November.

ACCORDING to programme, the Lieutenant-Governor, after a halt there of three days, leaves Dacca to-morrow, arriving at Serajgunj the next day the 26th. He starts for Bogra on the 27th and will be back to Serajgunj on the 28th. Leaves Serajgunj again on the 29th and arrives at Dhubri on the 30th, Gauhati on the 1st September and Shillong on the 2nd. After a stay of three days, he comes back to Gauhati on the 6th, Dhubri on the 7th, reaching Rungpore on the 8th. Stops there one day, making for Dinagpore on the 10th, reaching Mozufferpore on the 11th. Again a halt of 2 days. Arrives at Purneah on the 15th, where he stops for a couple of days. Then winds his way to Kissengunge arriving there on the 18th. Reaches Siliguri on the 19th and completes the tour of the season, arriving at Darjeeling on the 20th September.

THE High Court closes for the Long Vacation from the 5th September to the 15th November, Messrs. Justices Tottenham and Banerjee dispensing, leisurely and in quiet, the vacation justice of the Court during the period.

THE suite of Prince Albert Victor to India will consist of Sir Edward Bradford (formerly British Agent at Jeypore), Captain G. S. Halford, of the 1st Life Guards, and Lieutenant Harvey, of the 10th Hussars of which regiment the Prince is Major.

THE Bishop of Bombay heads a demonstration against the proposal to despatch the mail steamer from Bombay on Sundays during the monsoon, and on Saturdays in fair weather. He has drafted a memorial to the Viceroy objecting on religious and physical grounds to the change.

THE Greek Professor at Glasgow is a youth of 25—Mr. J. A. Murray. In 1884 he went to St. John's College, Oxford, took the Hertford and Ireland and most other rewards for classical scholarship and got his "first" in 1888.

THE eating and drinking too at Paris has been on an Exhibition scale. There was a feast to the civic Brahmins assembled at the capital worthy of an Indian Governor's father's shradh.

A grand banquet was given on the 18th at the Exhibition to thirteen thousand French Mayors. President Carnot made a hopeful speech. He dwelt upon the evident progress and solidarity of the Republic. The late factious enterprises had made no permanent impression.

OUR Hon'ble friend Syed Ameer Hossein, C. I. E., has had conferred on him the distinction of being chosen for the Dullunda Establishment—in the room of the late Moulvie Kabiruddin Ahmed, a deceased Visitor.

THE Commissioner A. Smith of the Presidency Division has been granted leave during September and October, the Excise Commissioner E. V. Westmacott doing this duty in addition to his own.

THE Queen has been pleased to direct Letters Patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland granting the dignities of a Marquess and Duke of the said United Kingdom unto the Right Honourable Alexander William George Earl of Fife, K.T., and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, by the names, styles, and titles of Marquess of Macduff, in the county of Banff, and the Duke of Fife.

THE Thakurs of Jeypore are, it is said, up in arms against the Prime Minister Kanti Chunder Mookerjee, for appropriating their polo ground. The Baboo had better take care, he has long been obnoxious to all classes, and that boy of his is a regular nuisance.

THE Secretary of State has sanctioned the construction, from borrowed funds, of three subsidiary canals in connection with the Sidnai Canal, at a direct outlay of Rs. 9,62,383 and indirect Rs. 37,092.

THE Calcutta Gazette of this week publishes the price-lists of staple food crops in the local areas of Bengal, prepared under sec. 39 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII. of 1885, for the quarter ending in 31st March 1889.

THE next half-yearly examination of compounders will commence on Monday, the 21st October, at the Campbell Medical School, Calcutta. Applicants must register their names with certificates and fees at least one week earlier at the office of Dr. S. Coull Mackenzie, the Superintendent of the School.

IN supersession of the old, new rules have been laid down for the conduct of all future elections, under Sections 15 and 27 of Act III. (B.C.) of 1884, of Commissioners of Municipalities.

THE Howrah Municipality is to be divided into ten Wards, two of them returning three, six two and two one Commissioner each.

ALL powers vested in the Magistrate of the district under Chapters I, II, and III of the Cattle Trespass Act I of 1871, have been conferred by the Lieutenant-Governor upon the Commissioners of the Calcutta Municipality in respect of all pounds situated within the limits of the Municipality, except those lying within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The surplus proceeds of the pounds affected by the present order will form part of the Calcutta Municipal fund.

UNDER Sec. 16 of the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, IV. of 1889, the Governor-General in Council has issued the following instructions for guidance of the Criminal Courts.

"1.—A trade description of length stamped on grey, white, or coloured cotton piece goods shall not be deemed to be false in a material respect, unless—

(a) where a single length is stamped, the description exceeds the actual length by more than—4 inches in pieces stamped as 10 yards long and under :

18 " " " " 47 " long ;

Provided that the average length of the goods in question shall not be less than the stamped length ;

(b) where a maximum and a minimum length are stamped, the described maximum length is greater than the actual length by more than—

9 inches in piece goods under 35 yards long ;
18 " " " 35 yards and up to 47 yards long ;
36 " " " above 47 yards long ;

Provided that no such piece shall measure less than the minimum stamped length.

II.—A trade description of width stamped on grey, white, or coloured cotton piece goods shall not be deemed to be false in a material respect, unless the description exceeds the actual width by—half an inch in pieces stamped as 40 inches or less in width ;

three-quarters of an inch in pieces stamped as over 40 inches or under 59 inches in width ;
one inch in pieces stamped as 59 inches or more in width ;

Provided that the average width of the goods in question shall not be less than the stamped width.

III.—A trade description of count or number, length or weight, applied to grey cotton yarn shall not be deemed to be false in a material respect, unless—

(a) the described count or number is greater or less than the actual count or number by more than 5 per cent. ; or
(b) the average length of the whole number of hanks in a bundle of such yarn is less than 840 yards ; or
(c) in a bundle described as being ten pounds in weight, the number of knots or moras of ten hanks each is not the same as, and the number of knots or moras of five hanks is not double, the described count or number of the yarn.

IV.—A trade description of count or number applied to a bundle of dyed cotton yarn shall be accepted as indicating length only the hank being taken to measure 840 yards, and it shall be deemed to be false in a material respect if it exceeds the actual length by more than 5 per cent.

Provided that the average length of the whole number of hanks in the yarn in question shall not be less than the described length.

V.—A trade description of length applied to thread of any kind (of cotton, wool, flax, or silk) shall not be deemed to be false in a material respect unless it exceeds the actual length by more than 1 per cent.

VI.—The dimensions of goods on which their length or width is stamped shall be determined by measurement in imperial yards of thirty-six inches."

THE Madras Government has directed that all convicts certified as lepers by the jail Surgeon and sentenced to imprisonment for 3 months and more or to transportation when unfit for it, shall be segregated in a specially constituted criminal ward in a Leper Hospital.

A MAHOMEDAN—Wahed Ali—and three women made themselves free with drink. Having exhausted their stock they wanted more liquor. There being no money to buy with any more of the thing which had elated them, the jewellery on the person of one of the women was now utilised for the moment to supply the ways and means. A neighbouring poddar advanced Rs. 18 on it. An hour after, they thought better of it and proceeded to redeem the articles, but could not agree as to the share each should bear of the amount to be repaid. The jewellery therefore remained with the poddar. The woman who had parted with her ornaments next laid a charge of theft against Wahed Ali. He admitted pledging them but with the knowledge and consent of the owner and for her own use. The Deputy Magistrate in charge of the Suburban Court held the act to be theft. Even if there was consent, he argued, it was obtained at a moment when the woman was not mistress of herself. He sentenced Ali to two months' hard labor. On appeal, the Judge has bailed out the prisoner, pending hearing.

SIR Arthur Havelock, Governor of Natal, has been appointed Governor of Ceylon. Sir Charles Mitchell, who was Governor of Natal in succession to Sir William Robinson, late Governor of South Australia, has been appointed Governor of Western Australia.

RUSSIA at length contemplates measures for preserving the unfortunate animals sent to the world with a natural coat of fur, they having already become scarce from the demand for fur skins in Vanity Fair.

"ORDER is Heaven's first law." And it is maintained through a grand compensation balance by which good comes out of evil. If in the midst of life we are in death, death itself contributes to life. There is no death in the long run. As for the anomaly of injustice or wrong in a righteous and all-wise Dispensation, which has puzzled the philosophers from (say) the Humes (to go no farther) to the Huxleys, the mystery is every day made clearer to the reverent inquirer in the growing consciousness that the difficulty all lies in the concrete—is confined to the relative. The difficulty is more seeming than real. There is no absolute evil. It is most interesting to mark the operation of the balance. According to common belief in Bengal, the rains spoil the eggs of snakes, hence the absence of seasonable showers after the close of summer is regarded with a double anxiety. The world would be overwhelmed with the serpent brood but for a self-destroying principle. The cobra swallows up its own progeny as they break their shells and crawl out. A few only escape, to employ and punish proud man. Many animals from reptiles to quadrupeds devour their own issue. The male monkey—prince of mammals—is a veritable King Herod of the monkey tribe who massacres every Simian infant of his sex. (Here, by the way, is a splendid opportunity for the professional jester of the Bangabasi, for another of his laboured Panchali chharads down to the level of his gaping admirers against us. We have already been definitely reduced to a chamar by this pink of Brahman nobility, and from shoemaker to Simian is but a step—a turn of the wizard's wand—another jingle of the famous bells.)

The world simply overflows with minute life. Of insects, there are about a hundred distinct species. Luckily, they are all in some way or another useful even to man himself. They feed on one another or supply the table so to speak of larger animals even to man.

In the empire of Brazil, particularly in the large Province of San Paulo, there is a rather formidable species of large ants which might be a danger to human society, but that the wise inhabitants utilise it for a delicacy of the table. Hence the ants are captured in large numbers for the purpose, with the result of thinning their ranks. From the earliest historic times, locusts have been one of the recognised periodical pests in all the vast tract of the globe, bordering on the Eastern and Southern shores of the Mediterranean Sea from Turkey and Arabia to the Atlantic Ocean. There too the locust is eaten by man and without reproach. In India, the flight of locusts is unhappily far from unknown, and a dreadful visitation is the visit of these swarming little enemies to any district, and here too it is sometimes eaten by man and is said to be no bad eating either. (Here, again, old Bangabasi, my boy!) But here the locust is a low-caste edible. In the West, Saints and Prophets fancy it. John the Baptist feasted on locusts and wild honey.

WILLIAM SCOTT, an employé of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, the celebrated Printers to the Queen, has died at the age of 95. He entered as reading boy at 14, and rose by ability and application to the management of the Government printing department of the firm, which he retained till his retirement on pension at the age of 74, never sick or sorry, during all that prodigious pull of six long decades, in the close burning-gas-charged atmosphere of a printing office in that foggy and smoky Stinkopolis. An extraordinary instance of a fixture among the restless Saxons and Celts, as well as of tenacity of existence! It might be interesting to know how he managed to escape the ills that flesh is heir to. The less fortunate who form the bulk of humanity, may well regard him as a rebel against Nature.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Queen started on the 22nd on her long promised visit to Wales, and has arrived at Bala, in North Wales.

Her Majesty has honored Prince Bismarck with the present of a life-size portrait of herself.

THE strike of the London dock labourers has assumed enormous proportions. They already number 30,000 and more are joining still. They are ready to fight if new men are brought in to replace them. Many vessels are delayed for want of men to load and unload. The strikers stick to their demand for higher wages. The Directors of the Docks received a deputation of the labourers on the 22nd, amicable proposals were made and drafted but they ultimately fell through. The contagion has spread to men working in the tea warehouses. The carters' strike in Calcutta was a flea-bite in comparison.

THE heavy rains having ceased in England, seasonable weather has set in and the grain crops are hopeful.

The mail steamer Peninsular from Bombay ran ashore in the Bitter Lakes blocking the traffic of the Suez Canal. Next day it floated off and proceeded to Brindisi.

The English Postmaster-General Raikes has again expressed his inability to reduce the postage to India.

THE undemonstrative visit of the Austrian Emperor to Berlin has been politically very fruitful. The treaty of alliance between the two empires has been further strengthened. Formerly, an attack on the vital interests of either nation constituted a casus federis. Now a mere menace is enough. As we believe there is no definition of "menace," the wish will be father to the interpretation.

In reply to Mr. Labouchere, Sir James Fergusson has repeated the denial that during the German Emperor's visit, England promised to support the Triple Alliance against France and Russia in the event of war between the two latter Powers and the Powers forming the Alliance, and said that England was free to act in any eventuality. Mr. Smith has also denied that the British Government was hostile to the Republic, and gave assurances of perfect friendship between England and France.

THE pugilist Sullivan, for the prize fight with Kilrain, has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment. He has appealed and been admitted to bail. These proceedings mark a distinct advance in civilization. When the Bendigo Boy came to England to contest the Belt with Tom Sayer, all England received the thundering brute as a hero.

THE country, however, is just now passing through one of its epidemics of bloody crime.

At the end of last week the editor of a paper called the Londoner killed his wife and daughter, and then committed suicide at Stratford.

A mother and three children have been burnt to death in their house at Exmouth; and at Bromley a woman has been outraged and murdered, and her body mutilated.

The petition signed by 91 Members of Parliament for the reprieve of Mrs. Maybrick, capitally sentenced for poisoning her husband, has been successful. The sentence has been commuted to penal servitude for life.

Mr. Stuart Cumberland has described the Whitechappel murderer he saw in his dream. He thinks that the man will be caught but not before he has completed his career of crime by another and ninth murder. We do not understand the rationale of his information, though we could understand his seeing the vision of the murderer. Thought-reading is apparently developing into pure prophecy.

LATER information is that Ram Singh has not been removed from the Cashmere Council, but has only lost the presidentship. The latest communiqué is to the effect that he has now renounced his opposition and is believed to be working cordially with Amar Singh. We suppose if he becomes a good boy he will regain his lost nominal lead.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY'S tour in Behar was hard work. He inspected as much of the affected districts as was not inaccessible on account of the floods. He was at Bankipore from the 16th to 20th July, in Mozufferpore from the 20th to 23rd, 25th to 29th July and the 2nd to 7th August, in Chumparun from 23rd to 25th July, and in the Durbhunga district from 29th July to 2nd August. He made all possible enquiries from District Officers, District Engineers, indigo planters, as also from native gentlemen who could give necessary information regarding the districts.

THE Divisional Commissioner's report of the fortnight ending in 31st July, shews that the floods have prolonged the scarcity and sufferings in Mozufferpore. The Boor Gunduk had risen above its highest recorded level, and the long Turki embankment south of the Bagmutti had been breached, and these floods combined much injured the crops in the centre of the district. In the Sitamurhi division, several hill streams had overflowed and prevented communication for a time in the interior. The area of the inundation is not given. It is estimated, however, that the bhadoi crops which proved to be promising will not yield more than 10 annas in the Mozufferpore thana, 11 in Kutra, 13 in Paru, or an average of 11 annas in the Sudder sub-division, 13 in the Sitamurhi thana, 15 in Sheohur, 10 in Poopree, or an average of 13 annas in the Sitamurhi sub-division. On the high lands the crops are hopeful. The relief works were practically closed by the 12th July. There is difficulty in procuring laborers on the Durbhunga-Sitamurhi-Bairagnia extension of the Tirhoot State Railway. On the other hand, the candidates for gratuitous relief continue to increase. Uncooked food is given at 13 centres to 2,609 persons, and cooked at 3 to nearly 500, the Zemindars having taken charge of some 2,765. The Lieutenant-Governor has ordered liberal grants for agricultural loans and gratuitous relief, Rs. 15,000 and Rs. 5,000, being allotted for the purposes.

Durbhunga has ceased to cause anxiety. The rivers Daus and Kumla indeed overflowed their banks covering a great tract, but the inundation subsided in 3 or 4 days without any great damage, only some of the bhadoi crops in the low lands being washed away.

In the Madhubani sub-division, in Soorsund and Parihar, the distress had been severe and the floods heavy. The Lieutenant-Governor could not visit these, but the reports were cheering. There was little damage by the inundation and the bhadoi prospects are good. The relief operations must, however, be continued for some time.

In Chumparun, the floods have been serious. In the Bettiah sub-division, the Gunduk rose higher than in the last six years.

RELIEF works were opened in the Parihar, Jalai, Alapur, Naridigur and Rohilla circles. Up to the 25th July, Rs. 62,424 were expended; Rs. 81,157 advanced for the purchase of seed-grain; and Rs. 5,083 given in charitable relief. During the last half of July, at Parihar alone, on an average 800 persons—chiefly women and children—received gratuitous relief. The Maharaja of Durbhunga, as befits his position, has distinguished himself by his substantial cooperation in relieving human suffering.

THE Lieutenant-Governor was not unmindful of the claims of Orissa. Unable himself to visit the distressed tracts there, he deputed his Chief Secretary, for more thorough operations for present relief and provisions against future dangers than those done by the officers on the spot. In a resolution "the Lieutenant-Governor desires to acknowledge the services rendered by Sir John Edgar on his deputation, and the thoroughness of the proposed measures of relief which he has recommended."

THE Hon. Mr. J. W. Quinton, Junior Member of the Board of Revenue, N.-W. P., and Additional Member of the Supreme Legislative Council, succeeds Mr. Westland as Chief Commissioner of Assam. He is at present on leave and returns in October next. Mr. Quinton is a worthy man, of character as well as ability.

MR. C. J. Lyall has assumed charge of the Home Department as Secretary. Mr. A. P. MacDonnell is on his way to Burma to be installed there as Chief Commissioner. A brother of the well-known Irish patriot and Parliamentarian of that ilk, Mr. A. P. MacDonnell has all the ability and culture of his family. He is a brilliant penman and had proved himself a valuable adviser to the Government of India. He will of course carry out the views of that Government in Burma.

THE Thakore of Bhownugger has surpassed himself. He has increased his donation of Rs. 30,000 for an Endowment Fund for the training and maintenance of nurses at a Bombay hospital to a full lac. The gift is coupled with the request that the endowment may be called "The Lady Reay Fund for Nurses" by way of a permanent memorial of his "appreciation of the unremitting efforts of her Ladyship to promote the improvement in India of hospital arrangements in connection with the nursing of patients both male and female," his high esteem for their Excellencies Lord and Lady Reay, and his grateful remembrance of the kindness received by himself at his Lordship's hands. This is a splendid benefaction, worthy of a Prince, worthy of the liberality of the Western Presidency, worthy of the popularity of the present local administration, and worthy of the Reays and the Dufferins.

CALCUTTA had not yet done with the Pioneer case before news came from Madras of an approaching cause celebre in the South. Mr. Eardley Norton has been put in Court by Colonel Moore. At a recent meeting of the Municipal Commissioners of Madras, that redoubtable gentleman moved a vote of censure on the President for improper relations with the sewage farm contractor. That motion was narrowly lost by the votes of the Vice-Presidents. Hence the result scarcely relieved the gallant civic dignitary, the more so as Mr. Norton and his friends still harped suspicion. There was only one way of setting this at rest, and an appeal to the law was talked of. The valiant son of Bruce was not to be silenced by a threat. He announced his resolve not to let the scandal drop. Writing to the Madras Mail, he says—

"That there has been carelessness of some sort, and loss to a certain extent, is now practically admitted on all hands. I should not desist. I should move for an enquiry, and I shall not be seduced from my plain duty by any attempts on the part of the President to terrify me by legal proceedings for libel."

The President like an honorable man has here anticipated the famous Congress orator. Before Mr. Norton has had time to execute his threat, Colonel Moore has made good his. He has filed a suit in the High Court for defamation against Mr. Norton, in which he claims Rs. 50,000 damages. The plaintiff has engaged Mr. Willie Grant. The defendant has retained four leading counsel.

THERE has been a petty quarrel at Bhagulpore over a cow, which a Mahomedan wanted to sacrifice on the late Bakrid and which the Hindus naturally wished to save if possible. A correspondent of the Statesman corrects the different accounts of the matter which have gone abroad with this narrative:—

"There was a certain cow belonging to one Chutter Johar, of mohulla chowki. About a fortnight ago Chutter lodged a complaint before the Magistrate alleging that one Ghurreebulla, monin of Chumpanugger, had taken away from him the cow by force, for which he sought redress. The trying Deputy Magistrate, Baboo Bepin Behari Mookerjee, ordered a local inquiry through the police. During the enquiry the accused stated that he had purchased the animal from the complainant and that he wanted to sacrifice her on the day of Bukr-ood. The police, most probably apprehending a breach of the peace, took the cow into their own custody and reported the case to be false. The Deputy Magistrate, on the report of the police, dismissed the complaint, and ordered the cow to be made over to the accused, requesting the Superintendent to guard against any resistance which might be made by the Hindoos. In the meantime a third person came in, and filed a regular suit in the Civil Court in respect of the same cow, alleging that she was hypothecated to him under a bond. This man moved the Moonsiff to issue an injunction and to attach the cow before judgment under a certain section of the Civil Procedure Code. The prayer was granted, and attachment issued in due course. The cow, being now a disputed property, is still in the custody of the police subject to the Moonsiff's order, awaiting the trial of the civil suit. The Moonsiff's order though justified in law, was resented by the Mahomedan mob of Chumpanugger, and they tried to have it set aside, but to no purpose. For this particular reason the Mussulmans might have attempted to create a disturbance, but they were properly curbed by our good Magistrate, Mr. Wace, and the festival passed off as quietly as usual."

It is lucky that Mr. Wace attended to the matter with promptitude and prudent firmness. These rows have an aptitude for spreading. It is easy to undervalue successful measures of the kind, but candid men of experience know better, and we should fail in candour if we did not acknowledge such service.

THERE has been a sensation in Benares over a cross—very cross—local litigation. The end is reported thus in the Morning Post :—

"The cases against the bania of Orderly Bazaar of Sicrole have just terminated. It will be remembered that an account of the circumstances under which Mrs. Rostan charged the accused under sections 448 (criminal trespass), 504 (using abusive language), and 506 (criminal intimidation) have already been published. The accused produced evidence to show that he went to Mrs. Rostan's house and in a peaceful manner demanded payment of his dues, but the husband of the prosecutrix, who was informed that civil proceedings would be taken if the debt was not paid off, grew angry and destroyed some vouchers which were valueless as the debts represented in them had been already acknowledged in a bond which Mr. Rostan has given, and in which he had made a part-payment of Rs. 25. Mr. Taylor, the Joint-Magistrate, convicted the accused, and ordered him to be rigorously imprisoned for one month, and to pay a fine of Rs. 25, or in default to a further imprisonment of one month. Along with this case, Mr. Nicholson, one of the witnesses, who appeared in Mrs. Rostan's case, also prosecuted the bania for assaulting him on the public roads on the night of the 15th July, 1889, because Mr. Nicholson gave evidence for Mrs. Rostan and against him. The accused produced two witnesses, who commenced with saying that they knew nothing of the matter, and then went on to say that no assault had been committed within a month in the locality in question. At the conclusion of the case for the defence, the Court ordered the accused to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment."

This Bania may not be an amiable person. These small usurers, whose usury is very far from small, who finance for the poorer Europeans and Eurasians, are not a savoury lot, but they are nonetheless entitled to justice, and we are afraid this poor Bania has not got it. Not having any special knowledge of the cases, all we can say is that there is vraisemblance in his account. We know how these things are done. We have heard of the man who commits a nuisance on the highway and frowns on approaching passengers. A lady is often a difficulty in the way of justice in England itself. Even a Eurasian matron may be a thorn in India.

There was nothing strange in the behaviour of the Bania's witnesses in defence against Nicholson's accusation. The insinuation against them is gratuitous. They knew nothing about the matter, and there had been no assault in their neighbourhood within a month. As they were not witnesses to an alibi, they could not in any other way have proved a negative.

THE Deccan papers report the death of Nawab Tahnet Yarud-Dowlah, at nearly 90 years of age. He was a venerable and respected city noble. He had long since retired from active life, but he was a well-known personage, though of modest proportions, in the history of Hyderabad during a long series of years, many decades before. As the vakeel or intermediary between the Nizam and the Prime Minister, he had been useful. He had served under three successive Nizams, and remembered Sikunder Jah himself. He was hale and hearty to the last day of his life, and died counting his beads and reciting part of the Koran.

He has left two sons, of whom the eldest Nawab Mahboob Yar-ud-Dowlah, Mustkham Jung, succeeds him, the other is Nawab Budrud-Dowlah, Ekram Jung, lately deputed by the Nizam to meet and welcome the new Resident at Gulburgah. The young Nizam is said to have had a great regard for the old Nawab, and will doubtless extend his protection to the deceased's sons.

IN our last issue we alluded to a widespread rumour that Dr. Hoernle, the Principal of the Calcutta Medresseh, intended to curtail the usual number of holidays allowed in that institution during the approaching Mohurram festival. Since then we are informed, that the rumour had arisen from the fact of the Doctor having notified that the Medresseh would be closed for 9 days from the 29th instant to the 6th proximo. As a result of this arrangement, the institution would have most probably remained open on the last day of the festival. This was what the Mahomedan community had been alarmed at, as well they might, considering the importance of the last day.

Some of the leading members of the Mahomedan society had addressed the Principal on the subject of the Buckreed holidays, but they discovered the German Domini Sampson is far from an Angelic Doctor for temper, and got very like a snub for their pains. Our correspondent "Arabi Pasha" in his last week's letter had, in drawing his portrait, probably this rout in mind too, besides the scenes at the Asiatic Society.

The clamour and dissatisfaction increasing amongst the Mahomedans with reference to the Mohurram, the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta addressed the Principal on the subject, and pointed out to him the grave hardship which would be felt by the students, if the College was not closed as had always been the case, for the full term of 10 days. We are glad to learn that the Principal has, after all, listened to reason, and issued an order that the College will be closed for 10 days instead of 9. This is a happy termination of an unpleasant affair, and we congratulate all parties on it. We hope there will be no similar indiscreet exercise of authority.

A PROBLEM in gubernatorial casuistry seems to be "exercising" certain minds in high latitudes. The question has been raised whether "monies obtained by receivers of stolen property ought to be regarded as income and taxed accordingly." Why not? The Act is all-grasping and ruthless. Fiscal legislation indeed has no discrimination and knows no distinction. There are practical difficulties in the way, too. How many would escape all taxation if exemption were allowed to incomes derived from exercise of immorality and bad conscience! Where is the line to be drawn?

It is something, at any rate, to find a Government troubled with a case of conscience. So, then, though a corporation may not have a body to be kicked, it may have a soul to be damned.

A GREAT man has fallen. Tantia's occupation is gone. The Robin Hood of Central India, who had for years kept that part of the country under constant anxiety and fear and eluded the pursuit of the Police of all the States, British and native, is now a prisoner, awaiting disposal at the hands of the enemy. Not in fair field has he been reduced—not to lawful pursuit has he yielded. He has not succumbed to any honorable or normal enterprise. He has slipped his foot into no trap of any one's contriving. He has simply fallen victim of a villainy. Captive dacoit as he is, he has by the manner of his capture been almost ennobled. He shines in his fall with a glory thrust upon him by the agents and representatives of Church and State, Order and Civilization. As between the captor and captive, the latter is certainly the more respectable of the two. Like his greater namesake, Tantia was betrayed—by a brother Bhil, at whose house he had taken shelter. This wretch informed Resaldar-Major Ishri Pershad of the Holkar's Service, who went and caught the unsuspecting guest.

But Tantia was a robber! What are your greatest heroes? or all but a mere handful? Notwithstanding all the advance in civilization, the rebuke of the Thracian Dacoit to Alexander the great applies to the modern hero as well as to the ancient. The meaning of the word has in our century been widened no doubt, in order, doubtless, to reconcile modern sentiment to it by the inclusion of really respectable characters who might not be men of blood and iron, but the author of the departure retained much of the old prejudice in favour of the old ogres. His model hero was almost as bad as any of past times, and a cynic into the bargain. Thus he is reported to have said—If I had the millions war would cost, I would not care a straw for treaties, or words to that amiable effect. The "robber" is despised virtually for carrying his depredations on a small scale.

Tantia the Second also is inferior to Tantia the First in the limitation of his sphere and his means and operatives. The genius of the two was similar, and there was a strong similarity in their fortunes—their career as in their fall.

BABOO PRANKRISTO CHOWDRY, the ex-Mayor of Chandernagore, has been decorated with the Palm Leaf of the French Republic. We congratulate his Government as well as the native recipient of the distinction. Although late, the honor has fallen on the really deserving. We speak advisedly and not without the book when we say that France could not, through all her Indian possessions, discover a worthier man or it. Baboo Prankristo and his ancestors have been always attached to the French and have done right knightly service to them. His family stuck to their old masters and would not be won over to the English before the fall of Chandernagore, in the previous century. They suffered in consequence. Baboo Chowdry himself has been a prominent citizen. A thorough man of business, his mayoralty was a brilliant chapter in the history of local self-government, to speak nothing of the great success of a native administration. The "Governor" (Chef de Service) of Chandernagore, Mons. Clement Thomas, before leaving in 1886, thanked the Baboo "for the valuable concurrence I have always met from you." He thus testifies to his labors in the municipality. "Since you have been at the head of the municipality, the public affairs have taken a new aspect." He goes on to say

"You have in the interest of the population taken into hand one series of reforms and ameliorations which will not be slow to bear their fruits.

You have knowledge to win the general affection and esteem by your intelligence of affairs as well as by your elevated character and by your constant care to be useful to your fellow citizens."

"I wish that the inhabitants of Chandernagore should be able to keep for a long time at the head of the 1st Magistrature of the city one who has knowledge to show so worthy of the confidence that his fellow citizens have placed him."

His services as Mayor were recognized at home. The Minister of Marine—the equivalent of the Principal Secretary for the Colonies in England—sent him a Temoignage official de satisfaction, dated 30th October 1885, for his zeal and devotedness during the heavy rains and inundations at Chandernagore in that year. It would take up too much space to recount all the acts of public usefulness of Baboo Prankristo Chowdry. For intelligent well-doing and modest public spirit, his match is not commonly met with, either in French India or British. We feel confident that higher honors await him.

THE "Pioneer" defamation case had an unexpected ending in the Sessions Court yesterday. Mr. Justice Norris held there was nothing to connect Mr. Chesney with the publication of the paper in Calcutta. He directed the Jury as a matter of law to return a verdict of not guilty, which done, Mr. Chesney was discharged. We have no space this week for the eloquent address of Mr. Phillips who with Mr. Handerson appeared to prosecute. Messrs. Gasper and Garth were Counsel for the defence. We reproduce from the Statesman the evidence recorded in the case and what followed.

"EVIDENCE OF PUBLICATION IN CALCUTTA"

Thomas Arratoon Nelson, sworn and examined by Mr. Henderson:—I am Sheriff's officer of the High Court, (shows a paper). I read that newspaper. I read the article marked about the beginning of January. That was in Calcutta. I got the loan of the paper in which I read the article from a friend of mine. Looking at that article I can say it is the identical articles. I don't know where the identical copy of the paper I read.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gasper:—I was not examined before the Chief Presidency Magistrate. I read this paper in the High Court, Calcutta. Since then I have not seen that article. I read it only once, as I read a daily paper.

The prosecution next called—

Charles Stamford Nyss, sworn, and examined by Mr. Henderson:—I am an Assistant in Messrs. Newman and Co., Booksellers and Publishers in Calcutta. I have seen Captain Hearsey. I remember his coming to Messrs. Newman's shop. I sold him two newspapers. That is now about two months ago. These newspapers were sold in the ordinary course of business. I do not know how they are received into the office. Messrs. Newman and Co. are in the habit of selling the Pioneer newspaper. That is in the ordinary course of their business. Messrs. Newman and Co. receive three copies of the Pioneer every day. They are kept for sale by Messrs. Newman and Co. They come in a parcel at both ends open. They come by post in the ordinary way that newspapers are folded up. They remain in the shop till they are sold. It is open only to the assistants to open the Pioneer. I do not remember whether the two papers bore the same date.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gasper:—I don't know how the paper arrives at Messrs. Newman and Co. They had wrapper round them.

THE CONTRETEMPS: DISCHARGE OF THE ACCUSED.

At this stage occurred the contretemps, which took almost everything in Court with surprise, with the exception perhaps, of a few, who having closely watched the cross-examination of the accused, had an inkling of what was to come.

Mr. Phillips (after consultation with Mr. Henderson) said:—On consideration, my lord, I think I ought to call the prosecutor in order to show that he is the person referred to.

The Judge.—I express no opinion. Captain Hearsey wearing a medal on his breast then walked into the witness-box, when—

The Judge (addressing Mr. Phillips) said before this case goes any further I wish to ask if that is all the evidence of publication.

Mr. Phillips.—Except what Captain Hearsey will say with regard to himself.

The Judge.—Except for that, is that all the evidence?

Mr. Phillips.—Except for that, that is all the evidence of publication. That is all the evidence we have been able to get.

The Judge.—Then what is there to connect Mr. Chesney with the publication in Calcutta.

Mr. Phillips:—The fact of the paper issuing under the authority of Mr. Chesney.

The Judge:—I am clearly of opinion that the simple fact of his being the Editor is not sufficient to charge him with the publication in Calcutta. I have no hesitation about it. I must act on my own knowledge of newspaper business. It is no part of an Editor's business to see to the distribution and sale of the newspaper. That is the publisher's or proprietor's business. If you can show that Mr. Chesney was aware of the despatch of these newspapers to Calcutta, to Messrs. Newman & Co., it would be evidence of publication, but if you cannot carry it any further, in my judgment, there is no evidence of publication.

A pause occurred here during which expectation was greatly roused. Here was a hitch which greatly threatened to terminate the case, just at the moment it would have proved most interesting.

Mr. Phillips:—Do you not think that it is part of the Editor's business to prepare and sanction for publication all the issues of the newspaper?

The Judge:—It may be in Allahabad.

Mr. Phillips:—I am only speaking of preparing and sanctioning for publication.

The Judge:—Using the word publication in the sense of insertion in the paper.

Mr. Phillips:—Just so.

The Judge:—That may be—

Mr. Phillips:—And with a view to their ultimately going beyond the place where the paper is published?

The Judge:—Now, I don't think that is any part of his duty.

Mr. Phillips:—With a view I did not say it was his duty to see that it goes out of the office. But it is issued with his knowledge that in the ordinary course of business, the papers will circulate among the subscribers and the general public. That is one of those irresistible inferences. It is almost impossible to bring the case home otherwise. Otherwise it would really amount to the Editor evading his responsibility for anything that he may not himself have written. We are perfectly well aware that the Editor does not personally concern himself with anything that relates to the publication.

The Judge:—I cannot follow you, Mr. Phillips. I think you must give some further evidence to connect the defendant with the publication of this paper in Calcutta. I am sure you can easily understand that the matter has caused me considerable— I won't say anxiety—but I have a very considerable amount of trouble from the beginning of this case to satisfy myself upon every point that I thought could be raised by the prosecution or the defence. I think I have reason for the faith that is in me with regard to every point that can be raised. If you are not prepared to go any further, I shall direct the jury as a matter of law that—there is no proof of publication in Calcutta.

Mr. Phillips:—We are not in a position at the present moment to carry the case any further.

The Judge (to the Jury): Gentlemen of the Jury.—I direct you as a matter of law that there is no evidence of publication of the defendant's newspaper in Calcutta, and I ask you to say that he is not guilty.

(Judge to the public).—If there is any demonstration, or anything of that sort or kind, I shall have the court cleared at once. Let there be no demonstration of any sort or kind.

The Jury then returned their verdict accordingly, and—

The Judge said:—Gentlemen of the special jury you are now discharged. I thank you and your attendance.

The Court then speedily cleared, and the rest of the cases were proceeded with. So ended what nearly every one expected would prove a memorable trial.

Everybody was astonished at the explosion with which the learned Judge dispersed bar and jury, prisoner and plaintiff to the right about. Mr. Chesney himself could hardly believe it was meant seriously.

As we were going to press, we received a paragraph of Domestic Occurrence, for which we make room below. We have much pleasure in congratulating both families and the young gentlemen and young ladies chiefly interested, on the doubly interesting news and both nuptial occurrences. The families are well matched and the couples, we hope, well mated. We wish them joy. Though there is no wedding-cake, no dinner of friends with bridegroom and bride, and no toasting, nor even a honey-moon, as there was no courtship or anything at all like it, there may be ample compensation in substantial felicity. We wish each couple a long and happy married life.

The bridal party proceeded to Nattore by the Mail train yesterday afternoon, and are expected back by the Down Mail which reaches Scaldah to-morrow at 11 A.M.

DOMESTIC OCCURRENCE.

MAHOMEDAN MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.

At Nattore, District of Rajshahye, at the Family Seat of the Khan Sahibs, on the night of the 23rd August, 1889, were married, according to the rites and ceremonies of Islam, Mr. A. F. M. Abdur Rahman (Barrister-at-Law) and Moulvie A. K. M. Abdus Subhan, Khan Bahadur, Deputy Magistrate of Patna, the two eldest sons of Nawab Abdool Lutef Bahadur, to the third and fourth daughters of the late Chowdhry Mahomed Rusheed Khan, Khan Bahadur, Zemindar.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1889.

DEWAN HET RAM ON BURMA.

I HAVE had lying by me, for sometime, a small pamphlet, entitled "Burma visited by P. Het Ram, C.I.E., Dewan of Rewa."

This gentleman manages the affairs of the state of Rewa, and has done so for a considerable time, during the present minority of the chief. In the month of March last, the Dewan visited Burma, and after residing 14 days there returned to India. For the benefit of his countrymen no doubt, he has fallen in with what is apparently considered the right thing to do, namely, to convey the impressions of your visit, through the press, by book or pamphlet. The latter form the Dewan has chosen to record his observations and impressions. The chief interest attaching to the pamphlet lies in its having been written by an Orthodox Hindoo. As such, of course, it has nothing in common with the ambitious literary efforts that have preceded it from time to time, not unoften influenced by a desire to be distasteful. On the contrary, looking at things as the Dewan must have been made to look at, through official glasses, all here is, as doubtless all did for the time appear to him perfectly clothed colour de rose. The Dewan's observations convey to us at any rate the novelty with which he was struck by the strangeness of the Burmese and their habits. He does not favor the Bengali opinion which has stood up for the cause of Theebaw. At the same time, he does not classify the people of the country as a band of dacoits. In fact, the free and easy style of the Burman seems to have amused him considerably. One feature in particular is the privilege the female sex enjoys. The familiarity of the sexes does not seem to have shocked the modest Hindoo feelings of the Dewan, but must have highly tickled his fancy, as he assures his countrymen that Burma is a fertile field to secure a wife, the Burmese girls are pretty and attractive. Not only does the Dewan believe in the fertility of Burma as a matrimonial field, but also a fertile field for labor. The cultivator and colonist of Hindoostan he exhorts to take advantage of the easy terms of land offered there. There is one great drawback, however. The Dewan omits to impress upon his countrymen he would counsel to emigrate, whether with the object of forming a matrimonial alliance or that of entering upon land cultivation, that they must take capital with them, without which they will starve. That the Burmese female makes a good wife is undeniable. I know instances of Europeans whose fortunes were built up by Burmese females. Among Mahomedans there are many such instances. The Burmese females I should say are the most industrious of all Asiatics of their sex, and, as the Dewan says, docile and submissive to a degree. For sometime, one or two elaborate schemes of emigration have been encouraged by Government, that of the greatest importance being supported by the chief of Dumraon. There must be some substantial action more than writing on the subject to recommend any plan. It is advisable individual emigrants wait the result of the Behar operation, if it ever gets any further than mere talk, of which I have grave doubts. The Dewan's assurance of the perfect quiet prevailing in Upper and Lower Burma, if estimated at its true value, is not worth much from the fact that he did not venture himself into the interior two miles from the banks of the Irrawaddy. I do not imply that the Dewan has misrepresented the state of things he himself was eyewitness of, but his visit was so limited to time probably, that he could not venture beyond reach of any part of Burma that was never actually in a disturbed condition. What the Dewan describes as having actually seen himself is fairly enough put before his Indian brethren. But I cannot lend myself to endorse his assertions against Theebaw and the state of his territory, which last he likens to the condition of India before the introduction of British rule, when tyranny, rapacity and confusion reigned supreme. Had the Government of India when administered by Lord Ripon acted with greater firmness, things would never have come to that chaotic state which necessitated the interference of Lord Dufferin in 1885. With one or two exceptions, the whole press of India, native or English, have severely condemned Lord Dufferin's annexation of Upper Burma. Lord Ripon permitted Burma to drift into a perfect state of chaos, whether purposely or not is not for me to say at present. I know the difficulties Lord Dufferin had to contend with, all of which if handled by a firm administrator years before would have avoided the consummation of the act Lord Dufferin has so unjustly been censured for.

ZITO.

THE PRODIGAL RETURNED.

NATIVE Calcutta has received a notable accession to its number in the return of a well-known individual. He is a Bengali and Baboo of course, but not of the genus classical, except by way of courtesy. Not but what he cares little for classicism, Oriental or English, Sanskrit or Hellenic. Why should he? he who would any day sell (whether you take the word as used in common parlance among the natives of England or in that among those of Bengal) in the nearest market any "lot" of representatives of European enlightenment or the country imitation. No "ovation" greeted this public character on his return, he was allowed to re-enter Black Town in quiet. But he will yet be revenged for the neglect, and doubtless secure his due honours before long. He is a political practitioner of medicine and the auxiliary sciences (such as chemistry) and other arts on those on whom he has a chance of trying his proficiency. This extraordinary medical man was the favorite Physician in Ordinary to the late Raja Haris Chunder, a typical landlord of Mymensing who, for convenience and pleasure, had domiciled himself at Calcutta, where he had taken a house in a far from reputable quarter and lived in congenial society. Among other peculiar traits, the Raja had a great disinclination to pay his dues without legal compulsion or threat. This disposition, though it might be agreeable in its consequences, was not without its drawbacks. The Raja frequently received invitations from courts in town and country as a witness. For though Government had raised the Chowdry to a Raja, he had not been freed from the obligation of attendance at courts in propria persona. He had sought the coveted distinction of exemption under Section 641 of the Civil Procedure Code, but he was at once too little and too wellknown to induce Government to exercise in his favour the discretion vested in it under the law. His smart court Physician readily came to his rescue—for a consideration—a small reward of Rs. 5,000 or so. He produced a document purporting to be an order of exemption from attendance in any civil court by the then Lieutenant-Governor Sir Rivers Thompson and bearing the signature of his Private Secretary Mr. Barnes. The Raja was delighted so much so as to rally in the illness from which he was suffering, and which had been aggravated by the terror of being compelled to appear in court. Only one thing remained to fill his cup and presumably complete his recovery—the notification of the exemption in the official Gazette. He was told that it would come in due course soon. Instead, however, of the Gazette appearing, the believing Raja himself soon expired. As among the papers of the historical Maharaja Nundcoomar, so among those of the late Raja, many suspicious documents were found. Besides the sanad of Sir Rivers Thompson, there were letters from Dr. Coates, who had been treating the Raja in his last illness, in which the eminent Brigade Surgeon assures his patient that he will exercise his influence to get him the object of his desire—the sanad. Of course, Dr. Coates had no more to do with the letters than Mr. Barnes had with the sanad. Accordingly, Baboo Gopal Chunder Dutt, Physician in Ordinary and what not besides at the Court of the late Raja Hurris Chunder, was brought under a guard of honour, told off for the purpose from Mr. Lambert's Force, before the Magistrate to answer to a charge of forgery. That authority, in consideration of the dignity of his guest, sent him, with all due honours and with a suitable escort, to Her Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal to do him justice. There his answer did not prove satisfactory either. In accordance with his importance, he was sent for safe custody and proper exercise, not to say rigorous discipline, in the great castle at the Southernmost end of the plain before Fort William, for the space of six years. There he evaded the penalty of labor altogether, to say nothing of hard labour, by a convenient knack of falling into epileptic fits and was removed to the lunatic asylum. His disease was soon enough cured in that haven. The medical visitors naturally took pity on a plausible brother in distress and recommended his release, and so he managed to be at large at the end of little more than two years! It is of course the stupid convicts that under the blessed British system serve out their full term. Our hero has, of course, resumed his practice.

While he was attending Raja Hurris Chunder, he had insured his brother at two Insurance offices for Rs. 9,000 and Rs. 10,000 respectively. Luckily for him, the insured like a good accommodating brother, after the payment of the first premiums, suddenly died. There was some difficulty in burning the body, but the surviving medical brother produced a doctor's certificate and removed the scruples of the burning ghat people. The hero now preferred his claim against the Insurance companies. His trial and imprisonment prevented his prosecuting it. Now he is out, the Companies had better look out.

And so had Mr. Lambert too, and Government also. Above all, let society beware!

NARAIL.

August 19, 1889.

*River Chitra, on whose banks our village is situated, was the scene of a tragical event the other day. Several people, who had accompanied a wedding party, were returning home at night, by a boat. As soon as the boat neared the shore, all the passengers crowded together on one side of it to get to the shore. The boat capsized with the whole of the crew. All, however, swam to the shore, and reached home unscathed, with a solitary exception. This was a poor old man, who expired on the shore.

THE CHUCKDIGHI LITIGATION.

Written Statement of Lalit Mohun Roy, defendant No. 1.

The defendant Lalit Mohun Roy states as follows:—

1st.—That he is advised and believes that the plaintiffs have insufficiently stamped their plaint filed in this suit and that they were bound to pay ad valorem Court-fee on the value of property the subject-matter of such suit under Clause 1 of the first schedule of the Court-Fees Act 1870 and not under Clause 17, Sub-divisions 3 and 6 of the second schedule thereof as they have done.

2nd.—That this defendant is further advised and believes that the said plaint does not disclose any cause of action.

3rd.—That this defendant is further advised and believes that Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India in Council is a necessary party to this suit.

4th.—That this defendant is further advised and believes that regard being had to the provisions of Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act of 1877, the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain this suit.

5th.—That on the death of Saroda Prosad Roy the testator in the plaint mentioned, his executors took and held possession of all his estate, movable and immovable, for and on behalf of this defendant as the absolute owner thereof, subject to such valid religious or charitable bequests as affect the same, and so continued to hold the same until the Court of Wards of Burdwan division on the day of day of took possession of the same on behalf of this defendant as the absolute owner thereof, and thenceforth the said Court held the same for and on behalf of this said defendant until on the attainment by him of his majority when the said Court made over the same to him, and thereafter this defendant himself held and enjoyed and still holds and enjoys the same as absolute owner, and this defendant submits that such possession was throughout adverse to all other persons whomsoever, and that by such possession, he has acquired an absolute right in the said estate by prescription even if such absolute right did not vest in him by the will of the said testator, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to disturb such right.

6th.—That this defendant is further advised and believes that the plaintiffs' right of suit, if any, is barred by the law governing the limitation of suits.

7th.—That not waiving his objections to his suit hereinbefore set forth but relying and insisting thereon, this defendant believes that the statements contained in the first seven paragraphs of the said plaint are substantially correct, save that Beroda Debi in the said plaint also named predeceased the said testator and did not survive him, as is alleged in the said plaint, and that the said will and codicil thereto in the said plaint referred not only purport to be, but are the last will and testament of the said testator.

8th.—That with reference to the allegations contained in the eighth paragraph of the said plaint, this defendant denies that he is managing and holding the said estate in the sense alleged by the plaintiffs, and he asserts that, as is hereinbefore stated, he is in possession thereof as its absolute owner and is dealing with it as such subject to the said religious and charitable bequests contained in the said will and codicil.

9th.—That this defendant admits the statements contained in the ninth paragraph of the said plaint save that he asserts that he is now of the age of only 29 years or thereabouts.

10th.—That this defendant denies that, as is in the 10th and 11th paragraphs of the said plaint alleged, the plaintiffs became, on the death of Rajessury Debi, entitled to succeed to the said estate, or that they or either of them have or has substantial or any rights or interests thereto or therein or to or in any part thereof, or that the same or any part thereof is in any way vested in them or either of them.

11th.—That while submitting the true construction of the said will and codicil to the judgment of this Court, this defendant wholly repudiates the fanciful construction which the plaintiffs have sought to put thereon respectively in the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth paragraphs of the said plaint, and he submits and humbly insists (1) that according to the true construction of the will and codicil, the said testator has conferred an absolute heritable and alienable interest in the said estate on this defendant as the absolute proprietor thereof, (2) that at all events the said testator has conferred such interest as aforesaid on this defendant defeasible only in the event of his dying without leaving male issue naturally begotten or adopted and that such defeasance was in favor of person other than the plaintiffs then and still in existence and capable of taking the same, and (3) that in any case regard being had to the ultimate gift in favor of the said Secretary of State in Council, the heirs of the said testator are effectually excluded from taking any right, title or interest to, or in, his said estate.

12th.—That this defendant admits the statements contained in the fourteenth paragraph of the said plaint save the allegation that the directions contained in the said will and codicil in respect of the religious and charitable institutions therein mentioned are not being carried out, which allegation is, as this defendant asserts, false, the fact being that all the bequests and directions contained in the said will for religious and charitable purposes have been and are, save only as respects the asylum of the poor therein directed to be built, fully and properly given effect to, and as to the said asylum, this defendant states that he has all along been anxious to build the same and had, in fact, collected materials and selected a suitable site therefor near the Hospital erected by the testator, but has hitherto been unable there to build the same owing to the improper refusal on the part of the plaintiffs to carry out the arrangement, which had been come to between them and himself with respect to the said site.

13th.—That this defendant lastly submits that the plaintiffs have no right to the said estate or to any part thereof, that even if they or either of them had any right, they are not entitled to any relief in respect thereof in this suit, and that it ought to be dismissed with costs.

Written Statement of Bipin Mohun Roy, defendant No. 2.

1. The plaintiffs' suit cannot be entertained according to law inasmuch as instead of paying stamp duty upon the value of the property under claim, they have brought the suit on a stamp of Rs. 10 only.

2. According to the allegation in the plaint, the plaintiffs have no cause of action.

3. The plaintiffs' suit is open to defect of party inasmuch as the Secretary of State for India in Council has not been made a party to this case.

4. The present suit of the plaintiffs is inadmissible under Sec. 42, Act I of 1877.

5. The plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation.

6. The allegation in para 3 of the plaint that Biroda Debi was alive at the time of the death of the testator Sharoda Prosad Roy, is not true. As a matter of fact, Biroda Debi died in the life-time of Saroda Prosad Roy.

7. The allegations made by the plaintiffs in paras 10 and 11 of the plaint that on the demise of Rajessuri Debi, wife of the testator, substantive right accrued to the plaintiffs, and that excluding the valid gifts out of the legacies mentioned in the will, the plaintiffs' right of inheritance or any other right accrued to or devolved on the other portion of the said estate, and so forth, are not true. As a matter of fact, no substantive or any sort of right accrued to, or devolved on, the plaintiffs in respect of the said estate or any portion of it.

8. The will and codicil referred to by the plaintiffs in paras 11, 12 and 13 of the plaint are fabricated and not genuine. This defendant has no objection, rather he fully consents to the said will being truly construed by the Court.

9. This defendant is advised and believes that according to the true interpretation and construction of the said will, the plaintiffs or any heirs of the testator other than persons named in the will have no sort of right, concern or ownership. The provision contained in the will and codicil that in the absence of the persons, recipients of ownership, the estate would pass into the hands of Government, shews that the testator intends not to make the heirs legatees.

10. The plaintiffs' allegations that Lalit Mohun Roy defendant No. 1 or any other person named in the will was not vested with absolute right in the estate left by the testator and that with regard to heirship, provisions contrary to the Hindoo Law had been laid down, are not true. As a matter of fact, the right conferred by the will on Lalit Mohun Singh Roy defendant No. 1 is absolute right according to law, but in the absence of son, grandson, &c., born of loins or adopted, at the time of the death of Lalit Mohun, the said right would cease, the same absolute right would devolve on this defendant, who had been born in the life-time of the testator, and on the son, grandson, &c., born of the loins of, or adopted by, this defendant; and in the absence of this defendant and his son, grandson, &c., born of his loins or adopted by him, the said estate would devolve on the other persons named in the will—such right is perfectly legal.

11. The plaintiffs' allegation in para. 11 of the plaint that the charitable and religious legacies and the rules enjoined in the will are not being carried out, is not true. As a matter of fact, the directions contained in the will in respect of religion and gift are duly being carried out. Only the building, which was directed to be constructed for the residence of 50 helpless persons, has not still been completed. The defendant No. 1 has collected materials and selected a site for the construction of the said building. But as the plaintiffs have acted contrary to the arrangement made between them and the defendant No. 1 in respect of the said site, a bar has arisen with regard to the construction of the said house.

12. The plaintiffs have no manner of right to the estate of the late Saroda Prosad Roy or to any portion of it; and even if they had any right, the plaintiffs cannot reap any benefit of it in the present suit. It is, therefore, prayed that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed and costs awarded against them.

Written Statement of Priambod Roy, defendant No. 3.

1. The plaintiffs have no cause or right of action in this case.
2. According to the allegation contained in para. 3 of the plaintiffs' plaint, the late Biroda Soondari Debi, mother of the defendant No. 3, was not alive at the time of the death of Saroda Prosad Roy.

3. According to the will and codicil of the deceased Saroda Prosad Roy mentioned in the plaint, no manner of right has accrued to the plaintiffs, as heirs, to the estate left by him or to any portion of it.

4. The construction put upon the said will or codicil on behalf of the plaintiffs is not correct. The said Saroda Prosad Roy laid down certain moral injunctions in the said will in order that after his demise, the legatees may not waste the said estate and that his own acts may remain alive.

5. The plaintiffs' indirect allegation that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have no absolute right to the properties granted to them by the said Saroda Prosad Roy under the said will and codicil, proceeds from misconception and is unfounded.

6. The grants made for religious and charitable purposes under the said will are valid according to law.

7. The directions laid down at the latter end of para 4 of the said will in favor of this defendant and his successors are valid according to law.

8. The duties are being discharged according to the purport of para. 4 of the said will, and as Rs. 25,000 mentioned therein was not paid to this defendant, he brought a suit against the defendant No. 1 in the year 1889 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the district of Burdwan, and it is still pending.

9. Two sons of the plaintiff No. 1 have been married to the two daughters of the defendant No. 1. From the circumstances and probabilities of the case it seems that they have, by mutual collusion, instituted this suit. Therefore, the written statement is filed and the defendant prays that he may be exonerated from the unjust suit of the plaintiffs and costs awarded.

Will executed by Sarada Prashad Ray, dated the 2nd Asoin 1272.

I, Sarada Prashad Ray, son of the late Ambika Prashad Ray, and grandson of the late Bhairab Singh Ray, of Sura Chakdighi, division Selimabad, chowki Selimabad at Memari, pergunnah Havelli, District East Burdwan, do hereby execute this will to the effect following:—

I am in a perfectly sound state of body, and am not afflicted with any disease, which may cause any apprehension regarding my existence. But life is transitory, and there is no knowing as what may befall it and when. I have got no son nor daughter born to me up to this time. Whereas it is highly necessary for me to make some particular provisions for the purpose of temporal and spiritual beatitude, so that everything may be done peacefully after my death in accordance with such provisions, that the members of my family may not suffer any inconvenience, and that no representative may, in future, waste away the property, &c. at pleasure, extinguish the family name and prestige, or prove troublesome to the family, I do by this will make the following provisions, in a calm state of the mind and with a sincere heart, in respect of all properties held by me in Districts Burdwan, Hooghly, &c., ancestral or self-acquired, movable or immovable, standing in my own name or ostensibly in the name of others, rent-paying or rent-free, as also revenue-paying zemindari, putni, dur-putni, se-putni or mokrori, &c. taluks; khiraji (rent-paying) or lakhiraj (rent-free), resumed lakhiraj, and gardens and tanks, houses and buildings, and personal properties, Company's papers (Government Promissory Notes), trading business, Jewellery, Shawls and Rumals, &c.,—whatever estate movable or immovable I have and of which I am the absolute owner and of which I hold exclusive possession no body else having any connection or concern therewith, or right or interest therein; inasmuch as I do not live joint and undivided with any of my agnate or other relatives and as I have separated long ago in mess and house from the descendants of my great-grand-father, have got the properties, movable and immovable, of my share duly partitioned leaving no concern with anybody—in short, in respect of all properties movable or immovable mentioned below, that are now held by me or that may be acquired hereafter. And all acts shall be performed in accordance with those provisions, and nobody shall ever be competent to contravene the same, and whatever may be done in violation thereof shall be inadmissible in every way.

1. That there are at Chakdighi one Shiva Thakur established by my grandfather, and one Shiva Thakur established by my mother, and I have, in accordance with the letter of the late Hon'ble Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, No. 1499 and dated the 29th August 1859, sanctioning my request, founded a dispensary at Chakdighi at my own expense and under the supervision of the Government. Besides these, I have, moreover, resolved to found an institution capable of entertaining 50 men always, from my own village, adjacent villages and from abroad, with food and clothing for life, who by reason of their being maimed in body, crooked, lame, blind and incapable of moving about are incapable of earning their own livelihood by bodily labor, the lepers only being excluded. In order, therefore, for the convenient and satisfactory performance of the services of the said deities, for the maintenance of the Dispensary and of the aforesaid 50 men, who are incapable of helping themselves and for the performance of my mother and father's sradhs and other rites and ceremonies, daily and periodical, I endow my putni taluk lot dihi Baghnan, lot Para Baghnan and lot Gangeshnagar in Zillah Hughli and lot Netrakhandia and lot Chuk Bhurah in Zillah Burdwan, and make a separate list of the amounts to be expended on these several accounts. According to that list, the profits of the aforesaid putni taluks amounting to Rupees 9,996-2 annas-10gds. shall be applied for ever in performing the services of the deities, sradhs of my father and mother, and the daily and periodical ceremonies, in paying the salary of the medical man attached to the Dispensary and of the karpardaz; in purchasing country medicines required in addition to English medicines, generously supplied by Government and in defraying the expenses for maintaining the in-door patient or patients of the hospital until their recovery and supplying medicines to the out-door patients treated at the Dispensary until their recovery; and in repairing the Dispensary-house from time to time, when necessary. In like manner, the aforesaid 50 men, who are incapable of earning their livelihood, shall be located in a separate place, that is, in the house to be erected by me for their accommodation and shall get food and clothing when necessary, through life. Should any of them die or be removed, other such person or persons shall be admitted in the place of the persons, so dying or removed, subject to the discretion of the malik or owner for the time being. For the accommodation of these helpless persons, a pucca house shall be erected from the income of my estate at Chakdighi. The properties, out of the income of which the expenses of the services of the deities and of the dispensary were hitherto defrayed, being thought inadequate for the proper maintenance of those institutions, I endow them as well as other taluks for the purpose, taking away detached pieces of lands, hitherto set apart for the purpose. The profits of those taluks shall be permanently applied in the above ways, and nobody shall be competent to dispose of those taluks by gift or sale or to place them under mortgage, nor shall they be liable to sale for the debts of anybody; and if they be sold at all, such sale shall not stand good and valid. The profits of those properties, which are hereby endowed, shall not be applied or used for any purpose other than those mentioned above. If for any reason, the profits of the said properties be diminished or if, for some accidental cause, all those mehals or any one of them should pass into other hands, the amount so assigned shall for ever be paid out of the interest of the Company's Papers belonging to my estate.

2. That I reserve to myself the power of management of the taluks, which I have endowed for the purposes alluded to in the 1st para., namely, the performance of the dev-sheva, the entertaining of atithis (itinerant guests), the performance of my father and mother's sraddhs and other daily and periodical ceremonies, maintenance of helpless persons and the defraying of the expenses of the Dispensary and other institutions, and that after my death my representatives shall have the same power also.

3. That with the exception of the putni taluks, endowed as stated in para. 1 above, the undermentioned zemindary, kherajee, lakheraj and other immovable properties, yielding a profit of Rs. 50,193-8 annas, 2 pie a year and Company's Papers of the value of Rs. 2,40,000 only fetching an interest of Rs. 11,100 only a year, both amounting to Rs. 61,293-8 annas 2 pie, shall be considered as composing my estate, unless I dispose of the same by sale or gift during my life-time.

4. That should, by the grace of God, I be blessed with one or more sons, such son or sons shall be the owner or owners of my estate after my death, and he or they shall have the charge of looking after the dev-sheva, the dispensary, the helpless persons getting their daily bread, as well as other affairs. Such portion of the income of the estate, as shall be left after paying the monthly allowances, &c., according to the provisions of this will, shall be spent for necessary purposes, subject to the consent of their heirs. If, however, instead of any male child, one or more daughter or daughters should be born to me, such daughters shall become the owners of my estate down to their sons, son's sons and so on, in succession, and shall be vested with the power of looking after, and shall look after, the performance of the dev-sheva, and the maintenance of the Dispensary and of the helpless persons, &c. In the event of not my being blessed with any children, that is, any son, son's son and son's son's son, or any daughter and daughter's son, or in the event of their not being alive at the time of my death, then my nephew, Lalit Mohun Singha Roy, the eldest son born of the womb of my third sister Kheroda, whom I have loved as my own son since his birth and who by constantly living with me has pleased me by his good conduct and moral training and who has been brought up by me, shall, on my death, become my representative and the owner of my estate and properties, &c., and being invested with the power of looking after the dev-sheva, the Dispensary and the daily fed helpless persons, he shall as my representative reside in my ancestral dwelling-house at Sura Chakdikhi and enjoy the profits of my estate down to his sons and grandsons and so on in succession by preserving the said estate. The said nephew is still under age; and if I die during his nonage, my wife Srimati Rajessury Debi and my cousin's (i. e., father's sister's son's) son named Jogendra Nath Roy of Maniram Bati shall become the guardians and executors of the minor and manage all the affairs according to the provisions of this will, until he comes of age. When the minor shall come of age, he shall exercise the proprietary right in respect of all the estate. Should he die without any male issue, his widow shall get an allowance of Rs. 100 per month for life; should he die leaving a daughter or daughters behind him, such daughter or daughters shall have their own expenses and the expenses of their marriage from my estate. Should there be no son, grandson nor great-grandson of my nephew, then the eldest of the sons of my sisters Birada and Kheroda, excepting the one who is born of the womb of Kheroda and is insane and therefore excluded from inheritance, shall have the power of holding the management of my estate and properties, &c., and he shall become the owner of my estate down to his sons and son's sons and so on in succession and look after the Dispensary, the dev-sheva and the daily fed persons as well as all other affairs and enjoy the profits by preserving the estate and draw and receive interest on Company's Papers and renew them and do other things in connection with them, when necessary.

5. That in the event of my male children or daughters getting my estate, my nephew the said Sriman Lalit Mohun Roy shall receive from my estate an annual allowance of Rs. 10,000 only down to his sons, son's sons and so on in succession and get a separate dwelling-house built at Chakdighi at an expense of Rs. 10,000 only to be paid from my estate, and in case of his having no son, grandson or great-grandson by son, &c., the amount of the said allowance and the dwelling-house shall revert to my estate.

6. That of my 4 sisters, the eldest Srimati Sukhada and the youngest Srimati Kulada are both childless widows, and they as well as my paternal aunt Srimati Kadambini Debya, who is also a childless widow, have been and are living in my house up to this time and are being maintained by me. After my death they shall get an allowance of Rs. 100 only a month each for their maintenance and shall occupy the two-storied rooms in the eastern portion of my inner apartment. After their death their allowance shall revert to my estate.

7. That my third sister Kheroda Debi is now living as a member of my family. The said sister shall get a monthly allowance of Rs. 100 from my estate down to her sons, son's sons and so on, in succession, and my second sister Beroda Debi shall get a monthly allowance of Rs. 100 from my estate as long as she lives, and her son, that is, my nephew Priyambod Roy, shall live and be brought up and educated as a member of my family until he attains majority. After he attains majority, he shall get a monthly allowance of Rs. 100 from my estate down to his sons, son's sons and so on in succession. When my sister, the said Srimati Kheroda and my nephew Priyambod Roy shall go and live in their house, they shall get Rs. 5,000 each from my estate for the purpose of building houses for their residence, irrespective of whether I live or die, and they shall get from my estate at the rate of Rs. 1,000 only for the marriage of their son and Rs. 500 for the marriage of their daughter. But on the failure of their having sons, son's son, son's son's son and so on in succession, they shall get their said monthly allowance only for life. Besides this, my nephew the said Priyambod Roy shall, on attaining the age of 25, receive from my estate Rs. 25,000 as a donation once for all, and my second and third sisters shall receive the said monthly allowances after my death.

8. That after my death, my wife Srimati Rajeshsori Debi although acting as the guardian of my nephew Sriman Lalit Mohun Roy, shall continue to get from my estate Rs. 300 only a month for her food and raiment, as long as she lives; and she shall own her Sreedhan (dower) &c., the precious ornaments, which I have given her from time to time or which I may give her in future, as also the jewellery &c., which are for my own use. She shall live in the two-storied rooms of the inner apartment, which she now occupies, until her death; and she shall not be competent to act otherwise. She shall also receive from my estate reasonable amounts of money for performing religious ceremonies and going on pilgrimage to holy places, as she may require. On her death, her allowance-money and the ornaments &c., left by her shall revert to my estate.

9. That the person, who may succeed as my representative, shall, after defraying his own necessities and paying, year by year, the expenses payable according to the provisions of this will out of the income of my estate, spend the surplus balance spared, in charitable purposes for perpetuating the name and glory of my family, keeping in stock, however, such amount as may be necessary for the preservation of the estate.

10. That whoever shall, for the time being, become my representative in estate shall sign his name as owner of the estate, register his name and conduct and manage all lawsuits and affairs of the estate in conformity to the said rules.

11. That whoever shall become my representative, shall take particular care and pay special attention to the performance of the dev-sheva, to the feeding of itinerant guests, &c., and to the maintenance of the Dispensary and of 50 such persons as are incapable of helping themselves, as mentioned in paras 1 and 2.

12. That in case I fail to build without delay a house for the accommodation of the daily feedable persons, who are incapable of helping themselves, as mentioned in para 1 and in case I die, then the person, who shall become my representative, shall perform a benevolent act by constructing one good pucca building fit for the accommodation of those persons.

13. That in case the persons, provided by the will to become my representatives, leave no person behind capable of succeeding them as their representative after their death, then the Government shall out of favor take the whole of my estate under its control, and out of the income of it, shall open a college in my own native place Chakdighi and make proper arrangements for the management of the said college and for the performance of the charitable deeds and the payment of the fixed monthly allowances mentioned in para. 1 above and for the due performance of all the provisions of this will.

14. In the event of there arising any inconvenience in the management of business by reason of the two guardians of the said minor Sreeman Lalit Mohan Roy failing to act in accord with each other, or in the event of any waste being made by the guardians, my whole estate shall go under the management of the Court of Wards, and everything shall be performed in accordance with what has been written above. I do execute this will to the above effect.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

LINES ADDRESSED TO AN OXFORD FRIEND

(From Mr. Rennell Rodd's new volume *The Unknown Madonna, and other Poems.)

Strange, is it not, old friend, that you who sit Bowered in quiet, four garden walls your world,
With books and love and silence,—sails fast furled
And grounded keel that hardly now will quit
Its stormless haven, —you sit there and write
Of human passions, of the fateful fight,
Of all men suffer, dream, and do,
Denounce the false and glorify the true !

While I the wanderer, I whose journey lies
In stormy passages of life and sound,
I with the world's throb ever beating round,
Here, in that very stress and storm of cries,
Make songs of birds, weave lyric wreaths of flowers,
Recall the spring's joy and the moonlit hours,
And know that children's ways are more to me
Than all you write of and I have to see

IRELAND.

(The opening Stanzas of "The Banshee," from Mr. John Fodhunter's recently published The Banshee, and other Poems.†)

I.

Green, in the wizard arms
Of the foam-bearded Atlantic,
An isle of old enchantment,
A melancholy isle,
Enchanted and dreaming lies .
And there, by Shannon's flowing,
In the moonlight, spectre-thin,
The spectre Erin sits

II

An aged desolation,
She sits by old Shannon's flowing
A mother of many children,
Of children exiled and dead,
In her home, with bent head, homeless,
Clasping her knees she sits,
Keening, keening !

III

And at her keene the fairy grass
Trembles on dun and barrow .
Around the foot of her ancient crosses
The grave-grass shakes and the nettle swings ;
In haunted glens the meadow-sweet
Flings to the night wind
Her mystic mournful perfume ,
The sad spearmint by holy wells
Breathes melancholy balm.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE three Officiating Judges of the High Court—Messrs. Rampini, Gordon and Hill—go out from the 9th September, the three permanent Judges—Messrs. Wilson, Macpherson and O'Kenealy joining the Court after the Long Vacation. Both the Bengal Civilians go on leave—Mr. Rampini for 3 months and Mr. Gordon for 27 days, to prepare for descent to the nether world—before resuming work as District and Sessions Judges.

The intermediate rustication cannot be deemed to be thrown away, if it succeeds in thoroughly breaking in the whilom legal gods pro tem to single harness and the business and bosom of everyday life in plain and valley.

THE Joint-Magistrate Ashutosh Gupta acts temporarily as Magistrate and Collector of Jessore.

THE Personal Assistant to the Commissioner of the Chota Nagpore Division Rai Churn Ghose has passed an examination in the Munda language and won the prescribed reward of Rs. 1,000.

THE Second Half-yearly Departmental Examination of 1889 of Assistant and Deputy Magistrates in the Regulation and non-Regulation districts, and of officers in the Police, Medical, Forest, and Opium Departments, begins on Monday, the 11th November 1889.

THE fortunate son-in-law has again justified his title. He has been confirmed in class III of the Bengal Educational Service from the 27th April, vice Mr. J. Van S. Pope. These appointments, if they do not wholly go by favor, are, at any rate, no reward of merit.

EIGHT mouzahs of Pergunnah Barbakpore, belonging to the Dubulhati estate, ordered in December 1887 to be surveyed along with others, for the preparation of a record of rights under the Bengal Tenancy Act, have been saved that expensive settlement of rights between landlord and tenant. The order as regards these has been cancelled. We take this as a sign of the return of good feeling between the Raja and his tenants, who have been at war for the last several years. This will enable the manager of the estate to save the credit of his master by payment of the debts which have been hitherto overlooked overmuch—with the usual unhappy result.

WITH the exception of section 31, the Indian Salt Act XII of 1882 has been extended to the Sonthal Pergunnahs.

THE outstills at Kanchrapara, Jadubati and Jaguli, in the Nuddea district, have been closed and distillery shops substituted for them. Within certain areas around these places, the introduction is forbidden, without a pass from the Collector, of country spirits manufactured elsewhere than in the distillery at Hooghly. The prohibition equally applies to the construction or working of stills and to manufacture of spirituous liquors, within the defined boundaries.

TO raise and strengthen the Bhagirathi Embankment, Register No. 94, from 0 to 32nd miles in the Moorshedabad district, 21 biggahs and 5 cottahs of land will be taken up by Government under the Land Acquisition Act.

FIFTEEN days' quarantine has been imposed in all Turkish ports against all arrivals from ports of the Persian Gulf. The period runs from the 22nd August.

"EXECUTIVE ENGINEER" thus solves, in the Englishman, the Calcutta sewage problem:—

"A very interesting article about a visit to the Salt Lakes near Calcutta appeared in a recent issue of the Englishman. It told of the filth that existed on the Square Mile there, of the beasts and birds of prey that existed on this garbage, of the succulent maize that thrived on it, and lastly, of the wind that wafted the malodorous air direct to the purlieus of Chaurangi.

'Is our civilization a failure, &c.?' This Bret Hartian question may well be asked here in these days of science. It is very well known that by making settling tanks, running the sludge into these, adding clay, alum, &c., all the solid filth can be caused to settle at the bottom of these reservoirs, and only the fluid portion of the sewage allowed to flow away. This latter, by being caused to flow over a weir, can be thoroughly aerated, and so become sufficiently purified to be run into a river. The deposit is next pumped up, submitted to pressure, formed into balls, either pure or mixed with clay, burned, and finally ground to powder and packed in bags ready for sale as manure. This is a process carried out on a large scale in England, and what is there to prevent the same plan being resorted to in this country? Such manure would fetch a high price, and if any soil wants improving surely our Indian soils do.

It is very easy to suggest an improvement, but most difficult to ensure its being carried out. In the sewage now carried to the Salt Lakes there is, one must think, a means of making a large fortune for any private firm, if Government does not undertake the work itself. A line of rails is said to be already in existence, so that there is absolutely nothing to prevent the necessary plant being bought and erected on the most convenient site."

THE prosecution of Meejee Lukshmon is a persecution indeed. He was employed at a Parsee's at Jessing, in the Broach district. The case is thus stated by the Advocate of India:—

"It is said that on the 25th of April last he asked a man named Wassan, a professional hunter, to procure for him a live deer, which he intended to present to his master. Wassan promised to do this; but as the expedition on which he set out that day proved unsuccessful, he informed Meejee, whom he is said to have met on his way back, that he could not get a deer. Wassan was never seen alive again. His dead body was found on the road on the 27th, with evident marks of ill-treatment. The skull was fractured, and several ribs were broken. A post mortem examination further showed that death had been caused by a rupture of the spleen, which was unnaturally large. The doctor was of opinion that death must have taken place forty-eight hours before the body was found.

The important gap between the disappearance of the man and the finding of his body was soon filled in. Witnesses came forward to say that on Wassan informing Meejee that he could not get a live deer, Meejee beat him severely with his clenched fists in their presence, and, accusing him of theft, put him into a cart, and drove away. It was alleged by these witnesses that this assault was committed in their immediate presence: more than this, that several persons were at work in adjoining cotton-fields at the time. With this evidence, duly furnished up by the police doubtless, Meejee was taken before a native magistrate, and charged with voluntarily causing grievous hurt. This testimony, it will be remembered, went only so far as to say that the accused had assaulted Wassan with clenched fists. But against this assertion there was a positive medical opinion that the man had been beaten with a stick, and common-sense recoils at the notion that a skull may be fractured and ribs be broken in such an assault as was described by the prosecution. True, the police alleged that bamboos similar to those in Meejee's cart were found on the spot where the quarrel is said to have taken place; but it is an obvious objection that such bamboos are common to all carts in that part of the country, and that these particular bamboos did not bear the traces of blood. What wonder that the magistrate acquitted the accused, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient and untrustworthy? The surprising part of the business is that Mr. T. Hamilton, Acting Sessions Judge at Surat, should have set aside the acquittal, and ordered that Meejee be re-tried in the Sessions Court.

Once more, therefore, was he arraigned on the old evidence before another judicial officer—Mr. Dyaram Gidumal, Joint Sessions Judge, Broach—and a panel of assessors. The assessors were not more seriously impressed by the story told by the prosecution than the magistrate had been. They unanimously returned a verdict of 'not guilty'; but Mr. Dyaram, disagreeing with them, convicted Meejee, and sentenced him to suffer four years' rigorous imprisonment, and to pay a fine of Rs. 200, or in default to undergo a further term of imprisonment for six months."

There was an appeal to the High Court, and Messrs. Justices Scott and Jardine have found that Meejee was condemned on "incredible" evidence.

THE Parnell Indemnity Fund exceeds £40,000, while the expenditure is only £20,000. The question now is How is the balance to be expended? The Dublin Express would like to have it distributed among the evicted tenants or returned to the subscribers. There seems to be no law on the subject. Usually, the Committee charged with the administration of the Fund have their own way in the disposal of the balance. Sometimes, the general body of subscribers are invited to consider the matter—most of whom are unable to attend, and consequently leave the matter to the Committee, and the resident Committee virtually rule the day. A few of the distant subscribers to the Prince of Wales' Native Reception

Holloway's Pills and Ointment exert a rapidly favourable effect in all those diseases which are induced by exposure to damp or by great changes in temperature. They will therefore be found eminently serviceable to those who work in iron foundries, copper mines and collieries. These well-known remedies present manifest advantages in respect of use and effectiveness, being entirely compounded of vegetable drugs selected with the greatest care and regardless of price. When used in accordance with the ample printed directions which accompany them, they act surely but mildly, and do not interfere with the daily work. There are but few diseases which are not capable of cure—or, at all events, of great relief—if Holloway's remedies are perseveringly used.

Fund wished their shares of the surplus to be paid over to the fund for the Unchastity case. But their right to the unexpended balance was not recognised.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE London strike for higher wages threatens to be historical. It commenced on the 16th with 2,500 dock labourers. In 5 days the number swelled to 30,000. The contagion took. Next day the men employed at the tea warehouses joined the revolt of Labor against Capital. Before a fortnight had elapsed, other labourers in the London port, the wharfingers and the coal heavers had cast in their lot with the disaffected who now numbered 1,30,000. It was next the turn of the workers at coal depôts, gas works and iron works. Later on 2,000 printers took up the cry. The latest report is that the tailors are coming over—not merely the famous Three of Tooley Street, but counting by thousands. The strikers held a meeting of 50,000 at Hyde Park on the 25th in which they unanimously resolved to continue out. The war has hitherto been a bloodless one. But there is no depending on the temper of vast multitudes animated by a common feeling of wrong. Luckily, there are signs that this mutiny of Labour cannot last longer. The masters have begun to give way, and coal heavers have returned to work with the increased pay they demanded. A manifesto has, however, since been issued by the Dock Labourers' Committee appealing to the workmen of all the trades in London to strike on Monday next, unless the demands of the labourers are granted by noon this day. Unless the masters agree to the full demand, the strikers hold another meeting at Hyde Park tomorrow. The Dock Directors have raised their offer to 5 pence but the labourers stick to their six.

OTHER bad reports come from the Continent. Three Hundred foreigners have been expelled from Warsaw. Half the town of Dubno in Russian Poland has been destroyed by fire. Greece has been visited by a series of earthquakes to much damage of property. A St. Petersburg telegram also speaks of a terrible shock at Khenzorik, a hundred persons being buried alive by falling houses.

THE Queen has returned to Balmoral from her visit to North Wales.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Balfour promised to bring forward a Bill for the endowment of a Catholic University in Ireland.

The India Council Bill has passed the Upper House.

Lord Cross has announced in the House of Lords that the Bombay Mamlatdars who had offered bribes for certain favours would be sent out with compensation, but the victims of extortion would be retained in the service and guaranteed against prosecution.

Lord Cross has assured the Upper House, that there never was any intention to annex Cashmere. The Maharaja would be restored to power as soon as the situation in that quarter had been remedied. That will hardly be much of a consolation to Maharaja Pratap Sing. His hopes lie in Providence and the Powers of earth which do not believe in It—such as the Romanoff and Bradlaugh. The Russian Novoe Vremya considers the action of the British in the Unhappy Valley as virtual annexation of that territory affording justification for Russia to take measures in her interests on the Afghan and Thibetan frontiers.

The Indian Budget was presented in the House of Commons on the 27th, as usual, late in the session and before a poor House. Sir John Gorst attributed the increase of salt revenue to its being bonded in anticipation of a reduced tax. He also explained that the increase in the tax had not affected the consumption. He announced that more Rs. 70,00,000 would be sunk in frontier railways and Rs. 2,50,00,000 invested in defences. He scouted the idea of any decrease in civil expenses. Although certain reductions recommended by the Civil Service Commission have been given effect to, it was hopeless to contemplate a centralized India, for the present policy was to encourage provincial independence in matters financial, legislative and administrative. It had been calculated that the conversion of four per cent. securities would secure an annual saving of £266,000. He concluded by saying that India was in a prosperous condition and that the periodical gloomy forebodings were groundless. The Member for India Mr. Bradlaugh pressed for the abolition of silver ware duty; charged Government with dishonest appropriation of the Famine Fund; condemned the costly expenditure on buildings at Simla, and called for stricter financial control. Sir Roper Lethbridge pressed the old recipe for a Royal Commission on India. The Under-Secretary of State for India, in reply, did not deny the famine fund, but defended its appropriation as spent on railways, on irrigation—thereby lessening the chances of famine, or properly speaking facilitating the transport of food during famine—and in the reduction of debt. He held out prospects of abolition of the outstill system at an early date. He objected to fussy interference of certain Radical members. An amendment to abolish the salt tax was negatived.

Parliament was prorogued on the 30th, the Speech from the Throne referring in approving terms to loyal offers from the Native Princes for defence of the Empire.

“The Daily News has been proscribed in the Turkish dominions. The telegram gives no reasons, but they must be of the usual kind. Anyhow, it is a good advertisement for the Liberal organ.

THE Russian expedition under Colonel Pevtsoff to Thibet has been stopped by the local Chinese authorities in Kashgar.

NEWS from Japan is distressing. Most disastrous typhoons and floods are reported from Wakayama, in the province of Nippon. No less than 10,000 persons are said to have been lost and double that number rendered homeless.

ACCORDING to the report laid before the Academy of Medicine by the Commission appointed by the Medical Congress of 1888, held in Paris,

“One-third of the mortality in France is caused by tuberculosis. In 1884, out of 56,970 persons who died in Paris, about 15,000 were carried off by this disease. The report says if mortality from tuberculosis is so great, it is because pulmonary phthisis is not the only manifestation of tuberculosis, as the public generally imagine. The doctors consider as tuberculosis many other diseases besides pulmonary phthisis. Tuberculosis is a virulent, contagious, and transmissible disease, caused by a microbe which penetrates into the system by the digestive organs with food, by the respiratory organs with the air, by the skin and mucous membrane after abrasions, punctures, wounds, and various ulcerations. Sundry maladies, such as measles, small-pox, chronic bronchitis, pneumonia, &c., predispose a person to contract the disease. It adds that the microbe of tuberculosis may be met with in the milk, muscles, and blood of animals used for food, such as oxen, cows, and especially rabbits and fowls. Raw meat and underdone meat should be prohibited, as the germ may be in the blood. For the same reason, milk should only be drunk after being boiled. Particular attention is called to the milk given to infants, as over two thousand children under two years of age die annually in Paris of tuberculosis. A mother having the disease should not suckle her child.”

That and the controversies of Dr. Huxley and other sanitary reformers, only prove that, throughout Europe, milk is used without boiling, and meat fully or partially raw consumed, with, of course, consequences most injurious to the comfort, and even fatal to the health of, the population of Christendom. Here then is another very important point on which Europe may still learn from the East. In India, at any rate, meat is thoroughly cooked—spoiled by too much cooking—usually with a lot of spices and condiments which also go far to destroy all hostile organisms that might creep into it. And milk is always boiled before consumption. The old Sanskrit authorities in medicine taught the secret which has now been discovered by the advanced medical inquirers. Every housewife—not to say schoolboy—is familiar with what, under the grand new name of science, the doctors are making such a fuss about. Our people are therefore comparatively exempt from diseases from which so many suffer and die in Europe.

This new knowledge in the West will, we suspect, strengthen the cause of the publicans and sinners. It certainly goes against teetotalism. Were it not for the common use of spirits in Christendom, the victims of the minute microbes would, we fear, have been counted by many more thousands. We believe strong spirits are fatal to these infinitesimal but formidable pests. For one thing, we remember, Dr. Grauvogl of Germany proved that absolute alcohol destroys the diphtheria parasite.

ECCELESIASTICAL litigation has, in common with the odium theologicum, the quality, if so it may be called, of being endless. What wonder that the Bishop of Lincoln, undergoing trial for heterodoxy before the superior in the Church, the Lord Primate, is yet far from discerning signs of approaching land. We read in an English paper of Aug. 9:—

“In the case of Read and Others v. The Bishop of Lincoln the bishop is charged before the Archbishop of Canterbury with having on two occasions used or performed certain ritualistic practices during the celebration of the Holy Communion alleged to be illegal. To this the bishop contested the right of the archbishop to try him. That point having been argued at great length, and decided against his lordship, the bishop, in reply to the articles of the prosecutors, argued that being a bishop he was not bound by the rubrics, canons, and ecclesiastical laws and constitutions of the Church of England in the same way as an ordinary priest. The archbishop again decided against the bishop, and announced that the Court was prepared to hear the merits of the case. Upon this Sir Walter Phillimore, on behalf of the bishop, entered a ‘negative issue,’ and asked for time to file a ‘responsive plea.' This plea was ordered to be filed on Aug. 6 before twelve o'clock at the archbishop's registry; but by arrangement, and with the consent of the vicar-general, the time was extended until Aug. 13, when this 'responsive plea' may possibly be filed."

We wonder what the uninitiated Oriental reader thinks of this tedious business. Of one thing he is sure, that some fundamental dogma of the faith is in dispute—the vital interest of the Church at stake. What must be his disappointment to be told that there is no doctrinal difference between the parties in this terrible tempest in a teapot! It is a mere tailoring business! A row over clerical chapcans and chogas!

THE higher authorities and even nonofficial men of position living in Presidency capitals, have no idea of the endless annoyances and petty tyranny which the people have to put up with in the country. To begin with, the microscopic system of British administration must answer for a good deal of all this. That system necessarily leads to harrassing interference with the subjects of the Crown. The poor people are constantly required, to do this, that or t'other. Then the laws are so many and so complicated! In spite of the incessant activity of the numerous mills of State in that behalf, they are so uncertain and, above all, so difficult to understand! The makers themselves of the laws and regulations hardly know their own minds. The administrators, great and small, from Governor down to constable, are absolutely at sea. This is a strange commentary on the claims of our functionaries and our British legislators. But facts are facts. The slightest inquiry in any direction will produce a handful. Any week's careful perusal of the papers will discover shoals.

THE chief constable of Jamner in the Khandesh district, Bombay Presidency, forwarded a written order to the head constable in charge of a subpost at Shendurui directing him to send to him to the police station six persons as witnesses in a case under the Arms' Act. The head constable communicated to the parties concerned the order of the chief constable. One of the six, Sitaram Devidas, refused to attend on this order which he argued was neither a summons nor a warrant which should be obeyed. He was therefore prosecuted under Section 174 of the Indian Penal Code, for not obeying a legal order to attend at a certain place, and convicted by the Rao Saheb Lakshman Chintaman, second-class Magistrate of Jamner, and fined Rs. 10 with the alternative of as many days' simple imprisonment. Mr. W. W. Loch, the District Magistrate, was dissatisfied with this order—not that he considered the Rao Saheb had lightly disposed of the case but that he was wholly wrong in ordering any punishment. Mr. Loch made a reference to the High Court in which he states—"the only authority in the Code of Criminal Procedure which empowers the police to secure the attendance of witnesses in investigations is Section 160. The words are 'may by an order in writing require the attendance of any persons', and I think these words mean that an order should be addressed directly to the person whose attendance is required, as is done in the case of a summons. The wording of the section is, however, not quite clear." The High Court has accepted the interpretation of the District Magistrate and reversed the conviction and sentence.

These petty tyrannies of the sub-magistracy tend in a great measure to crush the remaining notions of the rights of citizenship still left in the country.

THE first class magistrates are no better instructed in the law. Mr. R. V. Gadkari of Wada, in the Thana District, fined Vidiadhar Gungadhar Lele Rs. 40, in default one week's simple imprisonment, for disobeying the order of a public servant by omitting to attend the court of the District Deputy Collector, Thana, on a summons issued by the Mamlatdar of Bhiwandi. On a review, the High Court held that a Mamlatdar is not empowered to summon a person to attend before a Deputy Collector.

These cases by no means exhaust the liabilities of the people to oppression under colour of authority. The forms in which they are tickled by the myrmidons of the Executive are innumerable. Many as are the powers that be entitled to come down upon the Queen's subjects, specially the poor and unsophisticated, these, under a lax administration without Parliamentary check, are indefinitely multiplied. The rank and file of the administration habitually exercise the private leges of the superior hierarchy, and are obeyed, partly in ignorance, partly in despair of any practical relief, so elastic is Indian legislation in favour of Government in any shape or under any pretence, and such is the vicious spirit in vogue among the higher officials of supporting their underlings at any cost!

In the Calcutta Survey, lately a clerk called on a gentleman to shew cause why he should not be prosecuted for omitting to answer the notices issued on him.

The submagistracy, of course, daily act in the name of the District Chiefs and other superior officers. Deputy Magistrates and Deputy Collectors issue notices and orders for Magistrates and Collectors, with or without authority, often without the knowledge of the latter. But is a Deputy competent to sign for the Collector?

Under the prevailing laxity of the State departments and the meek submission of the people, these officers do not care always to be intelligible. From the perfunctory way in which documents addressed to individual citizens and the public are issued, it is in most cases difficult to determine their validity or ascertain the credentials of the officers issuing them or even make sure of their identity.

THIS reminds us of a correspondence, in 1871, between a Zemindar and the Collector of a neighbouring district, in which the former took exception to the notices issued from the Collectorate in the following terms:

"Before I proceed further, I beg to be permitted, not only as one concerned in the present matter, but also generally as a dutiful citizen of the State, to point out the suspicious external character of the notices and other papers issued from Courts and Government Offices like those of the Collector and Commissioner. It is not only that the writing is often illegible and the paper always wretched, though the former is a serious matter, if the latter be rather one of taste—but what is worse is, that the documents are utterly wanting in the necessary marks of authenticity. How, for instance, can one be sure that the notice the receipt whereof I hereby acknowledge is genuine? There is nothing which can be properly called a seal mark or confidently a signature. There is indeed a dark circle or outline of one meant doubtless for a seal mark, but there is no appearance of so much as a letter in any language, nor is the absence of a seal mark made up by anything that can be read as a signature of any officer. There is a writing near the seal (such as it is), but while I have been long trying to decipher it in vain as a signature, a friend suggests the reading 'True copy,' and it may be so, or a signature, or anything. Under these circumstances the notice not coming with any mark of genuineness, one would be morally and I hope legally justified in not taking cognizance of it. It may be deemed a small matter, but I respectfully submit it is not. It is because care is not taken in making the seals and signatures legible that so many imposters are enabled to extort and harass people, particularly the ignorant and in the interior, by palming off on them their fabrications as documents served by authority. Although my chances of being so deceived are small, I take this opportunity to bring this matter to your notice in the interest of good government, considering it a more loyal and proper course to inform Government through its own appointed officers, and in due course as the point is suggested by a matter under consideration of one of them, than to appeal to the public through the press, in which it is likely to take the form of a factious cry. I believe that a reform in the direction indicated is necessary in so ignorant a country, and well worthy of the attention of Government to the notice of which I hope you will bring the subject."

HERE is a truly painful record of the rewards of public spirit in British India, even in a part governed by a statesman like Lord Reay.

Mr. Ardesir Merwanjee, Chairman, for the last 15 years, of the Lanowlee municipality, in the Bombay Presidency, and a man of position to boot, was criminally prosecuted, along with the Secretary, for Rs. 69-10 found short in the municipal cash. The account was examined on the 12th December last by the Mamlatdar of Mawal, a personal enemy of the Chairman, shewing a balance of Rs. 466. Mr. Merwanjee produced only Rs. 298 and said the remainder was with the Secretary then on leave. The Secretary being sent for by the Mamlatdar, on the 14th December produced, as the balance in hand, Rs. 99-6. The Mamlatdar immediately reported the Chairman guilty of criminal breach of trust as a public servant. Accordingly, both Chairman and Secretary were hauled up before Mr. Lucas, the Assistant Collector of Poona. The Secretary was let off. The Chairman urged that Rs. 69-10 was not accounted for in the books, because it could not be. The books had been examined up to the 10th and this sum was not paid till the 12th, to the sweepers who were to receive it. The prosecution admitted the facts to be so, but suggested that the money was paid to the sweepers on some date after the 12th, on threat of criminal proceedings. Not a tittle of evidence was given that payment was made after and not on the 12th. Notwithstanding, the sage Lucas convicted poor Ardesir Merwanjee and sentenced him to seven days' imprisonment and Rs. 1,000 fine. There was, of course, an appeal, but the Sessions Judge Mr. Crowe would not interfere with the order of the lower Court, and the Parsee gentleman had to work out the sentence of imprisonment. There was a second appeal to the High Court, and Messrs. Justices Scott and Jardine have reversed the conviction and sentence. They are of opinion that, if guilty at all, the accused was simply responsible for a slight delay in paying the sweepers, which was no criminal offence. The conviction is quashed but the stigma of a felon's residence in jail attaches to Mr. Ardesir Merwanjee, and will stick to his family. And hereafter, when the explanatory circumstances become dim, some literary Fouché of the Government of Bombay will utilise the conviction for calumniating the whole Parsee race in a secret report. This is a strange illustration of self-government under a paternal Despotism.

THE Mohurrum commenced on Thursday the 29th instant, the new moon having been seen the previous evening. The festival is celebrated in this town in a grand style in the Imambarrahs of Haji Mirza Abdool Karim Shirazi and the late Agha Mahomed Kurbulai, as well as in the Imambarrah of the late King of Oudh at Garden Reach.

The grand processions will come out of the Imambarrahs on the Chitpore Road in the afternoons of the 4th and 5th and the morning of the 7th proximo, when the festival comes to an end.

THE Government of India have had Prince Albert Victor's tour under consideration. The programme arranged has been sent home for final approval. The Government of India would have the Prince land at Bombay in the beginning of November and proceed direct to Poona, where he would be the guest of the Governor at Gunness Khind. Thence he would proceed to Bhownigger to open a new port on that coast. The Gaekwar has invited the Prince to visit Baroda, where he will be housed at the new palace. The Nizam of Hyderabad will receive him at his capital. Then His Royal Highness will make his round through India. Whether he will visit Burma or not, remains to be settled by the home authorities.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 31, 1889.

THE SIN OF GREAT CITIES.

THE subject I have chosen to-day, though a very unsavoury one, is of the greatest importance to society generally, and at the present moment it is causing no little anxiety, while taxing the ingenuity of the Secretary of State and the ablest men in India, how to combat this scourge of sin. In my earlier life, I spent many years in Germany, residing in Hamburg, Berlin and Leipsic, and was frequently struck with the admirable system in force, particularly in Hamburg, which acts almost as a perfect safeguard against the loathsome and contagious disease. Before proceeding further, without any intention of wounding the feelings of any one, or myself being less scrupulous in matters of nicety than any other individual, I make bold to say with a half-heartedness for fear of offending religious or other scruples, we do not look the evil in the face, but meet it half way only. With the admirable example before us on the Continent, our statesmen, clergy and laymen must look at the matter with a bold front, admit the necessity of the evil, and place it under a proper system of control, and grapple it, as they do in other civilized countries, with the hand of iron, and for any contravention of the law let the punishment be sure. If, as is agitated for, there is to be a reimposition of the Act, I can see no good reason against it, whether in the interests of Tomy Atkins or Tomy any body else. It is contended by many that the Act is revolting. I am of a different opinion. The revolt is not in the Act, but in the manner in which it is enforced, in the conduct of those entrusted with its working. Can there possibly be anything more revolting or indecent than the congregation of fifty or a hundred females, in all stages of the disease, standing outside in a narrow street, brought together like so many animals, each awaiting her turn for admission and examination? I have witnessed this not once but a hundred times over. Is this necessary? I contend it is not. Those responsible for such dereliction of duty should be called upon to explain why this exhibition of infamy is made so public. As I have said, it is not the Act that is either obscene or revolting. On the contrary, the Act is a necessity, as the result of an evil, which evil, if we would look at it with open eyes, be candid with the argument and restrain imaginary evil thoughts, is a necessity. That I am bold enough to make this assertion, will probably bring a hornets' nest about my ears. But in support of what I say—did this evil not exist, respectable females could not go forth as they do now unless protected from unseemly and ruffianly outrage. Even now we hear from time to time of the modesty of females, European and native, being outraged. What the result would be if the evil had no existence, no man living would have the courage to say. In no city on the Continent of Europe would such scenes as the one enacted daily and in broad daylight in Calcutta, be tolerated for one hour, and yet the rights of citizenship are not interfered with. On one occasion I resided in Hamburg for three years and knew every nook and corner of that city. During that term I never saw one German the worse for liquor in the streets. Female drunkenness is a thing unknown in Germany, at least it was so in my early school days. Fast females—it is a milder expression than we are in the habit of hearing in Calcutta—are not allowed to ply their trade in the open streets. Neither are they permitted to do so out of their own houses, which are confined to two streets, Schwieger Strasse and Dantewahl. They are not prohibited from appearing in public, but they are so under police surveillance that any attempt at solicitation is never made. The lost dens out at St. Paul's Gate are as paradise to anything visible to the naked eye in Calcutta.

Bremen, Antwerp and Rotterdam, like Hamburg, are all large shipping ports. In none of these are scenes visible such as are of daily occurrence amongst fast females, European and native, in Calcutta. Sundays in all the above ports are invariably marked with an occasional drunken brawl with English seamen who get leave on that day, but drunkards are invariably met by a closed door at any of the licensed houses.

All houses of ill fame are licensed, and any female who plies a life of prostitution is also licensed. This probably to the sanctimonious community of Calcutta may seem revolting, it is not half so much so, as worse than revolting scenes are daily passing under our eyes and those of our children and daughters in Calcutta. The evil is kept under restraint, it is not visible. Yet the evil exists, has existed since the creation of Adam and Eve, and, despite all efforts of Exeter Hall or other such institutions, will continue to exist to the end of the chapter. That efforts should be made to suppress the evil as much as possible, I will not deny. But the authorities do not put an effort forth to do so. Or, they do not know how to proceed about it, or won't. The latest craze of the Contagious Diseases Act is that it is demoralizing the army in India. Why is it allowed? Can it not be checked? I answer it can, by adopting proper measures. There is no such thing as a Contagious Diseases Act on the Continent, yet the disease is kept within limits. Many will say the Continental system is not adapted to this country. Why? It is adapted to this or any other country that looks the evil in the face, and admits that it is an evil of necessity, by placing it under control and punishing any contravention of the law under which it is to be restrained with severity.

ZITO.

RELEASE OF THE SEIKH PRISONERS.

IN the Reis and Rayyet of the 17th August, there appeared, under the title "A Glimpse of the History of the Punjab," an account of the imprisonment of the Seikh political prisoners Sirdars Prem Sing (for a short time Wuzir to Dhuleep Sing's mother Rancee Chunda), Colonel Maun Sing, of the Seikh Artillery, and Lal Sing, the whilom Khotwal of Lahore, for a supposed plot to poison Colonel Henry Lawrence. How is it that when the Government of India wish to interfere in the internal management of their greater or lesser Feudatories' states, some trumped up charge is brought against the Chief, Raja, or Maharaja, of a plot to poison or murder some Government official, which plot if judicially enquired into, would be found to have not the slightest fraction of truth? Look at Cashmere at the present moment! Other instances of this kind of dealing with our feudatories are too numerous to mention. Even as a child my mind was always open to tales of injustice and oppression. I have wept as a boy of eight or nine years of age over the cruelties inflicted on the Poles by Russia and the imprisonment of Baron Trench and other celebrated prisoners.

One day in the month of March 1865, whilst on duty at the fort of Allahabad, I visited the arsenal and lingered there sometime gazing at the long lines of stacked rifles, with the swords and pistols arranged in fanciful devices on the walls, watching the play and flash of the sunlight streaming through the windows on the burnished bayonets and sabres. I stopped at the doorway to look more closely at an old model of a brass cannon constructed on the Palliser principle, that is, with an iron or steel centre tubing. I recognised in it the handiwork of my grandfather Major Hyder Hearsey. I asked one of the employes whence it came and was informed it was from the Agra arsenal. The sun was fast setting and it was time for me to go round my guards and likewise to pay a visit of inspection to Sirdars Prem Sing, Maun Sing and Lal Sing. I saw my bearer at the gateway of the arsenal waiting with my sword, so, casting a hasty glance at the gun in question, I hurried to the gate. The quarters of the Seikh prisoners adjoined the arsenal, so I went up the steps to their room to ask the old stereotyped question—"Any complaints?" How many times during the period of their twenty years of incarceration must this question have been asked, and how many times at this mockery of their grief must the words "Justice" and "Enquiry" have sprung to their lips only to be immediately repressed by the innate knowledge that if they were to express their complaints, they would not be listened to! I was ushered into their room furnished with only cots and tables. There was not the slightest attempt at any comfort which one might expect from a rich and powerful Government for political prisoners whose supposed crimes had never been enquired into. A tall fine man was gazing through the barred window of his prison at the setting sun throwing the lengthened shadow of the fort across the waters of the Ganges, thinking doubtless of his home and longing to be once more with his dear ones from whom he had been parted, simply on suspicion, for upwards of twenty years. My bearer had followed me after handing over to me my sword into the apartment. I forgot to premise that my bearer Kurrum Khan was a Punjabi Mahomedan. As a young man he had served in the Seikh Army in the Artillery against the British at what almost proved to be a disastrous defeat, I mean Chillianwallah. Here, as history tells us, the Seikh Artillerymen made a most gallant stand by their guns, and if they had only been as heroically supported by the rest of the Seikh Army our troops would have been annihilated, as it was on the night of the bivouac on the field of battle our loss from the Seikh guns, especially in the 24th Foot, was enormous. During the Mutiny, Kurrum had been a trooper in the Indian Army in the Twannah Horse. Another prisoner, a handsome aged man with long hair and beard as white as driven snow, was seated in a chair, and a third, with a rather vacant expression of the eye, was lying down on his cot. The common green parrots which fly about the fort of Allahabad in swarms were entering the bars, settling on the shoulders and head of the figure stationed at the window without any apparent fear, making sounds of delight as they caressed the long grizzled hair of his head and beard. I was much struck at the sight, it was a subject worthy of the brush of an Old Master. The refulgence of the light from the setting sun through the window; the tall proud martial figure, which never fails to leave its stamp on the true soldier even in death; the old soldier in his chair telling his beads; and the recumbent figure on the couch with the numerous bright green parrots enlivening the room with their discordant cries at the same time offering affectionate caresses to the chief figure in the scene formed a picture which even now recurs to me at times in my sleep and in day dreams. I noticed a look of recognition—a flash to which at the time I paid no attention, pass between the old Artillery Colonel seated in his chair and my bearer. As we entered, the old man hastily rose and the figure on the cot made a motion to rise likewise. I exclaimed "Don't rise, Sahibs. I have only come as usual. My duty requires to ask you if you have any complaints." The figure at the window turned round. It was a proud and handsome face on which care had stamped its indelible mark and in it one could read, as in a book, the effect an imprisonment of twenty years had written legibly on it. "Any complaints?" I again asked in a kindly tone of voice as I approached him. I noticed a flickering smile hover about his bearded mouth when he replied "none." I then said "Your pets seem very numerous, don't you cage or shut them up at night?" "Shut them up!" he replied, "I have quite enough of that myself. No, no, they all know me and come when I call them. You see that old fellow on the string!" He then uttered some pet name, and the bird immediately flew to his outstretched hand and commenced caressing it in the manner usual to parrots. He called another and another by name, and they came at once and without the slightest hesitation. I said "How have you managed to tame all these wild birds?" He replied "Sahib, I have been here a very very long time, and I have tamed them by a method which will tame not only all animals and birds but all human beings—that is, kindness. The Sirkar might have the hearts of all its people if it would only give them three things—Kindness, Enquiry into complaints and Justice." To this I answered, "I should like to hear your story. It must be a most interesting one, but I have no time now as I have to go round my guards and finish my other duties. I hope, before I leave the fort, I may have the good fortune to hear it." "Salam, Sirdar Sahib," said I to the chief, and again repeated my salam to the aged white bearded old soldier. Hearing a kindly and compassionate voice which, in all probability, they had perhaps scarcely heard for many many years, tears sprang to their eyes. As I left their room, I said "If I can be of any use to you during my tour of duty in the fort, let me know through my bearer. He can understand your language better than I can, as he is a countryman of yours." Another flash of recognition and intelligence seemed to pass between Col. Maun Singh and my humble menial Kurrum Khan, as I quitted their quarters.

ANDREW HEARSEY.

SCIENTIFIC MARES' NESTS.

THE multiplication of prodigious scientific discoveries within the last few years, has not only whipped the emulation and inflamed the imagination of the experts, but also apparently turned the heads of many good wights beyond the charmed circle. All sorts of reports fly about. Nothing is too startling for belief and, of course, nothing too absurd to start. The Americans, who reduce everything to business, were understood to employ on their press regular inventors of canards—good hands at romancing. Formerly, the newspaper white lies were of a modest, if still sensational, kind. However varied in circumstantiality, the staple was the same. The reader was amused with fables of political intrigues, social feuds, domestic disruptions, mad fights, extraordinary burglaries, desperate raids, and horrible tragedies of all possible and impossible descriptions. Of late years, the scientific fabulist has come into prominence, who treats you to all sorts of physiological, anthropological and zoological curiosities and astronomical and geological discoveries, and chemical and mechanical wonders and optical illusions, and mental aberrations and what not delusions. Some of the more piquant specimens of this species of literature found their way to this side the water and were enjoyed by the effete Old World mind as a novelty. For the institution was of the New World—racy of the soil—and so remained. The English had produced the penny-a-liner. The “penny dreadful” too was a development—or degeneration—of the British press. But the cent-a-fabler with its aristocratic variety the dollar-a-scientific-romancer, is the creation of the Journalism of the United States. Be it so. Give every being his due, be it Cæsar or any other. We do not suppose any respectable Europeans grudged the enterprising settlers beyond the main their legitimate distinction. Latterly, we confess, we have discerned signs this side the water of a desire to trench on Cousin Jonathan's patent—symptoms of apéry in Europe, particularly in some French journals, of the American scientific hoax. It is usually a rude thing—a bad imitation, but the desire is manifest. And now the British press seems to be infected by the same mania.

The other day, it was given out in some English paper, on the alleged authority of the representative of an American newspaper, that Mr. Edison, the great American inventor, had notified that he was engaged on an invention, which he hopes to perfect in a short time and to bring out before 1892. It purports to be an improver of the human sight, which, in some way or another, unknown and inconceivable by us ordinary mortals, will increase the power of seeing to such an extent that a face will be distinctly visible and recognised at the distance of some hundred miles. No explanation was given of the nature of the instrument, or whether it is an instrument at all, still less of its rationale. But the simple statement was enough for most people. It certainly set many wags as well as “softs” and “simples” at thinking, and some were elated while others rendered uneasy, at the prospect. But it was a brief “sensation”—scarcely a nine days' wonder.

The account has been contradicted. A work of supererogation, to be sure, but then, possibly, the story was started for the purpose of contradicting it.

But no sooner has the American story or the account of the American invention been withdrawn than another is produced, in the Old World itself, of a European machine of even more astonishing pretensions. The present account is still more circumstantial, and thoroughly business-like. It is definitely announced that a French savant, by name Courtonne, has actually deposited with the French Academy of Sciences a sealed tender containing a minute description of an instrument, invented by himself, which he has christened the “Telephoto,” for the transmission of luminous vibrations. This machine will simply annihilate space and all obstructions so far as seeing goes. By means of it, a man will not only see objects at the distance of thousands of miles, but even see them through walls and buildings and rocks and mountains! By day and night, but this is wondrous strange! Already old Dean Swift is uneasy in his grave, for having perpetrated his elaborate jest at the men of science. And now Dickens and his Sam Weller are clearly in jeopardy.

DACCA.

Nature, apparently, is not in a very good humour with the people of East Bengal and especially of Dacca. Terrible winds have been visiting this part of the country from time to time; only a few days ago, some portion of the district was caught in a violent storm and much damage was done. Famine has already been doing its fatal work at the same rate as in other parts of the country; even the worst sort of Kumillah rice is selling at Rs 3-7 a maund.

To fill the cup of misery, the rivers have overflowed and the whole district is under water, as it were. The flood of this year has reached a higher pitch than that of the year before last. For two or three days, however, it has been showing signs of decrease. The Buckland bund, which is a favourite resort of gentlemen both European and native, was quite under water; a part of it has now dried up. The Buriganga of to-day rushing and roaring with its full burden of muddy water presents a striking contrast to itself in the hot summer days when the river shrinking in its bed to a thin and superficial stream meanders along its lifeless way.

I had occasion to go to a neighbouring village only a few days ago and the spectacle which presented itself was a melancholy one. The active Buriganga was everywhere wearing away its sides and at parts bursting its banks with great violence and overflowing into the country. Many families had to leave their houses and home—a prey to the mighty river. It was pitious to behold them shifting for themselves as best they might in the midst of their manifold sufferings. In many houses even the floor of thatched huts had sunk under water and the poor people had erected wooden frames to make their bed on. The mightier Pudda of course has not been slow in its work of destruction on the other side of the district; but the same story of sadness need not be repeated.

The Dacca people have celebrated the well known Janmastami ceremony with the usual pomp and circumstance. The inhabitants of Nawabpura and of Tatibazar bring out processions on two different days. The rivalry that exists between the two parties helps a great deal to make the processions as grand as possible. Each party makes an exhibition of the richest treasures and spends large sums of money.

Some twenty-five elephants, gorgeously equipped, head the procession; they are followed by as many horses also splendidly fitted out. Next follow a long train of historic and mythological representations. Songs well sung and music excellently performed, accompany. There is nothing in fact wanting to please the eye and gratify the ear. But the great moving structures—chowkis as they are called—deserve special notice. They are from twenty to twenty-five cubits in height and art is lavished upon them to make them dazzling or imposing. They represent castles, forts, palaces and other beautiful and interesting objects. This time the Tatibazaris have gained the victory, to use a current Bengali expression.

August 28, 1889.

Sir Stuart Bayley, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, arrived here in the evening of the 22nd instant; according to programme His Honour should have arrived at 4 P. M., but unfavourable wind and strong current stood in the way. His Honor landed at Suder Ghat and proceeded directly to the Northbrook Hall where an address was presented to him by the local municipality. The reply made was a sympathetic and graceful one. His Honor then drove down through Nawabpura to the polo ground and returned to his yacht after nightfall.

Next morning His Honor visited the gaol and the Mitford Hospital, where he stayed only a few minutes. After noon, he admitted such gentlemen to private interview as wanted to see His Honor on business.

At 4 P. M., a levee was held and several gentlemen of influence and position were presented.

In the evening, the obelisk erected by the European friends in honor of Sir Abdul Gani, K. C. S. I., was very beautifully illuminated. Seen from a distance, it looked just like a Musjid in the midst of flames. I cannot help admiring the man who suggested the idea. The Buckland Bund and the road leading from Sudr Ghat to the Kutchery were also beautifully lighted up.

The Dacca School of Medicine has so long been held in a poor thatched hut; but through the generosity of some of Zemindars a new building has been set up. It occupies a very pleasant situation just on the bank of the river Buriganga. It may be safely said to be one of the finest buildings of our town. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal opened the Dacca Medical School on the morning of the 24th instant. Among those present were Sir Abdul Gani, K. C. S. I., Raja Rajendra Narain Roy Bahadoor of Bhawal and several other gentlemen of wealth and position. His Honor distributed medals to the successful students of the Medical School, the whole affair taking a little over half-an hour. His Honor next visited the Dacca College and the Collegiate School which were decorated with flags and arches. The School and College have been closed for three days in honor of the visit of His Honor. Sir Stuart Bayley left the town on the morning of the 25th instant.

THE PIONEER LIBEL CASE.

• A MISERABLE FIASCO.

On Friday before last (Aug. 23) according to arrangement, the case of the Queen-Empress (on the complaint of Hearsay) vs. Chesney, the Editor-in-chief of the Pioneer, was taken up before the Criminal Sessions. The case having attracted considerable public attention and being looked forward to with a great deal of interest, a large number of the general public were present in Court to witness the progress and conclusion of the trial, which, however, ended in a miserable fiasco, on a point of law.

When the hour for commencing proceedings arrived the Court was quite crowded. The lawyers, of course, mustered in considerable force, and of the general public there were very many present, so that every available inch of standing space was occupied, and even a lady, following the fashion in England no doubt, did not disdain to witness the proceedings from the jury-box on the Judge's left hand, which was devoted to the general public on this occasion. The whole scene presented was an animated one which a local artist did not think it unworthy of his pencil.

Precisely at 11 o'clock, the Hon. Justice Norris entered the court, dressed in the judges' red gown, the Court-crier commanding silence in that peculiar and well-known cry, and immediately the hubbub ceased, and there was a silence of a few minutes.

A NOVEL APPLICATION REJECTED.

At length the stillness was broken by a little short man rising up from around the bar table and saying in a voice not very audible at the Press desk---"Will your lordship permit me to make an application?"

The judge :---What is your name, Sir?

The gentleman :---My name is Alston. Your lordship is about to try a case in which I have been retained. I am a member of the High Court Bar in the North-Western Provinces, and I understand that I am not at liberty to appear before your lordship without your Lordship's previous permission. I understand your lordship will give me permission.

The Judge :---Have I got the power to give you that permission?

Mr. Alston here quoted in full section 4 of the Legal Practitioners' Act, after which,

The Judge said :---I have considered this matter. I am of opinion that the Court there means the collective body of Judges forming a Court, and not a single Judge. If it does mean a single Judge, I see no reason, for acceding to your application.

Mr. Alston then sat down.

The Judge here complained that he had not been furnished with a copy of the charge in this case, and remarked that he ought to have had one.

THE ACCUSED ENTERS THE DOCK.

The Clerk of the Crown next called out for "George Macklagan Chesney," and so far as the reporters could hear, no response was made by the accused, who was standing immediately in front of the dock and behind his counsel.

The Judge :---The defendant must surrender as usual, Mr. Gasper. He must plead from the proper place.

Mr. Gasper :---Certainly, my Lord.

Mr. Chesney looking calm and self-possessed, but rather pale, then entered the dock and stood while the Clerk of the Crown (Mr. Apar) proceeded to read the three counts of the charge, to each of which he severally pleaded "not guilty."

THE JURY: TRUSTING TO THE CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

Mr. Gasper here made some application to the Judge, under section 451, in reply to which

The Judge said :---Yes, Mr. Gasper, you are entitled to it.

Mr. Phillips :---I am instructed to appear, my lord, with my learned friend, Mr. Henderson, for the prosecution.

The Judge :---Who appears with you Mr. Gasper?

Mr. Gasper replied that his learned friend Mr. Garth appeared with him.

Mr. Phillips :---Your lordship will observe that the Code prescribes no mode of securing this majority. The mode which I have seen adopted as far as I recollect, is to empanel the jury in the usual course, and if that results in a majority of the desired description being empanelled prima facie to leave that portion in tact.

The Judge :---I think we had better trust to the chapter of accidents first as the Clerk of the Crown shall happen to draw the names.

Mr. Gasper :---There will be some difficulty in dealing with it.

The Judge :---But I think that will be the better plan, would it not?

This was acquiesced in, and the

EMPAANELLING OF THE JURY

was proceeded with. But not before Mr. Phillips suggested that the Clerk of the Crown should call a complete panel and his lordship could see the character of it.

The Judge :---That is what I propose to do. Call the panel.

The panel was accordingly called and consisted of the following gentlemen :---Baboo Amar Kanto Sen, Mr. A. Shanks, Mr. J. Dyce Nicol, Mr. A. Stephen, Baboo Kumar Narayan Sen, Mr. C. M. Smith, Mr. P. S. Young, Mr. R. Howard, Baboo Deb Narayan Bosc, and Thomas Watson.

The Clerk of the Crown (to the prisoner); I am now about to call the names of the jury to try you in this case. If you have any objection to any of them you will take your objection when he comes to the book to be sworn and before he is sworn.

The list was then called out again when the following gentlemen were challenged :---Mr. A. Stephen, Baboo Kumar Narayanan Sen, Mr. C. M. Smith, Baboos Ganendranath Tagore, and Chandee Charan Banerjee.

Mr. A. C. Young whose name was called out was absent, and his lordship said that he ought to have attended and made his application in person, but he would excuse him under the circumstances stated in his letter.

The jury therefore was composed of the following gentlemen, and they chose Mr. Shanks as their foreman :---Messrs. A. Shanks, Wooma Kanto Sen, J. Dyce Nicol, C. M. Smith, R. Howard, Deb Narayan Bosc, Thos. Watson, J. N. Gowanlock and R. R. Bain.

His lordship then directed the remaining special jurors in attendance to be discharged with a warning to hold themselves in readiness to attend if they received a notice to that effect. With regard to the gentlemen of the common jury, he was at present unable to say anything.

A NECESSARY CAUTION.

The Judge here addressing the crowd which had collected around the jury-box, said: Gentlemen, this is an inconvenient court in some respects but I must ask you, please, to stand away from the jury-box. I hope I shall not have to speak a second time. If I have to, I shall have to have the precincts cleared.

These preliminaries having been disposed of at length began the real business of the day, which every one was impatiently waiting to get to. Mr. Phillips, the Crown Prosecutor, rose at about 20 minutes past 11 o'clock to commence---

THE CASE FOR THE PROSECUTION.

He said :---May it please your Lordship, Gentlemen of the Jury,---I think that I may make one observation at the commencement in which we shall all concur, and that is that---

THIS IS A PAINFUL CASE.

It is a painful thing to see a gentleman of the defendant's character placed in the dock, a gentleman bearing a name distinguished in this country; but on the other hand, we can only say with regard to that that it is of his own choosing. The injury that he has committed towards my client has gone without the slightest, the faintest offer or attempt at reparation of any description whatever. Of course, if you come to the conclusion that the conduct of the defendant has been entirely proper, that will not be a matter of comment, but if you come to the conclusion, as I think you can hardly fail to do, to which I venture to submit all right-minded men must unanimously come, that this was not a nice thing to do, not a generous thing to do, and as I shall presently submit, as a matter for your consideration, not an English thing to do, then, I think you cannot help feeling that it is very much to be regretted that the defendant should have persisted in fastening this stigma upon my client.

CAPTAIN HEARSEY BEARS AN HONORED NAME.

My client, gentlemen, also bears a name which is, I might almost say, illustrious in Indian history. If the defendant is right, he is a very degraded descendant of his ancestors, but at any rate he bears that name, and that will also be a matter for your consideration, if, as may possibly happen, it may be suggested that no possible libel could harm the reputation of my client---a suggestion which if it should be made I shall submit to you considerations which will very easily and summarily dispose of it. I think now gentlemen are these :---In the Pioneer of the 26th of January which, as you know, is published in Allahabad, and which is a leading journal I think we are all aware in this country, and which was published also in Calcutta, there was this article most of which---if not all of it---you have heard read; but, perhaps, I may venture just to read it in its integrity. (The learned gentleman then read the article through and continued.) That was published under the authority of the defendant, and in it he libels not only Mr. Hearsey, but I venture to think the Bar. According to my humble opinion, as a very unworthy member of that noble profession, it is--- to say that it was to their honor to refuse to hold a brief for a client when required to do so. We are not identified with the character of our clients, but I presume that the insinuation there is, as we allege, that not only was the defendant under the impression that counsel is identified with the character of his client, but that to be so identified with Captain Hearsey would be a dishonour; that he and his case were such dirty work that the bar refused, and honoured themselves by refusing to conduct his case for him. That I venture to think, is a gross libel on the Bar. I hope the day is very far distant when the Bar will ever deserve any such stigma as that.

THE CIRCUMSTANCES

A LIBEL ON THE BAR

THE ASSAULT ON MR. CHESNEY.

Now, gentlemen, the circumstance to which attention is called in that short article is reported in another column. I shall not read to you all the report at present, unless it becomes more material than at present appears to me. Suffice it to say at present that the case referred to---in which such salutary chastisement was meted out, and very severe it was---was a case for assaulting the defendant. And I think you will hardly fail to come to the conclusion from that circumstance referred to in the article that whatever the motives---we will hope some worthier motives were mingled in the mind of the defendant---one, I say, can hardly fail to draw the inference that there was ACTIVE MALICE IN THAT ARTICLE.

* This is the decision of the case and it will give you a sufficient idea of the case at present :---"In giving his decision Captain Hewett stated that the accused had admitted his guilt, and that he did cause hurt to Mr. Chesney. He read a long statement, a very great deal of which was irrelevant, to the court. He said its cause was the amount of 'provocation given' in that article in which reference was made to a brown Captain, and he also alleged that the insinuation was made that he would not again fight for his country." The allusion to a brown Captain will probably be easily perceptible by you. The suggestion that he would not again fight for his country together with the allusion to his appearance was, I think, very well calculated to provoke a man who admits himself to be rather hot-tempered: and therefore this very assault for which he was being punished, and over which his enemy gloats in that article, was a more or less excusable thing. I do not wish to justify it in the least, but it was an offence which was committed under considerable provocation. "There was nothing in the article complained of to show that Captain Hearsey was referred to; and even if his idea was well founded, he might have had recourse to the law." No doubt that was perfectly correct. Captain Hearsey took that article to be meant for him and took the allusions to be to him, and I think you will be satisfied that he was justified in taking them so. "It was intolerable that he should have taken the law into his own hands in the manner he did, and there is another statement it appears, that was most unwarrantably made. He had been four times previously convicted, and as his assault was on this occasion premeditated he (Captain Hewett) did not think the infliction of a fine would be sufficient. The defendant would be simply imprisoned for one month, bound over to keep the peace for twelve months, and to find two sureties in a hundred rupees each." And not upon this, in the very same issue of the paper and before the appeal could be preferred, his foe thought fit to publish this damaging statement with regard to him.

AN UNREASONABLE INTERRUPTION.

Now, gentlemen, I shall, subject to his lordship's direction, call your attention very shortly to the Code, and his lordship will tell you whether I am correct in suggesting that it will be for you to consider whether there was active malice in this matter. If that should be a subject which his lordship submits to your consideration, then I will venture to submit with regard to these two articles that the report and the article bear on the face of them. [Mr. Gasper here interrupted with some remarks, but owing to the low tone in which he spoke, he was not very audible at the reporter's table. He was, however, understood to say that he was very sorry to interrupt his learned friend, but he begged to submit that it was not open to the prosecution to rely upon such motive.]

The Judge (sharply) :--I see no grounds for any interruption at present. Please to go on Mr. Phillips.

Mr. Phillips (resuming) :--I venture to submit, gentlemen, that THAT ARTICLE IS NOT CHARACTERISTIC OF AN ENGLISHMAN.

No doubt, newspapers perform a very useful function, and the freedom of the Press, the liberty of writing, is, we all know, to be cherished. I need not dilate upon that, and we all know equally well that inasmuch as by reason of the anonymous nature of these publications license may grow up and private malice be pursued under the pretence of the public good, and private malice, private vindictiveness may be gratified under the guise of public spirit, it is very necessary that the Press should not be allowed to go beyond its legitimate and wholesome functions, and, I submit to you, gentlemen, that this article is in the nature of a stab. It is not the characteristic mode of fighting of an Englishman. Whatever Captain Hearsey may be, that is not a fair way of meeting him. He had been that very day sentenced to a punishment at which one cannot help feeling some revulsion. The idea of his being sentenced to one month's imprisonment with a further period, as an alternative, for an assault, no doubt very blameable, very much to be regretted, and which I hope, he will not in any way justify or palliate now in cooler blood, but which he alleged was made under provocation, being goaded on to it by certain disparaging, if not offensive, allusions to his appearance and being grossly insulted in that article which he conceived applied to him! Smarting under this provocation, with his temper roused to fever heat, he went to the defendant, and in default of obtaining any satisfaction from him struck him a blow which, I suppose, was merely nominal. It was intended to mark his sense of the insult which had been put upon him. For that he was punished, we must assume with perfect justice, in a very severe manner undoubtedly. With that, all vindictive feeling--I say vindictive feeling, because any public feeling that the defendant had must certainly have evaporated,--that vindictive feeling which he cherished ought to have been amply satisfied. An appeal was at once proclaimed, and upon that comes out this article. Can anybody, will any English gentleman venture to say, that is a proper proceeding? and when an English gentleman who has been unfortunately led by his feelings into such a position declines to admit that that is a wrong course, and to come forward and make the reparation which any right-thinking man would make, then I venture to submit to you, gentlemen, that the inferences I ask you to draw are correct inferences. Therefore, I submit, you cannot feel any compunction in finding that gentleman guilty, and leaving him to be dealt with by the law. Gentlemen, my client, although alluded to in such disparaging terms, is also entitled to the full protection of the law, and, if it is a fact that he occupies a less favourable position in society than the defendant, he is the more entitled to protection at your hands. Now gentlemen, no one can, I think, subject to his lordship's direction, have any doubt that

THIS IS A LIBEL: A GROSS LIBEL.

Now, then, what possible excuse can there be for this statement? I do not know whether it will be suggested, as I have hinted to you, that the prosecutor is a man who has no character to lose. That is too absurd to be really seriously considered. He is not presumably known to the great body of people in Calcutta; and therefore as far as they are concerned he is accepted as an honest man, as a man without any stain attaching to his character; and consequently a publication in Calcutta must necessarily damage his character. I shall allude to that very shortly in referring to the circumstances under which you are troubled with this case. But what sort of a man must he be who had no character to be damaged by a notice of this sort? It might be an aspersion on the character of a member of the criminal class to say that he is an honest man. Character may get to that pitch, no doubt. Prima facie, as I believe his lordship will tell you, Captain Hearsey is as good, as honest, and as reputable a man as any of us here present, and therefore, prima facie of course, there is no question about such a publication injuring his character. But should it be attempted to be shown that, in fact, he has not that character, still the defence must fail on that ground, because whatever may be said at Allahabad--whatever may be his reputation there--he certainly has not and cannot have that evil reputation here, and I hardly think that my learned friends, in exercise of their wise discretion in the conduct of this case, will venture to put forward that ground because it will entirely destroy the other ground on which, I imagine, they will seek to rely, namely, that it is for the public good: because if everybody in the world knows that Captain Hearsey is of this character there could be no public benefit in publishing it; everybody knows it already; I think I may dismiss with these observations any anticipations that I have of their setting up that ground.

THE IMPUTATIONS: ONE ANDREW HEARSEY.

And as I say, what sort of a man is it who could not be injured by these imputations? I will shortly call your attention to one of them. One Andrew Hearsey. (a laugh). There is a sort of mixture of the known and unknown there. It seems to stamp the man as it were out of the pale of civilized society: and yet inconsistently they go on to say "notorious"---"notorious in these Provinces as Captain Hearsey." Now what do they mean by notorious as Captain Hearsey, Captain Hearsey being in italics? They say that he was in the Army, and therefore they cannot intend to suggest what would seem at first sight to be the intention--that he had no right to any military title whatever, and therefore the suggestion must be that he has assumed the title of Captain, and that he has become notorious under that title. Of course, it is difficult to say what would be the precise effect upon the mind of the reader of that passage, but it has a very unpleasant resemblance to a description of a swindler: and certainly a swindler of some sort is suggested in the unwarranted assumption of the title of Captain.

WHAT IS A CAPTAIN?

Now I shall submit with regard to that, that we are not going to inquire whether Captain Hearsey was, according to military rules, strictly entitled to be addressed by the military authorities as Captain, because we know that there are many titles, which are assumed and conceded by courtesy, and I shall be able to show to you, if necessary, that this gentleman has been known for many years--in fact ever since he left the Army--as Captain Hearsey. He obtained the grade of Lieutenant when he left the Army, and he was next for promotion to Captain, and about the time that he retired from the Army the Captain who stood in his way chanced to die, and he according to his view of the matter became entitled to that rank as a matter of course. But at any rate whether or not he became entitled to it in the strict sense that I have mentioned, that title has been conceded to him universally, and if it is a courtesy title there is no reason why it should be spoken of in this way. This suggests that he always assumed the title himself, but that nobody else recognised his claim to it.

THE RETIREMENT FROM THE ARMY.

Then it says, "Mr. Hearsey, originally Lieutenant in the 107th Foot, closed his career in the Army under pressure from the then Commander-in-Chief." If this article had been more outspoken it would have been more manly. It proceeds by way of insinuation: what kind of pressure it was we are not told. As a matter of fact, his retirement from the Army was due to his making a mistake in a manoeuvre which he was directed to carry out. He made a mistake. The Commanding officer got angry, and perhaps there may have been other feelings influencing the authorities. We cannot exclude the possibility of that--and the Colonel, although several other officers made mistake on the same occasion--noticed this very severely, and my client was required to send in his resignation. He made a protest and a great deal of opposition, but ultimately complied. Well, to retire from the Army under pressure of that sort, is a totally different thing from what is insinuated here. The impression conveyed is that his accounts were impeached or his honor in some way concerned. The lie which is half the truth, gentlemen, you know what the character of that is---and this is of that character.

REMEMBER NOT THE SINS AND OFFENCES OF OUR YOUTH.

Gentlemen, then the article goes back five-and-twenty years ago---to his hot youth. In 1864 he was fined Rs. 100 for an assault. We say "Remember not the sins and offences of our youth," and probably with very good reason. What man is there whose career could be raked up in this way? "During the ten years ending 1884 he was convicted seven times for various offences against the Penal Code, in four of these for breach of the peace." They do not give the character of those assaults, or whether they were under any provocation or not? They do not mention what the other three offences were. But I venture to submit to you, subject to his lordship's direction always, that it is not competent even to a newspaper, except for some adequate object, to rake up the past history of any person whatever. Of course, if you have a public man, there may be an adequate object. If it is under circumstances requiring that the character of a private individual should be made known to the public, then there may be an adequate object, but I venture to put it to you, gentlemen, that unless on occasions of that sort, it is not competent to a writer---perhaps less in the public Press than elsewhere, but certainly not more---to rake up a man's past history. They are entitled at the time to give a true and faithful account of what takes place in Court, however disparaging, however damaging, however ruinous it may be to the character of the person involved; but there is no such right to rake up past events.

NOW, WHAT IS THE OBJECT OF THIS?

It is to show that Captain Hearsey is a ruffian. "It may be hoped on public grounds that Mr. Hearsey's ruffianly propensities will be effectually discouraged by the salutary action of the Cantonment Magistrate."---A ruffian, a stubborn ruffian, an inveterate ruffian, one whose ruffianly propensities, too, can only be checked or discouraged---they cannot be eradicated. They break out from time to time according to this writer, and may be expected to do so, unless they are met by severe punishment of the description meted out by the Cantonment Magistrate. That punishment I have already pointed out to you, is that which this defendant---I do not think I use too strong a term in saying---gloats over. Then, to further stigmatize my client, the article adds that he is too disreputable for the Bar---the native bar, it says. I do not know whether it means that a fortiori the English Bar there too would have declined to have anything to do with him. If so, it is a more venomous stigma than if it simply put them on the same level. I presume it must mean that. It says that the Bar declined to perform their functions on his behalf---functions which are cast upon them by the public for the benefit of the public, although they are exercised in particular cases on behalf of individuals. What man is there unless he belongs to the criminal class, who would not be injured by such a notice as that? I put it to you, gentlemen, whether it is easy to conceive of such a case? I put it to you also, gentlemen, whether after this unfortunate man had been adequately punished for the offence he had committed under provocation, this is an English, a manly thing, when he has gone away to prison, and is lying there awaiting the opportunity of appealing, to publish a paragraph of that description concerning him? I submit it is not. Well, now then, what possible excuse can there be? I have dealt with an excuse, which perhaps is only suggested to my own mind, and which you will hear no more of. I will pass on from that. Can it be suggested that there is any public object in publishing this libel? Why, it does not profess any public object. It does not profess that there is anything about Captain Hearsey except notoriety and the ruffianly description of his character, which renders it necessary to warn the public. They are not warning the public. They are not saying to the public, "Here is a man who is liable to mislead people, or who is looked up to." On the contrary, they say, he is looked down upon; he is not looked up to. They appear to be warning people against getting in his way for fear he should assault them. They do not appear to be endeavouring to divest him of any public reputation because they do not appear to consider that he has any public reputation of which it is desirable to divest him. They wish to stamp deeper what they declare to be his public reputation, and therefore I submit to you that there can be no defence, because it is only on the footing of his being a coarse ruffian who is known to a very considerable portion of the community as a determined ruffian; but as a portion of the community may not be aware of his ruffianly propensities, it is desirable to warn them. That is the only possible good I submit they can possibly allege. There is nothing whatever suggested, in this article, which would lead you to imagine that there was any other object, except that of fixing deeper in the mind of the reader of this paper, the fact that this gentleman who goes about calling himself Captain Hearsey, is notorious as a breaker of the peace and a ruffian, so that they may be on their guard against that ruffianly propensity which is here alleged---not to place him in his right character as a press on wrongly enjoying the respect of the public. There is no attempt at that. Therefore, I venture to submit to you that there is really no defence. There can be no defence. The fact of the publication of itself brings the defendant within the law. I will just read to you, gentlemen, one or two sections of the Code referring to this matter. (The learned gentleman here read section 499, which defines defamation and the subsequent section on the subject. He continued:---) If I have correctly submitted the result of what I have stated, the defendant intended to harm and also knew, and had reasonable ground for believing that the imputations would harm the defendant. The only exception that I can imagine that can be relied upon in any degree is the ninth exception, which says that "it is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another, provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it, or of other persons, or for the public good." That is an exception which allows freedom of speech with regard to the faults and defects of other people when occasion requires it; when it is necessary for the protection of the person speaking or the person spoken to or the public generally. But that is not, I venture to think his lordship will direct you, to be used as a cloak for private malice. These, gentlemen, are all the observations I have to trouble you with at the moment, except with regard to the matter I suggested, as to why you should be troubled with this case. I regret it very much. The prosecutor no doubt is not resident here. The defendant is also not resident here. The prosecutor is a resident of Mussoorie, and therefore unless he were content and able to prosecute this case in the Mussoorie Court, he must leave his own domicile in search of a tribunal. You see from the nature of the article itself that unless it is totally false that there is anybody who has this impression about the prosecutor---you see it states that this is his reputation in the North-West Provinces previously---the defendant cannot complain that the plaintiff does not seek a tribunal in the North-West Provinces. Moreover, had the complainant prosecuted in the North-West Provinces, I believe he would not have had the advantage of having his case tried before a Judge of the High Court, and I conceive that, if he had a choice of tribunals, although I regret the burden should be cast upon you, he could not possibly do better than choose this tribunal.

AN ELOQUENT PERORATION.

You, gentlemen, will look at both sides of the case. You will consider whether the prosecutor deserved to be stigmatized in this remorseless manner to be thrust down into the very lowest abyss of society, even if not thrust out of it, whether there can have been any proper or excusable motive in doing so. You will, as gentlemen of experience and as men of the world, take into account that these delinquencies which are charged against him go back to his youth. It does not appear when the others took place, if they did take place at all. Perhaps from the Prince of the blood commanding the entire Army down to the lowest Ensign, no member of it can claim to be altogether exempt from follies of that sort in their youth. Then, again, you have it indicated that this gentleman is of a hot disposition. And as I submit to you, you have it that the defendant has received full satisfaction for the wrong that had been done him, as far as the law can satisfy him, but still he gives vent to his vindictiveness in what ought to be at that stage cool blood by deliberately publishing this article. You will see, gentlemen, that it is in a prominent part of the paper, and I venture to submit that there is no possible excuse for it.

This concluded a speech which lasted for nearly an hour.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CANADIAN SONNETS.*

ON A DOG.

"Grotesque!" we said, the moment we espied him,
For there he stood, supreme in his conceit,
With short ears close together and queer feet
Planted irregularly: first we tried him
With jokes, but they were lost; we then defied him
With bantering questions and loose criticism:
He did not like, I am sure, our catechism,
But whisked and snuffed a little as we eyed him.

Then flung we balls, and out and clear away,
Up the white slope, across the crusted snow,
To where a broken fence stands in the way,
Against the sky-line, a mere row of pegs,
Quicker than thought we saw him flash and go,
A straight mad scuttling of four crooked legs

MARCH (CANADIAN).

Over the dripping roofs and sunk snow-bartows,
The bells are ringing loud and strangely near,
The shout of children dins upon mine ear
Shrilly, and like a flight of silvery arrows
Showers the sweet gossip of the British sparrows,
Gathered in noisy knots of one or two,
To joke and chatter just as mortals do
Over the day's long tale of joys and sorrows.

Talk before bed-time of bold deeds together,
Of thefts and fights, of hard-times and the weather,
Till sleep disarm them, to each little brain
Bringing tucked wings and many a blissful dream,
Visions of wind and sun, of field and stream,
And busy barn-yards with their scattered grain.

THE TRUTH.

Friend, though thy soul should burn thee, yet be still.
Thoughts were not meant for strife, nor tongues for swords.
He that sees clear is gentlest of his words,
And that's not truth that bath the heart to kill.
The whole world's thought shall not one truth fulfil.
Dull in our age, and passionate in youth,
No mind of man hath found the perfect truth,
Nor shalt thou find it; therefore, friend, be still.

Watch and be still, nor hearken to the fool,
The babbler of consistency and rule:
Wisest is he, who, never quite secure,
Changes his thoughts for better day by day:
To-morrow some new light will shine, be sure,
And thou shalt see thy thought another way.

CONTEMPORARY IRISH POESY.

THE DESOLATE WIDOWED MOTHER.

(From "The Coffin-Ship," in Mr. John Todhunter's new volume of poetry.*)

Mad, in the storm, her grey hair dank with the wind-blown spray,
Her homespun gown soaked rotund her, heavy with brine
As her heart with tears—alone
A woman stands by the pool,
And wrings her hands, and thuds her shoddering breast
With bruising blows; then scans the face of the pool,
And tosses her arms aloft, and sends through the night
A moaning heart-breaking cry:

"Norah ahoy! Kathleen ahoy!
Dhrops o'me heart, come back to me! Cushla machree
Norah, come back to me! look at me here alone!
Come back from the say, come back from that Coffin-Ship—
The rats is lavin' her. Whisht! do you hear the wind Keenin' keenin'? Whisht! Don't you hear? When it blows
This-a-way, thro' and thro' me, the hunger le's in my heart.
The hunger's on me for you to-night. I want you, I do.
I'm lonely, childre, I'm lonely. Your father stuck to the soil—
Why couldn't the' make short work, evict us into the say?
The Big House got him at last, the faver, the yalla hole,
The pauper's grave; an' me down; and Patsy under the sod;
An' Shemus—I disremember where 's he at all. Ochone,
I'm lonely, childhre' I'm lonely! Norah, don't lave me, asthore, Come to me, Kathleen, aroo!"

"Oh, wather, wather! for all you're quiet an' small,
Sure you're a slip of the say—the say wid its landlord's heart
That never heeds for a cry, th' ould slaughtherin' absentee.
Ragin' an' roarin' beyant. Aw, whisht! I owe you no rint,
Ould disolation; your rint is waitin'—the Coffin-Ship,
Take her this night, an' welcome; but Christians isn't your due."

POESY OF THE IRISH BAR.

SONNET.—TO PATRICK ROBERTSON, ESQ.

Patrick! than whom no man or mother's son,
From Rydal northwards to thine own Strathspey,
The grave can better temper with the gay;
Who art in truth a double-barrelled gun,
One barrel charged with law, and one with fun;
Accept the customary votive lay,
On this the festive, though the thoughtful day,
When time another cycle has begun,
Spite of the working of "the people's bill."
May thy quaint spirit long impart its zest
Unto thy daily life, making the year
One constant merry Christmas—seasoning still
The learning of the law with well-timed jest,
And meditation pale with purple cheer.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

A NEW Rama has risen in the South to abate the Simian nuisance stimulated and aggravated, if not created, by his greater namesake of old. From the classic days that has been the land of the monkey. At last the humans are tired of the Simian tribe. The good people of Tanjore have for some time been casting about for a means of deliverance from the depredations of these nimble-footed Mahrattahs and Pindaris of the trees and woods. The local municipality has just accepted the tender of an enterprising but scarcely orthodox Hindu contractor, Rama Sawmy Naik of Kombaconan, to catch them at the rate of a Rupee each, the cost of feed and transportation being borne by the corporation.

THE Prince of Wales is troubled with a gouty affection of the eyes and a recurrence of the venous inflammation of the leg—the legacy of his typhoid fever in the winter of 1871-72.

THE frauds at the Imperial Dockyard, Kiel, are bringing out prominent men. The head naval architect, Herr Pannecke, Secretary Dubky, and Privy Councillor Kruger, of the Imperial Naval Department at Berlin, are under arrest. There have been also several arrests at Hamburg.

THE Italian engineer, Vittorio Bocca, has projected a canal connecting the Adriatic with the Mediterranean. It is to be 200 Kilomètres long, 262 feet wide and nearly 40 feet deep. It is to start on the west coast of Italy from a point near Montalto di Castro, in the Roman province, and issue at Fano, in the Adriatic. The scheme provides for a harbour with an area of 12 acres at each extremity. The work is calculated to employ 200,000 workmen for six years, costing 40,343,690 frs., or about 1,600,000*l*, including the amortisation of the borrowed capital. The expected annual income is put down at 48,221,893 frs.

THE Hotel Bernina, at Samaden, is lighted with electricity, power being supplied by a waterfall. In the day, instead of allowing it to waste, they thought of utilising the current and all the ordinary cooking is now done in a range fitted with a series of German silver resistance coils.

THE British Medical Association opened its fifty-seventh annual meeting at Leeds on August 13. There were six hundred delegates present. The society has thirteen thousand members on its rolls with branches in the Cape of Good Hope, Nova Scotia, West Indies and India. Dr. Wheelhouse presided. In the address, the Doctor claimed that "medicine and surgery had been founded on a rock of knowledge from which they could never henceforth be dislodged. They were adding year by year to the vast stores of their knowledge, and doing a mighty work in the dominion of pain and suffering. He foreshadowed the time when by the spread of sanitary and other sciences the whole human race would be protected from the evil influence of the seeds of disease." In one of the papers read on August 14 at the Conference, Dr. Brindley James, of London, suggested the establishment of a Government Department of Health, with two medical Peers and a Cabinet Minister of Public Health.

ONE of the charges against General Boulanger was embezzlement of public money. According to the address of M. Quesnay de Beaurepaire for the prosecution, when Boulanger took office as War Minister, the reserved fund amounted to 2,250,000 francs. He took for his personal propaganda no less than 242,000 francs, the amount being written off as subsidies to journals. Captain Driant was paid 10,000 francs for the publication of biographies of the General by way of increasing his popularity. The Action received 25,000 francs, and 1,000 copies daily of the National which took up his cause were purchased, while 10,000 and 5,000 francs went to other journals. An unknown "B" was rewarded with 15,000 francs. When he joined the Ministry, he was poor and his father in debt to the extent of 60,000 frs. These were cleared off at once. He had two small apartments hired and furnished for him by Mine. Pourpe at costs of 12,000 and 15,000 frs. where he received ladies. It was undeniable that the General took for his personal uses at least 107,000 frs. of the Secret Service money.

A question was raised whether the Secret Service money, not amenable to accounting, could be the subject of a charge against a Minister, but the court—minus the 53 of the Right who had questioned the competency of the court to try the General and would not be present—overruled the objection by 195 against 5, (there being 10 abstentions) and found the General guilty.

GENERAL BOULANGER, Count Dillon and M. Rochefort were sentenced on August 14, to deportation to a fortified place and to pay the costs of the trial. Under the French law, it is open to them to demand retrial within six months.

THE following is a summary of the subsequent proceedings in the ecclesiastical litigation we noticed last week:—

"On Aug. 13, Mr. Edgar F. Jenkins, Proctor for the Bishop of Lincoln, filed in the Registry of the Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury the responsive plea of the Bishop of Lincoln. The bishop admits the facts alleged by the prosecution, but denies the use of the alleged illegal practices. He submits that the use of two lighted candles on the holy table was lawful; in taking the eastward position while consecrating the elements he had 'no wish or intention to prevent the communicants present from seeing him break the bread and take the cup into his hand'; he contended that the ablution of the paten and chalice and the reverent consumption of the remaining bread and wine were in accordance with the rubric. Similar replies are filed to like charges on the second occasion mentioned in the articles, with this addition—that 'during the celebration down to the Creed he stood or knelt as required by the rubrics in front of the holy table, and at the northern part thereof, this being the north side of the table as directed by the rubric. During the reading of the Ten Commandments he turned to the people as directed by the rubric.' In conclusion, 'the said proctors, save as aforesaid, do not admit, but on the contrary deny, the allegations in the articles contained; and they submit that the acts stated in this plea are not, nor are any of them illegal acts forbidden by the laws, canons, and constitutions ecclesiastical of this Church and realm. Wherefore the said proctors pray that their said party may be dismissed from all further observance of justice, and that otherwise right and justice may be done in the premises."

FOR the statement in his paper the Nirodni Prava that the Bulgarian Government had signed a convention with Austria-Hungary, giving that Power the right to occupy Widdin and Rustchuk in case of war, which statement has been construed to damage the Government in the eyes of the people, M. Radoslavoff, a former Bulgarian Prime Minister, has been ordered to be prosecuted.

MR. FRAMJEE C. MEHTA, editor and proprietor of the Kaisar-i-Hind, has obtained a summons from the Bombay Esplanade Police Court against Mr. K. N. Kabraji, editor, and Mr. Merwanjee Fardoonjee Marzban, proprietor, of the Rast Goftar and Satya Prakash, on a charge of defamation.

ACCORDING to the Kathawar Times, the vernacular paper Kathiawadi published in Wadhwan will be prosecuted this month before the Acting Political Agent, Jhalawar, on a charge of extortion, at the instance of the Dhrangadra State.

A CORRESPONDENT from Lahore telegraphs to us on the 4th that

In the Lahore defamation case Pandit Gopinath versus the proprietor and the editor of the Kohinoor, the defendants, acknowledging the baselessness of the allegations, tendered unreserved apology in Court, which the plaintiff in common courtesy accepted.

THE Commissioner of Police at Bombay, having, a few months ago, issued a circular to book-sellers warning them against selling Vizetelly's translations from certain French works condemned in England, the 'cute vendors now offer them under different titles. Their custom is scarcely affected.

IN response to the call of the Trustees of their Panchayet Funds, the Parsees met in large numbers at the Albless Baug, Girgaum, Bombay, in the afternoon of Sunday the 25 August, to protest against the strictures made upon them by the Inspector-General Ommaney's confidential report in the Crawford scandal. Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy presided. The meeting unanimously adopted the following Resolutions:—

"That whilst gratefully appreciating the kindly feelings, good will and confidence of the Government of Bombay towards the Parsee community, as expressed in the first para. of the demi-official letter of his Excellency Lord Reay to the Hon'ble Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit, Knight, dated the 22nd July, 1889, in reply to his letter of the 20th idem, relating to the false imputations against the whole Parsee community, contained in the Note of the Acting Inspector-General of Police, dated the 20th February, 1889, in connection with the Crawford case, this meeting records its opinion, that the Parsee community would have had no cause for dissatisfaction had the said Government been pleased to express officially its dissent from the said imputations at the time of placing the said Note on the official records, or at the time of forwarding the same to her Majesty's Secretary of State for India."

"That this meeting considers—(a) that the Parsee community as a body was entirely disinterested and unconcerned in the objects of the particular enquiries narrated in the said Note of the Acting Inspector-General of Police, and completely indifferent to the results thereof; (b) that the Parsee community fully appreciated the desire of the Government of Bombay in directing the said enquiries to maintain a high standard of morality in the administration of the Public Service of this Presidency; and (c) that throughout the conduct of such enquiries, the Parsee community fully sympathised with the efforts of the Government to elucidate the truth by appointing the Commission which sat for that purpose."

"That this meeting considers that the imputations against the whole Parsee Community contained in Section 78, headed 'Opposition of the Parsees' in the said Note of the Acting Inspector-General of Police, in the following terms, namely:—(1) That 'that whole of the Parsee community, which includes all the people who know most about Mr. Crawford's financial arrangements, were in the opposition;' (2) that 'from Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy down to Merwaenje Pleader and the proprietors of the Deccan Herald, every Parsee was a passive or active obstructionist;' (3) that 'it deserves mention, lest the Parsees who have succeeded in preventing themselves being mixed up with Mr. Crawford, should get credit, which they most certainly do not deserve, for superior morality,' are sweeping, entirely unfounded, and contrary to truth in every respect and that this meeting desires to express its strong and firm repudiation of the said imputations, and its extreme regret that they should have been recklessly made against a whole community by a responsible officer of Government in an official document which has gone forth and been published to the whole British Empire."

"That copies of the resolutions passed at this meeting, together with the full minutes of the proceedings, be forwarded to the Government of Bombay, and through them to her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, in the name and on behalf of the Parsee community generally of Bombay, Poona, and other places, duly authenticated by the signature of the chairman of this meeting, with a request to annex the same to the records of the Crawford Commission Case, and to give them the same extent of publicity as has been given to the imputations contained in the Note of the Acting Inspector-General of Police."

The same day, the Parsee community of Kurrachee held a similar meeting.

THE Principal of the Sir Jamsetji Jejeebhoy P. B. Institution in Bombay, Mr. D. N. Wadia, has inaugurated a Pice Savings Bank to teach the pupils thrift. We thought this was a lesson which the Parsees imbibed with their mothers' milk. The majority of these boys belong to the poor of the Parsee community. Have they pice to save? We hope they will not deny themselves creature comforts to save.

SHAHEEZADA MAHOMED BUKHTYAR SHAH, of the Mysore family, son of the late lamented Prince Anwar Shah, has been granted the privilege of private entrée to Government House.

THE Englishman announces that "Dr. Chew, Analyst to the Calcutta Corporation, has resigned his appointment." Why? Was he not suspended? The Calcutta Corporation is continually appointing persons who very soon have to retire or to be sent away.

IT is reported in Madras that Mr. J. D. Rees, at present on furlough, hopes to arrive at Agra from Europe next month, in time to meet Lord Connemara on his way from Madras to Simla, and, having relieved Mr. Claude Vincent, the Acting Private Secretary, will accompany His Excellency to Simla and back to Madras. It is said that Mr. Vincent will also go to Simla, for instructions in connection with his appointment to serve on the staff of Prince Albert Victor during His Royal Highness's tour in India, Mr. Rees retaining the Private Secretaryship until Mr. Vincent is able to resume his post on the Governor's staff.

W. HAGGERT having for the past 15 years taught the Santhals that the Bible was inspired by God and should be taken as their guide in living, seems astonished to find it put into practice. The headman of Monohor, divided between his fear of punishment from man and his dread of what may befall him if he disobeys the word of the Lord and suffers a witch to live, has taken to flogging the poor woman that he considers to be thus afflicted.

Mr. Haggert should explain to his disciples that the Bible is only to be understood in a Pickwickian sense.

Mr. Haggert recommends more Government schools, and I agree with him and further suggest a society for the promotion of common sense amongst Europeans as regards religious matters.

When are they going to abandon this belief in witches and spirits and devils and bedeviled pigs and singular superstitions?

AT Jubbulpore on the 30th of last month, Mahomed Khan, the gymnastic instructor at the Raj Kumar School, shot dead with an Express rifle one of his fellow tutors named Abdoos Salam, whilst he was drawing water at the cistern, and afterwards blew out his own brains with the same weapon. The motive was revenge at being accused of theft.

LAST month, the visitors to the Museum—open 21 days—numbered 35,869, namely, natives 26,559 males and 8,560 females and Europeans 554 males and 196 females, or a daily average of 1,708.

NILAKUNTA SHASTRY, a Pleader, sued the Secretary of State for a piece of land, in the Sub-Judge's Court at Madura. The Government Pleader Mr. French asked one of the witnesses the question "Do you or do you not know that the Sheristadar was bribed to write exhibit E?" Nilakunta resented this action of the Government Pleader as casting a slur on his character and moved the District Court for permission to sue Mr. French for professional misconduct. The District Judge Mr. Ross referred the matter to the High Court, privately giving it as his opinion that a reprimand would be enough. The matter was argued on behalf of Mr. French by Mr. Willie Grant in the High Court. He pointed out that the Collector of the district claimed privilege and refused to answer whether he had instructed Mr. French to put the question, and that Mr. French was not at liberty to disclose his instructions. The Counsel for the petitioner argued that the question was improper and that the Collector could not claim the privilege. The High Court (the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Wilkinson) dismissed the reference, the Chief Justice remarking

"the Collector dare not disclose his instructions without the permission of the Secretary of State, and Mr. French could not divulge his instructions. If he did, the court would take notice of it. It seemed to their lordships that the sub-judge and the district judge did not study the Act. It was not shown by the petitioner that Mr. French was not instructed, and if instructed, he acted within privilege."

The Advocate of India reports that

"Mr. Nanu Mian, the present Municipal Secretary of Surat, was lately administrator of the Sachin State. On Sunday last (Sep. 1) the young Nawab of Sachin was passing by the Municipal Office in his carriage, and, taking fright at some obstacle on the road, rushed into the compound of the municipal office, where Mr. Nanu Mian was standing at the time. The Nawab appears to have become greatly incensed on seeing him, and to have greeted him with violent abuse. Mr. Nanu Mian, our correspondent says, retaliated in words. The altercation was, fortunately, brought to an end, by the Nawab's carriage being driven away. Since then the Nawab and Mr. Nanu Mian have laid complaints against each other before the Collector of Surat."

RAMSBOTHAM, a horse dealer, died at Bradford in December last. He was not married but had lived with a woman for 20 years who bore him nine children, five of whom are living. In November he had put his mark to a will, prepared at his instruction, bequeathing the whole of his property to the children. After his death, the will was not forthcoming, and the Crown, represented by the Duchy of Lancaster, was about to put in a claim as heir to an intestate. The will now turned up among the papers of the deceased and was propounded by the mother of the children. The probate was opposed by one Alfred Ramsbotham, on the ground that the will was a forgery. The attesting witnesses swore to the execution, but a number of witnesses were produced to shew that the deceased had died intestate. The Jury, however, found the will genuine. Witnesses have their price in England as in India.

A SENSATION has been announced for next Saturday—Horse Parachute Descent.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

TO-DAY is the last Saturday mail day, the next mail day being Tuesday September 14. From September 20, the mails leave Bombay every Friday, they closing in Calcutta on Tuesday.

THERE has been an extraordinary rise in the river, and a breach in the Laltakuni embankment in consequence, and the country is flooded. There is great and widespread distress throughout the populous Districts of Moorshedabad and Nuddea. The Nawab Bahadur of Moorshedabad and the Maharani of Cossim-Bazar have, with their usual liberality and promptness, come forward to the relief of the poor and the suffering.

THE Labor Revolt is not confined to London. Though still a bloodless struggle, it has descended to threats and intimidation. In Liverpool, the grain-carriers struck work and won their terms. The sinews of war are being supplied by Australia in the shape of funds for relief of the strikers. As a consequence of the strike, two thousand Engineers have been locked out—dismissed—at Lambeth, Vauxhall and Pimlico.

The Dock Directors refused permission to the shipowners to make their own arrangements for discharge of the vessels. All efforts failing, Lord Mayor Whitehead tried his good offices with the Directors and Laborers. Mr. Lafone, the head of a leading firm of Wharfingers, has given way to the demand of the laborers, the Strike Committee have allowed the men, excepting the lightermen, to resume work on Thursday, and 5,000 men went to work that day. They have started a Strike Fund to which each laborer contributes one day's pay and one penny daily.

The Royal Warrant is out reducing the number of Generals to ninety, after December.

Mrs. Maybrick has succeeded in securing enough sympathy for her self and children. She has been spared the gallows and her children adopted by some Londoners.

The news from St. Petersburg is that the special train carrying the Shah was derailed on September 1, at Bar, in the Podolia district. None was injured and His Persian Majesty was subsequently taken to Elisabethgrad. There have again been several arrests of Nihilist men and seizure of some printing presses at Kharkoff.

Prince Bismarck is suffering from inflamed veins.

At the Cutlers' Feast, on Sep. 5, Lord Cross repeated the assurance that the Government had no notion of annexation of any kind in Cashmere and that as soon as Maharaja Pratap Singh sees his mistake and can trust himself to govern his country for the benefit of the people, the Government will be willing to hand it back to the Maharaja. The policy is specifically propounded in the Viceroy's frank and excellent letter to His Highness, to be found in another column.

THE High Court Long Vacation commenced from Thursday the 5th, and will continue till Friday the 15th November, the Judges resuming regular work on Monday November 18. There will be an Insolvent Court on Thursday October 31. The offices of the Court will close for original business from Monday September 23 to Tuesday November 12 and for the Kartic Pooja on Thursday and Friday November 14 and 15. Mr. Justice Norris will sit on the Original Side on Monday September 9 and then Mr. Justice Beverley will dispose of urgent Original work on Mondays and Thursdays till the 19th. After the 19th by special appointment Mr. Justice Tottenham will take up any urgent work that may be placed before him. On the Appellate Side, excepting the close holidays, namely, September 24 and 30 to October 10, & 23, 24, 26, November 1, 2, 7, 14 and 15, Messrs. Justices Tottenham and Gurudas Banerjee will sit as Vacation Judges and will hear motions and cases on Mondays and Thursdays.

LORD LANSDOWNE leaves Simla on October 22, travels by rail from Umballa to Khusialgarh, then by tonga to Kohat halting there the same night. The next day he rides through the Pass. Stops at Peshawar four days. Back to Attock by rail and then by boat down the Indus to Meerwalli. Thence to the Gumal Pass and back to Dehra Ismail Khan. Again by rail to Quetta, and up the Bolan and down the Harnai route. To Lahore by Sukkur. Stays there for 3 or 4 days and then comes direct to Calcutta reaching it in the afternoon of Saturday November 30.

Sir Mortimer Durand, Colonel Ardagh, Lord William Beresford, Surgeon-Major Fenn and Captains Streatfield and Harbord form the Viceregal party throughout the journey.

Lady Lansdowne has a separate programme of her own. Her Excellency parts company with the Viceroy at Rawal Pindi on October 24 and proceeds to Peshawar. On November 3 again leaves the Viceroy at Kalabagh and proceeds to Lahore, rejoining the Lord at Sher Shah Junction on November 15.

The Commander-in-Chief meets the Viceroy at Peshawar on the 29th and then proceeds to Quetta.

The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab bears the Viceroy company from Lahore, via Kohat, to Peshawar.

THE Law Member has introduced a Bill for breaking up, at the next vacancy in the office, the present jurisdiction of the Administrator-General of Bengal extending to the North-Western Provinces, the Panjab, the Central Provinces, Lower Burma, Ajmere and Merwara, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands and the dominions of Princes and States in India in alliance with Her Majesty—a much larger jurisdiction than that claimed by Mr. Justice Norris for the Calcutta High Court—into four centres, namely, at Calcutta, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon. To make the posts sufficiently remunerative, the Government takes the power to amalgamate the two offices of Official Trustee and Administrator-General at Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, the several High Courts giving up their patronage to appoint the Official Trustees. The Bill further provides for the administration of estates in the newly acquired territories of Upper Burma and British Baluchistan by an Administrator-General. It also declares, to the removal of an anomaly, that a receipt given by the executor or administrator in the country of domicile (other than British India) of a person leaving assets both in British India and in the country of his domicile, to the executor or administrator in British India for the surplus or residue of the estate in British India, is a valid discharge to the executor or administrator in British India.

IN deference to the wishes of the Calcutta, Madras, Rangoon and Kurrachee Chambers of Commerce, the Government have caused the amendment of the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, 1889. It had fixed August 1, 1889 as the date of its commencement. This threatened to prove an inconvenience and the several Chambers asked for the suspension of the Act for three months. The Supreme Government, in the Legislative Department, have accordingly empowered the Local Governments, in special cases, according to their discretion, either absolutely or subject to conditions, to permit piece-goods to be imported at any time before November 1 without having their length stamped thereon in standard yards, or, in standard yards and a fraction of such a yard.

COLONEL MOORE has filed his plaint against Mr. Norton. It consists of six paragraphs. Beginning with his name and description as a Lt.-Colonel of the Royal Artillery who has been President of the municipality from 1886, December 6, and setting forth in the 2nd the name and description of the defendant, he states in the 3rd that as such President he had the power, with the sanction of the Standing Committee of the corporation, of granting contracts for the right of cultivation on the farms of the municipality and did with such sanction grant such a contract from April 1, 1888 to March 21, 1891 to one P. Ellayalwar Naidoo. The next paragraph as containing the circumstances of the alleged libel, is the most important, so we give it entire:—

"Sometime in the early part of the present year 1889, and previous to the middle of the month of May 1889 and as the plaintiff believes, either in the early part of the said month of May or in the month of April preceding or thereabouts, the defendant at his own house, known as Dunmore House, the Luz, Madras, in the presence and hearing of divers persons including Mr. A. G. Bourne, the Professor of Biology in the Presidency College, Madras, falsely and maliciously, as plaintiff is informed, and believes to be true, spoke and published of, and concerning the plaintiff in respect of his office as President of the Municipal Commission for the City of Madras, the words following: that is to say 'that Ellayalwar Naidoo' (meaning thereby the said Sewage Farm Contractor in the last preceding paragraph mentioned) was 'his' (the plaintiff's) 'Sowcar' and 'he' (the plaintiff) 'was indebted to him and in his hands,' or words to the like tenor or effect, or which conveyed the Asia. His Hungarian endurance was taxed to the utmost. He lived on the way in deserted outhouses, frail and leaky, with bats and owls, beetles and scorpions, on the charity of the poor, and on the rewards of writing out charms for the living and pronouncing mass on the dead. His persistence was noble. His privations must have been terrible. The richest harvest of knowledge would not tempt most minds to such a mission.

But Vambéry is no mere Pandit. With an equal aptitude for letters and affairs, he is as great in politics almost as in philology. We believe he is a born politician, most Magyars are born politicians, we suspect. The misfortunes of their native land make them so. Hungary is the Niobe of nations. Her sons learn in suffering what they teach in public questions. In going all the way to High Asia, Vambéry thoroughly explored the countries he passed through, in respect of their geography, their history, their sociology and their government. Unfortunately, he had not the means for taking notes; he would not have dared to take any, if he had. He was reduced to his memory alone and he observed all the more carefully. And, among other things, he observed well the facts bearing on the politics and prospects of that region. He has given the world his political observations as well as those on other subjects. His book of Travels is well-known. The precursor of Boulger, he has written the History of Bokhara. His contributions to linguistics are many. Above all, he has written largely on the politics of Central Asia. Ever since his return, he has never lost an opportunity of drawing attention to the subject. His rôle has been rather unlucky. His song is not the song of optimism. He is a prophet of evil—a sort of Jeremiah and Cassandra combined. He was the first in our generation to force the notice of Europe, and of England in especial, to the development of Russian dominion—the rapid strides by which Russia was advancing towards China on the one hand and India on the other. He was unheeded, but he is long-suffering and he did not mind. He simply stuck to it, never ceasing his strain. There were those who derided him—sleek critics vain of knowledge acquired in the ease and quiet of the library—but the laugh was soon turned against them. The rapid progress of the great Northern Bear overtook the wits sooner than they were prepared for. But, whatever controversy there may subsist about his views, he is universally recognised as the best friend of Great Britain.

As such, he is, of course, the foe of Russia. And he is even more formidable in opposition than useful in alliance. He is a thorn on the side of the Czar. It is all very well to despise the puny attacks of literary men on the fabric of substantial power—to talk loftily of the insignificance of the pen before the sword and the bullet. But Napoleon the First knew better. He thought a single newspaper worth as much as a battalion. According to that standard, this Professor of Pesth is equal to half a Russian corps d'armée.

Of course, sympathising as he does with the rivals of Russia, he feels for her victims. As he warns England against the approach of the Russians to the Indian Empire, he mourns over the gradual and unavoidable dwindling of Turkey.

When such a man appears to speak to Mahomedans, they cannot choose but hear. We are sure our Mussulman brethren of India will not fail to listen to him with respectful attention. We only hope they will listen to some purpose. He discourses upon a good text. He recalls to them their past greatness, and invites them to recover their former glory. His ideal of greatness is not one of brute force. He knows that the era of that—at least for the Indian—has passed away, but he knows also that the opportunities for science are open to all in this age who care to seek it. He knows that, under the liberal sway of England in especial, the Mahomedans are as free to master the mysteries of Nature as any other section of the Queen-Empress' subjects. As a philosophical student of history, he cannot ignore the part that war and conquest, like colonization, has played in the divine scheme of the education of the human race. But if he names the rather ominous name of the Arab who won the title of the Sword of God, it is only to tickle the pride of our Islamite fellow-subjects as the race that carried with it wherever it went the eternal and glorious, but by no means obvious, doctrine of the unity of the godhead. He reminds them of the services of the Mahomedans in maintaining the torch of knowledge during all that long hybernation of Europe in the Middle Ages of Darkness. Having once given the light to Christendom, it can be no humiliation in receiving it back. Accordingly, he supports the movement set on foot by Nawab Abdool Luteef for Mussulman education through the medium of the English language. The educational backwardness of the Mussulmans is at once a political inconvenience to Government and a social difficulty to the more advanced sects. The Government and the entire community, no less than the Mahomedans in general, have reason to be thankful to his correspondent for drawing out the great Hungarian Professor.

✓ THE LETTER.

To Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadur, C. I. E., Calcutta.

BUDA PEST UNIVERSITY.

August the 12th 1889.

MY DEAR NAWAB,—I beg to acknowledge with many many thanks the receipt of the valuable and highly interesting pamphlets on the rise, growth and doings of the Mahomedan Literary Society of Calcutta, which you have been so kind to send me.

As one, who is deeply interested in the welfare and cultural development of the Mahomedan world, I have long time ago watched and paid the greatest attention to the activity of the Society created and led so admirably well by you, and I need scarcely say that I am much obliged to you for having afforded to me the opportunity of entering into relations with a man of your abilities, patriotism and true devotion to your nation.

Having devoted the greatest part of my life to the study of the Mahomedan nations and countries, I feel the keenest interest in the work of the Calcutta Literary Society of Mahomedans, who have furnished the most eloquent proof that, a nation, whose holy book contains the saying—will not and cannot remain behind in cultural progress, and that Islam is still able and willing to revive the glories of middle age, when the followers of the Koran were the torch-bearers of civilisation to mankind.

* اطلب العلم من المهد الى الممعد

It is also from a political point of view, that I must congratulate you of your doings, for you have shown to your fellow-believers the superiority of Western culture presented in English garb to the dim and false light, which might come from elsewhere. I am not an Englishman and I do not ignore the shortcomings and mistakes of English rule in India, but as one, who has lived in many countries of Europe and Asia and who took great trouble to look deeply into matters—I can assure you that England is by far in advance to the rest of European nations in point of view of justice, humanity, liberty and fair-dealing with those, who are entrusted to her care. You the Indian Mahomedans, who, as the successors of Khalid, can justly pride of having introduced monotheism in India, you are called upon to give to the rest of the people of Hindustan the best advice and example in choosing the appropriate means for modernising your matchless but antiquated culture. I wished that Turkey, who is fairly advancing in modern science, could take the lead in the Mahomedan world as an instructor and as a civilising agent, but poor Turkey, surrounded by enemies and weakened by continual warfare, must hardly struggle for her existence, and cannot look to her fellow-believers in the distance, in spite of the noble qualities and patriotism of her present ruler, whom I am proud to call my friend.

In default of a Moslem guide, you are on the best way in India in having adopted English tutorship, and you Sir, who leads that movement, you do certainly the best service to your nation and religion in encouraging the Mahomedans on the path of Western culture and sciences. I wished my age would permit me a visit to India, for I have not yet given up the idea of delivering a few lectures in Persian, which I speak like my mother language, to the Mahomedans of India, and if I come to India, I shall appear there under the patronage of your Society, trying to contribute a small stone to the noble building raised by your efforts.

I beg your pardon for having ventured to intrude with my long letter, which I conclude with the hope of your favoring me with the opportunity to continue our correspondence and of your forwarding also in future the publications of your Society to

Yours faithfully,
A. VAMBERY.

MOORSIEDABAD.

Azinganj, 2nd September, 1889.

The whole of Azinganj is under water. Old men say that they never witnessed such an extraordinary rise of the River Bhagirathi before. Miles and miles all round are under water. The Lalbag Sub-Divisional Court is also submerged. The sufferings of the people, the loss of property and cattle are very great and may better be imagined than described. Our worthy townsman Rai Setab Chaud Bahadur is very kindly distributing rice, and grain for men and fodder for cattle. Other leading men ought to follow his example in relieving the distressed. The Laltakori embankment gave way last night at 10 P. M. Seven arrests in connection therewith have been made. The distress is becoming general and assuming alarming aspect.

THE MUTTIABROOJ GRIEVANCE.

SIR,—The Mohurram festival has commenced here since the evening of Wednesday the 28th instant, when the new moon was first seen, and Rs. 3,000 has been granted by Government for the expenses of this year's ceremonies at the King of Oudh's Imambarrah at Muttiaboorj. The celebration of the festival is chiefly superintended by Prince Mirza Jahan Kadar, although with him are associated Princes Mirza Kamar Kadar and Mirza Mahomed Jogee.

The Imambarrah is under the special charge of Mr. Upton, the Government Solicitor. He has issued a notice to the following effect: "Notice is hereby given to the Princes that in future requests for special services at, or for the loan of articles from, the Imambarrah should be made direct to this office."

The Imambarrah is a place of religious worship according to the tenets of the Shi'ah, and on various occasions, throughout the year, Mahomedan gentlemen and ladies repair to it for purposes of worship. Mr. Upton prohibits them from holding special services there, without making a formal application on each and every occasion at his office, which is about six miles distant from this place. This leads only to enhance the importance of his Tehsildar, Monmoth Mookerjee, the son of Kedarnath Mookerjee, the Head Assistant of the Superintendent of Political Pensions. The practice that has been introduced in this connection is, that whenever any Prince or Begum makes application to Mr. Upton's office, for holding a special service at the Imambarrah, he deposes Monmoth to superintend the giving out of the sacred articles from the store-room of the Imambarrah, and the Baboo brings them out, handles them (much to the disgust and chagrin of the priests and others), and makes them over to the applicant, and again receives them back after the ceremony is over, and puts them back in the store-room. Now, in the name of common decency, cannot this duty be entrusted to a Mahomedan official instead of a Hindu? Has it never occurred to Mr. Upton or to the Government, that such a procedure places undue power and influence in the hands of a common Hindu clerk, over the ignorant Begums (who have great regard for their religious services), and unnecessarily offends the religious feelings of the entire Mahomedan community? Cannot this simple duty be delegated to some one of the Princes living close to the Imambarrah, and he be held responsible for the safe custody of the sacred articles?

As, you, Mr. Editor, have evinced some interest in the affairs of the Mahomedans, I appeal to you on behalf of the numerous Princes, Begums and other Shiah residents of this neighbourhood, to give a prominent place in your worthy journal to this letter, and draw the attention of Government to it by a few lines in your editorial columns.

A HINDU-RIDDEN MAHOMEDAN.

Muttiaboorj, 30th August 1889.

A CHALLENGE

From---Captain Andrew William Harsey, late of Her Majesty's Service,
To---George McLagan Chesney, Esq., Editor-in-Chief of the Pioneer.

SIR,—Having perused the leading article which appeared in the Pioneer of the 26th instant, it would from it appear that that journal regards with feelings of extreme regret, that the prosecution for defamation should have come to such an unexpected and unforeseen termination, and thus have prevented you from justifying your conduct towards me in the eyes of the public.

It seems to me a most extraordinary fact, if the sentiments expressed in the article above referred to are genuine, that you should have allowed the prosecution to fail on such a technical point of law, viz., "your responsibility for the publication in Calcutta of the paper containing the article objected to," when you could, by admitting such responsibility, have removed all difficulties; nor does it redound to your credit or that of the paper of which you are admittedly the editor.

The failure of the prosecution cannot, under the circumstances, remove the stigma which the defamation complained of has placed upon your paper, and I shall be glad to know whether you are prepared to admit that the Pioneer of the 26th of January last was published in Calcutta and its Suburbs, about that period, with your knowledge, and likewise whether you hold yourself responsible for such publication.

I also ask of you, that you will forward to my Solicitors, Messrs. Remfry and Rose, No. 5, Fancy Lane, a declaration to that effect, signed by you, and your signature attested by two respectable witnesses; likewise that you will undertake, in the same letter, that neither through yourself nor your Solicitors or Counsel, will you attempt, during the prosecution of any further proceedings against you for the said defamation of the 26th of January this year, in any other Court in Calcutta or its Suburbs, to prevent the said case for defamation from being committed to the Sessions; that you, your Solicitors or your Counsel, will, on the committal of the case to the Sessions, petition for the removal of the said case for hearing before the High Court, Calcutta, to be heard before a jury—in fact allow and act, as far as lies in your power, that the case shall stand in statu quo ante Mr. Justice Norris's direction to the jury on the 23rd of August—"and from that point be so proceeded with in its regular course as if nothing had interrupted it on that date. And let God defend the right.

I am not actuated in this by any malice or vindictiveness, but my prosecution is simply to settle if the statements made by you, in the issue of the Pioneer in question, were justifiable, or whether they are defamatory. In this I can honestly state I am actuated by mens conscia recti, and feel as Shakespere so aptly puts it:—

Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just!
And he but naked—though locked up in steel—
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted!

If you agree to the points I have mentioned above, I will, on my part, consent not to prosecute anywhere else but in Calcutta and its Suburbs.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,
ANDREW HEARSEY, CAPTAIN,
late of Her Majesty's Service.

P. S.—May I beg the favour of your giving this Challenge an insertion in your columns?

A. H.

THE REPLY.

Calcutta, 3rd September 1889.

No. 6342.

Dear Sirs,—Mr. Chesney has requested us to acknowledge, which we do through you, the receipt of an undated document headed "A challenge" and signed Andrew Harsey.

We need hardly say that Mr. Chesney will not accede to the extraordinary proposition which Mr. Harsey makes.

Yours Faithfully,
Messrs. Remfry & Rose.

substance or meaning of such words, the defendant by his language meaning and imputing that the plaintiff was indebted to the said Ellyalwar Naidoo and that in consequence of such indebtedness he had acted as such President of the Municipality in a manner which was unjustifiable and discreditable to him, and had not been neutral, impartial, and without respect of person or property, in the discharge of his duties, but had been actuated by improper, partial, interested, and corrupt motives therein, and was therefore not worthy of the position he held as President of the said Municipal Commission, Madras, and of the respect, confidence, and support of the said Municipal Commissioners and of the public whose servant he is."

The Plaintiff thus concludes :—

"By reason of these premises the plaintiff has been injured in mind, character and reputation, and has suffered damage.

The plaintiff claims Rs. 50,000 damages, and prays judgment for Rs. 50,000 and costs of suit."

WE have heard from Hyderabad, that the strained relation between the Nizam and Sir Asnan Jah is the principal topic of conversation at that place at the present moment. The rumour is very strong that the Minister will soon resign.

It had been expected by everybody that Rajah Kishen Pershad, the grandson of the late Peshkar, would receive the Khillut of the office of Peshkar at the Grand Durbar held on the late Bukreed festival, but it was not so. It seems the Rajah's succession to the post occupied by his distinguished grand-father, is against the wish and policy of Moulvi Mushtak Hosain, the factotum and right-hand man of the Minister, hence he is being kept out of his hereditary office, for which he is in every way fully qualified. Perhaps the lucky Moulvi is thinking of having that high office filled by a Mahomedan gentleman, but it would be a crying injustice were the only one office in the administration, which has always been held by a Hindoo nobleman, snatched away from the people. For Hyderabad is Hindu, though governed by a Sultan and Pashas all Mussulman.

THE Pindi assault case has ended in the conviction of all and sundry concerned. Lieutenant Murray, of the 34th Pioneers, has been fined by the Deputy Commissioner Mr. Thorburn Rs. 50 for the violent hands he laid on a Bengali boy. The boy too has been fined Rs. 10 for assaulting the military gentleman, and, we suspect lowering British Prestige. We wonder whether the lawyers in the case also got a slap a piece—to complete the farce of even-handed justice. In any case, it is satisfactory to know for the credit of the Army that its representative proved his heroism in a fight with a frail but plucky Bengali lad. With such materiel, we may go to war with the Lushais with confidence.

THE Burdwan jewellery case has been postponed till after the Vacation and the award referred to the Commissioner of the Burdwan Division. There is a difference about the identity of some of the more costly jewellery and the Maharanee has agreed to abide by the decision of the Commissioner to avoid further costs and delay. But this matter and the main cause are being protracted beyond reasonable lengths to serve some purpose or other. Two Commissions have been issued for examination of witnesses in the North-West Provinces on behalf of both the parties. The Defendants' commission is returnable by 31st January 1890 and the Plaintiff's six weeks after. There will be breaks in the commission between the 2nd and 13th November and from the 20th December to 5th January 1890. The lawyers engaged will have thus both business and pleasure during the vacation. The Commission collects evidence at Lahore to shew whether the Burdwan Raj family are Punjabi Khetries or whether their law and custom allows adoption of an only son and a sister's son. Has the affidavit for possession of documents been filed by the defendants? The matter was being delayed on this plea and that and allowed by those entrusted to see it filed as ordered by the Court.

DR. HOERNLE, though one of the minor deities, is an exceptionally liberal one. At any rate, if he can be moved to listen to any prayer he more than grants it, not only giving what is wanted but something more besides, out of the abundance of his own grace. We confess we are much amused to find that the Principal of the Calcutta Medresseh, smarting under indignation at the dissatisfaction of the Mahomedan community with his Continental methods of administration, has, after all, allowed on the occasion of the Mohurram, 11 days' vacation from Aug. 28, instead of 9 days only, from the 29th. As a result, the students have got one day's holiday before the Mohurram, which was not required at all by the Mahomedans. This shews that he is quite independent of any rule or principle, and allows or stops holidays just as his godship pleases.

HERE is an educational hint. A friend of ours writes :—"I expect my sons from St. Xavier's College to-morrow (August 31.) They are on leave in that institution. They may teach well, but the Revd. Fathers go in for too many Saints' Days. They might have extra prayers on their account, but the boys should have their lessons. Fancy they have about 6 months' leave in the year, and we pay for the whole year!" We hope the authorities of St. Xavier's might come to some rational, though strictly orthodox, solution of the difficulty, as they mean to make their college popular. We may as well tell them that the complaint comes not from a poor Heathen. Catholicism cannot, any more than Hinduism, disregard the necessities of the age.

GODOWNS and barracks are to be built for the Lushai Expedition in the village of Madarbatree, thana Town, zillah Chittagong. For the purpose, 6 bigahs, 11 cottahs, and 14 chittacks of land of standard measurement have been declared under the Act.

If the reader should ask what or whereabouts is thana Town, we must confess, not having ever eaten Government salt, we are not learned enough in administrative geography to be able to say. We are not even sure that there is no misprint in the matter. We transcribe the word or words from the Gazette official as we find it or them. If thana Town had been Thana Town one might suppose it to be something like Camden Town. If this unitalicised "thana" without an initial capital stands for a Police station, "thana Town" is a queer development of official Anglo-Indianese.

MR. SMITH made over charge of his office of Presidency Commissioner to Mr. Westmacott in the afternoon of Saturday Aug. 31. Mr. Smith passes his leave at Darjeeling. Baboo Annodapiasad Ghose, from Burdwan, joins the office by the middle of this month, when Baboo Aubinash Chunder Mullick goes back to Baraset in charge of the Sub-division. The first order Mr. Westmacott made was to make the Bhuttacharjee down to Balaki the orderly to be in attendance from 10½ in the morning to 7 in the evening. The Bhuttacharjee is at his tricks again. The new Commissioner had better keep a sharp eye on his Assistant, or he might find himself compromised.

A CORRESPONDENT of an upcountry paper writes :—

"As a stranger visiting the Bombay Presidency, but ignorant of any of the local dialects, I wished to go to Church yesterday, but my coachman did not comprehend English. After a long palaver, I got angry and told him most un-Christially to 'drive to the deoul,' and I was taken straight to the Church! I find that 'deoul' is the vernacular for a place of worship."

The writer is evidently proud of his ignorance and is only surprised at the cabman's prompt interpretation of his testy, if profane, description of his destination. But the kindness of the Almighty is the wisdom of the unsophisticated. What a hit was that! the more so if the place which the swearing Briton was driven to was a refuge of Dissent! Or, is Jehu a Bombay Babooling who, having graduated at the University, or, possibly, been plucked, had, in consequence of the glut of educational qualifications in the market, been driven to seek a living on the dicky? Such a being—the necessary outcome of our system—must in any occupation be still dominated by the memories and influence of the studies he had so long and so sedulously been prosecuting from childhood upwards. It would seem as if our learned cabby had paraphrased into action the opening lines of Daniel Defoe's Satire,

Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The devil always builds a chapel there
And 'twill be found, upon examination,
The latter has the largest congregation

This traveller's tale reminds us of the story of school examination at which the Right Reverend Visitor asking Who is your chief spiritual enemy, the boy answered "The Bishop."

THE Mohurram has come and gone. This is the last day of the grand festival. The Police arrangements, for the prevention of collision between various parties, always bent upon creating disturbance in this festival, were excellent and complete. The whole of the Police force behaved exceedingly well in regulating the numerous processions, and in watching the immense gatherings inside and outside the different Imambarrahs, in this Town, at great personal labor and inconvenience to themselves. We have heard of no disturbance, no quarrel, and no accident. The residents of the Town are thankful to Mr. Lambert for this agreeable result.

The grand processions of the Moghul merchants came out on the afternoons of Wednesday and Thursday, and were as splendid as ever. This morning's procession was even grander. There was a vast sea of heads from Fouzdary Balakhanah to Manicktollah, both in the streets and on the house tops on both sides of Chitpore Road, Bowbazar Street, and Circular Road.

WE publish elsewhere a letter from Garden Reach (Muttiaboory), which gives some idea of the petty tyranny which is being exercised by the office of Mr. Upton, over the relatives of the late King of Oudh, in connection with their religious ceremonies on the occasion of the present Mohurram festival.

We are informed that the sacred gold and silver articles, which had been made by the late King of Oudh at a considerable expenditure, chiefly for being displayed at his Imambarah on the occasion of the Mohurram, were not given out by Mr. Upton's people until the fourth day of the Mohurram, when they should have been made over to the Committee of the Imambarah long before. Mr. Upton should see that his Hindu clerk Monmoth does not find any pretext to interfere in religious matters connected with the Imambarah. Unless this is done, the Muttiaboory people will have grave cause for dissatisfaction.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1889.

PROFESSOR VAMBERY TO ISLAM IN HIND.

THE leading political event of the week in India is—a letter. And not an official or even public letter. We do not mean the elaborate despatch addressed by the Viceroy in propria persona to the Maharaja Pertab Singh of Cashmere, which we reproduce in another column, for it has for some weeks been before the public. That to which we refer emanates from no authoritative or at least official, personage, being but a poor, if eminent, European Pandit's communication, and it was given to the world only yesterday in the morning papers and appears for the first time in the weekly press only in to-day's Reis & Rayyet. We mean, of course, Professor Arminius Vambery's letter to Nawab Abdool Luteef Bahadoor. Although addressed by one private man to another in the ordinary course of private life, the letter is only nominally private, being what in Indian official parlance is called a demi-official letter, and it has very properly been given out. Nor will the writer himself, though there is no permission in that behalf on the face of his letter, object to its appearance, if he has not, in a suppressed postscript or otherwise, formally permitted such publication. There has been no breach of etiquette, we take it. Though neither is an official, the Indian having some time retired from service, both are public men and even distinguished public characters, and the letter treats of public matters. The pronounced egotism, or rather egoism, of the writer itself is not private as it would be in the case of another, but thoroughly relevant. Egotism or egoism, it comes to the same thing, after all, but we do not use the much abused words in any opprobrious sense. The personality of public men is of public interest—their autobiographic revelations always welcome. Even so is the information touching the views and movements of the Professor on a subject on which he is an acknowledged authority. Altogether, this publication is one of general utility.

• Mons. Vambery is a distinguished savant—a philological and geographical explorer. His knowledge of the languages of Islam is vast and ready; Semitic or Japhetic, Aryan or Turanian, he has all at his fingers' ends. When, about a generation back, he went out on his famous Argonautic Expedition in quest not of any golden fleece but of his philological Prester John, he set out of Constantinople an accomplished Arab, Turk and Persian in one, and by the time he left Teheran and European civilization, he had received his finishing touches, so as to be able with confidence to proceed as a Haji in the company of Hajis. That this was no forced or external assumption was proved, not only by his companions, during the whole of a long journey, never suspecting him, but also by his saving himself with his ready acquaintance with Mahomedan theology and his voluble indignation in Arabic, when the instinct of young genius in Yacoob Khan, then the boy Governor of Herat now a prisoner in India, did detect him. A mere colloquial Arabic—in the modern form—is no great matter, and there have been some like Burekhardt in the past and Palgrave and Badger in our times who have joined classic Arabic erudition to spoken fluency. Belonging to this rare band, Vambery exhibits a far wider linguistic range than any one of these extraordinary men. He is familiar with all the different forms and dialectical varieties of Persian and Turkish—the Persian of Firdousi, and the Persian of Saadi as well as the Persian of Nasiruddin Shah's Court—the bastard Turki of the Pashas of Constantinople as well as the pure well of Turkish undefiled of Turkistan both in the Arabicised speech of the Olema of Bokhara the Noble and the simple "Saxon" vigour of the common tongue. He is probably the greatest Turanian or at least Visi-Turanian linguist in Europe, for he has made a comparative study of his native Magyar with all its affinities and been to the fountainhead on purpose. He is one of the heroes of letters, besides. He has made such sacrifices and incurred such risks in the cause of philology as have never been surpassed,—nay, not even by the mythical Fiezi in his pursuit of Sanskrit. This fact is usually not realized. It is now very different since the last Russian war with Khiva. Just now, the whole of the mysterious and dreaded region beyond Persia and Afghanistan Proper is now a European dependency traversed by the railway. Not so when poor Vambery penetrated it. It was then indeed the Land of the wild Turkoman and of anarchy and bloodshed. It is true that some had before been there, but there was a significant difference in the manner of the doing. They did not go as he did. They went as envoys or as European gentlemen. If any of them was constrained to adopt the habits of the country, they still allowed themselves the conveniences of Asiatic gentlemen—of Mirzas and Effendis. But Vambery made a sheer plunge into Asiatic life—at once a clean and a dirty plunge—a clean plunge into the dirtiest bottom of the Central Asiatic pool. It was not only the renunciation of the comforts of civilised being but a straying far beyond the ordinary shabbiness and untidiness of backward primitive communities. The horrors of Mr. Greenwood's bath as an Amateur Casual was a joke to the baptism of dirt Vambery underwent. The Pathan commercial traveller who sleeps with his camel in the field and changes his linen once a year in the Eed Festival is an extravagantly nice person before the Khivan or Kokandi pilgrim to Mecca, and it was as such a pilgrim that Vambery explored the heart of CASHMERE.

LORD LANSDOWNE TO MAHARAJA PROTAP SINGH.

My Honoured and Valued Friend,—I have received your Highness's letter of the 14th May. It is satisfactory to me to learn from your Highness that you are loyally disposed towards the Paramount Power, and it is your desire to be guided by my advice. I shall give it to you frankly, and without any attempt to conceal my thoughts.

Your Highness has stated in your letter that your conduct has lately been completely misrepresented by your secret enemies; that Colonel Parry Nisbet, the British Resident in Cashmere, has dealt unjustly with you, and that your chief enemy has been your youngest brother, Raja Amar Singh. You suggest that the letter to Raja Amar Singh, signed and sealed by your Highness on the 8th March of this year, was written without due consideration, and in consequence of pressure put upon you by the Resident; you urge that that you have never enjoyed sufficient independence of action in regard to the affairs of your State to enable you to give satisfactory evidence of your ability as a ruler; you beg that you may now be given a further trial, and, with this object, you virtually recede from the proposals contained in the letter to Raja Amar Singh, of which I have just spoken; and, in conclusion, you express, in the strongest language, your inability to submit patiently to the position in which you now find yourself.

I must point out to your Highness that the decision of the Government of India to relieve you of an active share in the Government of your State was arrived at not only in consequence of recent events, but of circumstances which must be within your Highness's recollection, and which occurred some time before my arrival in this country. During the last years of the administration of my predecessor, the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava, extremely unfavourable reports had been received by the Government of India of the manner in which the affairs of Cashmere were administered by your Highness. The finances of the State were in disorder, a disorder which, there could be little doubt, was increased by your own extravagance, while your Highness had surrounded yourself by persons of the worst reputation, whose influence over you had produced the most unfortunate results. These complaints, which were made not only by the then Resident, but also by certain of the Princes and Sardars of the Cashmere State, were borne out by papers which were placed in the hands of the Government of India. These contained, amongst other matters, ample evidence to show that you were squandering the resources of your State in a most reckless and improvident manner, and in the encouragement of the most unworthy persons.

At this time the Government of India anxiously considered the course which it should adopt in reference to your Highness, and its decision was conveyed to you in the Kharita of the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava, dated the 25th July of last year. In this letter Lord Dufferin pointed out to you the impropriety of your dismissal of your Prime Minister, Dewan Luchman Das, who had been appointed after consultation with the Government of India, without reference to that Government. He strongly urged upon your Highness the necessity of a careful investigation of the condition of the finances of Cashmere, and of the Executive and Judicial Services, and he intimated to you that he was prepared to accept, with certain modifications, a scheme which had been proposed on behalf of your Highness for the formation of a reformed Council, of which you were to be the President. The constitution of this Council appeared to Lord Dufferin to be open to certain objections, but, in deference to your Highness's wishes, he determined not to press these. He, moreover, expressed his readiness to supply you with a certain number of trained native officials who might be of assistance to you in strengthening your administration.

About this time, in order to meet your Highness's wishes, advantage was taken of the appointment of Mr. Plowden to another post in order to appoint, as Resident in Cashmere, a gentleman well known to you, and regarded by you with feelings of friendship and confidence.

Looking back at these events, it is surely not too much to say that the result of the action of the Government of India in 1888 was to give your Highness, in the fullest sense of the term, a fair trial, such as that for which you now so earnestly ask. I am, however, constrained to tell your Highness distinctly that the result of that trial appears to have been of a most unsatisfactory kind. In the spring of this year my attention was called to the documents referred to in your Highness's letter: many of these had every appearance of being genuine, and they have, moreover, a striking resemblance to those other papers of which I have already spoken, and which came into the possession of the Government of India at a previous time. Your Highness is correct in expressing your belief that the action subsequently taken by my Government was not justified merely by the disclosures contained in these letters. Even if the whole of these had been unquestionably genuine, I could not bring myself to believe that they had been written deliberately or with a full appreciation of their meaning. There were, however, other circumstances which the Government of India could not do otherwise than take into consideration. The reports from the new Resident of the manner in which your Highness had administered the State had been not less unfavourable than those submitted, from time to time, by Mr. Plowden. Notwithstanding the ample resources of your State, your Treasury was empty; corruption and disorder prevailed in every department and every office; your Highness was still surrounded by low and unworthy favourites, and the continued misgovernment of your State was becoming, every day, a more serious source of anxiety.

This, however, was not all. A meeting had taken place between your Highness and Colonel Parry Nisbet at Jammu on the 7th March, and upon that occasion your Highness had distinctly stated that it was your wish to have no more to do with public affairs, and had asked the Resident whether he was prepared to assume, in conjunction with a Council, the management of the State. You repeated several times to the Resident that you were tired of the trouble which had been occasioned to you by official affairs, and that you would prefer to go away and to live in peace privately. At the termination of the interview, you stated that you would send your brother, the Prime Minister, Raja Amar Singh, to discuss the matter further with Colonel Parry Nisbet; and Raja Amar Singh, on the following morning, assured the Resident that you had made up your mind to give up interference with public affairs during the next few years. A further conference between yourself and the Resident took place on the following day. You still adhered to the language which you had used on the previous day, only stipulating that the Council was not to interfere with your private affairs. In the afternoon the Prime Minister brought to Colonel Parry Nisbet your edict constituting a Council of State, which was to include an English member, and which was to have "full and sole powers in all the public Departments of the State for a period of five years," during which it was provided that "the Maharaja will not interfere and will have no voice in the administration of the public affairs of the State, but he will continue to enjoy the honorary rights and position of Maharaja." This proposal, emanating directly from your Highness, could not be treated by my Government otherwise than as embodying your deliberate intentions and wishes; nor can I admit that you are now justified in describing the edict, to which I have referred, as having been hurriedly written under pressure from Colonel Parry Nisbet, who, your Highness will remember, throughout these conversations, expressly pointed out to you that it would not be practicable for him to undertake the management of the State in the manner which you had suggested.

When your letter to Raja Amar Singh was laid before the Government of India, I felt that, in view of the circumstances which I have recapitulated, no other course was open to me than to accept in substance the proposal which you had made. In so doing, however, some important modifications were made in the original scheme. Amongst these I may mention my refusal to take advantage of your suggestion that an Englishman should be appointed to serve upon the new Council: such a step seemed to me to be unnecessary, and I determined not to take it. Again, instead of requiring that the new arrangement should last for at least five years, it was stipulated that it should continue for a time of which the length was not specified. I may also remind you of the consideration shown to your Highness by the stipulation that your Highness should receive a suitable income from the State revenues, and that your rank and dignity should be reserved to you. That this has been done has been amply proved by the respect shown to you by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief on the occasion of his recent visit to your State.

What I have written will show to your Highness how it has come to pass that the Government of India felt itself obliged to introduce these changes for a time into the Government of Cashmere. The arrangement was arrived at after careful consideration, and with a full knowledge of facts of which your Highness is well aware. I may add that by last week's mail from England I have received a letter from the Secretary of State for India informing me that Her Majesty's Government fully approve the measures taken by the Government of India in April last, and share their conviction that in the interests of the people of Cashmere, and of the ruling family itself, it has become impossible to leave the control of affairs in your Highness's hands.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

Though the former disease remorselessly attacks persons of all ages, and the latter ruthlessly selects its victims from the weak and delicate, the persevering use of these remedies will infallibly cure both complaints. After the affected parts have been diligently fomented with hot brine, and the skin thoroughly dried, Holloway's Ointment must be rubbed in firmly and evenly for a few minutes twice a day, and his Pills taken according to the printed directions wrapped round each box of his medicine. Both Ointment and Pills are accompanied by instructions designed for the public at large, and no invalid, who attentively reads them, can now be at any loss how to doctor himself successfully.

It is idle to contend that all this has been the result of a conspiracy against you, in which the Resident, your brother, and the officials of the State, have all had a part. "In your letter to me you admit that you knew the Resident to be 'one of the sincere friends of my father and a good supporter of myself.' You had yourself designated your brother, Raja Amar Singh, towards whom you felt the greatest affection, for the office of Prime Minister. The officers lent to you by the Government of India were, you tell me, excellent men, and they were supplied to you at your own request. If, however, I am to accept the statement now made by your Highness, it would be necessary for me to believe that Colonel Parry Nisbet, Raja Amar Singh and the officers referred to must all of them have changed their nature as well as their disposition towards your Highness within a few months. All these men were, I believe, ready to be your friends, but they have found that your conduct in public and private life was such as to render it impossible for them to co-operate cordially with you.

What I have said has reference to the past. For the future, let me earnestly entreat your Highness to show to the people of Cashmere, as well as to the Government of India, by bearing in a dignified manner the loss of power which you have sustained, and, above all, by not associating yourself with local intrigues and conspiracies, or attempts to obstruct the Government, that you have not entirely lost the qualities of a wise and prudent ruler. The settlement announced in Colonel Parry Nisbet's letter of the 17th April to the Prime Minister is, as I have already pointed out to you, not necessarily a permanent one. Time will, however, be necessary, if the finances of the State are to be restored to order, and the results of past maladministration effectually removed. Until this has been done, the present arrangement must certainly remain in force. When these good results have been achieved, it may be possible to give your Highness a larger share in the control of the public affairs of Cashmere. Much would, in such a case, depend upon your own conduct in the meanwhile. You cannot, therefore, govern yourself too cautiously, or be too careful in selecting your associates and confidants.

I would also ask you to inform Raja Ram Singh, who has, I understand, accompanied your Highness to Jammu, that the Government of India cannot regard with indifference his continued absence from the Council of State. He holds the important post of Commander-in-Chief in charge of the Military Department, and his failure to attend to the business of this cannot do otherwise than produce the most serious results. Unless, therefore, he returns shortly to Srinagar and resumes the discharge of his duties, it will be necessary to make some arrangement for the transfer of those duties to other hands.

I will add only one word to what I have said above. Should your Highness at any time desire to address me in connection with this, or other matters, it will always be agreeable to me to learn your wishes, or your opinions, and should you, at the present time, seek an opportunity of hearing from my own lips my views in regard to these questions, I shall at any convenient time be ready to receive you and to converse with you in a friendly and confidential spirit.

CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

LOAN NOTIFICATION.

1. The Commissioners of Calcutta are prepared, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, given under Sections 404 and 406 of Act II. (B. C.) of 1888, to open a Debenture Loan for Rs. 14,00,000 on the security of the rates, taxes and dues imposed and levied under the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act 1888.

2. The Debentures will have a currency of thirty years from the 1st January 1890, and will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable on the 30th June and 31st December of each year.

3. The form of the Debenture-bonds will be that given in the twelfth schedule of Act II. (B. C.) of 1888.

4. No debenture will be issued for any sum less than Rs. 500, and above that amount debentures will be issued only for even sums of Rs. 100.

5. Tenders for the whole or any part of the above loan up to the amount of Rs. 11,15,000 will be received by the Secretary to the Corporation up to 2 o'clock P. M. of Friday, the 20th September 1889; the balance of Rs. 2,85,000 will be reserved for holders of debentures of the 6 per cent. loan of 1869 falling due on 1st January next, upon such terms as may hereafter be announced.

6. Each tender must be made out in the form annexed to this Notification, and enclosed in a sealed cover addressed to the Secretary to the Corporation, and superscribed "Tender for Municipal Loan of 1889-90."

7. Each tender must be accompanied by Government Promissory Notes, currency notes or cheques for not less than 3 per cent. of the amount tendered.

8. When a tender is accepted, the deposit, when made in currency notes or cheques, will be held as a payment in part of the amount tendered, and will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the 20th September 1889, provided that the whole amount tendered is paid up in the manner hereinafter prescribed; but no debenture will issue for the sum so deposited so long as the entire amount of the tender is not paid.

9. The deposits on tenders which may not be accepted, will be returned on application, and no interest will be payable on such deposits. If an allotment after being made is not taken up, and the full amount allotted is not paid as hereinafter prescribed, the deposit will be forfeited.

10. The rate at which a tender is made, must be specified in rupees, or rupees and annas: a tender in which the rate is not so specified, will be rejected as null and void.

11. The rates stated in a tender must not contain any fraction of an anna. If a rate containing a fraction of an anna is inserted in any tender, such fraction will be struck out, and the tender treated as if the rate did not contain such fraction of an anna.

12. The amount of the accepted tenders must be paid into the Bank of Bengal in the following instalments:—

One-third on 21st October 1889.

Do. on 21st November 1889.

Do. on 21st December 1889.

Parties whose tenders are accepted will have the option of paying all or any of the instalments before the dates specified above, and will receive interest from the date of such payment.

13. Anticipation interest will be paid on all instalments from the respective dates on which such instalments are paid into the Bank of Bengal to the 31st December 1889.

14. Tenders will be accepted in the order of rates tendered, beginning with the highest rate. In the case of two or more tenders at the same rate a pro rata allotment will be made (if the tenders are accepted), but no allotment will be issued if the amount distributed on any tender is less than Rs. 500.

15. Tenders will be opened by the Loan Committee of the Commissioners at 3 P. M., on Friday, the 20th September 1889.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

of it as damages. The only way in which this is material in this case, in the view which I take of the matter, is that, if this really is an action by the plaintiffs for damages for conversion of the cheque, it is for them to show that it was their cheque which had been converted; and it is clear that the mere possession of a cheque under these circumstances by the Bank is in itself prima facie evidence that it has been paid and does not remain the property of the payees."

He also finds against Lall Chand on the facts, that is, disbelieves the Durwan on whose evidence the lower Court rested its verdict. Speaking of Sew Lall, Mr. Justice Pigot says:—

"There is nothing to show what he is, whether he is a man of experience or a man of judgment, of steadiness and sobriety of conduct, a man of good character. We know absolutely nothing about him save that he has been employed on some occasions to present cheques for the plaintiffs at the Bank, and this becomes, as it appears to me, of much importance when we have to consider what is the nature of the case which his evidence involves. If he had stated that he had absented himself from the Bank between the time of his handing in the cheque and the time of his demanding it, a different set of considerations might have arisen. In that case the question might, perhaps, have arisen whether or not the money had been paid to some third person by mistake. In that case the evidence of the Bank's servants might have been attacked either on the ground that it was only an honest persistence in a mistaken belief, or at the worst, was a story got up to cover an act of negligence. It would not have involved, as the case as it stands must do, a deliberate misappropriation of the money by the Bank servants and conspiracy to conceal that misappropriation by perjury."

He concludes thus:—

"It is not necessary, in order to decline to give effect to Sew Loll's evidence, to convict the man of appropriating the money. He may have been paid, and have lost or been robbed of the money, and may have then sought to avoid the consequences of this misfortune by a desperate attempt at persuading the Bank of a mistake as to the payment of the cheque. But there can be no mistake of what we must impute to the Bank officers if Sew Loll's story is to be accepted. Some of them must have appropriated the money. If Sew Loll's story be true, the absent poddar seen, or invented by him, would probably be the person to have done so. But in that case we have here persons, old servants of the Bank, who have come forward and charged themselves with the responsibility of having paid the money, who accept that responsibility and risk in support of a story which they must know to be false. I am bound to say that in a case of this sort we must measure the clashing improbabilities, we must estimate them and judge of them to the best of our judgment. We ought not, I think (and other Judges of this Court have said the same thing) in a case of this sort, though resting, as it does, solely upon a matter of fact deposed to by the testimony of witnesses we have not seen, and whose demeanour has been witnessed by the Judge sitting in the Original Court, we ought not nevertheless, beyond giving due weight to that circumstance, be prevented from dissenting from his decision even upon a question of mere fact, if we are decidedly of opinion that the burden of the case is against the conclusion at which he has arrived, and for my part I am quite clear in agreeing with the Chief Justice that that is so, and that upon the balance of the evidence as it stands before us, that for the defendants greatly preponderates. What the truth of a case of this sort is, it is sometimes not easy to be absolutely certain. Certainty derived from the testimony of witnesses in this country is a state of mind not easy to arrive at. We must deal with the reasonable probabilities, and I am quite satisfied that they are all in favour of setting aside this decree which I agree ought to be done."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Madras Standard notices that—

"The Sub-Collector of North Arcot in his report on 'Official Tyranny' makes use of the expression 'I and the Tahsilder, &c.' This is almost as bad as Wolsey's 'Ego et Rex.' Wolsey had grammar on his side. Has the Sub-Collector as much?"

THIS is a sample of the pastime of modern scientific research:—

"Mr. Paul Bert sewed the tip of the tail into the back of the rat. After it had taken root in its new position, he cut it off close to its original point of insertion. The rat now wore a tail reversed in position, the former tip being the root. After some time it was found that the new tail was sensitive. Conclusion, the nerves of sensation can carry impulses each way. Dr. Koch has recently performed this experiment on 40 rats. In 30 cases the tails united satisfactorily; but never, even eight months later, was any sensation present in the new appendage."

Conclusion, Mr. Bert had been torturing God's creatures, each perhaps as useful as himself, for nothing, and inviting other scientific butchers to do likewise.

"THE best hated man in London," who wanted to distinguish himself by the destruction of the Corporation of London, Mr. J. F. B. Firth, is dead.

MR. BALLARD having served out his time in the Police Force, has taken to training up young men for the same service from Headconstable upwards. He selects for his school men, eligible by physique, who know how to read and write. He has already 31 students, whom he expects to pass his standard of training in six months instead of twelve which he at first proposed. If he can turn out good men, he will have done a service to the Police and the public. The Police needs weeding out, and here is an opportunity for Government to reform a Service which admittedly requires overhauling.

M. des Cloiseaux, the President, on behalf of the Academy, gratefully accepted the present and warmly thanked the presenter.

WE read a complaint in the Sakti of Dacca that in the Karimganj and other post offices in the Maimensing district, they refuse to receive silver for money orders when not bearing the figure of the Queen-Empress with the imperial crown, and that persons are subjected to the loss of Rs. 7 to 8 for a Money Order for Rs. 25, of Rs. 10-12 for one of Rs. 30, of Rs. 30-35, for that of Rs. 100, and Rs. 50-60 for that of Rs. 200. We are sure, the Post Masters will be held responsible for this inconvenience and loss to the public.

BAROO PRASANNA KUMAR BOSE, Special Deputy Collector, on Income-tax duty, Calcutta, the de facto Income-tax Collector, has gone on six weeks' leave and Baboo Gunga Gobind Gupta, Special Assessor of Income-tax, Calcutta, has been Gazetted to officiate for the absent Baboo. Baboo Gupta is a lucky man indeed! In 1888, he was an Assessor on Rs. 150 at Dacca. In September of that year, a Special Assessor for Calcutta was sanctioned on a pay of Rs. 250, to examine the Khatta books and report on the enquiries made by the District officers. Opendar Chunder Mozoomdar, a Gazetted Sub-Deputy, holding the office of the Income-tax Assessor in the most populous and difficult Division of Calcutta, whose services are highly valued was marked for this new post. But now came an application from the Dacca Assessor to upset all arrangements. Mr. Kilby was charmed with the unknown stranger, and recommended him for the post. Mr. Smith too preferred a progressive Gupta to an orthodox Mozoomdar, and the Board had no hesitation in accepting the Conquering Hero from Dacca. The opportunity for a substantial return for services being thus lost, Mr. Smith recommended poor Mozoomdar for an increase of Rs. 50 to his pay of Rs. 200, laying special stress on the lac of revenue that he had added to the Income-tax on the retirement of Mr. Goodricke, but the Government was unable to sanction the increase on the plea of the financial situation. If Gupta is lucky, Mozoomdar is truly unfortunate. On the present occasion too, Mr. Smith, while wishing him well, could not muster courage to recommend Mozoomdar in preference to Gupta for the temporary vacancy.

THE clerks in the Revenue and Agricultural Department remaining at Simla during the winter season, will be allowed half the allowances they draw in the hot month.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE London Labor Revolt is not at an end. The rebels continue out yet. They stick to their demand of six pence an hour from October. The Dock Directors have accepted the rate but not the date of enforcement. They would fix it in January next year. The Lord Mayor, the Bishop of London and Cardinal Manning, who have offered themselves to mediate between the contending parties, proposed, by way of compromise, December, but the strikers, backed by the Australian subsidy of £20,000, feel themselves too strong to go beyond October. Such long vacations in trade are too much of a good thing. The corn merchants have given notice to the Dock Directors holding them responsible for the damage done to their stock by delays owing to the strike.

The last night's news is more cheering. Cardinal Manning on Thursday had an interview with the Dock Directors, and proposed that the new terms should begin from the 4th of November. He afterwards conferred with the Strike Committee, and a mutual reconciliation was the result.

ANTWERP is laid low by fire—of her own coinage and commerce. On the morning of the 6th, in a dynamite factory near the city, two thousand tons of cartridges exploded, killing three hundred persons and injuring a thousand. The same night, there was a terrific explosion at the docks in the petroleum sheds. A hundred thousand barrels kept up the fire. Two hundred lives were lost and five hundred persons injured. The damage to property is estimated at millions.

THE news from America is of a cataclysm. Disastrous floods and storms have overtaken the North Atlantic coasts. Atlantic City in New Jersey is almost submerged.

THE Société Géographique of Brussels has received despatches reporting that Mr. Stanley has subdued the tribes he has come in contact with east of the Nile, and founded stations of the British East Africa Company everywhere, and that he is now well and marching towards Mombassa.

GENERAL Boulanger and M. Rouchéfort have offered themselves for Paris for the forthcoming elections, but the Prefect of the Seine would not accept notice of their candidature.

THE Paris Exhibition closes on October 31.

BOMBAY is up in arms against the proposal to fix Sunday for departure of the mails. The Bishop leads the crusade. The Corporation has Resolved to memorialize the Secretary of State, for Sunday mail means the abolition of Saturday half-holiday as also of the day of rest, while it is calculated to damage trade. The Volunteers have added their mite to the movement, as they apprehend the breaking up of the corps, for Saturday half-holiday is devoted to drill. The Sheriff has been asked to call a public meeting.

THEY are preparing to bombard mosquitoes. A little army has been told off for the Chin and Lushai Expeditions. Colonel Symons commands the former and Colonel Tregear the latter, with full political and military control. The Chin Column consists of Bengal Mountain Battery, two guns; one Company, Queen's Own Sappers and Miners; First battalion, Cheshire Regiment; First battalion, King's Own Scottish Borderers; 42nd Goorkhas; 10th, 33rd and 38th Bengal Infantry; and such Madras Infantry as may be detailed by the Madras Commander-in-Chief! The Lushai Column comprises 3rd Bengal Infantry; Second battalion, 2nd Goorkhas; a Company of Bengal Sappers and Miners and 28th Bombay Pioneers.

What formidable armaments for such small deer!

The Cachar Column has been countermanded.

A LITERARY Bengal Secretary once astonished the country by dubbing the Calcutta Corporators "an arsenal of delays." A European Civil Servant in India, specially one wielding the mysterious powers of the Secretariat, need not be particular about his figures, either of arithmetic or of rhetoric, and our literary gentleman might have called the Commissioners an allegory on the banks of the Nile, without compromising in the least his chances of promotion. As for the poor damned Commissioners, they survived the blast of bathos. But in India a Civilian's word never goes all for nothing. It usually justifies itself—by law or no law, fate or fortune. Such is Prestige! and such the will of Jove! Thus, after very near a decade, Mr. Mackenzie's absurd epigram has come true—in some measure, in some sense.

At their last sitting, the Commissioners in their chropological computations and views showed a distinct penchant for antique precedents, however ill suited to the active quick-paced short-lived modern man. The City Conscript Fathers are more than classical. They have applied to Conservancy a more strict rule than the Horatian precept in regard to literary publication. They have decided not to allow huts to be built upon filled up tanks till after a lapse of ten years. Hitherto the prohibition was limited to three. The present Health Officer, who is nothing if not sensational, was for locking up the sites for the full term of an Indian generation—twenty years. The General Committee, consisting of men with a stake in the property of the town, recommended five years. At the suggestion of the Chairman, the Corporation, at its meeting of Thursday, has been induced to fix the limit to ten years.

The present sanitary opinion seems to be that a foul tank is much less injurious than the site obtained by filling up that tank with town sweepings and refuse. How do the Commissioners propose to reclaim foul tanks?

WHILE the Maharaja of Travancore purposes, in the coming cold season, to make a pilgrimage to Northern India, in the course of which he will visit our city, his brother, the Eliah Raja, known as the First Prince of Travancore, who is the Heir Apparent, has applied to His Highness for permission to travel to Europe. We shall not be sorry if, without any mutual misunderstanding, the reigning Maharaja succeed in dissuading the Prince from his projected tour. We would rather his Eliaship accompanied his elder brother. We have been quite disappointed with the fruits of our native Chiefs' visits to Europe.

MR. E. J. WHITE—District Munsiff of Kurnool and nephew of President White—is no wordy reformer. He is prepared to try his reform on himself. He has applied to Government for permission to change his name to E. J. Wayoob Khan. The Government will probably smile at the Quixotism of their servant, and there may be more than sentimental difficulties in the way of humouring him. But Mr. White could not have given a more unmistakable proof of sincerity or of courage. We doubt whether his Eurasian brethren will follow suit.

THE author of Thanatophedia is alarmed at the loss of life in India from destructive wild animals and venomous snakes. In an article in the Nineteenth Century, Sir Joseph Fayrer points out that the natives are willing victims. They are in superstitious awe of the tiger and the panther as incarnations of mischief, and would not kill them for fear of drawing upon themselves their diabolic vengeance. The Doctor recommends a special department—like that of the Thaggi and Dacoity—for extermination of Nature's Thugs, until the natives have been taught to give up their worship of the brutes and the reptiles. A very British off-hand and official disposal of a difficult question!

NEW professorships in the Japanese, Korean and Hindustani languages have been founded at the St. Petersburg University. England may well learn from the example of a Power she scarcely makes a secret of deriding as barbarian. Here, in British India, where the Anglo-Indians, official and non-official, are ever and anon frightening themselves with the spectre of a grinning and greedy Northern Bear advancing to rip open their bowels, there is at least one scholar versed in the principal Asiatic and European languages, ancient and modern, including Russian, whose services are not, during these several years, utilised by the Government, simply because, though absolutely loyal, Dr. Nishi Kanta Chattopadhyaya (Chatterjee)—the gentleman in question—happens to be a native of the soil. Was ever such insanity and illiberality?

THE Joint Family has come to be looked upon as an evil. The law courts have greatly contributed to instil and perpetuate the feeling, and have been trying to break up the system. Be it so! We need not make ourselves inconsolable. There is no good crying over inevitable oxidation, any more than over spilt milk. When an institution, however necessary in origin or excellent in its original integrity, has lost its bright qualities by flux of time and actually decayed, to bolster it up artificially is Love's Labour Lost. Times are altered and with them manners. So let it go, as it must. The pity is that, in so breaking up joint families, the courts are apt to impoverish them. The process of division of property swallows up all but giant estates. The partition proceedings are simply ruinous. The country is being impoverished through them, to the delight of the hangers-on of the courts and the Zemindari servants--the landlords' stewards and manorial agents. We are glad, therefore, that the Home Department is engaged on the consideration of a plan for facilitating partition of joint estates. The remedy proposed is at once simple and thoroughly practical. It cuts the Gordian Knot by providing for sale of the property and partition of the proceeds.

HISTORY repeats itself—even in its exceptionally dark features. Jephthah's sacrifice has often enough been enacted in ancient times, in Europe as in Asia. In all such cases, the cause was a misguided religious sentiment or an equally vain chivalry of a false morality. In India, in almost contemporary times a similar unnatural sacrifice was made by way of political expediency. And now the same offering has been made in private life, to a poorer, absolutely vulgar convenience. The following is going the round :—

"At the village of Phillour, in the Punjab, a low caste Hindu married his daughter to one of his own relatives recently. The mother of the girl was averse to the union and, therefore, unawares to her husband, had the daughter re-married to a man, who was one of her own relatives. On the day of the barrat, however, both parties came to claim the girl as their bride, and a serious quarrel ensued, resulting in broken heads, etc. The father of the girl was threatened the next day with prosecution by the bridegrooms, and not knowing what to do he killed the girl, thinking that the dispute would end there. The parties then took the earliest opportunity of retracing their way back to their homes, while the unfortunate father has been arrested for murder."

The vagaries of human nature are beyond calculation. And there is no knowing how far fanaticism of distraction will lead an ill-regulated soul. It was bad enough when poor Krishna Kumari was murdered by her parents, at Ameer Khan's advice, to save her fatherland from the horrors of war. But here is a girl deliberately killed by her unfeeling father for a comparatively trifling pretence. The guilt lies on all the parties in any way concerned or present in that marriage that did not take place. They should all be prosecuted for abetment.

We are afraid the crime of infanticide has not been rooted out in the Punjab. It is only a parent brought up in the habits and associations of that practice that could so lightly take the life of his daughter. The Punjab Government and Punjab society in general ought to make inquiry touching the prevalence of this crime.

MR. Norton has denied all the allegations in the plaint filed by Colonel Moore for Rs. 50,000 damages. The plaintiff has taken a week's time till the 17th to consider the written statement.

CAPTAIN CRAWFORD, chief British official in the Sulymah District, flogged a native servant to death for theft of a sum of money. He was tried at Freetown along with seven policemen. After a lengthy investigation, the policemen have been let off as having acted under their superior's order, and the Captain found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment.

THE Inspector-General of Police has called the attention of the Mysore Government to the large number of "banks" springing up in the Kolar district on the lines of Mutual Benefit Societies. The people have been largely taken in by large promises incapable of fulfilment. He suggests the appointment of a Commissioner to report on these firms.

UNDER the leadership of Dr. Emma B. Ryder, they have started at Bombay a ladies' literary society under the name of "The Sorosis Club."

ONE Jayasingrao Santujirao Powar started a journal called Sarvajanik Vytha Paritran and, after the fashion of the present day, offered liberal prizes and books to the subscribers who paid in advance. The bait took, and money came in. But soon the subscribers began to grumble for the prizes they expected were not forthcoming. A plucky one among those wanted to bring the proprietor to book and he complained to the Sattara Magistracy. The accused pleaded not guilty. He relied on the evidence of the Governor and the Duke of Connaught to prove his innocence. The Magistrate, however, would not be taken in by such transparent "chaff" and found him guilty of cheating and sentenced him to two months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of twenty-five rupees. Both the Sessions Judge and the High Court have confirmed the conviction and sentence.

THE barbarity of imprisonment in execution of an order of a civil court has been painfully exemplified in Poona. A husband obtained a decree in 1886 against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, and early in August sent her to jail for persistency in her refusal.

THE Madras High Court having refused to interfere in the prosecution of the Mohunt of Tripati, for having made away with the buried treasure of the temple and leaving copper and brass instead, the order for excavation under the flagstaff on Tripati Hill is being executed, under the watch of the Superintendent of Police, five inspectors, one hundred constables and the Head Assistant Magistrate. The Mohunt had applied for stoppage of the excavations, admitting for the purpose of the present prosecution, that the vessels buried under the flagstaff may be taken to contain worthless brass and copper instead of the gold coin which he was charged with having misappropriated. The application was opposed, as such admission was not receivable as evidence and not binding and that it was qualified. On its rejection by the Magistrate, it was then prayed that the opening of the ground be stayed till after the Big Car Festival of the 25th. The Magistrate would not make any such order.

MR. PORTER opened and concluded the enquiry into the charges preferred by Captain Hearsey against Dr. Hall, in the Mayo Hall, Allahabad, on September 4. It was a public one. And the Johnnies and the angels made a day of it. At any rate, the capital of Upper India, in the Lieutenant-Governor's absence, is such a dreary place that not only the Commissioner Mr. Harrington and Mr. Justice Tyrell but also many other European gentlemen and ladies were present, to make the most of any chances for fun. The representatives of the press were admitted. Mr. Porter first read the order of Government limiting the enquiry to specific charges and disallowing pleaders or attorneys. Captain Hearsey then formulated his charges thus—

(1), Mischief, by destroying a letter written to me by my wife without my consent or sanction; (2), wrongful restraint by depriving me of my right of reading for 10½ hours during the day time; (3), wrongful restraint by preventing me from lying down to sleep during the day time on my cot; (4), wrongful restraint by preventing me from making use of my proper cell; (5), wrongful restraint by locking me up in my cell for 9½ hours during the day; (6), wrongful restraint and insult by compelling me to stand up whenever he (Dr. Hall) came into my cell; (7), wrongful restraint and insult by compelling me to take down my hand from the wall on the 6th February, and stand "at attention"; (8), insult by words and speech concerning the term "half caste"; (9), conduct liable to cause a breach of the peace by Dr. Hall's words and actions in the cell on the 6th February.

These items were taken up one by one, and the accuser cross-examined by the accused. The accused then made his statements and was cross-examined by the accuser. Dr. Hall admitted the charges but justified his conduct under the rules of the jail. He had the honour to admit the expression "half-caste," but he spoiled the effect of his admission by a lame explanation. As if regretting a hasty confession, he had the coolness to pretend that it was a mere slip of his glib tongue. He had the further assurance to claim having treated very kindly the prisoner who was so base as not to acknowledge the obligation. Two witnesses--Jailor Eurson and assistant Jailor Hobbs--were called by the Doctor to corroborate his statements. The Captain wanted to call as his witness the prison Warder, Brinn, but he had been sent away to Burma on the 22nd July--the date for which the enquiry was first fixed. The Doctor, not to be outdone, was anxious to have him also, only he had himself handed the man over to the military authorities, on the expiration of his term of imprisonment, when a word from him would have detained him at Allahabad, for the inquiry. It is said that Brinn has expired his time and goes home next trooping season and there was no absolute necessity to send him back to his regiment.

There was nothing very amusing. Once there seemed a prospect when the surgical Superintendent called Captain Hearsey "Mr.

Hearsey," and the Captain answered by calling his tormentor Mr. Hall. At this the gentlemen pricked up their ears and the ladies looked at each other, and Mrs. Hall coloured. But the Doctor did not show fight. The autocrat of the jail had apparently abdicated.

THE Doorga Pooja vacation recognized by Government commences from Monday the 30th September, the offices reopening on Friday the 11th October. But it is not to be an all round holiday, however. Every year the Chamber of Commerce is encroaching on it, and Government has begun to give way to its attacks. The Custom House is being kept open for the convenience of petty merchants. The Bengal Bank has followed suit. The other Banks have reduced the long vacation to five days. And* this year the Paper Currency is not to be allowed the autumnal rest. A mysterious notice has been stuck up, unsigned and undated, warning the employés and the public that

"The Paper Currency office will be open to the public for exchange of Notes and Coin up to one O'clock P.M., on all days on which the Bank of Bengal is open for business."

Are the employés to be bound by it? Can the public legitimately expect the office to exchange their notes and coin under the terms of this trash of a notice? Supposing the office refused to exchange on any day during the Gazetted holidays, would an action lie against Government? Surely, if this notice is to be acted upon, there is anarchy in the land. Verily, the empire has passed away from the Crown not to the old Honorable Company of Merchants, but to a set of small hand to mouth speculators trading without any capital of their own and perhaps some busy-bodies who are neither fish, flesh, fowl nor red herring, good, bad or indifferent.

The Chamber of Commerce had notified the total holidays for the year limiting them to 12 days, including the Doorga and Lukshmi Pooja holidays for which they would not allow more than four days thus:—

"1889. Recognised by the Chamber under shipping orders and charter parties as holidays according to the custom of the port.

Date.	Holidays.	Number of days to be observed as holidays.
1st January New Year's Day...	... 1 day.
5th February Sripanchami 1 "
19th April Good Friday 1 "
24th May Empress's Birthday 1 "
1st, 3rd, 4th and 7th Oct. Durga and Lukhi Puja 4 days.
23rd October Kali Puja 1 day.
1st November Jagadhatri Puja...	... 1 "
25 and 26th December Christmas Day and the day following Christmas Day...	... 2 days.

In the Durga and Lukhi Puja the holidays for ships that have salt on board will be from 1st to 7th October inclusive."

Thus it would allow the holidays for the Doorga and Lukshmi Poojas on the 1st, 3rd, 4th and 7th October.

The Doorga Pooja commences on the 1st October which the Chamber recognizes, but it strangely and absurdly ignores the 2nd, which is the principal day. The local exchange banks will be closed all the four days of the Pooja. The Chamberwallahs having ignored the 2nd day, they coaxed and threatened these banks not to close on the 2nd. But to their honor the banks still hold out and stick to the old orthodox way—of four days for the Doorga and one day for the Lakshmi Poojas—1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 7th October. They have fixed the 7th October for the Lakshmi Pooja, but it comes off not on the 7th but on the next day, Tuesday the 8th.

THE Mohurram has been unlucky this year. It has been particularly bad in the Delhi country. At Rohtak, the Hindus and Mahomedans came to blows in bloody earnest. The Civil and Military Gazette of the 10th writes:—

"Serious rioting has broken out at Rohtak between the Hindus and Muhammadans in connection with the Muharram processions. Nine persons are reported to have been killed up to the present (Sep. 10), and a great number injured. The disturbances commenced on Sunday, and have not yet been put down owing to the local police being too weak to do so. Reinforcements have been called in from the adjoining districts, and Delhi has sent off 100 policemen in ekkas. The matter has become so serious, that two companies of the 31st Punjab Infantry are held in readiness to start for Rohtak at a moment's notice in ekkas, and the European troops have been warned in case they should be needed. The excitement has spread to Delhi, and it is fortunate perhaps that the Muharram is quite over there, or the old feelings might be revived. There has been a disturbance at Shahdara also on the other side of the Jumna; but it was promptly suppressed."

NEARER home in Behar, an unfortunate contretemps occurred. The consequences might have been serious, but the people showed wonderful patience under grave provocation. We are, however, not surprised to hear from Patna that serious offence has been taken by the Mahomedan community at the conduct of Inspector O'Connor of the city Police by his unnecessary interference with their religious procession and the violent hands he laid on men engaged in the peaceful exercise of their religion. It was the 7th instant, the last night of the Festival of mourning for the martyred family of the Prophet. All Patna was up. The streets were alive with men and even women, boys and girls, all more or less excited, for the chief Mahomedan Festival of the year in that Shiah City, then at its close. As the Taziahs and Akharahs were proceeding towards the Durgah, this Irish bull of the Police got excited and unaccountably hurried up all the processions, and in doing so, threw down many people, beat a number of them, felled down some Alams and Sipars of different parties, and spoiled the order of march, to the annoyance and indignation of the whole people. The wonder is, that the people did not fall down on the Inspector. At the slightest signal of resistance, there would surely have been a good deal of bloodshed.

We further learn, that no Mahomedan Police officer, or Honorary Magistrate was asked to assist the Police Inspector, in keeping order on such an occasion.

Our correspondent says that several complaints have been preferred against Inspector O'Connor for his doings of that night, and the matter is under the investigation of the District Magistrate and Superintendent of Police.

Mr. Faulder, the Magistrate, is an officer of high reputation, and we are sure that he will deal with the cases in an impartial manner.

THE Mohurram was this year celebrated at the Imambarrah of the late King of Oudh at Garden Reach, under the management of Prince Mirza Jahan Kadar Bahadr, assisted by Princes Mirza Kamar Kadar and Mirza Mahomed Jogee Bahadurs. The whole thing went off well, hundreds of people being fed every day during the festival. Much credit is due to the Princes for the excellent arrangements made. The only shortcoming was on the part of Mr. Upton's office, as the sacred articles were not given out till before the 3rd day.

WE are not at all surprised to learn that the old firm of the late Hajizakaria Mahomed, the Maimun merchant of this city, has failed, with liabilities extending to upwards of 10 lakhs. The chief manager of the firm, Haji Noor Mahomed, a son of the founder of the firm had been living for the last few years as a prince, emulating the scions of wealthy Zemindar families in style and magnificence. People were for sometime apprehending some unhappy result, and their worst fears have now been realized.

About three years ago, the firm was on the brink of ruin, and hearing of this, Haji Wahedana, the senior partner of the firm, who was then at Mecca, hurried down to Calcutta, and managed to ward off the impending calamity, by the sale of some buildings, horses, carriages, &c., and by limiting the monthly allowance of Haji Noor Mahomed to Rs. 200.

Haji Wahedana died some months ago, and the management again fell into a state of disorganization, until the firm had to be wound up.

We hear that the chief victims of this failure, are the European and Marwari banks, and that comparatively a small sum is due to individuals.

The deliberate and systematic manner in which the whole thing has been managed shews the great tact and foresight of the manager.

FOR sometime past, we have been hearing of disagreements between the majority of the members of the Managing Committee of the Aligurh Anglo-Oriental College, headed by Moulvie Samcoollah Khan, C. M. G., Civil Judge of Roy Bareilly in Oudh, and Sir Syud Ahmud Khan, K. C. S. I. We now find that the quarrel has assumed a serious aspect, and resolutions have been passed in opposition to the Aligurh Knight, to whose action in certain matters exception has been taken by the Committee. It is said that the Syud has betrayed an inclination of securing for his family a hereditary right in the leadership of the governing body of the institution; but the rest of that body see no reason to make this concession, and hence this squabble. Sameenollah Khan claims to succeed the Syud, in the leadership of that body, but the Syud objects to such transfer.

WHAT we have for years been apprehending has come to pass. All is up with the Maharaja of Tipperah. Like his greater brother of Cashmere, he has signed his abdication and goes into private life—for a season at any rate. Such at least is the rumour in town.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR, -Will you kindly do me the favour to explain a difficulty which I have come across in course of reading "The Rivals" of Sheridan? In the latter part of the first scene of the fifth Act—in the amusing conversation between Mrs. Malaprop, Miss Lydia Languish and David, who brings the news of Sir Lucius O'Trigger's getting into a scrape to the first mentioned lady—occurs the line, 'Why how you stand girl, you have no more feeling than one of the Derbyshire petrifications!' quoted in Brewer's "Handbook of Allusions, References, &c.," as putrefactions, under the head of malapropisms. I can make nothing of this 'nice derangement of epitaphs.' I should esteem it a great favour if you would kindly explain it in the next issue of your much esteemed literary journal. Hoping you will be good enough to excuse me for encroaching upon your precious time.

JYOTISH CHANDRA BANERJEE.

* * There is evidently a misprint in your copy, which we believe is Leigh Hunt's edition of 1851, published by William Tegg & Co. Petrifications should be putrefactions.—ED. R. & R.

THE SIN OF GREAT CITIES.

IN my last on this subject, I ventured to assert that the authorities do not exert themselves sufficiently to suppress this great and growing evil. I did so knowing that there is no law prohibiting any woman from leading the miserable and wretched life of a common prostitute if she is so minded. But can no law be enforced by which any such person can be so kept under police surveillance so as to act as a deterrent in the spreading of disease? The Englishman's idea of freedom of action is so wildly interpreted, that the moment it is supposed the liberty of the subject is interfered with there is at once a hue and cry raised. There is a system on the Continent which there should be no reasonable objection raised against enforcing in India if worked under proper control. But before going further into the matter, I will give an instance of a discussion raised against what I intend suggesting. If the danger of catching the disease is placed beyond possibility, those who have hitherto resisted the temptation through fear of the disease, would be tempted to venture upon the vice they had through no other than fear of disease resisted. Such argument is absurd. It is not just to accuse all human nature of depravity to such a degree. Neither is it right or just that the many should be made to suffer to preserve the lesser number. It will not be necessary for my purpose to name more than one city on the Continent, where, under strict police supervision, the evil under reference exists to a greater extent than in any other city of the same population, i. e., Hamburg. I have already said in my last that every house of ill fame in Hamburg is licensed for such purpose, and every female who plies the life of prostitution is also licensed. However repulsive it may seem to an Englishman to hear it, the tax collected from such houses and females is more than sufficient to keep up the entire police establishment of the city. If we but once admit the evil as a necessary existence and cannot wholly suppress it there can be nothing repulsive as to the manner in which the tax so collected is utilized by Government, whether in paying a police or any other establishment absolutely required to supervise such traffic. It is only by a strict supervision the evil which is now growing out of all proportions in Calcutta can be even moderately checked. If I am not wrong in my assumption, any Englishman or Englishwoman is allowed to earn his or her own bread and butter as may best suit his or her wishes, the latter, if she wishes, may even elect to lead the life of a fast lady. In Hamburg it is not so with this latter class. She may not in open defiance of law and decency lead such a life before appearing at the Stadt Haus, (Police Court) in Neuer Wahl before the Prefect of Police and so declare her intentions to lead a life of prostitution. At this stage persuasive measures are adopted to prevail upon the female to give up such intention. If however she persists in her desire, she is sent in custody to Straff Arbeits Haus, (Work House) for a term of three months' hard labor. While undergoing this punishment which very many unhesitatingly accept, every means that can possibly be adopted to induce her to see the sin and error of so infamous a career, is laid before her. But if at the expiration of the term of confinement, she is still determined on her downward career, she is again in custody brought before the Prefect of Police and again questioned as to her desire. If the three months' hard labor has any beneficial effect and she shows signs of relenting and abandoning her first declaration, she is retained in custody until her friends or relatives are communicated with, when she is liberated upon the condition that the friends or relatives are responsible for her good conduct. I have known instances of more than one female having gone to Straff Arbeits Haus two or three different times, before their evil intentions could be broken of, on each occasion for three months. If at the expiration of the first three months' imprisonment she asserts her determination to become a prostitute, she is retained in custody, until the keeper of a house of ill fame is obtained to take her in, unless she knows of any such house herself, when the person is sent for, and on the production of his register, if he and she come to terms, he pays her license for one year, has her medically examined, registers her as a resident and inmate of his house, and becomes responsible for her good conduct, and debts as well, if she can manage to get credit. While I resided in Hamburg there was very little risk attached to this arrangement, as most of the females were natives of the Provinces and were then provided with passports, and the passports were lodged with the police, so that she could neither leave the city nor change her place of residence, without the fact being made known to the police. Few, very few females born in Hamburg, resort to this life in Hamburg. They move to Bremen, Antwerp, or Rotterdam, and then pass through the ordeal before becoming licensed prostitutes.

The brothel keeper having satisfied the police carries his prize off to his residence and for the nonce we will say to Damther Wahl 66 B. On arrival, being without wardrobe of any kind—this a matter of great importance—she is at once fitted out, much to her own taste. If she has a liking for jewelry she gets a moderate supply of pinchbeck, is supplied with a memo book of which she is herself the custodian. This memo book contains a debit and credit account between the brothel keeper and herself, her board she is debited with and all articles of clothing, jewelry or cash supplied, and is credited with her own earnings. She pays in addition to her license a certain amount as medical fees, paid of course by the brothel keeper and debited to her. In her own room in perfect privacy, she is medically examined every Tuesday and Friday. If the slightest symptom of disease is discernible she is packed off to the Kranken Haus, hospital, and there detained until perfectly cured. The hospital charges are moderate, but they are paid by the brothel keeper and debited to the girl.

OUR ANGLO-INDIAN EXEMPLARS IN JOURNALISM.

THE Bengal Times is unquestionably an interesting little journal. Provided always you know how to read it—between the lines as well as between the title and the imprimatur. It does not care to be one of your colourless representative journals. It is thoroughly personal. And its personality is not exhausted in the editorial columns. Its "locals" are as personal as its editorials. Then, again, the bold Roman fist appears in the Correspondence, and is most of all conspicuous in the Notices to Correspondents. All the several departments of the paper are characteristic—the last not the least formidable. Our contemporary is not to be trifled with even by its correspondents. Indeed, it is a hazardous thing to write to the Bengal Times. The space above the editorial columns is raided off and reserved—not for the summary execution but for the baiting of correspondents and other minor malefactors—to give our contemporary's constituents a holiday diversion. Being personal, our contemporary is, of course, human, exhibiting the faults and foibles as well as the virtues of our common nature. In the last number to hand, dated the 7th, the Dacca amphitheatre opens with "Sadoo" who, however, is easily let off. Not so some person about whom this correspondent appears to have written. This nameless unfortunate is hacked to pieces with a bowie knife—the armoury of Cisatlantic English speech being apparently considered too respectable for drawing the blood and carving the liver and heart of this disreputable victim. Thus:—

"If you address a hog, you need expect nothing more edifying from him than a grunt. Although a schoolmaster, he to whom you refer is a very ignorant, illiterate person; untruthful, unprincipled and generally contemptible; just about what Yankees would term a skunk. Do not expose him—he is lost to shame. We regret our blunt honesty of terms, but we cannot describe him without employing them."

After this sufficiently Roman—or for that matter British—sport, a truce is sounded in the next Notice—to "M. M." But it is a truce in the bloody field, amid the neighing of chargers and clash of arms, with a disposition to resume the fray any moment. The poor fellow is offered peace with a reminder of his impertinence in having risked war with such a power:—

"M. M. Let bye-gones be bye-gones. We have no desire to triumph over you. It was only fair that, as you resolved upon braying, we should prove it was a suitable vocation for you; and it cost us no effort."

Having fixed M. M.'s place in the Animated Kingdom, our contemporary proceeds to gravely lecture its ass on the theory and principles of public criticism, in strange obliviousness of practice. Having skunked a school-master and "assified" a correspondent, the writer goes on:—

"You appear to think criticism and abuse are convertible terms; they are not. No true critic ever abuses; he is much too wide awake thus to weaken the value of his decision. What would a jury think if a Judge charged thus; Gentlemen—You have to adjudicate in reference to the most infamous scoundrel that ever disgraced humanity: the most diabolical, blood-thirsty reprobate that creation ever beheld; a miscreant dead to every humane instinct, &c., &c.? You ask us, however, who occupy a Judge's place, to do something very similar. Slay, if you like, with a sharp-edged sword, but let its sharpness be polished metal. Bear in mind:

'As in smooth oil a razor best is whet,'

So wit is by politeness sharpest set.'

Be incisive, but not insulting; firm, but not tyrannical and arbitrary."

That may be unexceptional doctrine, but how oddly it is exemplified in the same breath by the preacher! Or, are we to learn that it is no abuse to call a man an ass or a hog? That it is "incisive, but not insulting" to tell you that you brayed and that that is your proper cry? That to tell a professor that he is "a very ignorant, illiterate person, untruthful, unprincipled, and generally contemptible"—in fact "a skunk," is the perfection of refined satire—of delicate execution?

In the Notices to Correspondents, the editor is in mufti. Soon, however, he enters his Dewan-i-Khas—the public hall of audience—and mounts his throne. But the personality remains. The lofty ideal of journalism is reduced to practice from the very outset. Here is the first editorial, to wit:—

"Boredom. Mr. Bradlaugh has lately given notice that, next Session, he will bring in 'a Bill to amend the law relating to the Council and Government of India and for the better government of India.' If this wretched caricaturist would only apply his energy to a final effort at law-making and bring in a bill for abolishing bores, with special personal application, he might deserve well of his country and devote the balance of his energy to blacking boots, or some other equally useful occupation. He might, between February and November, find profitable employment in India as a punkah coolie."

What a contrast this note and the Notice—editorial both! Between this paragraph and the one immediately preceding it! What a nice balance between dogma and conduct! No sooner the pastor descends from the pulpit than he is like the rest—and indeed the worst—of us all—of the earth, earthy. It seems inconceivable that the same writer who has been laying down the most unexceptionable principles of public discussion, differentiating criticism from scurrility, and loftily asserting that "no true critic ever abuses," can in the next breath descend to such writing. Were the internal evidence of identity not so irresistible as it is, we should certainly suppose the two writings to emanate from different pen, though of course any properly edited journal would avoid such an exhibition in the same issue, which might be easily done by withdrawing either of the pieces, the more so as neither was of any urgency whatever. Consistency be blowed! we can fancy our Anglo-Indian cotemporary crying. No doubt, we are all sinners; the best of us have their weak moments. But there is such a thing as the preserving of appearances. The Dacca writer has such a name for galee—we will spare him the word in his own vernacular—that it is expected he should instinctively avoid the lofty tone of unsophisticated innocence. Instead, he is always moralising on the sacred duties of journalism and always admonishing other journals on the sins, the innate viciousness of the Native Press being of course a favorite topic with him. Perhaps, he has a right to treat of sins.

But jesting apart, it would be impossible to find the like of that paragraph on Mr. Bradlaugh in the whole range of the Indian Press, native or European, whether published in the English language or in the numerous dialects of the country. It is not to be matched in any publication, in any land. The most reckless vituperation in the obscurest Indian lingo lithographed or printed from a wooden machine in the backwoods, is courtly amenity before this British example of "true criticism." And yet it is these writers who turn up their noses at the degradation of the Native Press, who see nothing but scurrility and sedition in native writings, and who would forge fetters for the native mind! At a time when the proposal for suppressing the liberty of the Native Press is again on the carpet, when old Mr. Seton-Karr, who ought to know better, is shrieking against the misdeeds of Bengali writers, it may be useful to the British public at Home to have means for comparing the journalism of the two races in India, British and native. It will be seen at any rate that if the natives are bad, their enlightened fellow-subjects do not offer them the best models of conduct.

This is not the first time that the Bengal Times has foully vilipended the Junior Member for Northampton. He has always been the object of our contemporary's direst wrath and coarsest vituperation. But the comments are usually wild and off the mark. The writer's hate overpowers his judgment until he simply rants. But what shall be said of a journalist who speaks of a man of singular capacity as well as sincerity and courage, who has been steadily gaining on the country and is now listened to with attention by his enemies in Parliament who long and earnestly refused to have anything to do with him, as no better than a punka coolie—the most mechanical of day-labourers?

THE BLOCK IN THE SUBORDINATE EDUCATIONAL SERVICE.

A Correspondent supplies us with the following note :—

The undermentioned Gazetted officers of the Subordinate Educational Service have been over thirty years in the service, and it is desirable in the interests of the Service itself as well as of young and deserving men therein that some at least of these old fossils or fogies should be made to retire, as speedily as possible. The departmental Grade List does not give the ages of these gentlemen ; but there can be no doubt that some of them are past fifty-five, and some though not 55 in the records of the Accountant-General, are without doubt about or over that age.

The rule ought to be that no one after he has served 33 years ought to be retained in the Service :—

Class I.—Baboo Chandi Churn Banerjee, 35 years.

Class II.—Moulvie Abdul Hai, 37 years.

Class III.—Baboo Taraknath Sen, 31 years.

Baboo Raj Krishna Roy, 34 years.

Baboo Gobindo Chunder Mitter, 37 years.

Baboo Ramgati Nyaratna, 33 years.

Class IV.—Baboo Bir Narain Mookerjee, 39 years.

Baboo Braja Nath Lahiri, 32 years.

Baboo Sib Persad Singh, 32 years.

Baboo Kanty Chunder Chatterjee, 33 years.

THE POLITICS OF SOUTH WESTERN BENGAL.

THE COMMISSIONER MR. STEVENS OF THE CHOTA NAGPORE DIVISION TO THE RAJA OF KOREA.

[Mr. Stevens has left behind him an interesting account of his cold-weather tour, in the course of which he visited the Jushpur, Sirgooja, Udaipur, Gangpur, and Bonai States, and while at Sirgooja he dealt with the affairs of the Korea and Changbhakar Sates.—Calcutta Gazette, August 28, 1889.]

My dear Raja,—I have now enquired, so far as I could, into the numerous petitions of complaint made to me both by you and against you, and I have had long conversations with you, with Bai Saheb, with your Dewan, with your Zemindars, with several of your neighbours and with other persons, regarding the affairs of the Korea Raj. All, without exception, say that the condition of the State has been of late rapidly growing worse. So much worse has it become that large numbers of the rayyets, unable any longer to endure the oppressions of their ruler in Korea, are leaving it and seeking refuge in other better-governed States.

The fault lies partly with some of your Zemindars and partly with yourself. So far as the Khargoon Zemindar and his family are concerned, there is now, I am happy to find, but little to be said. The younger Zemindar and his family are well affected towards you and wish to maintain your dignity. I advise you most strongly to remain on good terms with this family, and to do nothing to diminish their good feelings towards you. Be careful not to be unduly harsh or suspicious in your relations with them, and specially avoid harrassing them or their rayyets by undue and unusual exactions either of money or of services. As I have said, the other Zemindars deserve blame. By their recklessness and extravagance they have lost all or nearly all their property, and have nothing or next to nothing left except their influence over the rayyets and this influence I have no doubt they have sometimes abused to exact money for themselves. I now desire that if in future any of them should be proved guilty of extortion or other crime of a similar nature, you will commit the case to me for trial. If I find the evidence of such misconduct satisfactory, I will inflict a sentence of imprisonment, which will be carried out in the Ranchi jail or in some still severer place of punishment.

So far as you personally are concerned, I think you do not give your rayyets sufficient reason to think that you care about them and will protect them. I fear that you look upon them too much as a mere source of income or as serving your own convenience. But this is wrong besides being unwise. The Government has placed you and retained you in charge of the State not only for your own profit and advantage, but for the sake of the rayyets, so that they may be well-governed and live in happiness. It is also not prudent to exact too much from the rayyets, because as you see now, they will not bear it, but will go to some other country where they will be treated with more justice and consideration. It ought to be the pride of the ruler of a State to deserve the title of a "cherisher of the poor." The King should be to his subjects as the father is to his children.

But unfortunately you have allowed other people to come between you and your rayyets. Your servants have no permanent interest in the State. They come to Korea to get what they can and to go away when they have collected all that there is to be had. They have no love for you or for your rayyets and they look only to themselves. It is no matter to them if your people are disgusted and leave your raj.

I hear on all sides bad accounts of the Mohurir Thakoor Persad and of the two brothers Khirodhur Lal and Jai Prakash Lal. It is right for me to say that the complaint of bribery which I enquired into against Khirodhur Lal was in my opinion false, but still where there is smoke there is fire, and when one hears no good, but only harm of a man, it is pretty certain that there is some foundation for bad reports. Again you should never employ two near relatives in such position that they can assist each other and work together. I advise you to get rid of all three of these men. They are not your brothers that you should keep them when it is injurious to both you and your rayyets to do so. Your servants, by getting themselves a bad name, get you bad name. Unless you wish the servants to be the masters, you must overlook them in whatever work they do. You should sometimes go about without them and should make it easy for any rayyets to come to you and make complaints.

I hear that your servants sometimes go about the country, making exactions in your name and trying to buy things at the privileged prices at which only the Rajas themselves are allowed by the custom of the country to buy. All this you should stop. You should call the Zemindars and gountyas together, and should tell them not to obey requisitions of these kinds for which your own express orders have not been given. I have made over to you for enquiry several complaints of this sort. You should investigate with care these as well as any others which may be laid before you and if proved, punish the offenders well. Let your rayyets see that you protect them and have not made them over to your servants to plunder and harrass.

Another thing which I wish to say is this. Both you and the Dewan are young men. I desire that in all matters relating to the State you should consult with the Bai Saheb. She is a very important person, is very clever, excepting one or two trifling matters, her interests are the same as yours. If your Raj flourishes, her affairs will go prosperously ; if your Raj is ruined, she will be ruined also. I hope therefore that you, the Dewan and the Bai Saheb will consult, and you will not work with advice of mere foreigners.

In order to uphold your dignity, I have determined not to allow Balmokund Roy to resume charge of the Putna thana until he has submitted himself to you ; but I hope that you will dispose of his case quickly and I hope you will do the same with all your other business. One of the complaints which are made against you is that you are slow in disposing of your work and keep defendants a very long time in hajut. If you reflect in all your work and think how you yourself would like to be treated by other people, I think you will do better.

I trust that you will now think carefully over what I have said to you. I wish to be your friend and to see your State flourishing. If I am still Commissioner of Chota Nagpore next year, it is probable that I shall again visit Korea and ascertain the condition of affairs. I hope to find them much improved.

THE LATE BABOO RAJINDER DUTT.

"F. H." contributes the following notice of the deceased to the New York Nation of August 28, 1889.

Out of the host of Americans who, during the last half-century, have visited Calcutta, there must be a good number, among the living, to whom mention of the name of Baboo Rajinder Dutt will revive the memory of a man that no one knew but to esteem. At the time when I made his acquaintance, as long ago as 1846, the fame which he enjoyed to the close of his career was already established. To be equally respected by his own countrymen and by foreigners is seldom the fortune of a native of India ; but such was his fortune, and on the most unquestionable grounds. Nor were his efforts in behalf of his fellow-men confined to the limit of so few years as were allotted to those other memorable Hindoos of this century, Rammohun Roy, Dwarkanath Tagore, Dr. Bhau Daji, and Keshub Chunder Sen, inasmuch as he had reached the age of seventy-one, when he died on the 5th of last June.

Very few, comparatively, among Bengalees, were the coevals of Rajinder Dutt who, like him, were carefully instructed in our language in childhood, and, as the result of acquiring a taste for English literature and science, ended with becoming virtually deorientalized. Born to opulence, and with leisure at will, he devoted himself indefatigably to study while still a youth, and also began to accumulate books of almost every description. Even before he was thirty, his library was by far the largest and the most valuable of any private person in Calcutta ; and it went on growing to the last. And he added nothing to it merely for display. Every volume that he purchased he dipped into for at least an hour or two, before consigning it to his shelves, in preliteration, generally, if it was not a work of reference, of early deliberate perusal. And very deliberate was that perusal, as well as critical.

To give an illustration, some six months after he had received the first collective edition of Landor's works, the arrival of which he hailed with the warmth of an enthusiast, we agreed to discuss it, as we had both read it in the meantime. Without exaggeration, he seemed to have it all but by heart. Many were the long sittings which our discussion occupied ; and I was thus afforded ample opportunity for observing his familiarity with biography and history. Its range and its exactness were surprising.

But his chief title to admiration is still behind. In every fibre of his soul he was a philanthropist. Creed or social position was to him indifferent; it was enough that he knew of the existence of suffering, and he was ready with brain and purse. And his helpfulness, in countless instances, was manifested not only by his personal attendance in the character of a physician, but by his relieving need of every kind. His bearing, in doing good, was not so much that of one conferring, as that of one receiving, an obligation. The thought of any sort of return for his benefactions seemed never to enter his mind. That his boundless generosity impaired his fortune most materially was inevitable; but it caused him no disquiet to be no longer wealthy. His single aim was, at whatever self-sacrifice, to be of service to his fellow-men. In fact, he was an avatar of altruism.

Physically he was in no way remarkable. He was of medium height, lithe of figure, purely Caucasian as to features, and rather dark for a Bengalee of good family. His expression was one of marked intelligence; yet, what with his vivacity, his abruptness of manner, and his entire freedom from solemnity of aspect, he altogether belied the notions which are ordinarily associated with an Asiatic. For the rest, depressed by no adversity, fertile of resource, perpetually alert, strenuous in endeavour, and good-natured, he would, but for his complexion and dress, have been indistinguishable in most essentials, from the typical American.

Considering his antecedents, seconded by a keen appreciation of evidence, and fearlessness as a logician, it is no wonder that he sat loose to the religion of his forefathers. Having once clearly defined the inscrutable to himself, he calmly set it on one side, and devoted himself thenceforward to matters indisputably intelligible, the offices of humanity. Righteous in all his instincts, he translated them into practice to the best of his power. His, through long years, were the actions that alone "smell sweet, and blossom in the dust." Never can the Ganges have borne in its bosom, to their ocean tomb, the ashes of a man richer in every virtue that merits to be recorded with reverence.

MONGHYR.

Jamulpore, September 19.

Cholera has assumed an epidemic form in the Native quarters of the town, specially in Noyagong and Kessabpore of Jamalpur. In the former, in the course of 36 hours, in a Bengalee family the father, and three sons were victimized by the fell disease, leaving only three young orphans in a destitute condition.

There was a narrow escape from a fatal accident the other day. An employé (Nativ Beharee) attached to the Railway Co's works, whilst crossing the line in the Round shed yard in order to join his duty in time, a shunting Engine happened to be passing and ran over the poor fellow's leg and crushed it badly. He is now out of danger, undergoing treatment in the Company's Hospital.

An ex-employé (Bengalee Clerk) attached to the Railway Office, was arrested and criminally prosecuted by the Company on a charge of theft for doing away with blank free pass books bearing the signatures of officers of the Locomotive Department. The trial lasted for some days in the Monghyr Court and subsequently the case was dismissed evidently for want of evidence.

A new Punkah pulling machine has been fitted up and is working in the Locomotive Offices. The machine—a small one with a cylinder and piston rod and lever, &c.—is worked by compressed air. This is the latest design of machinery for punkah pulling introduced in this part of the province. This invention if adopted universally, will most decidedly do away with the services of several Punkah coolies and be a great saving of expenditure.

The river has risen unusually high this year and in consequence has told seriously on the local crop Bhoota, the low lands containing the said crop being untimely submerged under water.

The cloth shops, tailoring shops, &c., are now in full swing for holiday dresses, and the Hindu Home-sticking public are awaiting the auspicious festival the grand Doorga Poojah to welcome the goddess, and to pay a visit to their dear homes and sweet darlings.

LOAN NOTIFICATION.

1. The Commissioners of Calcutta are prepared, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, given under Sections 404 and 406 of Act II. (B. C.) of 1888, to open a Debenture Loan for Rs. 14,00,000 on the security of the rates, taxes and dues imposed and levied under the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act 1888.

2. The Debentures will have a currency of thirty years from the 1st January 1890, and will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable on the 30th June and 31st December of each year.

3. The form of the Debenture-bonds will be that given in the twelfth schedule of Act II. (B. C.) of 1888.

4. No debenture will be issued for any sum less than Rs. 500, and above that amount debentures will be issued only for even sums of Rs. 100.

5. Tenders for the whole or any part of the above loan up to the amount of Rs. 11,15,000 will be received by the Secretary to the Corporation up to 2 o'clock P. M. of Friday, the 20th September 1889; the balance or Rs. 2,85,000 will be reserved for holders of debentures of the 6 per cent. loan of 1869 falling due on 1st January next, upon such terms as may hereafter be announced.

6. Each tender must be made out in the form annexed to this Notification, and enclosed in a sealed cover addressed to the Secretary to the Corporation, and superscribed "Tender for Municipal Loan of 1889-90."

7. Each tender must be accompanied by Government Promissory Notes, currency notes or cheques for not less than 3 per cent. of the amount tendered.

8. When a tender is accepted, the deposit, when made in currency notes or cheques, will be held as a payment in part of the amount tendered, and will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the 20th September 1889, provided that the whole amount tendered is paid up in the manner hereinafter prescribed; but no debenture will issue for the sum so deposited so long as the entire amount of the tender is not paid.

9. The deposits on tenders which may not be accepted, will be returned on application, and no interest will be payable on such deposits. If an allotment after being made is not taken up, and the full amount allotted is not paid as hereinafter prescribed, the deposit will be forfeited.

10. The rate at which a tender is made, must be specified in rupees, or rupees and annas: a tender in which the rate is not so specified, will be rejected as null and void.

11. The rates stated in a tender must not contain any fraction of an anna. If a rate containing a fraction of an anna is inserted in any tender, such fraction will be struck out, and the tender treated as if the rate did not contain such fraction of an anna.

12. The amount of the accepted tenders must be paid into the Bank of Bengal in the following instalments:—

One-third on 21st October 1889.

Do. on 21st November 1889.

Do. on 21st December 1889.

Parties whose tenders are accepted will have the option of paying all or any of the instalments before the dates specified above, and will receive interest from the date of such payment.

13. Anticipation interest will be paid on all instalments from the respective dates on which such instalments are paid into the Bank of Bengal to the 31st December 1889.

14. Tenders will be accepted in the order of rates tendered, beginning with the highest rate. In the case of two or more tenders at the same rate a pro rata allotment will be made (if the tenders are accepted), but no allotment will be issued if the amount distributable on any tender is less than Rs. 500.

15. Tenders will be opened by the Loan Committee of the Commissioners at 3 P. M., on Friday, the 20th September 1889.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

[From Mr. Alfred Austin's new volume.]

WHY ENGLAND IS CONSERVATIVE.

I.

Because of our dear Mother, the fair Past,
On whom twin Hope and Memory safely lean,
And from whose fostering wisdom none shall wean
Their love and faith, while love and faith shall last :
Mother of happy homes and Empire vast,
Of hamlet snug, and many a proud demesne,
Blue spires of cottage smoke 'mong woodlands green,
And comely altars where no stone is cast.
And shall we batter these for gaping Throne,
Dismantled towers, mean plots without a tree,
A herd of hinds too equal to be free,
Greedy of others, jealous of their own,
And, where sweet Order now breathes cadenced tone,
Envy, and hate, and all uncharity ?

II.

Banish the fear ! 'Twere infamy to yield
To folly what to force had been denied,
Or in the Senate quail before the tide
We should have stemmed and routed in the field.
What though no more we brandish sword and shield,
Reason's keen blade is ready at our side,
And manly brains, in wisdom panoplied,
Can foil the shafts that treacherous sophists wield.
The spirit of our fathers is not quelled.
With weapons valid even as those they bore,
Domain, Throne, Altar, still may be upheld,
So we disdain, as they disdained of yore,
The foreign froth that foams against our shore,
Only by its white cliffs to be repelled !

III.

Therefore chime sweet and safely, village bells,
And, rustic tinklers, woo to reverent prayer,
And, wise and simple, to the porch repair
Round which Death, slumbering, dreamlike heaves and swells.
Let hound and horn in wintry woods and dells
Make jocund music though the boughs be bare,
And whistling yokel guide his gleaming share
Hard by the homes where gentle lordship dwells.
Therefore sit high enthroned on every hill,
Authority ! and loved in every vale ;
Nor, old Tradition, falter in the tale
Of lowly valour led by lofty will :
And, though the throats of envy rage and rail,
Be fair proud England proud fair England still !

A MARCH MINSTREL.

Hail ! once again, that sweet strong note !
Loud on my loftiest larch,
Thou quaverest with thy mottled throat,
Brave minstrel of bleak March !

Hearing thee flute, who pines or grieves
For vernal smiles and showers ?
Thy voice is greener than the leaves,
And fresher than the flowers.

Scorning to wait for tuneful May
When every throat can sing,
Thou floutest Winter with thy lay,
And art thyself the Spring !

While daffodils, half mournful still,
Muffle their golden bells,
Thy silvery peal o'er landscape chill
Surges, and sinks, and swells.

Across the unsheltered pasture floats
The young lamb's shivering bleat,
There is no trembling in thy notes,
For all the snow and sleet.

Let the bullace bide till forsts have ceased,
The blackthorn loiter long ;
Undaunted by the blustering east,
Thou burgeonest into song.

Yet who can wonder thou dost dare
Confront what others flee ?
Thy carol cuts the keen March air
Keener than it cuts Thee.

The selfish cuckoo tarrieth till
April repays his boast.
Thou, thou art lavish of thy trill,
Now when we need it most.

The nightingale, while buds are coy,
Delays to chant its grief.
Brave thrush ! thou dost pipe for joy,
With never a bough in leaf.

Even fond turtle-doves forbear
To coo till woods are warm :
Thou hast the heart to love and pair
Ere the cherry blossoms swarm.

The skylark, fluttering to be heard
In realms beyond his birth,
Soars vainly heavenward. Thou, wise bird !
Art satisfied with earth.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

Thy home is not upon the ground,
Thy hope not in the sky :
Near to thy nest thy notes resound,
Neither too low nor high.

Blow what wind will, thou dost rejoice
To carol, and build, and woo.
Thro' the ! to me impart thy voice ;
Impart thy wisdom too.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Government of India has requested the Bengal Government that "the acknowledgments of the Government of India may be conveyed to His Highness the Maharaja of Durbhunga and the other landholders who have accorded their continued and zealous co-operation with the Government in mitigating the sufferings of the people during the period of scarcity in the Patna Division."

MR. LAMBERT informs the public by an advertisement that the Parachute Descent this afternoon will be without any animal, dead or alive. After the wind is thus taken out of their sails, the Company will hardly take much by their venture.

"A PARSEE" who has strayed to England, has been warmed by smoky old Babylon into an altruistic feat. He has indited a long epistle in which, "as a humble mark of thanksgiving for the blessings which we enjoy under this (British) rule, and as a humble token of thanksgiving to the Almighty God for enabling me to realize a long-dreamt dream of visiting this great city (London), whose admirable institutions—in spite of several blemishes which sometimes accompany even an advanced state of civilization and education—have struck me with wonder and admiration"—he pays over to the Lord Mayor £1 "to be given in any charity for the good of the poor." A bad specimen of a race that gives away thousands without fuss, to be guilty of so much rodomontade in giving a pound in charity. The man's self-consciousness is shocking. At that rate, he would inflict on the public a volume in making a gift of a hundred guineas. The Petits and Camas and Jeejeebhys would have whole libraries to themselves.

THE noble steam man of war, Sultan, which lately got aground, has been got out safe. Messrs. Baghins & Co. offered to lift her up for £50,000. As the vessel had cost £374,777 and there were on board guns and ordnance stores amounting to £44,700, besides marine stores in general of the value of £10,000, bringing up the total to the enormous figure of £4,29,477! the authorities agreed. It is satisfactory to all sides that the contractors have succeeded in their venture. As the Army and Navy Gazette remarks, "To raise a vessel of 9,290 tons displacement is an accomplishment that the contractors may well be proud of."

THERE is a language of flowers. And now we have a vocabulary of affixing postage stamps.

"When a postage stamp has been placed upside down on the left corner of the letter, it means 'I love you'; on the same cross-wise, 'My heart is another's'; straight up and down, 'Good-bye, sweet-heart, good-bye'; upside down in the right hand corner, 'Write no more'; in the centre at the top, 'Yes'; opposite at the bottom, 'No'; on the right hand corner at a right angle, 'Do you love me?'; in the left hand corner, 'I hate you'; top corner on the right, 'I wish your friendship'; bottom corner on the left, 'I seek your acquaintance'; on a line with the surname, 'Accept my love'; the same upside down, 'I am engaged'; at a right angle in the same place, 'I long to see you'; in the middle at the right hand edge, 'Write immediately.'"

These idle hands seem to have been given up by poor Satan in despair as too "soft" for his purpose.

THE recent Paris Exhibition banquet, on Aug. 18, was probably the greatest function of the kind in Western Europe in modern times. It would have befitted the shradh of a Kaiser.

"The culinary work for the banquet commenced on Aug. 16, when the cooks proceeded to the delicate operation of making the mayonnaise sauce. In its confection 2,000 yolks of eggs were employed. The twelve hundred fowls, which were to be served cold, were cooked, as were also the fifteen hundred ducks, which were to be made into pies. As for the galantine, the fillets of beef, and the fish, which constituted the pièces de résistance of the menu, they were prepared on the 17th. Sixteen thousand bottles of claret, 4,000 of Pomar, 3,000 of Madeira, and 3,000 of champagne were conveyed to the Palais de l'Industrie. A couple of hours before the banquet, the 30,000 French rolls deemed necessary were brought to the Champs Elysées. Eighty thousand plates, 20,000 forks, 20,000 knives, 16,000 tablespoons, 15,000 coffee spoons, and 52,000 glasses were provided for the banquet, to prepare and serve which there were 1,000 waiters, 75 cooks, 90 assistant-cooks, 50 cellarmen, and 150 scullions."

In India, private liberality not unoften exceeds that measure. The late Maharaja of Gwalior repeatedly fed a hundred thousand Brahmans at a time.

GENERAL BOULANGER having, in his absence, been found guilty of looting the treasury as War Minister and condemned, has been reduced to try his sheet-anchor—his popularity with the nation. He has appealed to the country. His language and statements are truly French—absolutely Frank. On Aug. 16, a manifesto was published addressed "to honest men," and signed by General Boulanger, Count Dillon, and M. Rochefort, in these choice terms:—

"The summary execution which the adversaries of the National Republican party describe as the judgment of the High Court is, every one knows, the result of a contract concluded between the majority of a dishonoured Chamber and the majority of a Senate condemned for ever by the country. The former has said to the latter, 'Rid us of the men who threaten our re-election, and for that we will let you live.' And the fiery Revisionists who at the head of their electoral programmes had placed the suppression of the Senate now declare that this body has saved the Republic. The people will not be deceived as to the motives which have dictated this disgraceful bargain. Universal suffrage lying prostrate below limited suffrage, the security of citizens, and the honour of the nation in the hands of the accomplices of Ferry—such are the results of the monstrous iniquity perpetrated against us. The true heads of the Senatorial Republic are, at this moment, the false witness Alibert and the swindler Buret. But this orgie of Absolutism, calumny, and prevarication happily is near its end. In spite of the new coups d'état which are being elaborated in shady places, we have confidence in the firmness of the electoral body. We appeal to it, then, from falsehood to truth, from the dictatorship of mud to the honest Republic. Vive la France! Vive la République!"

LORD CONNEMARA left Ootacamund on the 5th. He is bound for Simla. He passes through Calcutta, pays a flying visit to Darjeeling, and then proceeds to Simla on State business. He moves on to the frontier before going back to Madras.

THE Foreign Secretary, Sir Mortimer Durand, was laid up with pleurisy. He has, we are glad to learn, been pronounced convalescent.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces has marked Bundelkhand for his next winter tour.

A TEST examination of private students—candidates from the districts of the Presidency and Chota Nagpore Divisions—for admission to the next Entrance Examination—will be held at No. 4, Dalhousie Square, office of the Inspector of Schools, Presidency Circle, on the 13th December next. Applications with the usual fee and necessary particulars, must be made at least ten days before the examination day.

THE High Court has revised the Jury Rules. These Rules to be known as "The Jury Rules, 1889" supersede all existing rules regarding the qualification, summoning, empanelling, and serving of jurors. We transcribe Rules III and IV. about qualifications and disqualifications of Jurors.

"Every male person between the ages of twenty-one and sixty, who is not the subject of any Foreign State, and who resides or personally works for gain within the local limits of the High Court in its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction, shall be qualified and liable, subject to the provisos and conditions hereinafter contained, to serve as a juror at any criminal sittings of the High Court, other than sittings held under the provisions of section 335 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, and upon any inquest before the Coroner of Calcutta; provided he be the resident occupier of a house within the said local limits of the annual value of not less than four hundred rupees; or has property, or an interest in lands, tenements, or goods within the Province of Bengal of the value of not less than three thousand rupees; or is in receipt of an income of not less than one hundred rupees a month.

America is not "a Foreign State" within the meaning of this rule. "Annual value" in this rule means annual value as defined by Section 122 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, 1888.

No person shall be eligible to serve as a juror as aforesaid, who holds any office in or under the High Court; or who receives any pay or emolument for any employment in any office or under any officer thereof; or for executing any duties of Police; or who is the subject of any Foreign State; or who is under the age of twenty-one years; or who having been convicted of a non-bailable offence under the Indian Penal Code, or of a similar offence in British India or elsewhere, shall not have obtained a free pardon in respect thereof, or have obtained a reversal of such conviction upon the merits; or who is a lunatic or an idiot; or who does not understand English when spoken."

There is a long list of exemptions from the Viceroy and Lieutenant-Governor down to all domestic servants. The only person excused by name is Kazi Syed Ahmed Khan Bahadoor, Attaché in the Foreign Department. The rules reserve to the presiding Judge the power to "order the name of any person who has actually served as a Juror in the preceding year, and of any person known or believed to be dead, absent from Calcutta, or likely to be unable from illness or otherwise to attend, or known or believed not to be qualified or liable to serve as a Juror under these rules, to be set aside." The dead are above all law and the High Court, the absent are without its jurisdiction. How can the Judge enforce their attendance or punish them for neglect?

THE Behar National School, Bankipore, has been affiliated to the Calcutta University in Arts up to the F. A. Standard.

THE Governor-General in Council has been pleased to make certain reductions and remissions in the fees mentioned in the First and Second Schedules of the Court-fees Act, VII. of 1870. The notification will be found in the Gazette of India Part I. of the 4th September 1889.

FROM the 1st October next, tolls will be levied on all boats, steamers, rafts, &c., at Khoolna on the route known as the "Eastern Canal" or "Inner Boat Route," the toll limits being to the South, the junction of the Bhyrub and Roopsha rivers, and to the north a line drawn from the village of Bungapara on the right bank to the village of Solepore on the left bank of the Bhyrub river. The rates are:

On all boats, steamers and other vessels, except those laden with wood, per 100 maunds tonnage	As. 14
On same laden with wood, per 100 maunds tonnage	12
On floats of roughly squared timbers, each timber	6
On floats of unwrought timbers, each timber	3
On rafts of bamboos, for each hundred or portion of each hundred	3
Minimum toll on all boats, floats or rafts	4

Monthly tickets, at six times the ordinary tolls as calculated by the above rates, will, at the option of the payers, be issued to boats used exclusively for fishing purposes. Dingheys accompanying large boats will not be charged any toll. Vessels unloading within toll limits and leaving with cargo will not be subject to toll on leaving.

THE Collector of Customs has "declared that the provisions of Section 18 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, as amended by Section 10, Sub-section (2) of the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, 1889, shall, as regards all piece-goods therein indicated, be deemed to be in abeyance up to and inclusive of the 31st day of October 1889, absolutely."

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE London Labour Revolt has ended. The strikers accepted November as the commencement of the increased wages and returned to work on the 15th. To bury past differences, they held a feast at the Mansion House. Cardinal Manning and the Lord Mayor, who were present, expressed their satisfaction at the bloodlessness of the revolt. There was a demonstration, too, in Hyde Park, in which the strikers congratulated themselves on their success against the Dock Directors. The "Blacklegs" in the Albert Docks who had been taken in during the height of the strike and continued to work, caused some irritation to the labourers, which resulted in fight between the two parties. The labourers threatened repetition of the strike unless the "Blacklegs" were turned out. The Directors refused to part with the Blacklegs who had stood by them in their hour of need. The last report is that the friction is over.

THE Executive of Cotton manufacturers have passed a resolution to run short time. In consequence, six of the largest mills in Blackburn have been closed for a time, throwing out three thousand operatives.

THE Scotch papers charge a Scottish peer with impropriety and assault upon a child.

It is reported from Quebec that a mass of rock from the Dufferin Terrace rolled down a distance of two hundred feet, burying houses and fifty persons, killing thirteen more, besides injuring another twenty.

THE Times has information that Servia and Montenegro are for a mutual offensive and defensive alliance.

SURGEON APTHORP, of gunnery-ship Cambridge, while a guest at Surgeon Hayes', of Devenport, rewarded his hospitality by "conveying" some bank-notes. For that act of bravery, he has been awarded removal from service.

A EUROPEAN paper thus piles up the sagavery of the Shah in Austria:—

"At a Court dinner he omitted to give his arm to the archduchess, who was his hostess, and she had to run after him. At another Court function he coolly kept the Emperor waiting a quarter of an hour. At the Zoological Gardens he borrowed a stick to goad the animals and make them savage. At some public baths he and his valet played pranks with the watercocks and flooded the bathroom. In another place having wetted his hands he wiped them on the coat-tails of the nearest gentleman present. His little boy Aziz appears to have followed pretty faithfully in the footsteps of his royal master. We are told that the little fellow is remarkable not only for his pranks but for his domineering ways towards the persons in the Shah's suite, who have to grin and bear it as they may, and for his impudence towards the rest of mankind. Being taken to some public baths in Vienna he retained twelve rooms for his own use, had a dozen baths filled, and amused himself by pumping the water in and out of them."

The man cannot walk straight whom we do not like, says the Bengali proverb. The Shah being an Oriental prince of no great power, is of course always blundering and bungling and boring the precious princes and princelings and courtiers of the West. He is a mere savage, whose gems are his best part. But are the royalty of Europe always the pink of perfection? Are even English kings and queens of the nineteenth century such paragons of excellence that they may look down on their Eastern brethren? Take the Prince who was esteemed "the first gentleman in Europe" and his wife, the Princess Caroline. We will call witness the great Ghatak Raj—match-maker—Harris, Lord Malmesbury, who brought the latter over from Brunswick to be wedded to the heir of George III. His memoirs, which are most interesting reading, give a curious picture of the wretchedness of court life. They certainly take away all the glamour out of it. Even as regards princes and princesses, there is little to choose between Eastern and Western ones. Not only in essential meanness, but even in personal cleanliness, they are often at par. At all events, it is not Eastern potentates and grandees alone that cover soiled linen with rich brocades. Hear what Malmesbury, in his Diary and Correspondence, says of the bride of the Heir to England's Throne:—

"Argument with the princess about her toilette. She piques herself on dressing quick; I disapprove this. She maintains her point. I, however, desire Madame Busche to explain to her that the prince is very delicate, and that he expects a long and very careful toilette de propreté; of which she has no idea. On the contrary, she neglects it sadly, and is offensive from this neglect. Madame Busche executes her commission well, and the princess comes out the next day well washed all over."

Again:—

"I had two conversations with the Princess Caroline. One on the toilette, on cleanliness, and on delicacy of speaking. On these points I endeavored, as far as was possible for a man, to inculcate the necessity of great and nice attention to every part of dress, as well as to what was hid as to what was seen. (I knew she wore coarse petticoats, coarse shifts, and thread stockings; and these never well washed or changed often enough.) I observed that a long toilette was necessary, and gave her no credit for boasting that hers was a 'short' one. What I could not say myself on this point I got said through women; I through Madame Busche, and afterwards through Mrs. Harcourt. It is remarkable how amazingly on this point her education has been neglected, and how much her mother, although an English woman, was inattentive to it."

And what of her betrothed husband, the Prince? He was not a more savoury being. If personally clean, he was mentally and morally a mass of sores. But surely he never failed in the ordinary requirements of a gentleman—not to say the first of gentlemen!

Let us see how he behaved to his affianced at their first meeting. Lord Harris has brought the Princess over to London, and now goes on:—

"I immediately notified the arrival to the King and Prince of Wales: the last came immediately. According to the established etiquette introduced (no one else being in the room) the Princess Caroline to him. She very properly, in consequence of my saying to her it was the right mode of proceeding, attempted to kneel to him. He raised her, (gracefully enough), and embraced her; said barely one word, turned round, retired to a distant part of the apartment, and calling me to him, said, 'Harris, I am not well; pray get me a glass of brandy!' I said, 'Sir, had you not better have a glass of water?'—upon which he, much out of humor, said, with an oath, 'No; I will go directly to the queen, and away he went. The princess, left during this short moment alone, was in a state of astonishment; and, on my joining her, said, 'Mon Dieu! est-ce que le prince est toujours comme cela? Je le trouve très-gros, et nullement aussi beau que son portrait.' I said, his royal highness was naturally a good deal affected and flurried at this first interview, but she certainly would find him different at dinner. She was disposed to further criticisms on this occasion, which would have embarrassed me very much to answer, if luckily the king had not ordered me to attend him."

Nasiruddin Shah is not powerful enough to be deliberately rude to European royalty and nobility, as he is represented to be. In point of fact, he is a polished Persian and travelled gentleman. But we doubt whether the irresistible Scourge of God Nadir Shah himself would have behaved so truculently to a woman in the way that our English Prince did towards his bride at their first meeting.

THE vernacular paper Kattywari was charged with attempting by threats to extort money from a Native State. The editor was tried by the Resident's Court at Rajkote. Major W. B. Ferris has convicted the accused and sentenced him to eighteen months' hard labour and a fine of Rs. 1,000, with alternative of another six months. The Political Courts of Kattywar have evidently scant sympathy for journalists. Major Ferris probably cannot boast of Judge Norris's intimate personal knowledge of the Press. In any case, the punishment inflicted by him on the miserable editor is frightful.

THE Sessions Judge has upheld the conviction of the editor of the Dacca Prakash. The Magistrate had ordered one month's simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 to be paid, when realized, to the complainant Rupal, by way of satisfaction to his wounded Shao susceptibilities. The Judge, with a desperate effort to temper justice with mercy, has upheld the order for imprisonment and remitted the fine.

MEANWHILE, the High Court—Beverley and Gurudas Banerjee, J. J.,—have issued a rule upon the District Magistrate of Dacca to shew cause why the conviction of Guru Govind Aich, editor of the Dacca Prakash, should not be set aside. They have also ordered that the editor be admitted to bail to the satisfaction of the Magistrate, pending the hearing of the rule. The rule will be heard after the vacation.

FOR cutting off the nose of his wife Revi and inflicting a severe wound on her neck, which kept her in the hospital for more than a month, the Sessions Judge of Belgaum, Dr. A. D. Pollen, on the verdict of the Jury, sentenced Ningia bin Rayapa to transportation for nine years. The accused had admitted the infliction of the wound but pleaded insanity, for he had not been on good terms with his wife for a long time past. The Bombay High Court has refused to interfere with the order of the lower Court.

IN the Madras libel suit—Moore versus Norton, the issues have been framed. They are (1) Were the words complained of in the plaint, or words to that substance or effect, spoken by the defendant, and concerning the plaintiff as in plaint alleged? (2) What damage, if any, is Plaintiff entitled to?

THE indigo planter Sims, charged with causing the death of Laton Meah, has been acquitted by the Sessions Judge of Mozufferpore Mr. Brett. He pointed out to the jury that Section 304A of the Penal Code did not apply, and that Section 325 applied if they believed the uncorroborated evidence of the grass cutter Chuttoo, and were convinced of the intention of the accused to cause grievous hurt. None of the Jurors would accept Chuttoo's evidence.

THE war of five years—between Raja Hurronath Roy of Dubalhati and his tenants—is over. The Settlement Officer deputed by Government to make a record of rights has succeeded in persuading both the parties to come to terms and accept a compromise. In another two months, he hopes to complete the negotiations and set free the estate from the harassment and troubles occasioned by the withholding of rents by the tenants.

ON August 24, we commented on the decoration of Baboo Prankristo Chowdry with the Palm Leaf of the French Republic. To commemorate the occasion, the Baboo has made over to the French Government at Chandernagore Rs. 500, for an annual silver medal to the student passing first in French from the Chandernagore Government School.

THE elections for the French Chamber of Deputies will be held tomorrow. The Indian Settlements—Pondicherry, Karikal, Chandernagore, Mahe and Yunan—return one member. Their present representative is Mons. Pierre Alype, a native of Bourbon. He has served out his first term of six years, and expects to be returned this time also. He has a staunch friend in M. R. Ry. Chanemouga Valouydan, the first Native in Pondicherry, member of the Conseil Generale. This gentleman has won his way to the Legion of Honor. Many may know him better as the uncle of Sir Savalay Ramaswamy Moodliar of Madras.

WE have never met with so touching a romance of real life as the incident recorded below:—

"A Tobolsk journal briefly describes the marriage ceremony between a former Russian officer condemned to 10 years' hard labour in the mines and life-long banishment, and a young and beautiful girl, possessing an ample fortune in her own right, who had faithfully and wearily followed the footsteps of her lover. The bridegroom was brought to the altar of the prison chapel in the soiled grey clothes of a miner, his ankles bound by chains rivetted to the iron waistband. The marriage ceremony over, husband and wife bade each other a sad but hopeful farewell; he to return to his gloomy toilsome life, and she to wait wearily until her husband obtained the freedom of a colonist."

That Russian convict certainly is no disguised Tartar barbarian, or else he could not create and, what is more, maintain, under absolutely prohibitive conditions, such tender interest in so noble a soul. The girl is, of course, an angel. And not by a figure of speech. The angels themselves are honoured by calling her one.

THE offence of assaulting the judiciary on the execution of their duty is getting rather common. Here is a record of one of the recent attempts, happily unsuccessful:—

"Mr. H. W. Pike, Joint-Magistrate of Allahabad, sentenced two tupkawallas, men who beguile innocent travellers on the road-side into buying brummagem articles at exorbitant prices, to two years' rigorous imprisonment each on charges of cheating. One of the men, on being led out of the Court, extracted a slipper from his nether garments and flung it at the Magistrate. A constable, however, intercepted the missile, which fell into the prisoner's box. The assailant was taken before Mr. C. S. Elloy, Deputy Magistrate, who sentenced him to a further term of two years' imprisonment, three months of which are to be spent in solitude."

As a rule, we confess, we have little sympathy with the dishonoured dispensers of justice—that is, where no deadlier instrument than the slipper, or, at the worst, a worn out Delhi pump is used. We have a notion that in nine cases out of ten, they deserve the attention. That is the popular form of expressing the indignation of the victim of law and Court. For instance, in the case under notice, without knowing anything more of it than is contained in the above paragraph, it seems to us that the tupkawallah was more sinned against by the Court than he could have sinned against any complainant or society in general. The sentence was atrocious in its severity. The Penal Code is a Draconian law, and if Magistrates will not apply it with sufficient discretion and some humanity, they will render themselves liable to be slipped and pelted with stones.

We must make an exception in favour of that obliging Deputy. He deserves a pretty elaborate course of leathering. He seems to have a truly loyal idea of the sacredness of the magisterial person, specially the Civilian magisterial person. For an unperpetrated battery on a Joint of magistracy, he awarded a sentence of hard labour for one year and nine months—and of the horrible solitary confinement for three months besides. What would he have done had the slipper taken effect? What, if the great Magistrate of the District himself had been aimed at? What, if the Magistrate Bahadoor had been struck? And what, if a High Court Judge? or, the Chief Justice himself? His sliding scale would have been exhausted to find a punishment meet. If a Governor had been assaulted, he would probably have given up a whole Province to be sacked.

BOMBAY, in public meeting assembled, has protested against a Sunday mail day. The Government of India has taken up the cry, and has suggested Saturday, as an alternate day, throughout the year. To preserve the Saturday half-holiday, it has been proposed that the mail bags should be closed at two in the afternoon.

THE Post Office takes no holiday during the Poojas, only on three days of the Pooja Proper, namely, October 1, 2 and 3, the deliveries from the Calcutta General Post Office and its Town sub-offices will be, as on Sundays, two times a day. The other departments will be open as usual. They will receive registered and insured articles and parcels and pay money orders and transact Savings Bank business.

THE Custom House will observe the Doorga and Lukhi Pooja holidays thus. On September 30, October 5, 9 and 10, it will be open during the usual hours for transaction of all business. On these days, the treasury will remain open. On October 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, and 8, the House will be opened on notice being given, free of charge, from 11 A. M. to 12 noon, for entering or clearing any vessel that it may be required so to enter or clear, and for the issue of bills of entry or shipping bills covering free goods from or to the same. The treasury on these days will be closed.

The Bengal Bonded Warehouse will be closed on October 1, 2, 3, 4, 7 and 8 and will be opened on September 30, October 5, 9 and 10.

The Officiating Comptroller-General, Mr. E. T. Atkinson, has accepted the responsibility of the mysterious notice commented upon by us in our last against closing the Paper Currency Office. He thus notifies :—

"Notice is hereby given that the Public Debt Office and the Government Savings Bank at the Bank of Bengal will be closed from the 30th September to the 10th October, both days inclusive, but the Bank of Bengal will receive and pay money on Government account on all days on which the Bank is open for business.

The Paper Currency Office will also be open to the public for exchange of notes and coin up to one o'clock P. M. on the 30th September, 8th and following days in October."

Only one counter will be kept open for the public—not the Bank of Bengal or the Government. Eight or nine employés of both the upper and lower grades will be detained for this work, who will receive an equivalent in casual leave, but no allowance.

YESTERDAY we received this urgent telegram from Simla :—

"Instructions have been issued to close Currency Office during Pooja Holidays with reservation that arrangements may be made for attendance of a small number of clerks on certain days in order to meet convenience of mercantile community."

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Self Help.—Prior to the discovery of these remedies an easy, ready and reliable remedy for outward disfigurements and inward complications was, practically speaking, unknown. No one need now be at a loss if they should unfortunately suffer from piles, ulcers, sores, tumours, boils, bruises, sprains, &c. Enveloping Holloway's medicines are very intelligible printed directions for using them, which should be attentively studied and immediately followed by all who resort to his treatment. Sooner or later the sufferer will assuredly triumph over the worst diseases. This searching Ointment disperses all those malignant humours which aggravate diseases of the skin, prevent the cicatrization of ulcers, and excite inflammatory tendencies in the system.

LAW- AND SUB-LAW-MAKING AND LAW ADMINISTRATION IN INDIA.

THE Bills of neither the Imperial Council nor the Local Chambers are worded with sufficient approach to either comprehensiveness or accuracy. And the haphazard tinkering of the Select Committees and the Councils make confusion worse confounded in the Acts as they issue out with the final imprimatur of the legislatures. Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks in Vallambrosa, are the flaws that often strike the careful student or the acute practitioner. This is the more extraordinary, considering the general character of many of our laws. There is a primitive simplicity about the methods of Indian legislation that ought to make the task of the draughtsman easy. The Chambers scarcely perform half their duty but pass it on to others. They shirk inconvenient questions and avoid complicated details by delegating their powers to the Executive. The several Governments are authorized to make all the rules and provisions required, as well as to introduce the law, the rules and provisions included, in any geographical area or particular town or municipality or group of villages, or to apply it to any class or section of the population. Under such terms, one would suppose, such initial and fractional share of work, as, being inalienable, the legislature necessarily retained, would be well done, and its draughting above reproach. Unfortunately, that is far from the fact. The forethought and skill devoted to the work, is evidenced by the frequency of tinkering it. The amending hand is never at rest. Laws are no sooner passed than the cry is heard that they must be altered. Everything is slipshod. The most elaborate Codes are tentative.

Nor is the share of the Executive Government any better performed. The Proteus Civilian is the hero in both spheres. The same men or their like are the law-givers and law-makers, in both the Legislature and the Secretariat. Of course, the same spirit governs—the same style prevails. The same inharmonious flabby inexactitude marks both. The Rules under the Act are framed in the same offhand manner as the Acts themselves.

But if laws and sublaws are negligently drafted, they are with equal perfunctoriness executed—by the Government itself. Such is the prevailing nonchalance and recklessness of irresponsible office, that the very mechanical conditions which make a piece of writing, law, are neglected. Of course, the administration of justice takes its example from the Government and makes a mess of the whole in the working.

A Correspondent of the Statesman notices a recent case in Krishnagur before a Deputy Magistrate to the point.

"Sir,—Lately a case came for hearing in the court of Baboo Annodaprosad Sen, deputy magistrate, in which ten persons were prosecuted under the Gaming Act (Act II of 1867 B. C.) The Act provides that there should be three consecutive publications in the Calcutta Gazette of the notification extending the Act to any locality. In the course of his defence of the accused persons, Baboo Sakti Kantha Bhattachary took a preliminary objection to the effect that as there was only one publication of the notification extending the Act to Krishnagur, it could have no operation there. This he pointed out from the Calcutta Gazette of 1867, and in support of his contention he relied upon a ruling of the Calcutta High Court, reported in 8 W. R. cr. 41. The most regrettable part of the business is that since 1867 there have been many convictions under the same Act here, no one taking the trouble to point out the defect, and but for the skill of the learned pleader in the present case, these ten unfortunate persons would have come to grief, as the court thought that the evidence against them was sufficient for a conviction. I have reasons to believe that there exists a similar defect in the publication of notifications extending the Act to other places. The matter is of public importance, and the attention of the authorities ought to be directed to this point.

JUSTICE.

Krishnagur, Sep. 12."

That letter embraces, within the smallest possible compass, an apt illustration of all the various evils of law and judicature in India which we have been noticing. We make a holiday present of it to the Government.

THE LATE PIONEER LIBEL CASE.

THE Indian Press, Anglo-Indian as well as Native, has exhibited its usual weakness in the late Pioneer Libel Case. During the progress of the litigation, it maintained its self-respect by offering the old British superstition, about the horrible impropriety of commenting on cases sub judice, as a plea for meek silence, leaving this paper alone to perform, according to our lights, the sacred duty of setting the public right and dissipating prejudice and misconception. On the conclusion of the business in the High Court, by the unexpected and unprecedented mine sprung by Mr. Justice Norris, when they might be supposed to be at last freed from the terror of the sub judice ogre, the papers had still vastly little to say. With the sole exception of the Statesman perhaps, they all contented themselves with the expression in brief of surprise at the expected ending or untoward result. So far from any indignation, there was no adequate comment on the judicial game of ledgerdmain by which the case was nipped in the bud.

The Correspondents, no doubt, in some measure made up for the laches of the Editors. There have been some very good letters in the Statesman, written by public-spirited men of knowledge and experience and even by men of weight and influence. At the very outset, after Mr. Alston of the Allahabad's cross-examination by proxy of the prosecutor, a true citizen drew public attention to the fact that the Government, in violation of its own strict rules, had evidently assisted the defence, that its departments had been set in motion to collect information of the distant past, and exhume long-buried papers—information and papers which are not supplied even to the application of the parties immediately concerned in the matters—in order to arm the defence for demolishing the prosecution. The fact of the prosecuted journal being a Government organ whose Chief Editor—the principal defendant—is the son of the member of the Supreme Council in charge of the military department—equivalent to Minister of War—supplies the motive for such unprecedented favour.

Several writers wondered how the Magistrate came to disallow the case for want of territorial jurisdiction. One Correspondent, evidently a lawyer, who knows his business, scouted the plea as opposed to all precedents. For one, he cited as in point the recent trial of O'Brien vs. Salisbury, in which, although the alleged offence was committed at Watford, while both complainant and defendant were—temporarily, at all events—residents in London, the case was all the same tried as far away as Manchester.

The same writer thoroughly exposed the extreme frivolity and utter irrelevancy of the laboured and tedious cross-examination of the plaintiff by Mr. M. P. Gasper, the counsel for the defence. So far from being worthy of a senior practitioner of even an Indian Old Bailey, the whole exhibition was beneath Bow Street. But, for once, there was no check from a bench not usually patient of nonsense. The good Magistrate looked on, while the unfortunate prosecutor was leisurely pursued by the enemy and led through Purgatory, as if he were the prisoner at the bar, brought up for sentence of Court. And all for what? For the veriest bagatelles. Thus,

"He was held up to the ridicule of the Court for allowing himself to be called by a title which he appears not to have formally received. The aim appeared to be to show him up as a man desirous of passing himself off as the holder of a dignity to which he was not entitled. A gentleman in the army, well-known to me whom we will call 'Captain W—,' told me that he hoped soon to obtain his captaincy, and he added—'The fact is, I am only a lieutenant, but it is usual in the army to speak of an officer as a degree higher in rank than he really is, and I have been for years past called Captain W—.' That such is the etiquette of the army is further shown by recent telegrams from Egypt in which Colonel Grenfell is said to be promoted to the rank of Major-General; and which now regularly speak of him as 'General-Grenfell' though his being so is at present only a pleasant fiction. The lamented Major-General Macpherson was regularly styled 'General Macpherson,' and Lieutenant-Colonel Anderson was always written of as 'Colonel Anderson.' These facts bear out the statement of my friend 'Captain W—,' and they not only exonerate Captain Hearsey from the imputation of affecting a higher title than that which is his due; but they actually prove him to have been 'in order' in allowing himself to be so called. To call him 'Captain Hearsey' is thus quite in keeping with the etiquette of the British army; and the matter need not have occupied the time of the Court a single moment, if the Counsel for Mr. Chesney had only been aware of the circumstance. If he did know it, then the bitter and spiteful way in which he 'sat upon' the complainant, shows that a point so small could only be found in two places,—in the head of the 'bully' of a boy's playground and under a barrister's wig. 'Everything is fair in war,' and everything is fair in our Indian law-courts, too, it seems: if it was not fair, then it is passing strange that the learned Magistrate who presided over the proceedings did not say so."

We confess we were struck with amazement at the ignorance displayed by the defending counsel. Native as we are and far from habitually moving in English society, we know enough from our college days not to address a Lieutenant as Lieutenant. Mr. Gasper had no idea of what an exhibition he was making of himself. This chip of the old—Bailey showed himself a social innocent of the first water. Great as he is in the bullying of the bar, he is certainly not great in the usages of society. He probably has had little time or opportunity for mixing in it. Perhaps, he despises the knowledge of such small things as may be learnt by the process. But even small things have their use in our day of small things and of small men. It was amusing to see the great man such an unsophisticated lamb. Had he cared betimes to extend his observation beyond his profitable acquaintance with briefs and badmashes, attorneys and mooktears, complainants and prisoners, he would have escaped the situation in which he voluntarily placed himself. All the gusto with which he pounced upon the prosecutor in the box only recoiled on the cross-examiner. In trying to show up Captain Hearsey as a military pretender, he simply exposed his own social pretensions.

As for the Magistrate, he had had enough of the business to have left any disposition to interfere, after the interference of the Superior Court. At the time he had little hope of being signally avenged on the Bench (Beverley and Trevelyan and J. J.) that virtually remanded the case to him, by the Sphinx of the same Court. Nonetheless, we suppose, did he enjoy how Mr. Gasper spoke himself down.

On the legal value of all the labour and ingenuity to prove what was neither here nor there, the writer says:—

"But it overlooked the real offence of which Captain Hearsey complained. This, no doubt, the Counsel had law enough in him to see. To have published the fact, after Lord Beaconsfield became a great public man that in his earlier years he was dragged before the Magistrate on repeated occasions for swindling his tradesmen, would undoubtedly have been adjudged 'defamation of character,' if he had chosen to put the law in motion, and no attempt to prove that it was 'all true,' would have shielded the defendant."

The whole thing, indeed, was absolutely beside the point. In an action for damages, it might have been all very well to expose the plaintiff's antecedents and detract from his status, with a view to reduce the pecuniary award. In a criminal matter, it was simply irrelevant. We are not given to platitudes, but when senior counsel conduct themselves in the way that Mr. Gasper of the Calcutta High Court bar, prompted by Mr. Alston of that of the Allahabad Court and, instructed by a respectable firm like Sanderson's, before an experienced lawyer-magistrate like Mr. Marsden, it is necessary to remind the profession as well as the press and the public of the commonest first principles. Criminal Judicature stands on a very different footing from civil actions. In fact, except in suits for damages, the principle is the same in all judicature that the character of the plaintiff gives the defendant no excuse for doing him out of his own—his property or any other rights—or doing him any injury whatsoever. Even the worst of us are protected by law—not in our wrongs against others, but in our rights as against the encroachments of the world. Captain Hearsey might be as bad as Mr. Chesney had instructed Mr. Gasper to represent him, without forfeiting his right to be unmolested. Supposing he were ten times worse, would that give the Pioneer any right to blackguard him? So all that mad effort to pile up the agony on his devoted head—all the toil of creeping through the bypaths and backslums of life, smelling here a rat, and picking there a soiled rag, to mass together all the indiscretions of a whole life-time, was vain—simply Hate's Labour Lost. The Counsel did not distinguish himself for either sense or knowledge—whether of Law or Society.

• THE IGNORANCE OF TRIFLES.

THE MULTIPLICATION OF SMALL MONIES.

THERE is always a knowledge beyond the ken of the most knowing. We mean not here the more things in Heaven and Earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy, or by the most learned and philosophical of mankind. We mean no sublime or recondite things at all, but refer to matters level to the meanest understanding and easily to be learnt by whoever cares to learn. We allude, in fact, to that knowledge of common things which is so common among uncommon men of all sorts and degrees. The unsophisticated parishioners of sweet Auburn might well wonder that the small head of their good pastor could carry all he knew. The educated man in our day has to carry a great deal more in his head than even the great scholar a hundred years back. Of course, he has to pay the price in inattention to many minor concerns. Even in former times, when the obligations of men of liberal pursuits were far less urgent and the very domains of human observation and study far more limited, the great knowers were very small knowers in many particulars. Thus, the greatest mathematician was a bad hand at home arithmetic. Again, men in the higher walks of life are necessarily deficient in the minor knowledges. Those who are placed above want are not likely to know all the ins and outs of the children of Poverty. As a rule, the so-called respectable classes are vastly unacquainted with all the little shifts, the escapes and triumphs, of the struggling masses. Hence, a necessary absence of sympathy and failure of justice on the part of their superiors towards the poor.

A casual remark of a well known Judge in a late case in England, seems to us to illustrate this isolation of the well-to-do classes from their less fortunate brethren. There was no failure of justice in that case, because there could not be any under the circumstances. But the typical simplicity shown by the bench might, under another state of facts, or in another form of litigation, well lead to grave mistakes.

A maltster's labourer, by name Woodcock, died at Whittingham, in Norfolk, at the age of 70. He left five children, all under the age of 21, and a box of gold containing £1,970 to be divided equally among his children. Mr. Justice Chitty, in ordering the division, wondered how a labourer with about 15s a week could, say in 50 years, save that sum.

Mr. Chitty may be a good lawyer, but he must be an indifferent domestic economist. Nor is he much of an arithmetician. Has he never seen the speculations in figures shewing how trifling sums, by continually interesting accretions, swell to considerable fortunes? Interest never sleeps, whether in office—in matters of patronage,—or in borrowing transactions. It is a comparatively mild dose in High Finance, but the Compound Jelap of Low Finance—the form it usually assumes in microscopic dealings or on petty sums—is a terrible antiphlogistic, acting as a diastolic purge on the poor patient, ruinous to his pecuniary constitution, if not actually killing to his substance. So much the better for the relentless physician—the aggrandising cynic! The secret of money-making is obvious enough, it is the temper that is rare. Perhaps, it is not to be acquired, any more than a good face. It is usually an inheritance—from the male or the female side. Economists have usually little in common with the Poets, but they are singularly identical at starting. The Chamberlains may make wooden screws or iron ones, but the tight specimens of flesh and blood—the close-grained, close-fisted representatives of abnormal thrift—are born, not made. In their case, more than in any others, Wordsworth's remark holds good—The child is father to the man. The miracle of Minerva's birth is daily repeated in theirs. This species of lusus nature almost always comes to the world in all the glory—and shame—of full development. There is scarcely a more revolting spectacle than one of these monsters of juvenile parsimony. (On the other hand, there are those that can never lay by. Money comes to them only to go away, as fast as it comes and can depart. In fact, it may be said that money never comes to them at all, properly speaking. It is a mere optical deception—an illusory visit—a pecuniary tantalization by a magician. Money comes to them en route, stopping just to take breath, as it were. These unfortunates are ever in want for all that they may earn.

Mr. Justice Chitty had better lay aside his ordinary studies for an occasional dip into something less august but perhaps more wise, certainly more prudent and to the point—for a professional man—than Coke upon Littleton or even his own family's treatises on Contract—say Poor Richard's Almanac. Certainly, that last famous work would have given him a better clue to the problem which puzzled him on the bench in the case under notice than all his special learning. Proverbial Philosophy is rich in suggestions on the point. Thus, A penny saved is a penny gained. And, generally speaking, Many a little makes a mickle.

The secret of fortune-making is just to cultivate betimes a reverence for the littles. It is far easier to make money than to keep it. Everybody earns, but how few accumulate! Almost every one might be rich if he seriously desired and had an adequate will. But few have the stern courage not to spend and the patience to wait. Poor Woodcock, who astonished Mr. Justice Chitty, had both.

RELEASE OF THE SIKH PRISONERS.

TWO or three days after I had visited the Sikh prisoners, one afternoon Kurram Khan informed me that they wished to see me again. I went over. Sirdar Prem Singh began to relate to me all the circumstances of their incarceration. Although I was much interested, I stopped him and said, "Sirdar Sahib, it is of no use telling me your story like this, as, first of all, I cannot understand your Punjabi dialect well enough to follow you very closely, but what I will do is this. I will ask the Officer Commanding the Fort to give me permission to allow you to visit my quarters, and then you three can sit down comfortably and relate to me all your troubles. Kurrum Khan understands your language, he will translate, and my wife understands Hindoostani better than I do, so she will prevent me from making any mistakes as to your true meaning. I will then take a pen and ink and write down whatever you may have to say." The Officer Commanding the Fort belonged to my own Regiment, so there was no difficulty in obtaining his consent. One afternoon, I placed a camp table with pens, ink and foolscap paper on it in the bay window of my room overhanging the Ganges, and round it I had five chairs arranged, viz., one for each of the Sirdars, one for my wife to my left, and one at the foot of the table for myself. I then sent Kurrum Khan to the Sirdars' quarters to say that all was ready. In a few minutes after receiving my message, they were over, accompanied by the English sentry whom I told to stand at the doorway. As soon as they were seated, I took down Sirdar Prem Singh's statement which was published in the issue of the Reis and Rayyet of the 17th August. I knew it was useless and worse than useless to attempt anything for these unfortunates in India at that time, as Sir John Lawrence, the brother of Colonel Henry Lawrence, was Viceroy, but as I intended to go to France as soon as I could get leave on account of the ill health of my father Sir John Hearsay, I told them that they must wait patiently, and that when I went to England I would do my best for them, that I still had some influential friends both in Parliament and in the Council of the Secretary of State for India, and would see what I could do through them. They were satisfied. I went home in the beginning of 1866, and soon after I arrived I received a circular concerning the formation of the East India Association which I joined, as I believed it would take up political matters and wrongs, such as Mr. Digby and Mr. Bradlaugh are doing now. I drew up the Sirdars' case in a pamphlet form and also prepared a petition for Parliament. I sent the pamphlet to several Members of both the Upper and Lower Houses, and also to the members of the East India Association.

The pamphlet obtained some attention, and, after some correspondence with the Association which I destroyed long ago, I received the following letter from Lord Lyveden (Vernon Smith).

"Faning Woods.
September 18, 1867.

Dear Sir,—In answer to your letter, I shall be happy to present the petition of the Prisoners at Allahabad to the House of Lords in the next Session, if it is thought advisable—but I cannot now pledge myself to promote its prayer until I have heard what is to be said on the other side. I send your correspondence.

I am, your obedient servant,
(Sd.) LYVEDEN."

In the interim, enquiries had been instituted in India concerning the state of mind of Sirdar Lal Singh (the former Kotwal of Lahore), and a medical board, if I have not been misinformed, declared him to be both weak in mind and in body. So he was at once released. This was something, as it was in Lord Lawrence's time that this prisoner obtained his liberty. Notwithstanding that this man was let go free, it seems that the Secretary of State for India was unaware of the fact, for, in a letter which we will reproduce a little later on, they refused to release these men. Have we ever heard in any case of the Secretary of State for India listening to or paying any attention to petitions and complaints from India calling for enquiry or redress, if the Local Governments have been antagonistic to the petitioners? The only case I ever remember of such opposition is in the case of the Bombay Mamlatdars, and this is, I firmly believe, due to the fact that Lord Reay has brought one of the Heaven-born to grief for his misdeeds.

I returned to India in the end of 1867, and, as soon as I could put myself in correspondence with the Sikh Sirdars, I sent them a cheering letter enclosing a copy of Lord Lyveden's to me. At the same time, that is, on the 20th February 1868, I sent a petition on their behalf to the Secretary of State for India.

My letter to the Sikh prisoners was intercepted in the post, and I received a furious official threat from Lord Lawrence's Government asking how I dared to hold communication with Political prisoners. It was then that I found out that Sirdar Lal Singh had been released, but that Sirdars Prem Singh and Mann Singh had been removed from the Fort of Allahabad to that of Chunar. I could not help feeling for the poor fellow having to part from all his tamed pets, the green parrots.

I replied to that communication to the effect that my letters to the Sikh prisoners contained no treasonable or improper matter but only an assurance that their interests and welfare were being properly looked after and exhorted them not to lose heart as their imprisonment now was only a matter of time. I also pointed out to Lord Lawrence's Government that it had no legal right to tamper with the public post and intercept my letters, and that if such was done again, I would take legal steps to insure the inviolability of the public post. The letters were published in the Delhi Gazette which was then the leading public journal of the North-West Provinces, conducted by the able and vigorous pen of Iltidus Pritchard. The Pioneer then was comparatively only a second rate periodical.

With regard to the petition of the 20th February to the Secretary of State, it met with the usual fate of all such applications. The following is the official correspondence.

"No. 777. Office Memorandum.

Simla, Foreign Department.

The 18th July 1868.

Political.

Read a despatch from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, No. 100, dated 18th ultimo, communicating the orders of Her Majesty's Government on the Memorial forwarded by Captain Hearsay on behalf of certain Sikh State prisoners.

Ordered that extract para 3 of the above despatch be forwarded to Captain Hearsay for information, with reference to his letter of the 20th February 1868.

Under-Secretary to the Government of India.

TO CAPTAIN A. W. HEARSEY.

Extract from a despatch from Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, No. 100. Political.

Dated the 18th June 1868.

Para 3: You will therefore inform Captain* Hearsay that I can see no reason for recommending Her Majesty to comply with the prayer of his memorial.

True extract.

(Sd.) H. LE POER WYNNE,

Under-Secretary to the Govt. of India."

I saw at once the impossibility of obtaining any fair hearing for these poor devils under the Lawrence régime, so, as they say in Auld Reekie, "I bided my wee," and right glad was I in the end of 1868, to see the back of My Lord Lawrence and ultra Civilianism and Civil Service influence in India, and the appointment of the best, if not the best, truly the most gentlemanly and most chivalrous nobleman that India has ever had the luck of having sent out to rule this country as her Viceroy, I mean Lord Mayo. In the end of 1869 or perhaps it may have been in the beginning of 1870, Lord Mayo visited the Doon. I was well acquainted with his Military Secretary Major Owen Tudor Burne. I had known him on Sir Hugh Rose's Staff. I applied for an interview. Viceroys were more approachable in those days than they are now. It is only since Lord Ripon's time that I have ever had any difficulty in obtaining an interview. I hold that the Viceroy would be able to do the State much good if he could hear the honest and unvarnished opinion of unofficial gentlemen (not those selected by his Civilian Secretaries) on matters of public import and advantage. But I am wandering from my subject. As I said before, I applied for a private interview, and it was granted to me. Lord Mayo was living in a house which then belonged to the American Presbyterian Mission but which house is generally used by the Viceroys when they visit the Doon. Major Burne ushered me into the Presence and then left. His Excellency said in a kind tone of voice, "Take a chair, Captain Hearsay, and let me know what you have to say." I first told him of our family wrongs and how infamously the Government of the North-West Provinces was behaving with my uncle Captain William Hearsay, concerning the Bellary Pergunnah in Philabect and that, although he was a good and loyal soldier, the local authorities had forbidden him to visit his estate of Belharrie or even hold communication with his rayyets there, and were in fact treating him as if he was a rebel. He told me to send him all the papers and that he would look into the matter himself. I then related to him the whole case of the Sikh prisoners and gave him a printed pamphlet relating all they had undergone. He replied, "It seems very bad. I will look into it." On that or the following day, a telegram was forwarded from Sealkote to the Maharaja of Cashmere asking him if he would take charge of Sirdar Prem Singh, (Prem Singh was properly a subject of the Cashmere Raj vide statement of case) and go security for his good behaviour. This was done and then a telegram was despatched to Chunar ordering that Sirdar Prem Singh should be conveyed to Jummoo and that Sirdar Mann Singh should be permitted to proceed to his home in the vicinity of Amritsar. These men, in my estimation, even if they had been guilty of the State offences with which they were charged, might easily have been enlarged on the final settlement of the Punjab, on substantial security for their good behaviour which would readily have been forthcoming. So their incarceration of fully twelve years was totally unnecessary, and, in fact, was a piece of barbarity on the part of the East India Company, continued by the Government of India, quite equal to the tyranny we read of in Russia and other countries where absolute power lies in the hands of the ruler and very different from what one would expect from a free and enlightened Government like England, especially when it is borne in mind that no proper enquiry had ever been made into the charge formulated against the Sikh Sirdars. I am glad to say that Prem Singh married again on his release, and had a family and died at a good old age at Jummoo, surrounded by his wife and little ones.

Public Paper.

MR. STEVENS' COLD-WEATHER TOUR IN THE TRIBUTARY AND POLITICAL STATES OF CHOTA NAGPORE.

I left Ranchi on the 3rd December 1888, and, going by way of Lohardugga, which I had not been able to visit in the course of any previous tour, arrived within the boundary of the Jushpur State at Pondi, on the banks of the river Sunk, on the 12th. The Raja had gone to the Sonopore fair, and had taken ill on the return journey. He was therefore not in the State when I arrived, but his son "the Babua Sahab," met me a few miles within the Lohardugga boundary, and marched with me through the State. At my next halting-place (Patratoli), I visited a boundary which the Raja of Burway has for some time been disputing. The boundary line shown to me by the Jushpur people was clear, and was indicated by them without hesitation; while, on the other hand, the Burway representative led me through jungles and in very uncertain directions. I found, moreover, that possession of the disputed lands lay with the Jushpur rayyets, and that it was in accordance with the maps. Further, some trees which had been planted on the side of the road by the order of the Raja of Jushpur some 15 or 16 years ago, remained as witnesses whose evidence was not to be disputed. I have recently passed orders declining to re-open the question of the boundary. At Jushpurnuggar the offices and jail were inspected. The registers were neatly and carefully kept, and on the whole the work was creditably done. There was one case, however, in which property was stolen in Udaipur by inhabitants of Jushpur, and the Raja of each State claimed jurisdiction. Eventually I determined that the case should be tried by the Raja of Jushpur, who had begun his proceedings. The Raja of Udaipur was then requested to procure the attendance of the complainant and one accused person who lived in his State. No answer was returned, though several reminders were given, and the prisoners were in the meantime detained under trial for a period far in excess of any sentence which would have been passed. The Raja eventually, when he found that he was getting no reply from Udaipur, did what he should have done long before, and let the prisoners go on their own recognizances. I afterwards looked into this case at Rabcoob, and found that the delays in Udaipur apparently occurred through the fault of the police. I requested the Raja to enquire fully into the matter and punish the persons who had been dilatory. As I did so, I pointed out to him that his own character depended in no small degree on the work of his officers.

The Raja has recently constructed a new water-mill on a small stream at a short distance from his house. The work is in itself but a small matter; it is important as showing the Raja's willingness to adopt improvements, and if it is successful, the experiment will probably be repeated both in Jushpur and in other States. The roads in and about Jushpurnuggar are good, and the Raja is now making a new road, with improved alignments, to Pondi. At this point I hope the Lohardugga road-cess committee will be able to improve the connection with the Lohardugga system of roads. This is a somewhat important matter, as large numbers of pack-bullocks take this route. I visited the patshala and found it to be not very flourishing.

From Jushpurnuggar I marched in a north-western direction over the high lands of the Khurria and was overtaken at Sanua by the Raja, who had recovered and returned from Sonopore. The Karwas, who inhabit this tract, are evidently gaining very fast in civilization. They are on excellent terms with the Dewan, who is their head, and with the Raja.

On the 22nd December I left Jushpur and entered Sirgooja, accompanied by the Dewan, Moulvi Mahomed Jaffar Ali Khan, and by the younger brothers of Raja Dharamjeet Singh of Protappur. The Maharaja of Sirgooja was himself absent on an elephant-catching expedition in Dhalbhum. I then proceeded along the usual route through Lema to Bistrampur, where I arrived on the 26th December. The crops appeared to me to have been, as in Jushpur, rather better than those in Lohardugga. The rubbi on the ground, though scanty in quantity, was looking well. I regretted to find that the Maharaja had not done more to provide himself with a good road to Ranchi: some parts were mere tracks across, or round the edges of, rice-fields.

At Bistrampur I inspected the offices, jail, dispensary and school. The offices were in good order, and an examination of some of the records of less important criminal cases showed me that they were dealt with promptly, and proportionately with as much care as the sessions cases which come before me in the ordinary course. I thought the prisoners in the jail were much underworked, and pointed out some useful work in the village which I thought they might be set to do. The dispensary I found for the first time being well cared for and efficiently worked by civil hospital assistant Baboo Bhola Nath Dey, of whom I formed a good opinion. The village of Bistrampur is increasing both in size and importance, and if only communications were better, the improvement would be doubtless much greater.

There were very few cases for my disposal in connection with the Sirgooja State, and in almost all respects the administration sets an excellent example to more than one of the minor States.

I regret to notice a very painful event which occurred during my stay at Bistrampur. On my arrival there I heard that the junior Maharani had been severely burned by accident, and soon afterwards she sent Mr. Stevens a message that she would like to see her. The request was complied with, and Mrs. Stevens found that the unfortunate young lady was being dealt with in a manner which was most adverse to her recovery. She was placed in a small room which was literally filled with women, relatives, and servants, none of whom (with a single exception) were giving any real help, and most of whom were creating a scene of noise and confusion such as would be unendurable even by a healthy person. All were lamenting the poor lady's condition, but simply through ignorance and want of organisation they were taking away what chance of recovery she had. On the other hand, the hospital assistant, who seemed a competent man, was only allowed to prescribe dressings from a distance, and not to see his patient. Mrs. Stevens at once assumed control, and had the room cleared as much as possible, and dressed the Maharani's wounds herself, much to the surprise of every one. In compliance with the sufferer's entreaties, she retained charge and paid frequent visits, and for a time there were indications of improvement. I consented to allow my camp to remain at Bistrampur for a day or two in excess of the allotted time, hoping that good might result, but eventually tetanus set in and the patient died. I have mentioned this case, because the necessity for attempts to give more medical help to women in India is occasionally disputed and very generally ignored. In this instance the sufferings of this poor young lady, though she was one of the highest personage in her country and was surrounded by people who were most anxious for her recovery, were such as to bring vividly home to us the importance of Lady Dufferin's work. There is much reason to believe that but for ignorance and well-meant mismanagement this valuable life need not have been lost.

From Bistrampur I travelled south-eastward to Sedam, and then along the valley of the Mand to Rabcoob, in Udaipur. During almost the whole of my stay in Sirgooja after I reached Bistrampur my time was occupied with matters relating to the Korca and Changbhakhar States. In Korca the difficulties arise from two main causes the weakness of the ruler and the impoverishment, through extravagance, of the Zemindars of Patua and Keshgaon. Arrangements have been made for the disposal of the financial affairs of these people, but they have not lost their influence so much as they have lost their property, and there is no doubt that they commit oppressions. Moreover, they do not willingly submit to the Raja, but bring, and incite others to bring, complaints against him. I had them before me, and severely threatened them. By no means everything which is said against the Raja is true, but he shows some disposition to exact money and services from his subjects. He seems unable to do without the help of outsiders from Behar, who come to him and persuade him to mischief. They get small pay and must obtain their real remuneration in some other way. I do not think it necessary to load this report with details of the cases dealt with, but I append for the information of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor a copy of the instructions which I had translated and given to the Raja. I think it would be well if the State were visited in the coming season. The Raja has, I think, been somewhat impressed by emigrations which have taken place from his State, and it is not impossible that he may try to amend; but it is not possible to trust to this. I may mention that I installed the young Zemindar of Khargoan, and brought about a reconciliation between him and his family and the Raja.

The Changbhakhar affairs which chiefly occupied my attention were the old disputes between the Bhya and his relatives regarding the rights to jungle and other dues. I found that the Bhya took a higher view of his rights than I had intended, and, under the circumstances, considered it best to reopen the case. I referred it to the Lal Sahab of Lakhanpur and the Bhya of Jhilmili for their opinions. The former of these gentlemen, I regret to say, has recently died, and I do not know what he has done in the matter. I have just received the report of the Bhya. This is a matter which will need further enquiry.

The registers of Korea and Changbhakhar were inspected. The former showed some dilatoriness on the Raja's part, which was duly noticed. In Changbhakhar it is satisfactory that the Bhya has now dispensed with outside assistance, and the clerical work is done by one of his brothers.

On the 7th January 1889 I reached Rabcob, having been met by the Raja of Udaipur at Rai, in Sirgooja, on the 1st. I had no complaints against the Raja on the part of his subjects; but there were some matters between him and certain servants of his, Kaisths from Behar. One man, against whom a charge of fraud had been made, which was awaiting my disposal, escaped from the bajur jurisdiction, but before measures could be taken for his apprehension he committed suicide. The case has been enquired into by the Bilaspur police. I found the servants generally in the wrong, but in certain instances in which they had been long in the Raja's service, he became reconciled to them. The Raja's house is now approaching completion, and it will be well when it is finished. He takes a great deal of interest in his State, and the excellence of the village roads, the attention paid to education, and other circumstances, give evidence of his energy; but he is absent too much at Pratabpur, and the result is that there are sometimes long delays in the disposal of work. This is the worst point in the Raja's administration. There was nothing calling for special notice in Udaipur. The crops, as everywhere else in Chota Nagpur, had been indifferent, but there were no indications of distress, and it seemed to me that the State showed signs of increasing cultivation.

To reach Gangpur it was necessary for me to cross a corner of the Raigurh State. I entered the Gangpur State, on the borders of which I was received by the Raja, on the 14th January. I noticed in more than one place in the way that jungle had been cleared since my previous visit in 1885-86. At Bandega I saw Mr. Mitchell, a contractor, who had some representation to make regarding certain timber supplied by the Zemindar of Hungir. I found that Mr. Hewitt's injunctions had been so far productive of good effect that the Zemindar would not allow the forests to pass completely out of his own hands, and that Mr. Mitchell was to be rewarded for his services by a percentage on the price paid for timber. At Suadih, which I reached on the 17th January, I also met Mr. Prickett, the district engineer of the nearest part of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, to discuss the timber question above alluded to and other matters. I had to dispose of a few disputes and complaints, for the most part of minor importance. I succeeded in bringing about an amicable settlement of a quarrel between the Raja and a village headman, Padman Gountia, which had been giving trouble for a long time. I found no fewer than five sessions cases for trial: in some of these there had been long and excusable delays, of which I took serious notice. There were some other points, especially the jail, in which I was not satisfied; but in others, especially the roads, there had been improvements. The Raja seemed to me to be generally on better terms with his subjects, and on the whole he cannot be either very exacting or unpopular, for beyond any doubt there is considerable immigration into his State from Lohardugga. In reference to this matter I may here mention that there has been of late an influx of Christians connected with the German missions in Lohardugga, and that this has given a little trouble. In September last the heads of the mission at Ranchi made complaints to Mr. Hopkins, who was then officiating as Commissioner during my absence on privilege leave, to the effect that the Christians were being persecuted by the Nagra and Hathibari Zemindars. Explanations were called for, and counter-complaints made to the effect that the Christians were trying to dispossess other rayyets, and were endeavouring to procure converts by telling people that if they became Christians they would be cared for by the British Government and obtain jaghirs like the bhuinhari lands of Lohardugga. The persecutions were denied. I was visited by the Reverend C. Kampfenkel at Garjan, who reiterated the complaints. I warned the Mahapater's people, who were then with me, that on no account could they be allowed to give trouble to the Christians merely because they were Christians; on the other hand, I told Mr. Kampfenkel of the cross complaints which had been preferred, and pointed out that immigrants into the State, whether Christians or not, must not set up laws and customs of their own. I have heard nothing more on the subject, and hope therefore that both parties are now behaving in a more amicable spirit. While at Garjan I went over to Raghu-nathpali, and in the company of Mr. Bartlett, the district engineer, and his assistant, Mr. Thornhill, saw the works connected with the large bridge in course of erection over the river Brahmini.

I then went southwards to Bonai, the affairs of which State required urgent attention. A detailed report has been submitted to Government, and it is unnecessary for me to report here the information contained in it. Besides the matter specially dealt with in that report, there was little of interest or importance. The office records, both those in the Raja's own hands and those of which the Potait had charge, were in good order, and, generally speaking, showed that work is fairly well done. Both the Raja and the Potait are intelligent and energetic and they decide cases more promptly than most of the other Chiefs. The Raja's administration, however, on the whole has not been successful. He is uncompromising and wanting in tact. His mistakes, as well as the difficulties under which he labours, have all been detailed in the report above mentioned. I passed through the Koira pergunnah, which continues to be well managed in most particulars by Bhagwan Sirdar, and left the State on the 7th February. I then went on to Chyebassa, and thence to Kharsawan, which I entered on the 17th February. I there inspected the registers, and found the work satisfactorily and promptly done. I also visited the Gurh, and enquired into the nature of a piece of work which the Thakur desired to have done. The Gohendals, or holders of service tenures, came to me again for reconsideration of their claims; but there was nothing new in their representations, and I adhered to former orders. I then entered Lohardugga and returned to Ranchi.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE RAINS.

A translation of the Varsha in the Sanskrit Ritu Samhara or The Seasons attributed to Kālidāsa. By the late Horace Hayman Wilson, Boden Professor of Sanskrit, Oxford, &c. &c. &c.

FRIEND of desire, the Sovereign of the rain
Approaches ! Dearest with his stately train,
Like mighty elephants, the clouds on high
Advance, and lightnings wave along the sky
His flickering banner ; while the monarch's fame
Deep rolling thunders, as his drum, proclaim,

Now spreads o'er all a dark and changing hue.
Here like the water lily's deepest blue,
And there like Surmā's fracture tints display
Metallic lustre through the lowering day ;
The thirsty Chataka impatient eyes
The promised water of the labouring skies,
Where heavy clouds, with low melodious song,
In slow procession, murmuring, move along.

As soothing shades imagined bliss inspire,
The lonely lover burns with vain desire.
For like the tyrant of the youthful breast,
The air of Indra's radiant bow possest,
Strings it with lightning—points the rain-drop dart,
And aims unerring at the heedless heart ;
Now like a smiling fair, whose shapely neck
Encircling rows of radiant jewels deck,
The Earth with coral buds and blossoms gleams,
And wears the glow-worm's diamond shining beams.
In amorous sport the peacock train advance
To frame, with spreading tails, the joyous dance,
Whose graceful frolics pleasing thoughts impart,
And whisper love to every youthful heart.
Fast now the turbid torrents, as they sweep
The shelving valleys to rejoin the deep,
And, like the fair one, prodigal of charms,
Who hastes to yield them to her lover's arms,
Bound o'er each obstacle with headlong force,
And banks and trees demolish in their course ;
On every side, the eye delighted sees
New shoots and foliage—verdant shrubs and trees,
And o'er the renovated grass appear
The favorite blossoms of the browsing deer ;
And who can mark, unconscious of delight,
The wavy forest freshening on the sight,
Or, wandering fearlessly through the grove and lawn,
The soft and lotus-eyed, and half-confiding fawn.

Thick, murky clouds, the cope of heaven pervade,
And spread on earth impenetrable shade ;
Above the lightning's momentary ray,
Conducts the dauntless lover on his way,

Aroused from slumber by the awful sound,
When midnight's thunders hoarsely roll around,
Forgetting past offence and recent strife,
Close to her husband clings the trembling wife ;
Or should her lord be absent from her arms,
For him she feels a thousand fond alarms,—
Heedless of dress, a prey to tenderest fears,
Breathless and sad she sits, with silent tears
Fast from her lotus-eyes the torrents flow,
And stain those lips that like the Bimba glow.

Borne with the falling current blades of grass,
With dust distained, and insects speckled, pass,
And whirling tortuously down the stream,
To frightened frogs like snakes terrific seem ;
The bee with busy and delighted song,
To seek the blooming lotus speeds along ;
But wandering giddily arrests his sail
Where the pleased peacock spreads his gaudy tail :
Wild roves the elephant, inflamed with love,
And the deep sound reverberates from above,
His tusks the bees in gathering clusters trace,
And sip the moisture trickling o'er his face.
Now dancing peacocks, and descending rills,
Sprung from new sources, decorate the hills ;
And bending clouds, their tardy progress stop
To kiss the Lotus on the mountain-top :
Who does not love the sweetly breathing breeze,
With odours shaken from the trembling trees,
Rich with the perfume of new budding flowers,
And cooled with gelid drops and gentle showers.

The kindly season, with a husband's pride,
Adorns the earth, his fresh and blooming bride,
For her each perfume and each bud combines,
Weaves the bright band, or vernal garland twines
Around her neck the flowery knot is laced,
And budding zones wind soft around her waist,
Each charm's soft down refreshing moisture knows,
And heaven's bright mantle graceful round her flows ;
Cooled by soft rains, along the shaded skies,
Diffusing peace and joy the zephyr flies,
The clouds that fertilizing dews distend,
Their course to Vind'hya's lofty summit bend,—
'Twas there they gathered many a watery store,
And there again their watery wealth they pour,
With timely succour grateful showers distil,
And quench the flames that parch the friendly hill.

Such is the season whose varying glow,
Can brighter beauty on our fair bestow,
Whose care the blossom and the branch protects,
And winding creepers to support, directs,
Who soothes the frame, re-animates the mind,
And sheds new life—new vigour on mankind.

GHAZEL OF HAFIZ.

(Ai bar shameem yâr dari.)

Translated from the Persian By E. B. Cowell.

YE bfeezes of spring !* the rich perfumes ye bear,
 Ye have stol'n, on your way, from my mistress's hair ;
 Yet, oh ! steal not one lock of those tresses away,
 Nor linger too long in your amorous play.
 O rose ! how thy beauties and colours give place,
 When compared with the charms of her exquisite face !
 No fault in her houri-like form can be found,
 But envious thorns encompass thee round.
 Narcissus ! presum'st thou one moment to vie
 With the soul-stealing look of her dark melting eye ?
 Yon cypress, that waves with such beauty and grace,
 While the breeze, as it flies, gives a passing embrace,
 Though beauteous and graceful it now may appear,
 Can boast of no charms when my mistress is near.
 Could'st thou choose out of all things below and above,
 My soul ! would aught please thee so much as her love ?
 Then come ! my fair mistress, away with disdain,
 Nor let thy sad Hafiz entreat thee in vain !

* The Persian poets are very fond of describing the breeze as the bearer of tokens from lovers : thus Jami makes his heroine, Zuleika, say :

"The breeze that blows hither from Egypt, and brings
 But one handful of dust on its frolicsome wings,
 Is far dearer, I swear, to my sorrowful mind,
 Than the musk-laden breezes of Khoten and Ind !"

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

GLORY to the Goddess ! Confusion to the enemy ! Blessed be the wise and righteous ruler who listens to the poor. Lord Lansdowne be thanked. The conspiracy has failed. The evil has been arrested. The attempt to undermine has ended in disappointment. The Gay circular has been withdrawn. The Acting Comptroller-General has published the following amended notice.

"NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Public Debt Office, and the Government Savings Bank by the Bank of Bengal, will be closed from the 30th September to the 10th October, both days inclusive, but the Bank of Bengal will receive and pay money on Government account on all days on which the Bank is open for business.

The Paper Currency Office will be closed for the entire Pooja Holidays.

E. T. ATKINSON,
 Offg. Comptroller-General."

On the 25th, Mr. Atkinson issued orders to his Assistant to withdraw the previous notice—directing the keeping-open of the Currency Office to the public up to one o'clock P.M., on the 30th September, and 8th, 9th and 10th October—and to inform persons calling there that the office would be entirely closed during the holidays. Notices too were fixed at several parts of the office to that effect.

THE Officiating Accountant-General, Bengal, Mr. E. W. Kellner, has been considerate enough to issue to-day, Saturday, cheques dated 1st October 1889 for pensions exceeding Rs. 100 per mensem. Bills for these pensions were received up to noon of this day.

ACCORDING to the Chamber of Commerce's circular, the Bengal Bank will be closed only four days during the Doorga Pooja holidays—on the 1st, 3rd, 4th and 7th October. The Exchange Banks will not listen to the insinuations and threats of the Chamber to close on Wednesday the 2nd October, the second and principal day of the Pooja. On that day, the Bengal Bank will remain open till 1 P.M., and during the usual hours on Monday, September 30, and Saturday October 5, Tuesday the 8th, Wednesday the 9th, and Thursday the 10th October. The Bank was kept open on Tuesday the 24th, the day of the Mahalya.

THE Small Cause Court closed for the Long Vacation from Tuesday the 24th. It reopens on Monday the 28th October. Warrants will be executed during the holidays, but no summons or other process will be served on or warrants executed against any Hindû during the four days of the Doorga Pooja—the 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th October.

THE Police Court will be entirely closed for five days, namely, Monday Sep. 30, Wednesday Oct. 2, Friday, Oct. 4, Tuesday Oct. 8 and Thursday Oct. 10. On Oct. 1 and 3, the Southern Division Magistrate will hold Court and on Oct. 5, 7 and 9, the other Court will be kept open.

LORD CONNEMARA landed at Calcutta on Wednesday last at four in the afternoon, and immediately drove to the Sealdah Station for the mail train leaving at 4.30 for Darjeeling. Sir Stuart Bayley had sent down Captain Currie, A. D. C., to escort His Excellency to Darjeeling. It was a private entry and exit. Only a few officials—such as the Chairman of the Corporation, the Commissioner of Police, the Presidency Commissioner, the Under-Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Political Department—were told off to receive the Governor of Madras and to see him off.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the N.-W. P. has recorded the following order on the Hearsey-Hall Enquiry :—

"Mr. A. W. Hearsey was in January last sentenced to undergo a term of simple imprisonment in the Central Prison at Allahabad. Some time after the expiry of his sentence, in the month of March, he forwarded to his Excellency the Viceroy an affidavit embodying certain charges against Dr. Hall, the Superintendent of the Prison. The Lieutenant-Governor and Chief Commissioner, to whom Mr. Hearsey was referred by the Government of India, directed that an administrative inquiry should be held into the alleged conduct of Dr. Hall. The charges, nine in number, were as follows :—

1st.—Mischief, by destroying a letter written by him to his wife, without his consent or sanction.

2nd.—Wrongful restraint by depriving him of his right of reading for 10½ hours during the day time.

3rd.—Wrongful restraint, by preventing him from lying down to sleep during the day time on his cot.

4th.—Wrongful restraint, by preventing him from making use of his proper cell.

5th.—Wrongful restraint, by locking him up in his cell for 9½ hours during the day.

6th.—Wrongful restraint and insult, by compelling him to stand up whenever he came into his cell.

7th.—Wrongful restraint and insult, by compelling him to take down his hand from the wall on the 6th of February, and stand at attention.

8th.—Insult by words and speech concerning the term 'half-caste.'

9th.—Conduct liable to cause a breach of the peace by his words and actions in his cell on the 6th February.

The inquiry held has been partially incomplete in respect of the fact that both parties desired to cite as a witness Private Brinn, of the 2nd Leicestershire Regiment, who, at the time of the occurrences, was a prisoner-warrior in the jail. Private Brinn had, however, been released from jail on the 27th of June 1889, several days prior to the date of the Government Order directing the inquiry to be held, and he had left Allahabad under the orders of the Military authorities, to join his regiment in Burma on the 4th of July, before the Magistrate was aware that an inquiry was to be held.

The record of the inquiry, which was conducted in public, and of which reports have appeared in the journals, has been considered by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and Chief Commissioner. It is evident, from his own statements and admissions, that Mr. Hearsey singularly failed to understand that, as a prisoner undergoing a term of imprisonment, he was subject to jail disciplinary rules and to the authority of the Jail Superintendent. The allegation that Dr. Hall exercised his authority in a harsh and improper manner is contrary to the evidence. The record proves nothing more than that Dr. Hall insisted on Mr. Hearsey conducting himself with due deference in the presence of the Superintendent of the Jail, and that Mr. Hearsey, on his part, persisted in endeavouring to maintain the attitude of a person who was free to decide for himself what the limits of such deference should be.

In allowing himself, however, to be drawn into an argument with Mr. Hearsey, and in thus exposing himself to charges 8 and 9, Dr. Hall acted injudiciously. The Lieutenant-Governor and Chief Commissioner sees no ground whatever for supposing that Dr. Hall desired, on the occasion referred to in these charges, to insult his prisoner, to whom, on the other hand, he, on the contrary, from his written statement, which has passed unchallenged by Mr. Hearsey, appears to have behaved with much consideration ; exerting himself to obtain his release on bail, and informing him at the earliest moment of his success in doing so.

The complaints embodied in the affidavit are proved by the inquiry to have been in their nature trivial ; and, such as they are, they are in a great measure unsupported by the admissions and statements made at the inquiry by Mr. Hearsey himself, and are in important points shown by Dr. Hall to have been either true only in part, or untrue."

It is reported that—

"There was a terrific hailstorm on the 20th ultimo at Pohrlitz, near Grusbach, in Moravia. Many of the hailstones which fell were bigger than a man's fist, and weighed 3 lbs., the smallest were as large as hen's eggs. The downpour lasted 17 minutes, and during that time £100,000 worth of property was destroyed. After the storm, three men, two women, and three children were found dead in the fields. A considerable number of people received injuries."

WE read—

"At Chester Police-court recently Ellen Roberts, landlady of the White Bear Hotel, was charged with refusing to billet six men belonging to the 9th Lancers, en route to Wrexham to form part of the Queen's escort. The men were refused admission, and kept for an hour standing in the rain. The defence was that there were only two beds in the house. The magistrate said it was a serious offence, and inflicted a fine of 40s. and costs."

At out-of-the-way places, these lords and ladies do much as they like, receiving or refusing guests, to the serious inconvenience and even risk of their victims. To our knowledge, on one occasion, two valuable lives had nearly been sacrificed to the stupid prejudice and freakishness of one of these lords of the public house.

At their meeting of Wednesday, the shareholders of the Fort Gloster Jute Manufacturing Company, Limited, unanimously rejected the proposition to remove Messrs. Kettlewell, Bullen & Co., from the office of Managing Agents or of Secretaries of the Company. With Hajee Noor Mahomed laid low, the triumph was complete for Messrs. Kettlewell.

BABOO ANNODAPRASAD GHOSE, from Burdwan, joined on the 14th his place as a Personal Assistant to the Commissioner of the Presidency Division. We hope he will keep clear of Bhuttacharjism and Mahajanism in the office.

MR. W. R. LARMINE retired from the Bengal Civil Service from August last.

MR. JUSTICE J. Q. PIGOT has taken one month's leave and rejoins Court in the middle of December next.

THE new fishery law—Act II. (B. C.) of 1889 for the protection of the right of fishing in private waters—has been extended to Assam.

THE Governor-General in Council has passed order that so much of Act X. of 1886 (to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, and certain other Acts) as amends the Indian Penal Code and the Prisoners Act, 1871, shall be deemed to have applied to the Hyderabad Assigned Districts from the date of the Foreign Department notification No. 1657-I, of the 26th April 1889, to the extent and subject to the provisos specified therein. It is such retrospective orders that demoralize the whole system of law-making and administration of law in this country.

FOR purposes of Section 31, sub-Section (2) of the Prisoners Act, 1871, as amended by Act X. of 1886, the Nagpur Jail has been directed to be deemed a prison within the territories subject to the Resident at Hyderabad.

THE Secretary of State has sent out Mr. J. N. Pike as a Chief Builder in the Indian Marine. He has been posted to the Kidderpore Dockyard.

THE Public Works Department Resolution No. 19-A. E., dated 25th January 1889, has been further amended. Paragraph 6 of the Resolution has been cancelled, abolishing the competitive examination and going back to the examination prescribed in para. 18 of Appendix C. Vol. I., of the Public Works Code, and leaving the Examiners of Accounts to fill up vacancies as they may be advised with candidates who have passed the best examination.

The Laws are coming out. Baboo Shama Churn Law has offered the liberal sum of Rs. 60,000 for a new Eye-Hospital in the Medical College Hospital grounds. The proposed hospital will be built along the north front of the Medical College compound to the east of the Ezra Hospital. The Baboo has well earned the thanks of the Bengal Government for "his liberality and public spirit."

FOR cruelty to his poor child-wife—a girl of 9 years—by blistering her neck with some acid—Rakhal Das Roy, a compounder, has been sentenced, by the Hon'ble Syed Ameer Hossein, to three months' imprisonment.

THE same Magistrate, for robbing a sleeping friend of Rs. 131, in a third-class hackney carriage, has sent Arthur Thompson, an engineer of the S. S. Bucephalus, to jail for six months.

THE Army & Navy Gazette is not only the leading professional journal but a very reliable authority withal in diplomatic and political intelligence, in every sense. Our contemporary thus summarises the situation in Sikkim:—

"The position of affairs in Sikkim is not encouraging. The negotiations with the Chinese Ampa have fallen through, the Chinese having refused to abandon their claim to suzerainty over Sikkim, notwithstanding their inability to keep the turbulent spirits of the people in check. We cannot very well embark upon war with China, so we have decided to grin and bear our diplomatic rebuff. We do not propose, however, to abandon our position entirely, nor would such a step be a wise one. It is proposed, therefore, that we should adopt a policy of watchful inactivity, hoping that by such means we may be able to stave over the difficulty. A small force will be maintained in readiness for further action, if necessary. It is earnestly to be hoped that the troublesome Sikkimese may have learnt a lesson by the experiences of the past. If they settle down quietly, we shall let them alone; but any renewal of hostilities will compel us to take the field again in support of British authority, which must be maintained. Colonel Graham did his work admirably, and deserves full credit for the punishment he inflicted on the offending tribesmen. It is difficult to deal with a nation like China, and if Indian diplomatists have failed to arrange matters, excuses must be made for them. The position is, nevertheless, an unfortunate one, and may, and we fear will, lead to complications."

It is usually hazardous to indulge in prophecy. But our London contemporary scarcely incurs any risk.

WITH regard to Egypt, the same paper writes:—

"The news which comes from Suakim to the effect that further fighting is expected at that place will not surprise any one. The Mahdists are evidently in a desperate plight. The stoppage of trade has produced starvation, and the terrible stories current of the destitution said to prevail at Khartoum and in the surrounding territory are probably correct. In addition to this, the Mahdi is being sorely pressed by the monastic movement, which emanates from Tripoli, and is headed by Wad-el-Senoussi. In all likelihood the activity which has recently been displayed by the Mahdi is due to that kind of spirit of desperation which prompts a supreme effort. It does not follow, however, that Suakim will be actually attacked. When the news to which we are referring left Khartoum, the recent annihilation of the dervish force in Egypt was unknown at that place, and it remains to be seen what effect it will have upon the Mahdi's supporters.... But, as we have urged over and over again, no effort ought to be spared to conciliate, so far as possible, the Soudan population, in order that that trade may be reopened. We do not suppose that much can be done.... A Soudan Arab is not a promising subject for efforts of a conciliatory character at the best of times, and this is particularly the case when the chief vocation of the Soudan Arabs—namely, the slave trade—is threatened. But if any opportunity should occur to make known that we have no intention of attempting, or of permitting Egypt to attempt the reconquest of the Soudan, it ought to be made the most of, as ought also any opportunity that may be presented of promoting legitimate trade. We do not like the look of the raid upon Sinkat which has recently been effected by the so-called friendly tribes. It may have been necessary. We cannot say, because all the facts are not known. But such raids are apt to provoke retaliation, and retaliation and the spirit which prompts it are just the things we should like to see prevented."

A CORRESPONDENT of the Morning Post reports the hunting exploit of Raja Mohan Bikram Sha, of Ramnagar, in Champaran. He was out in his own forest and, after beating about for three hours, encountered its monarch and with one shot felled him. Old Stripes was, after all, found to be a vigorous youngster, and measured, from tip of nose to end of tail, 9 feet 9 inches.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Whilst the inhabitants of our great cities suffer from the effects of overcrowding and all its attendant evils, both physical and moral, the more robust and energetic emigrant will in his turn be liable to suffer in his new home from the want of ready skill and the great medical resources of his native land always at command. The best advice a friend can give is for him to take a supply of these well known remedies as part of his outfit, for by attention to the easily understood and yet ample directions which accompany each box and pot he will never be at fault when taken ill or under any adverse sanitary conditions of life.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE French elections commenced on Sunday, the 21st September. Paris was tranquil, for the sky was overcast and it rained. Troops were stationed at different portions of the city but hid from view. In spite of the preparations against his return, General Boulanger was elected for Montmartre by a slight majority of votes. There was enough excitement and it increased when it was known that the General's rival M. Joffrin, the Socialist candidate, had been defeated. The Mounted Guards had to be called out to charge and disperse the crowd. The Commission of Scrutiny has since annulled the General's election and declared for his rival.

The Elections give a Republican Majority—not numerous but compact. Four of the ministers have been taken in, Mr. Jules and Ferry being thrown out.

The new Chamber of Deputies meets in November. The election of General Boulanger will be its first item of business.

THE Novelist Wilkie Collins and the Poetess Eliza Cook are dead.

TWO thousand London postmen met on Clekenwell Green on the 22nd, and in spite of an official prohibition by the Postal Authorities, passed a resolution in favor of a protective union.

THE difficulties of Turkey in Crete are assuming proportions. A conspiracy against the Government has been discovered and two hundred arrests, including many priests, have been made in the Heracleon district alone. On the other hand, it is said, the Christians are fleeing the island to escape the tyranny of the Turkish troops. On the representations of the Foreign Consuls, Chakir Pasha has released seventeen prisoners including two Deputies of the Chamber.

THE Labour Revolt suppressed in London has broken out in Rotterdam. The labourers demand an increase of twenty-five per cent. in their pay and have gone on strike to enforce the demand.

"It is against the rules of the trade to shave a coloured man" in Auburn, New York, and none of the barbershops, although recommended by the pastor of the Second Baptist Church in that city, offered a dollar for it, would shave the Revd. J. Francis Robinson, a Baptist preacher of good character. His sin was in the skin—the leprosy of colour, so hateful to the free and enlightened citizens of the Great Republic.

COLONEL TOMLINE, of Orwel Park, was a character indeed! He was ever at war with the War Office regarding the foreshore at Landguard Fort. For all his literary proclivity, he was no better than a 19th Century Goth. He had collected a valuable library into which he did not admit books over a certain size and none from the pen of a clergyman or a woman. A fine appreciation of the Church for a Christian! According to him, these latter had no business with literature and could never succeed in that line.

THE municipal 5 per cent. debenture loan of Rs. 11,15,000 drew offers of Rs. 28,10,600. Only tenders at Rs. 103 were, to the amount of Rs. 4,53,100, accepted, and the loan kept open for further offers at or above the accepted rate.

THE Municipal Commissioners would not exempt the Mayo Hospital and the Zoological Gardens from payment of the rates. They have, however, sanctioned an equivalent of Rs. 800 in the shape of an annual grant to the Gardens. That grant preserves the commission payable to the Collector for collection of the rates from the Gardens.

THE Committee appointed to report on the whole question of tank-filling have recommended to the Municipal Commissioners the utilization of the river silt—"so obviously marked out as the one provided by nature for raising low-lying alluvial lands." They have yet to know the cost and to bring it down to the capacity of the poor. The Commissioners in meeting have not yet accepted the recommendation.

NOTHING strikes the Oriental observer of the ways of Europeans so much as their passion for foreign and maritime adventure and their aptitude for emigration. From their facility in leaving their country and from the large numbers in which, from year to year, for a long time past, they have gone out of Old England for her good and their own, and overspread the earth even to its remotest parts and obscurest corners, the unlocomotive, home-welded denizens of Asia may well suspect the enterprising spirits of the West to be labouring under a malady—perhaps, a mental infirmity—a genuine anti-home-sickness. The native unrest and dissatisfaction with their original surroundings soon takes practical shape in a desire for bettering their fortunes. Quickened by the social disrepute of poverty, it is chrystalised into a passion for pelf. Hence the prospect of easy plunder—meaning, without offence, the opportunities for becoming rich by a bound—becomes an irresistible allurements. To the popular mind, nothing offers this prospect as the search for actual gold—gold digging. This is, no doubt, often a difficult enterprise, beset with uncertainties and risks. The Californian and Australian fields have been the grave of not a few households and competencies and small fortunes and powerful frames and sound minds and good souls. In the first rush to uninhabited wilds, men die of hunger with gold in their wallets, or are killed for their very luck. The earliest flour millers and bakers and victuallers of all kinds of San Francisco quietly and easily drew to their coffers the hard-earned profits of early mining. Later on, when gold was more easily made, it was as easily lost at the gaming table. Nevertheless, the popular instinct is right in the main. If gold-mining is at best a lottery, it is the best lottery after all—a glorious game of hazard bristling with prizes. Hence the Gold-Fever—the Gold mania—which seizes the White men of Europe and America—the Exodus which takes place whenever there is any discovery of a rich mine, whether in the West of America or far down South in Africa, or at the Antipodes in Australasia. The yellow metal, everywhere and ever honoured, in civilised society in especial where it is so handy and essential as a symbol of value, has a peculiar attraction for the enlightened European. The very sound of gold draws. It is a very old foible of the Western man—this search after gold. In the dim past of heroic antiquity, in Hellas, a great expedition was fitted out for far Black Sea in quest of the Golden Fleece—so little was then understood of the nature of gold or known of its geographical distribution. That history has, on a smaller or larger scale, been ever since repeated—in the modern world with more knowledge and oftentimes with singular success. In our own day, men in nations have exiled themselves in pursuit of gold and precious minerals beyond the sea. The British Islanders have specially been foremost in this. Thus have they peopled the uninhabited parts of the globe and intruded into the preserves of savage races, raising states and erecting fair cities in Transatlantic wilds where the breezes at night

—Waft, across the wave's tumultuous roar,
The wolf's long howl from Onalaska's shore,

or

In climes beyond the solar road
Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
Or where the queer Kangaroo has her home.

And all for gold. With all their boasted patriotism, they have never hesitated to expatriate themselves, abandoning their poor home for a better prospect abroad: Though to their eternal glory they have, established a Greater Britain, which may yet be as glorious as the old Mother-country, at the Antipodes and ends of the earth! At length, a change has come over the spirit of the dream of the venerable lady, the Mother of Nations. She is at last in a position to reward the constancy of those loyal sons who, against glittering temptations, have clung to her and her exhausted soil. Gold has been found at her very door—in her womb as it were. Wales, so rich in minerals, had before announced gold, but on inquiry it turned out a nominal promise. This time it seems to be the veritable wolf and no mistake. Several prospectors have been in the field, with elaborate machinery, and more than one have had their perseverance rewarded with rich auriferous reefs.

Analysis has shown sufficient percentage of pure metal to the ton to make mining industry a most profitable one. Already, certain barren rocks have risen to fabulous prices. Old England may well anticipate an Exodus back of many of her Prodigals toiling in South Africa or Australasia.

CAPTAIN HEARSEY is at it again. Failing in Calcutta, he has crossed over to Howrah. This morning Mr. Grant Rose applied to Mr. C. N. Banerjee, Deputy Magistrate of Howrah, for summonses against the editor and printer of the Pioneer for publishing and aiding and abetting the publication of, defamatory matters against his client the Captain. The Magistrate took time till the 11th October to consider the application and to consult the District Magistrate for such orders as he might be advised to make. Mr. Currie's courage will now be tried.

As from the accused, it will be better for the Pioneer to meet Captain Hearsey fairly at Howrah and make an end of it, than be compelled to go to Madras or to Jericho. Judge Norris is no legal Pope, and the English law makes a journalist liable to be hauled up at any part of the Queen's dominions where the offending copy of his journal may have travelled to, in the course of business from his office.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1889.

THE GOVERNMENT PLEDGE IN PERIL.

THE MAMLATDARS' BILL IN COUNCIL.

THE sitting of the Council of the Governor-General for making Laws, at the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, on Thursday se'nnight, was a mournful meeting. It was a day of infinite sadness. Since its constitution by the Regulating Act of Parliament, the Government of India on the spot has been making Laws and Regulations. Since the Charter Act of 1833, a more regular legislature was constituted, which was further improved by the next similar Parliamentary enactment of 1853, until in 1861 the present constitution was granted. That is not a contemptible chronology for these times of political change. A legislature dating from before the French Revolution may well claim to be historical. What changes have occurred, at home and abroad, since its foundation! It has seen the British Power steadily spread from the Carnatic over the whole Peninsula to Hindostan, and extend from Benares to beyond the farthest Indus. It has seen the irresistible Giant struck down in a moment when least expected, over a trumpery question of the issue of ammunition cartridges of one kind instead of another and ruder kind. It has done most important and difficult work and passed some of the largest measures on record. It has abolished suttee and infanticide, and slavery; it has abolished and created tenures and reconstructed society as it were. Like other similar institutions, it has been subject to fluctuations of opinion. It has abolished and reenacted usury. It has passed through tremendous trials, from desolating famines, from commercial crises, from widespread agitations and social explosions, from civil war itself, not altogether unscathed, we must confess. But never, in all its vicissitudinous century of history, had it such a funeral day as the 19th September 1889. For, never before had it an uglier business in hand than in the matter of the Mamlatdars. Difficulties of a more formidable character it had before encountered, and more or less mastered. But a more disagreeable task was never before presented to it than the introduction of the Bill to indemnify certain witnesses.

The Sir Thomas Turton Bill was a flea-bite to this. A sadder measure was the abolition at one sitting of the Liberty of the Press. It was with no ordinary feelings that the accomplished son of Canning the publicist, satirist and orator appeared before the Council with his proposal to take away, even for a year, the liberty of unlicensed printing granted by East India Company's Civil Servant Metcalfe. What must have been the feelings, then, of Lytton the Second, the Poet-Heir of a Poet ennobled for distinction in letters, when he came forward to suppress for all time the liberty of publication in their own languages to the people and races of India! The situation was indeed a trying one, as the noble Bard himself confessed. It was not without its alleviations, however. If he had not the prima facie justification of his predecessor the last Governor-General of the East India Company in an actual civil war of gigantic and threatening magnitude, Lord Lytton had at least been persuaded, however wrongly, that the times were out of joint, that the Empire was sleeping on an active volcano whose activity could be allayed and its bursting with destructive violence avoided only by gagging a few dozen vernacular editors. At the worst, he had to cheer him up by the tyrant's poor excuse of the safety of the State. Even this poor resource was wanting to the Conscript Fathers who assembled at Simla on the 19th instant. They pretended to no serious function. They were unable to conjure up the most miserable ghost of an incubus, present or prospective, on the Empire from which they essayed to free it. The managers of the House put on the boards their one act play—we mean the one section Bill—on the ostensible ground of performing a public duty. But it was the minor duty of officialism rather than the paramount obligation of statesmanship. It was discipline more than duty. They simply bowed to authority.

A truly shabby piece of work was that of the Government when, failing in their pretences before their own counts, unto the Privy Council, they "did" poor Rajkrishna Singh out of his demesne, through a subservient departmental legislature. That was "shocking bad." There was no question of State danger or safety involved, though some State need was, as usual, pleaded; mumbled rather than urged. There was, of course, a question of State revenue at bottom. It was, in other words, a case of aggrandisement, however small the scale; an instance of annexation petty. That belongs to the strictly political sphere. Call it Chauvinism, Caesarism, Bismarckism, or whatever you will, it is beyond the reach of argument. No such plea was there for the Council on Thursday before last. The Councillors were not, by hook or by crook, enlarging the boundaries of empire. Still less could they pretend to be saving it, or any way protecting it from present or future peril. Their action was far more humiliating and far less excusable. So far from strengthening, the Bill introduced is distinctly calculated to weaken the securities of the Empire. It makes for anarchy, inasmuch as it shakes that public credit which is at the root of this glorious fabric of order we owe to Britain. Could British statesmen and senators be placed in a more pitiable situation than that in which they are forced to find excuses for attenuating the paramountcy of the honour of the Empire and escaping from the rigid grip of accepted and ratified obligation?

The one-eyed one-sectioned Bill quibbles and whittles away the Government pledge to the Mamlatdars. These native Magistrates had been assured that they would not be molested in any way, if they came forward to relate the truth frankly about Mr. Crawford's dealings at the Trial of the Commissioner of the Central Division. Their evidence was needed in the interest of the State, to bring to book a colossal offender who had poisoned the sources of justice and corrupted the administration of a great part of the country. A native lover of illicit gains might be easily disposed of. Even a poor uncovenanted East Indian or European peculator might be bullied out of service. Not so a great administrative chief of the Covenanted Civil Service, who is at the same time an able man and a favorite of society and ladies' man. To prostrate such a man, something more than mere general notoriety of his pecuniary relations with his subordinate agents and suitors, was required. An able man in high office and position, he had always doubtless not neglected precautions against detection. To abash and humble such a man and silence his numerous and powerful friends, specific and individual evidence of respectable parties was necessary. Such only the Mamlatdars could give who had paid Mr. Crawford. But they are men of position and character, nay, above all, magistrates, and they knew the risk of confession to themselves. Their honour would be dissipated in a moment, their offices would be taken from them, and their property and persons would be in jeopardy. Hence the necessity of offering them complete immunity from the consequences of their disclosures, however incriminatory these might be to themselves. The Mamlatdars' evidence was a condition sine qua non of the success of the Crawford Inquiry, and the Indemnity was a sine qua non of their coming forward to give evidence. It was in many quarters doubted whether, notwithstanding the Indemnity, they would freely speak the truth. In fact, that was the great reliance of the friends of the Commissioner whose official career was under investigation. They only smarted under the inevitable prejudice of Mr. Crawford's own display of the white feather—his virtual confession by flight from jurisdiction and office, under miserable circumstances. The sceptics were not without substantial warrant. After all, Governments cannot do the impossible, and not even the Government of India could insure the witnesses against humiliation in public regard as a consequence of their avowal of complicity in corruption. The Government could maintain the witnesses in their places in the public service, even without loss of prospects of regular promotion. They might in India even procure a law to protect them from public or private suits and prosecutions. So far and no farther! They surely could not save them from social disrepute. Loss of reputation must follow as a matter of course. Under the circumstances, it was a mercy to the body politic and society in general, and almost magnanimous in the Mamlatdars that they came forward to tell the truth about Mr. Crawford, at the expense of their own character and good name for ever. They were evidently heartily sick of the whole business of the Crawford régime and its peculiar ways. They were ashamed of themselves for their own part in it, and seemed to be looking out for the first opportunity of clearing themselves as much as remained to them in their circumstances by truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. They readily accepted the Government guarantee. Although it did not cover all the ground, as sensible men of the world, they knew that no earthly power could protect their whole interests—as regards character as well as substance—and, recognising the good faith of Government, they accepted the promise of protection in property and person and office, and disclosed the circumstances. And now the Legislature is prepared to belie the Government.

'CROSS COUNTRY IN BENGAL BY WATER.

FROM TIPPERAH TO NARAINGUNJE.

I TOOK my leave of the Maharaja late on the evening of Friday, the 6th October. His Highness repeatedly expressed his hope that I might not be allured by the joys of home and the attractions of Calcutta to make any avoidable delay in returning. He had estranged every party, including the British, in inviting me. He had seen enough, however, not to regret his choice. It would be a tantalising disappointment and almost a humiliation if I so soon gave him the slip. I had begun a great work and should not give it up. As the Maharaja was sitting in his sanctum in the upper story, with weapons, implements and instruments of all kinds around him, we naturally drifted to talk of his different occupations and accomplishments. Photography, Oil Painting, Music, Microscopy, Astronomy, were all rapidly passed in review. The conversation waxed tender as the moment for parting was approached. At length it came. With interchanges of good wishes and my most earnest blessings for his well-being, I left the Rajbari, and soon came to my flag-boat. After hastily bidding adieu to the numerous people waiting on the banks, we dropped down the Howrah as fast as we could for fear of a sudden message stopping us again at Agartala.

7th October Saturday.—Gokarna. Magnificent sunset! One of the grandest compositions of colors I have ever beheld! Turner at his wildest flight is but a poor approximation—a faint adumbration. "They have not such sunsets in their country!" I involuntarily exclaimed. As I write, the scene has already changed. It is a more mellow and melancholy effect, yet not without its own fascination—even its moral suggestion.

We passed on our right the village and bazaar of Gokarna, beautifully situated at the confluence of the Teetas and another lesser seasonal stream that flows by the right of the place. It is a noble view, the village curving into a crescent up to the bazaar which rounds off into a slight promontory stretching out into the unruffled water. Air and water were both inviting, and we rowed down the river in the cool cloudless atmosphere, without a pause, late into the evening, until we found a convenient anchorage, some five miles below, where we remained for the night. In the day, we had passed many hamlets, mostly of comparatively recent formation on the higher ground of churs; with beels stretching broad behind the narrow strips of huts. The river is a few feet below the habitations and rooms. It is interesting to see the women using the stream for the commonest domestic purposes, as if it were a jug or tumbler. At times, however, their proximity is threatening. Not long ago, the water rose, and doubtless filled the people with some anxiety, though, as a rule, they take it cool, as a matter of course. For the moment, it was no doubt a matter of uneasiness. The mark of the highest rise may still be clearly traced at the bottom of the houses, at the level of the floor of the rooms. They have a contrivance of saving themselves and their effects on raised platforms. Parts, say one half, of the rooms are raised higher by a few feet above the general level of the houses.

Chatterjee (one of my companions) passed an uneasy day and a painful evening, owing to a severe headache. Not to disturb him, I left him crying for distress in the boat to climb up to the top of the roof where I lounged for hours. Chaitanya Nath Naik, the Bengalicised Hindustani, followed me soon after. I tried an interesting conversation with the old bearer who accompanies me, enquiring into the state of agriculture in and about their village, Chaddogaon, to the south of Commillah, the home of all the bearers in Independent Tipperah. Formerly, these bearers were a powerful body in the State, being always about the Maharaja's person, and holding offices suited to them and receiving grants of jaghirs and talooks and farms, and commanding almost as much respect as the Dewans and sometimes a real influence to which the Dewans could not pretend. It was only the other day, that the late Mr. Campbell (the Maharaja's European Manager, a fine old gentleman) having stopped a few candles and other trifles which were being carried away from the capital by boat, and arrested the men concerned and, obtaining His Highness' reluctant permission, enquired into and penetrated through the mysteries of the Toshakhana and similar departments and discovered the wholesale robbery that went on, the bearer Chief of the Toshakhana, Hárái Sirdar, was removed and the department made over to the mutsuddi class. The change was no better than a step from the frying pan into the fire, and so the Bengali Bachelor of Medicine who succeeded Dr. Stork as State Surgeon and soon became a favorite, was placed in charge of this and other departments. The medical treatment did not satisfy. One by one, they were again taken from the prudent management of the Doctor and given to the older favorite Panchanan Mitra (the famous gentleman master of the tabla drum), who still holds the place and has just shown at once his kindness for me and his taste and judgment and altogether his dandi (a word difficult to translate) by his manner of carrying the Maharaja's order to give me a pair of elephant tusks to show to Calcutta as a present from His Highness. One of the tusks is No. 43 (of the department) and marked as $6\frac{1}{2}$ seers in weight, and the other, without number, $8\frac{1}{4}$ seers. This couple is far from being a pair. The two are not even similar. They are long enough in appearance, but hollow all through, except a few inches at the end; and even there they are cracked all over and through and through. The tusks are evidently those of dead elephants rotting in the jungles and picked up by Tipperah backwoodsmen, without half a seer of sound solid ivory in each. Of course, the Maharaja has been told that I have got the pick of his collection. I don't know whether any other person is responsible for this choice, for the Calcutta Baboo, who has wasted his whole fortune, has presumably a better eye—as we say in India. I do not personally care for the tusks except as a gift from my royal master and a curiosity and a sight for Calcutta to glorify my master and enhance my importance under his shadow. But they are such that I shall have to lock them up from being seen.

These boatmen seem a lugubrious lot, unlike those who carried me up from Dacca, who were talking, singing and amusing all the way and getting up a respectable concert at night at our anchorage on churs amid the surrounding stillness. I descended down at 10 P. M. and finding Chatterjee still suffering, I prevailed upon him to take 3 globules of nuxvom. 30th, which immediately, like magic, sent him to sleep (after hours of vain effort to get rest previously). I too disposed myself within my mosquito curtains to follow his example, as our dinner was just commencing to cook, and there were several hours yet before it could be ready and the insect swarms prevented all reading and writing. I awoke at dead of night and found our cook alone up and engaged at his mystic art, the whole crew fast snoring and all others asleep. When dinner was ready, I woke up my valet Lakir, and next Chatterjee who was now all right except for weakness. There being no space for three to dine together, in consequence of the encroachment of the bedding, I did not disturb Chaitanya, who was called up after we had done. Before we went to bed again, I called up the escorting sepoy Bansibadan to mount guard for the little while of night, or rather darkness, that still remained. We were undisturbed, but it appears that two successive boats had come near. Our sepoy had called to them from a distance to enquire. They both pretended to be fishing boats. Who knows, they were the scouts of robber gangs? That is the way. Early this morning (Sunday, 8th) the boat left its temporary mooring for the journey, and when at 8 I re- we had left the windings of Gosainpur and were on the point of falling into the great Megna. It was a beautiful confluence and a wide prospect. Numbers of boats, great and small, were sailing up the great river towards Mymensing and Sylhet, most of them evidently bearing native officers and amla and employés going to their distant homes on leave for the holidays. Purchased fish on entering the Megna. We soon passed the notorious pirate village of Chorepára, with its high bank surmounted by rattan bush. There a venerable-looking Badmash on the Retired List usually sits in an old boat with a Persian book in hand who makes enquiries of passengers and boatmen for his wilder comrades. We pass the mouth of the khal which leads to the port of Sonarampur. I espied the spire of a mut in a village to the left beyond the chur. There is a Police outpost on the south bank of the khal, on our left.

VISIT TO SONARGAON.

Naraingunje Ghat, Monday morning, the 9th October. Yesterday we took our mid-day meal in the midst of the Megna; and sailing down, we crossed over in the afternoon towards Baidyabazar. Without stopping there, we passed the Telegraph Jeinadar's house on our right and entered the khal which leads to the Brahmaputra. About two miles up we moored with the setting sun at a pucca ghat—the only one we have seen in all our journey—erected by a prosperous Gope, Ramkrishna Ghosh, at Mugra, a village two or three miles north east of the village of Kamarpur. As it was still day, and specially as the khal is safely navigable at night, (unlike the Megna or the Pudda) we would have gone farther down that evening, as soon as my servant Lakir and the "Sirdar" Shyam Sundar whom we had dropped at the entrance of the khal to fetch milk and provisions, returned. In the meantime, I jumped into the ghat for a change. There I learnt that this Mugra was the site of the ancient Sonargaon. I jumped at the idea of having come upon such historic ground, the more so as I have been looking for days in vain in the Surveyor-General's map for the far-famed spot—the map designating the whole tract of country about here on the west of the Megna as Sonargaon and Mohe-shurdee, much as in our part of Bengal we loosely talk of Sonargaon Bikrampur. I proposed to Chatterjee to have a short antiquarian walk. I returned to the boat, and, in the absence of my valet, rummaged my portmanteau and carpet bag. I dressed myself. Chatterjee did not care to put on his trousers or even socks, but found out his mistake late when, past the bazar on the strand, we penetrated into the jungle, all the more dangerous for the shades of evening which were fast enshrouding us. We took for pilot one of the boatmen, Chatterjee following me with difficulty and trepidation in that footpath scarcely discernible amid the surrounding shrubbery and wood. We soon came upon an old ruined structure which served for gateway through which we passed, not without fear of descending serpents curling round our persons from the numerous crevices in the decayed and fallen structures and the overhanging plants and shrubs. We next found an indubitable specimen of the genuine old Bengali architecture in tolerable preservation in the shape of conical tent-like domes. It is the Banglá roof, and rightly so termed by Fergusson. The style is not confined to Bengal. It is all over India; it is often met with in Benares, and may also be seen at other places upcountry. The naobatkhana over the gateway of the Bettiah temple at Allahabad in Mootteganj, where I passed some of the earlier months of the year, is in this style, adopted there probably at the instance of eastern architects. But as imitation of the rounded cones of bamboo roofs, it may well be supposed to have had its origin in Bengal, where it was most in vogue, as indeed the style is called Bengali by the people, from whom the Bengal Indigo Planter historian of Architecture, doubtless, obtained his nomenclature. All our midland temples of Siva are in this style, of which the most notable specimen in Calcutta was in the great temple erected in the first half of the last century at Bagbazar by Govindram Mitra, Mr. Holwell's Black Banian—the remains, indeed the ruins, of which fell down in the great cyclone of 1865. Strange to say, this style is not in vogue in East Bengal, where I everywhere saw the extra-Bengali style of mut architecture prevail. The beauty and dignity of the old Sonargaon structure have been dissipated by the very stupid efforts at preservation by a coat of whitewash. Immediately adjoining the Banglas, rises the noble dome of an ancient mosque. Luckily, the shabby white of the tinkering masons does not reach above the lower portion of the walls of the mosque. The dome is not the wellknown Saracenic roof of religious houses, which is certainly far more elegant in its proportions and its curves. This Bengali dome in its volume and height and simplicity, in its very contempt of beauty, has almost a Doric effect. We passed on in the dark, not having provided ourselves with a light, through deserted sheds and compounds of ruined houses, wishing to see as much as might be within the short time at our disposal, until we came upon a humble habitation of thatch. There was no way, or our path lay through the yard of the house, but as there was a light peering through the bamboo chinks—evidence of humanity in the house—we ventured not, for fear of invading the zenana. We called to the men inside, who seemed afraid and unwilling to give us information as to the owner. They simply said there was no way. I took up the conversation begun by Chatterjee and Chaitanya and humoured the inmates down. My companions, however, had the address to call for seats for us, and, one after another, a couple of morahs was produced on which I and Chatterjee seated ourselves. There was no other raised seat for Chaitanya. We called for any other seat available and a mat was brought us. The chief inmate was one Magan, a village mandal, on the estate of a Mussulman landholder of Dacca, who offered us tobacco in a dry cocoanut apparatus with which he handed us two pieces of plainain leaf. I hesitated a moment to accept the proffered hospitality from caste prejudice or rather a class repugnance to touch a pipe used Heaven knows by what people, but Chatterjee easily overcame my scruple, telling me to put up with the arrangement as a travelling necessity. The wily boy wanted a smoke more urgently than I did, I suspect! However, I was glad to take his advice, as our condescension put the poor men in the best humour. We became soon thoroughly en rapport with them and entered into deep conversation, making not only antiquarian enquiries of them, but learning a deal about the locality and that part of the country. The agricultural rate (nirik) there is usually one Rupee per katcha kuni. The place is deserted, the people having, in their opinion, died out in course of ages. The usual crops were rice and kalai and sursa, I believe. I suggested jute. They said, no. I said I saw jute reaping on the chur at the entrance of the khal. Magan replied, that it was an insignificant culture, a biga or two per household, on the low lands. The land generally about there was unfit for jute. The rice is of the coarse kind, of the Aus or Bhadoi crop. They know no other agriculture. There were no respectable Hindus in the immediate neighbourhood, though there were lots of Goalas and Saus (suris), with a few Vaidyas, perhaps. The Kayasthas and Vaidyas and Brahmans mustered strong at Kamarpur, a few miles off. We stayed as long as three chhillams of tobacco could detain us, until my servant for whom we had sent, came with a light, and armed with a sword. Lakir had strayed into the jungle, separated from the boatman who carried the light, we had to raise a halloo to give him notice of our whereabouts by the direction of the sound. Sonargaon proper is now a Mussulman hamlet. The Islamites are all Sunnis, of course, and very poor and illiterate. The most that any one learnt was to read a little Bengali. Persian and Urdu were out of the question. The mosque was in charge of a young man of thirty, whose name I forget, who, of course, knows Persian and has as much reputation for learning as Dequincey had among his neighbours of the Lakes, for they talked glibly of his profound scholarship in Persian, Arabic, Urdu and Nagri! The Banglas beside the mosque were called the Dargas of Hazrat Mahammad Yusuf and his father. The buildings are said to be eight hundred years old. They were lately repaired and white-washed by Deputy Magistrate Moulvi Aniruddin Hyder of Dacca. The Dargas are mausoleums of the builder. We did not enter the mosque, but went within the Dargas, leaving our shoes behind, being accompanied by the good rayyets at whose house we had taken shelter, and by other Mussulmans who had joined them attracted by the noise which we could not fail to make in that wood. In the first bangla to the right as we enter, lies Mahamad Yusuf to the left and his wife to the right. In the adjoining room, lies his parents. There were three lights in the first mausoleum and probably as many in the second. We bade again good bye to our hospitable friends and threaded our way to the strand. In the compound of one of the deserted thatched houses, we saw a stone imbedded in the ground, which we learnt was used for a mortar for crushing tobacco.

Instead of entering the boat, we improvised a bed on the platform of the landing place and, I, having doffed my uniform, laid ourselves down, our heads on a common bolster, and lounged and gossiped for hours, including some Hindi songs that I condescended for the nonce to hear from the sepoy Bansibadan who is always airing his vocal powers, till late at night. When we found ourselves fairly drenched by the dews of Heaven, we reentered our dormitory on the water. There we took our meals and went to bed, but not before waking up Bansibadan to watch over us and wake up the boatmen for a resumption of the journey, with particular directions to egg them on. It was no wonder, therefore, that, on waking this morning at 7½ O'clock, I heard that we were approaching Naraingunge, where we soon came.

NOTES AND QUERIES

MEANING OF SHERIDAN.

Sir,—I beg to thank you for your kindly taking the trouble to point out that Leigh Hunt's text is corrupt and that Derbyshire petrifactions should be putrefactions. But both petrification and putrefaction are equally puzzling to me. From the context I do not see what 'Derbyshire putrefaction' can possibly mean. I do not see why I should mince matters by hesitating to state that

I beat my pate, and fancy sense will come;

Knock as I please, there's no body at home.

I, therefore, request the favour of your kindly explaining my difficulty in your next.

JYOTISH CH. BANERJEE.

ANSWER.

"Derbyshire putrefactions," correctly "petrifications," refer to the curious rocky formations of Derbyshire—the glittering spars among others, out of which, in Sheridan's days, cheap gems and jewellery used to be made. In other words, the girls were rebuked for being so unimpassioned—flinty-hearted.—ED. R. & R.

Public Paper.

INDEPENDENT TIPPERAH.

No 1249—XVI-38, dated Comillah, the 27th June 1889.
From—A. H. Collins, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Tipperah and ex-officio Political Agent of Hill Tipperah,
To—The Commissioner of the Chittagong Division.

I have the honor to submit herewith the report of the Assistant Political Agent on the General Administration of Hill Tipperah for the year 1888-89.

2. The report has been carefully written, and contains all the information required. Having joined the district at the latter end of March last, I have not gained sufficient experience of Hill Tipperah to be able to say much on the several subjects treated in the report.

3. The Maharaja's affairs, both in Hill Tipperah and in the zemindaries, are not well managed are apparent. I am strongly of opinion that there should be a strong minister for the State and a manager for the zemindaries, the latter being subordinate to the former in important matters. I doubt if the Council now appointed by the Maharaja will ever succeed in introducing reforms likely to produce a satisfactory result.

4. During my short incumbency here, I have found it always difficult to obtain from the Durbar prompt information called for by higher authorities, which clearly indicates that the administration is not properly managed, and that an efficient administrator is absolutely necessary.

5. The Assistant Political Agent, Rai Umakanta Das Bahadoor, was invested with the title of Rai Bahadoor during the past year. He is thoroughly acquainted with all matters connected with Hill Tipperah, and it is a matter of satisfaction that such a deserving officer has been conferred an honorary title.

6. I received the report on the 25th current, and in order to save time, I submit it in original.

No. 567, dated Agartala, the 24th June 1889.
From—The Assistant Political Agent of Hill Tipperah,
To—The Officiating Magistrate of Tipperah and ex-officio Political Agent, Hill Tipperah.

I have the honor to submit the Annual Report on the General Administration of Hill Tipperah for the year 1888-89.

2. The preceding year saw the overthrow of the manager of His Highness the Maharaja's zemindaries in British territory, Mr. E. F. Sandys. The year under report similarly witnessed the downfall of the Minister Baboo Mohini Mohan Bardhan. The latter officer, indeed, had become unpopular and unsettled in his position from before the fate of the former was pronounced. But he held on as long as he could, until finding himself unable to continue any more, he left Agartala for good in November last. The Durbar for obvious reasons wanted him to come back, but finding that he was unwilling to return, dismissed him from service, and virtually abolished his post. There is now no responsible head officer either in the State or in the zemindaries.

3. For conducting his administration, the Maharaja has appointed a Council consisting of four members, three of whom are his officers and one a relation. Each of the members has got the charge of one or more departments, while the general control, supervision, and direction rest with His Highness himself. The Maharaja hopes that the arrangement will prove successful. How far this hope will be realized time will show. His Highness, who is so remarkable for intelligence, courtesy and goodness of heart, has not much reputation for ruling capacity. One satisfactory feature of the arrangement, however, is that the two appointed successors of His Highness, viz., the Jubraj and the Bara Thakur, have been given some share in the administration, though a small one. They have been authorised to see that the orders issued by the Maharaja are duly carried out. It is said that the object of His Highness here is more to let them have some practical training in respect of the duty, which, one day, they may be called upon to undertake, than to give them at present any power of direction or control. Both of them are intelligent, active and young, and both are willing to work. The Jubraj, who is the elder of the two, and who is the next heir to the gудdee, has shown a laudable desire for getting reforms introduced into the administration. He is the presiding officer of the Chief Court of Justice, and has, in that capacity, done much to improve the condition of the subordinate courts and of the jails.

4. News of the Lushai raids of the last cold weather in the Chengree valley caused considerable alarm in several parts of the State, including Agartala, its capital. Disturbance of a somewhat general character occurred in the Sonamura and the Bilania Divisions, where people of the valley visited by the Lushais had come in large numbers to seek shelter. The residents, as is wont with them on such occasions, left their villages en masse and went to hide themselves in the forests. In the hurry and confusion which ensued, they suffered much. The administration did all that lay in its power to give reassurance to the inhabitants, and to restore order and peace amongst them.

5. Besides the above, no event of any importance took place during the year. Recently His Highness has, in accordance with the advice given him in that behalf, prohibited by a duly promulgated order, the practice of suttee mentioned in the last Annual Report.

TOURS.

6. Of the three sub-divisions of the State, I visited Sonamura twice, and each of the other two—Koylashar and Bilania—once. I visited also nearly all the police-stations, military outposts, schools, dispensaries and other public institutions, and also several villages both in the hills and in the plains of the State. In my movements I had opportunity to see a good portion of the Maharaja's zemindaries in Noakholly, Tipperah, and Sylhet. The present report is chiefly based on the information gathered in these tours, which, on the whole, occupied 85 days.

7. The Sub-divisional Officers of Sonamura and Bilania moved a great deal in their respective jurisdictions, especially during the period of unrest caused by the reports of the Lushai raids. Their presence amongst the people at the time helped much towards the restoration of peace, for which the Sub-divisional Officer of Sonamura made creditable exertions.

CROPS AND WEATHER.

8. The state of the weather was tolerably good, but that of the crops was not quite so. The rainfall was sufficient, but not adequately distributed.

9. During the last six months of the year there was almost no rain here, the total fall being 1.39 inches against 14.09 inches of the corresponding period of the previous year, and 10.44 inches, the average of the same period of the preceding three years. This unusual dryness of the weather was not however, positively injurious to public health, though such a consequence was for a time most generally apprehended. It was, however, harmful to bora paddy, sugarcane, chillies, and oil-seeds, which suffered much for want of sufficient moisture in the ground.

10. Rats are great enemies to crops. In the hills of this State, especially in those of the Koylashar Division, they appeared this year in very large numbers and made a havoc of the jooms, eating up almost every standing crop—paddy, cotton, oil-seeds, &c. In the plains of that Division, however, there was a bumper produce of paddy. In the other parts of the State the yield of cotton and paddy was about the average, but that of sugarcane, chillies, and oil-seeds, below it. On the whole, therefore, the hill people did not fare well during the year, and their difficulties were increased by the disquietude that resulted from reports of the Lushai inroads.

EMIGRATION, IMMIGRATION, AND OTHER INTERNAL MOVEMENTS OF THE PEOPLE.

11. Emigration from here occurs very seldom. Internal movements of the people also take place only when joom lands have to be sought for in distant quarters. For the purpose, hill villages have often to change their sites. During the year, however, nothing worth being mentioned occurred under this head. The only noticeable movements of the people were those, which, as mentioned before, took place in consequence of the Lushai outrages in the Chengree valley. More than two thousand Chakmas and Reangs—inhabitants of the country about that valley—crossed the Fenny and came to this State, in which most of them have cut their jooms and built their sheds. It is not likely, however, that they will be permanent residents here.

PRICES OF FOOD-GRAINS AND LABOUR.

12. There is no practice of buying or selling of food-grains amongst the hill-people. In times of necessity they borrow from their more fortunate brothers or take alms. This last course was largely resorted to by the people of the Koylashar Division during the year. In the plains there was a general rise in the price of the imported food-grains. This was owing to increase of the rates that prevailed in the markets of the adjacent districts from which they were brought. The crop of rice of the superior kind was very insufficient, which caused proportionate increase in the market value of the article.

MINES AND MANUFACTURES.

13. There is hardly anything to be said on this subject in addition to what has been mentioned in previous reports. The coal mines that have been discovered have not yet been brought under operation. The manufactures of the country are not many, and except a few cotton fabrics, such as rugs, bed-sheets, and wearing cloths of the natives, none are very interesting. There is no trade, in respect of any of them except dug-outs and bamboo mats. The work about the former, which is carried on in the Sima-Rima valley close to the borders of the Chittagong Hill Tracts, was much interrupted on account of the disturbed condition of the country.

TRADE.

14. Trade is not the profession of the natives who live chiefly by agriculture. The tradesmen of the country are all Bengalis, who export cotton, oil-seeds, and forest produce of various kinds, and import, except rice, all necessities of life, such as salt, dried fish, pulses and also piece-goods, hardware, pottery and fancy things. The seats of the export trade lie chiefly on the banks of rivers where they leave the boundary of the State and pass into British territory. Import trade is principally carried on in bazars and shops which are mostly situated close to the border of the British districts. The Bazars are slowly improving both in number and condition.

15. Sale of the wild elephants which are caught in the hills is an important part of the trade of the country. During the year under report, 80 elephants were captured for the purpose. But there were not many purchasers in the market.

16. The entire value of the export trade, of which a reasonable estimate can be formed from the amount of the export duties realized by the administration, was Rs. 6,41,000 against Rs. 7,82,000 of the previous year, which was an exceptionally good year for cotton. The average of the preceding three years was Rs. 6,17,000 only. The duties are of various kinds, and in some instances of extortionate character. The rate is hardly below 25 per cent. ad valorem. In some cases, as in those of cotton and oil-seeds, it is 40 per cent. or more. These high rates induce smuggling which is carried on to a considerable extent.

17. Timber and bamboos removed from the Hill Tipperah forests and floated down in the district of Sylhet are under the Sylhet river rules, charged with pass-fees. This additional liability has made the forest produce cut in the Sylhet side of the State a rather dear commodity.

STATE OF PUBLIC FEELING.

18. There is no voice of the natives of the soil in any matter in the State. The Maharaja's word is law, and it is obeyed by all classes without any objection. That word, however, when it relates to matters of administration, is not usually pronounced before it is considered by His Highness' advisers. The proceedings of these advisers in connection therewith, as indeed all their proceedings are carried on most privately, the people being never taken into confidence. This leads to reports of several sorts being created and circulated much to the discredit of the Darbar.

19. The action taken by the Maharaja regarding the abolition of the minister's post is universally regarded as a most ill advised one. It has engaged the attention of the people, whose decided opinion is that the State cannot long go on without an energetic and conscientious minister, nor the zemindaries without a strong manager. This opinion no doubt, is based on reason. But the popular idea about the mal-administration which prevails here, and which is so general a topic of conversation amongst the natives in several places, is founded, it appears, on an unjust comparison of facts. The condition of the State is compared not with what it was before,—say 20 or 25 years back, but with the condition of the settled districts under British Government. The former comparison, if made, would prove as much favourable to the Administration as the latter is against it.

ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES.

20. Besides the abolition of the minister's post and the constitution in its stead of a Council as mentioned before, the only change of importance worth being reported was the appointment of a graduate in law to the charge of the important sub-division of Sonamura, the services of the former incumbent having been previously dispensed with. The Administration is to be congratulated on this change, which shows that it now appreciates the value of the appointment of educated persons to responsible posts in the interior.

21. The Secretary's office was maintained in its full strength throughout the year. This office is now less objectionable than before, as, under the present arrangement, it has got work to do. His Highness' orders about matters of administration, which are to pass through it, are now necessarily more numerous and more important, as the Maharajah has kept in his possession all powers of guidance and control in respect both of the State and of the zemindaries.

REVENUE ADMINISTRATION.

22. The revenue administration of the State is showing some sign of improvement. But without a full financial statement containing an account both of receipts and expenditure, the real condition of affairs cannot be properly known. The Revenue Department of the State continues to be unable to prepare complete budget estimate owing to necessary information not being supplied from all quarters. This itself is a proof of want of vigour and order in the Administration. The account branch of the department, the creation of which was reported three years ago, continues to exist. It is doing good work in its way as a check to subordinate officers in matters which come before it. But its usefulness must be limited so long as a full and correct budget for the State and the zemindaries cannot be made.

23. In regard to receipts, the Maharaja is not a sufferer so far as Hill Tipperah is concerned. He gets from it almost the last realizable price of his demand. In times of necessity he receives advances. His zemindaries, however, present in this respect a sad spectacle. There the tenants in collusion with the Amla rob him in every possible way, withholding payment of dues, creating rent-free holdings, concealing lands, and paying rents at generally very low rates. There are no accounts in his sherista to show either the quantities of lands held by the raiyats or the amounts of jama for which they are liable. That is certainly not the picture of every estate. But in many of the mehals held khas, the general aspect is not brighter. Baksimal, a village close to Comillah, used to pay through farmers about Rs. 2,200 a year. It is now managed khas and yields Rs. 500 or so instead, and yet it is as prosperous now as ever. A village not far from Chagalnaya in Noakhali, capable of yielding about Rs. 2,000 per annum, is not paying any rent for the last 10 or 12 years. In many rent suits instituted in behalf of His Highness decree is obtained at the nominal rate of 4 annas a kani, while the actual prevailing rate is 12 to 16 times as much. During the last two years or so, nearly 80 tanks have been dug on the Maharaja's lands in thana Chagalnaya by men who not only did not pay for the same the usual salami or premium, but did not even take the necessary permission. Yet these tanks could not have been dug without the knowledge and connivance of the local rehildars. His Highness' zemindaries are extensive and valuable. In order that they may be saved from ruin, it is necessary that an efficient Manager should be appointed. It is said that the Manager's post and the post of the Minister have not been filled up for the sake of economy. If such be the case, the value of the posts has not been duly judged.

24. The Maharaja is gradually coming to a proper sense as regards the embarrassed condition of his state and the expensive character of his ever-increasing family. His debts, which were reported in previous years, have not been reduced to any appreciable extent, while his household wants are now at least three times as much as those of his predecessor. His Highness now seems to be anxious to improve the present state of things at the sacrifice, if necessary, of his personal ease and comfort. In the annual report of 1885-86, it was suggested that the rates of interest which were paid on the debts might be considerably reduced. The administration accordingly made endeavours in that direction from time to time, but never with success. During the year under report the matter was again earnestly taken in hand, and it has been known that arrangements have been made with some of the money-lenders, under which the old rates of 12 to 18 per cent. per annum have been reduced to 6 per cent. This has been done in respect of Rs. 2,10,000 of the debts, by which a saving of Rs. 14,000 a year has been effected. The necessary documents regarding the transactions have been executed and duly registered. Credit is due to the administration for the work so far as it is done. The work, it is hoped, will be proceeded with until the rates in respect of the remaining portion of the debts are similarly reduced.

25. During the year two ladies, related to His Highness, having died, the landed property which they had obtained from the Raj for their maintenance, reverted to the mother-estate, increasing thereby its revenue by Rs. 6,000 a year. This circumstance and the reduction of interest—effected, as alluded to above, both permanent gains—have, with the increase of revenue under the heads of cotton and forest produce, helped in greatly removing the gloomy character of the financial prospects of the State. Indeed though a complete budget has not yet been prepared, the Maharaja has been able to form a rough estimate of the probable receipts and expenses on account of the current year, so far as Hill Tipperah and the zemindaries managed from Agartala, i.e., those not included in the jurisdiction of the Chakla of Comillah, are concerned. The estimate does not include any portion of the existing liabilities in which, among other items, is a big sum of about Rs. 12,000 due to the late minister on account of his pay. How far, therefore, it will serve any practical purpose remains to be seen. It gives, however, a surplus of Rs. 11,660, as its figures will show :—

Probable receipts for 1299 T.E.=1889-90 A.D. 1. From Hill Tipperah, Rs. 3,04,147. 2. From Zemindaries managed from Agartala, including a sum of Rs. 23,089 to be received from the Chakla in Comillah, Rs. 1,50,060. Total Rs. 4,54,207.

Probable expenses. 1. Administration and management charges for Hill Tipperah and the zemindaries managed from Agartala, Rs. 1,54,920. 2. Personal and household expenses of His Highness the Maharaja, including the estimate of Rs. 30,000 for repairing an old building, Rs. 2,87,622. Total Rs. 4,42,542.

26. It is true that the income of the state, such as it is now, can, under proper administration, enable the Maharaja to pay off his liabilities in a few years. This will be known from the following statement, the figures of which are believed to be very approximately correct :—

Yearly receipts (in round figures). From the State, Rs. 3,00,000. From the zemindaries managed from Agartala, Rs. 1,26,000. From the zemindaries managed from the Chakla in Comillah, Rs. 4,60,000. Total Rs. 8,86,000.

Yearly expenses. Household and private expenses of the Maharaja, Rs. 3,00,000. Administration charges for the State, being 40 per cent. on 3,00,000, Rs. 1,20,000. Collection and management charges for the zemindaries, being 15 per cent. on 1,26,000 + 4,60,000 = 5,86,000—87,900, or say, Rs. 88,000. Government revenue and cesses, Rs. 2,10,000. Total Rs. 7,18,000.

Net balance available for clearing debts and introducing reforms, Rs. 1,68,000.

27. The total actual receipts of the state during the year under report, viz. Rs. 2,97,510, as shown in the annexed revenue return, exhibit on the whole a falling off of Rs. 39,842 as compared with the receipts of the previous year, and an increase of Rs. 40,012 as compared with the average receipts of the preceding three years. Of the twenty heads of revenue given in the return, there was a total increase of Rs. 15,794 under five heads against a total decrease of Rs. 55,636 under the remaining fifteen.

28. The greatest increase was obtained from lands in the plains which yielded Rs. 52,018 against Rs. 38,266 of the previous year, and Rs. 38,998, the average of the preceding three years. This good result is said to be due to certain mehals having been assessed for the first time under the terms of their settlement. The next increase of any importance was under the head of Adda or chowkidari tax, which gave Rs. 5,241 against Rs. 4,291 of the preceding year. This is attributable partly to increase in the number of houses taxed and partly to more careful collection. Formerly the mahal was entirely held khas : now it is partially farmed out.

29. The greatest falling off was under the head of cotton, under which the sum of Rs. 96,372 was obtained against Rs. 1,28,188 of the previous year. This was due to partial failure of the crop. Indeed owing to the highly abundant produce of that year, the income was then nearly doubled. A considerable portion of that year's crop which had remained unexported was taken out and paid for along with the produce of the year under report. This helped to make the revenue more than the receipts of the preceding three years as shown in the return.

30. The decrease of Rs. 7,181 under the head of family tax comes next. This is due to the straitened condition of the hill-people caused partly by failure of crops and partly by apprehended Lushai raids. The forest revenue fell from Rs. 80,712 to Rs. 76,796 owing, it is said, to the levy of fees on forest produce passing into Sylhet by water and also to insufficient rainfall for which the hill-streams by which the produce is mostly floated down dried up partially. The fall in the Feni revenue, which is collected by Government officials, is reported to be due to short rainfall and to disturbed condition of the Feni valley, in consequence of Lushai raids in 1887-88 to which the revenue in question, as shown in the return, refers. The Maharaja's share of the Feni collections for the year under review has not yet been received. The royalty on elephants caught is gradually decreasing since 1883-84. This is chiefly attributable to want of sufficient demand in the market. The rate of tax in regard to the buffalo-grazing mehals of the Bilania Division having been somewhat unduly raised, a good number of buffaloes has been taken away by their owners for being grazed in the Chittagong side of the Feni. To this circumstance and to want of vigour on the part of the collecting officers is ascribed the falling off of Rs. 1,520 under this head. The rate in question was formerly a rupee a year for a full-grown buffalo and annas eight for a calf. It is now Re. 1-8 and Re. 1 respectively. The decrease of Rs. 2,162 under the head of Khotagari or mooring tax was due to decrease in the quantities of forest produce, cotton and oil-seeds exported from the country by river. This tax which is levied on the mooring of boats, &c., in which these articles are carried, may be well included in the general export duty.

31. The fluctuations under the other heads of revenue are not important, and do not, therefore, call for any explanation.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadood, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE PANDAVAS IN THE HIMALAYA.

AN EPISODE OF HINDU MYTHOLOGY.

By the late Murad Ali Beg and Mitford.

Argument.

THE five Pandavas, celebrated in Hindu Mythology, with their wife Draupadi, being overwhelmed with sorrow at the destruction of their kindred in the "Great War," the death of Krishna and the destruction of Dwarka, proceeded to the Himalaya to die. They were never heard of again, but Hindu tradition says that when Yudhistir, the eldest, was about to give up the ghost, Yam (the Hindu Pluto) arrived in a magnificent chariot to carry his soul to Heaven. Yudhistir asked if his brothers, &c., had preceded him. "No," said Yam, "they were erring mortals, but you are an Incarnation of Justice." "Then," said Yudhistir, "it would be derogatory to an Incarnation of Justice to accept a heaven for himself when his fellow-workers are excluded from it." So I shall take my chance with them." It is also said that Yam, under the form of a dog, accompanied the Pandavas about everywhere in hopes to catch Yudhistir tripping, but failed ignominiously.

* * The prismatic effects of sunlight in the Himalaya and their interpretation by Yudhistir may be thought exaggerated and unnatural. All I can say is that all the appearances described by me are neither inventions nor even observations of my own. My authority for them is a Journal of Travel in the Himalaya, published some years ago in the "Leisure Hour," though I have now forgotten the exact volume or numbers which contain it. For Yudhistir, it may be conceived as not unlikely that one born and bred and living all his life in the plains of India at that period may have been sufficiently ignorant of the theory of light, and sufficiently prone to believe in supernatural influence to regard, as described in the text, appearances so unfamiliar and brilliant as due to other than natural causes.

The fire flashed redly in the sombre night,
And through the blackness of the whirling mists
At times it lightened on the rocks around,
Changing their icy pinnacles to stars
Which instant shone and vanished. And the wind—
The bleak, sweeping, and heavy-rushing wind—
Blew the thick snow-flakes o'er the wanderers
As it tore through the valley. There they sat—
Cold, and emaciated, and faint with toil—
Body and soul alike oppressed and blackened—
Blackened with the deep blackness of despair.
The rounded cheeks of Draupadi had sunk.
And from her eyes the love-light vanished all
Which once had gladdened palaces and camps,
And for which swords were drawn and many fell.
But now her skin was leathern with hardships
And wrinkled with affliction. And the orbs,
Late beaming with affection, now from out
The deeply caverned hollows glittered forth
A wild, cadaverous, and wolfish stare.

Her shrunk form cowered within its robe of bark,*
And pressed together for a little warmth
Its thin knob-headed limbs and clammy fingers—
Like to a skeleton within a coffin,
Or the out-tired affections of the good,
Who long have found them useless in this world,
And now fold up within a hardened heart
The love, the tenderness which thrilled it once—
Sad spectre of exhausted loveliness!
So crouched the Pandavas' wife beside the fire.
And from her hair—the long disshevelled hair—
The hair which during thirteen years of exile
Had hung down her shoulders—never bound,
In memory of vengeance still unsated,
Its snake locks thirsting for the Kaurav's blood
Which Bheem had promised them and gave at last†—
Now all again disordered, but not now
Out of design but cruel, sad neglect—
Uncombed, untended, matted thick with sleet
And the thick snow-mud of the mountain earth—
(On which she late had laid her weary head)
Still as she lent over the blazing logs,
The melted mass coursed down in liquid streams—
Now on her cracked, blistered, and bleeding feet—
Now, hissing, on the embers of the fire.
And there in front, nestled against each other,
And sundered from her by the blaze which lit
With an unnatural hectic their large eyes
That glittered tiger-like, and faded beauty—
Watching her with a look in which affection
Was mastered by a horrid vacancy,
The product of exhaustion, hopelessness,
And agonizing grief—as 'twere a dream,
A dim imagination of past pleasures,
Clouded by present woe—the sons of Mádrée,‡
Nakul and Sahadev sat.

There behind,
Half-coiled around Draupadi as she crouched—
Yet giving and yet taking warmth from her,
As he had always been her foremost champion,
Lay huddled up the giant form of Bheem
Pillowed upon his mace, and slumbering
On his cold, stony bed—alike unmoved
In the deep horror of the present hour,

* It is said that the Pandavas in their wanderings in the wilds, wore robes made of bark, perhaps like the Tapa of Polynesia. However, as "bark" and "skin" are not very dissimilar ideas, it may have been the latter, though modern Hindus may not like to acknowledge it.

† Draupadi, having been insulted by one of the Kauravas, vowed never to bind up her hair again till it had been dipped in his blood, a vow which Bheem enabled her to accomplish by cutting off the offender's head in the battle of Kurukshetra.

‡ Nakul and Sahadev, the youngest of the celebrated Five, were sons of Pandu by Mádrée, whereas Yudhistir, Bheem, and Arjoon were the offspring of Kuntée. Like Castor and Pollux, they were remarkable for inseparability and similarity of appearance.

As of yore mid the rush and roar of battle,
 Or in the throng of Hari's dancing girls.* *
 The only human sound heard in the night,
 Varying the shrieking of the scouring blasts,
 And the sharp snapping of the shivered pines
 Torn by the rush of plunging rocks and snow-falls,
 And the low thunder of the distant cataract,
 Was the deep breathing of the sleeping hero.
 And on the right with arms around his knees,
 Down upon which his shrouded face was bowed—
 Drawn something backward from the cheering blaze,
 As if his soaring soul despised its comfort,
 And, true to gen'rous instincts, yielded it
 To those—the weaker ones—whom yet its warmth
 Might strengthen and sustain—proud Arjoon rested,
 And veiled his sorrow e'en from those around him.
 Say! was he thinking of that day of yore
 When he won Draupadi from all the Rajas? †
 Or, of the hour when on his ivory car,
 While Kurukshetra rang with charging thousands,
 He at advantage slew the Day-God's offspring? ‡
 Or, of his friend—the never-failing Yaduv? §
 Or, how he followed for a year the horse? §
 Of Parameeta or Subhadra's charms? ¶
 Of his dead son—the hero Abhimanya? **
 Or, him who yet survived and ruled afar
 In Manipur—his only conqueror? ††
 Did he bewail and mourn the vanished glories
 Of that vain bow now lying useless by him? ‡‡
 Or, was his soul engaged in higher flights
 Longing to meet the heroes whom he slew
 In the Great War which still amazes earth? §§
 And opposite was Yudhistir the Just,
 Upright and calm, though on his upturned face
 The icy rain fell ceaseless without pity,
 And trickling from the long and clotted hair
 Thrown backward from his brow, streamed o'er his form—
 Upright and calm, though as each gust swept by
 The frail form shivered, though the spirit quailed not—
 Upright and calm, though in the haggard eye
 Which still looked upwards, and the visage dank
 Trenched with deep furrows, and the strenuous mouth set
 With teeth that chattered as it mumbled prayers,
 Reigned utter misery and desolation.
 And still his half-numbed fingers twirled a string

* Krishna, in order to test the stolidity and chastity of Bheem (which latter, by the way, was not very notable except when called in question) surrounded him on a journey from Dwarka to Hastinapur by a crowd of frail enchantresses who practised on him every allurements. Bheem, however, "smelt a rat" and foiled the slippery Yaduv by sheer immobility.

† Although Draupadi was the wife of the five brothers, it was Arjoon who actually won her at her "Swyambara."

‡ Karna, the son of Surya, the Hector of the Mahabharat as Arjoon is its Achilles, was like his Western analogue, slain by the latter under circumstances which amounted to an unchivalrous advantage taken of a momentary weakness.

§ Krishna, chief of the Yadavs; Lord of the 1,600 Gopis; destroyer of the Black Snake and of Raja Kansa; king of Muttra (Mathura) and of Dwarka in Kattyawar when expelled from the first by Jarasindhu; Rajpoot king and Avatar of Vishnoo, Indian Eros, Apollo, and Hermes rolled into one, acted as Mentor to the Pandavas in the "Great War." He was especially friendly with Arjoon, by whose side he rode in battle.

¶ When the Pandavas celebrated Aswamedh (or horse-sacrifice.)

‡ These were Arjoon's "particular" wives. Of course, he had only a fifth share in Draupadi.

 The name of this young warrior (the Patroclus of the Mahabharat) who was slain in endeavouring to pierce the centre of the Kaurava phalanx, has passed into the common generic name for "heroism" in most Indian languages.

†† Arjoon was only once conquered by the Raja of Manipur, afterwards discovered to be his own son.

‡‡ He used to perform extraordinary feats with this magic bow, which, however, lost its power in the decline of the Pandava fortunes.

§§ The number of men engaged, and the length of time taken in fighting (18 days) the battle of Kurukshetra, (whether credible or not) far surpass any other contest of ancient or modern times.

Of Rudra beads, and by his side there coiled
 The single creature which yet served the Pandavas,
 Faithful unto the last—a huge gaunt dog.

Then Draupadi,

Essayed to weep, but as a tear gushed out,
 The snow-wind rushed and froze it on her cheek.

* * * * *

Upon the lonely bivouac rose at last
 The paly light of morning. From the hills
 Which fronted to the East, reflected shone,
 From snow-clad peaks and icy crags, the glare
 Of the bright sun which yet could not be seen,
 Hid from the valley by the Western mounts;
 And in its purer, brighter, grander radiance,
 The red glow of the Pandavas' fire died out
 Until it showed but as a murky wreath
 From the damp sticks upon the melted snow.
 And the light served to rouse the wanderers,
 Alike from their despondency and rest,
 If rest it was which was their lot that night.
 They stretched their limbs and chafed their chilly hands,
 And warmed them o'er the fire, till Bheem at last
 Rolled up and rubbed his eyes with his huge hands
 And shivering yawned. Then Yudhistir arose
 And, joining both his palms together, made
 Obeisance to the rising Eastern light;
 Then pointing with his finger overhead
 To where the sunbeams, shooting through the mists,
 Now rolling upward from the Valley, making
 A bright prismatic rose-glow as they past,
 Fell on the face of the opposing hills
 Turning them all into a blaze of gold,
 He unto his companions said—"See, see!
 The Golden Palace of the Mountain-Gods!
 The rosy air of Kailas in the sky!
 Rise, let us onward, onward! In the Earth—
 The dull dark earth which we have left behind—
 Is nought but sin and sorrow—even we
 Who loved, and fought, and ruled, and feasted, as None but ourselves have done or ever shall,
 Must leave it hopeless. But where we are going,
 The glorious mansions of th' Eternal fathers,
 The darkness of despair may never come.
 'Tis fated we must die. Then let us die
 A little nearer to the Heaven above us."
 And as he spoke he started for the North,
 And Arjoon rose and followed him; And Bheem
 Stamped with his towering height in Arjoon's track;
 And Sahadev stepped on the giant's foot-prints;
 And Nakul followed close upon his brother;
 The last was Draupadi—no, not the last,
 For the dog trotted on the path she left.
 And onward still Yudhistir led the band,
 Ever ascending to the heights which towered
 Yet in mid air above their fated heads—
 The goal towards which they struggled. Along ledges
 Which circled narrow round the mountain side
 With yawning precipices far below,
 And then again through fearful rugged gaps
 Thick filled with snow and shutting out the light,
 Or o'er bare ridges where the new-risen sun
 Shot his oblique effulgence but to dazzle,
 Not warm the wand'ers.* With snow-blistered feet
 And crackling skin, and eyes which seemed to burn,
 And limbs that scarce obeyed the power of will,
 So stiff and weary were they and so numbed,†
 The seven still struggled onward till the sun
 Stood in mid-heaven. Then as they crossed a flat
 Between two summits, where the new-fallen snow

* At great elevations the sun is said to dazzle and scorch even more than in lower regions. It does not, however, appear to give so much warmth, owing to the rarification of the atmosphere.

† All these are symptoms described by Alpine climbers, aeronauts, and travellers in the Arctic regions.

Lay thick and soft, not yet glazed o'er with ice,
And floundered knee-deep through it, Draupadi
Felt she could drag no longer. But no cry Burst from her bosom. Where she stood she sank--
Down on that soft cold spot which was her grave.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Viceroy leaves Simla on Tuesday, the 22nd October, and visits Pinjore, Rawal Pindi, Kohat, Peshawar, Attock, Bannu, Gomal Pass, Dera Ismail Khan, Quetta and Lahore, arriving at Calcutta on or about Saturday, the 30th November 1889.

ON Wednesday, Lord Connemara returned from Darjeeling and started the same evening for Simla. Lord Reay bade adieu to Simla the same day.

RAJA Prabhu Narayan Singh Bahadur of Benares has been Gazetted Maharaja Bahadur. He has begun well and is young. Higher honors may yet be his lot.

FROM an examination of the statistics, Professor Lexis, of the Gottingen University, has come to the conclusion that the German Universities have twice as many students as can possibly hope to make a living by the respective professions for which they are preparing. The Calcutta University has yet a sadder tale to tell.

THE widow of the late Mr. Wilson Bell, acting Agent of the G. I. P. Railway, applied to the Government for a pecuniary grant of Rs. 14,250 or six months' salary of her deceased husband for "the long and valued services rendered by her late husband." Mr. Barnett, the Agent, recommended the payment out of the revenue. But the Government is no Calcutta Corporation and has refused the application.

ONE Dharanidhar Ghose applied to the Northern Division Magistrate for a process against his father-in-law Dhurmo Ghose, for restoration of his wife under 16 years of age, removed from his house and guardianship in his absence. The Hon'ble Magistrate refused to entertain the complaint. The husband next moved the High Court. The Magistrate was called upon to explain. He pointed out that there was no criminality in the act of the father and that, in his long career he refused many such applications. The Vacation Judges, Messrs. Tottenham and Banerjee, have taken a different view of the matter and ordered the Syud to take up the complaint. They say "that the cause shown by the Magistrate is not sufficient, inasmuch as the act of the father distinctly falls within the definition of Section 361 of the Penal Code. He may have no criminal intention probably in taking away his own daughter, but the law provides that the husband of a Hindoo girl of the age of fifteen is her lawful guardian, and taking her away from him without his consent amounts, according to the definition given, to kidnapping from lawful guardianship. We think therefore that the Magistrate must proceed according to law, and, if he believes the complaint, issue a process."

Section 361, reads thus—

"Whoever takes or entices any minor under fourteen years of age if a male, or under sixteen years of age if a female, or any person of unsound mind, out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor or person of unsound mind, without the consent of such guardian, is said to kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardianship."

The section, however, excepts "any person who, in good faith, believes himself to be entitled to the lawful custody of such child, unless such act is committed for an immoral or unlawful purpose."

It goes without saying that the unsophisticated prepossessions of the public—the native public in especial—are on the side of the Hon'ble Ameer Hossein, the Magistrate.

HERE is an instructive anecdote:—

"Sir Joshua Reynolds used to relate an amusing anecdote of a venison feast, which would imply that he was by no means an epicure in the eyes of those who cared for the repast as such and nothing more. He tells us that he addressed his conversation to one of the company who sat next to him, but to his great surprise could not get a single word in answer, until at last his neighbour, turning to him, said, Mr. Reynolds, whenever you are at a venison feast, I advise you not to speak during dinner time—as, in endeavouring to answer your question, I have just swallowed a fine piece of the fat, entire without tasting its flavour."

That admonition to the great British President applies to all eating, and not simply to venison. No doubt, it is savage to feed by yourself at a corner. Conversation improves eating, but you may have too much of it, as among the British.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

WITH our best Vijaya asheerbad and cordial good wishes for the next twelvemonth, we beg to go into our usual fortnight's holiday. The next Reis & Rayyet will appear on the 26th October.

THE Doorga Pooja passed off in a mild Hindu way, without any exceptional features of merriment. The floods and scarcity have damped the ardour of the people. The Nautches have, for some years, been becoming meagre by degrees and distinctly shabby. This year, the lowest degradation was reached: at one house the Æsculapian—the offensive Bengali ballet called the khemta was introduced. Babu Bholanath Mullick, of the well known Buria Bazar family, alone maintained the honour of the metropolis. For a whole fortnight continuously there were the best Hindustani dance and music and song, night after night, performed by the leading Nautch-girls. The attendance too was very full and respectable.

THE struggling, straggling little Bengalee community of Upper Burma have not been unmindful of their great national festival. They held a subscription Doorga Maha Pooja at Mandalay. We could not give Lord Lansdowne a more vivid idea of the place this Festival occupies in the minds of our countrymen.

To our Hindu brethren of Upper Burma we beg to tender our cordia thanks for their invitation. Unfortunately, it came too late. But the good feeling is all the same. Better luck next time! We shall be glad to hear the particulars of their celebration.

THE Calcutta Gazette of the 25th September may be called Sir John Edgar's Doorga Pooja number. It brings joy to many homes and gladdens many hearts. It announces many promotions and confirmations in the Subordinate Executive Service. If the Government could be made to move in the same spirit of sympathy that has dictated the announcements at this season of the year, the people will hardly feel that it is a foreign rule, or that the Governor is an alien.

THE holidays are not for Hindus only. The senior partners of the principal mercantile firms have gone up to the hills. The Deputy Commissioner of Police refreshes himself at Darjeeling these days.

ON the 8th of this month, Mr. Nolan resumes charge as Revenue Secretary to the Bengal Government. Mr. Buckland, his vigorous locum tenens, we believe, goes for a month on special deputation, and then takes three months' leave. His ability is well known and he has done well as Secretary.

WE notice in recent Home papers the demise of Madame Canrobert, née Macdonald, at her chateau Jouyen Josas, in the vicinity of Versailles. Madame Canrobert, on both her father and mother's side, was connected with India. She was, we believe, born in the North-West. She was by birth a Macdonald, her father Major Macdonald being one of the chiefs of that clan. He served many years in India and either died in this country or in England, from disease contracted in this country. Her mother was a Smith, the daughter of Colonel Nicholas Smith, of the Native Infantry, whose regiment, in days gone by, on account of his name, was called Old Nick's Own. Leila Macdonald was a particularly handsome girl. In the year 1855 or 1856, after the Crimean war, Miss Macdonald was introduced at the Court of Napoleon III., and Marshal Canrobert, the cousin of the Emperor, fell in love with and married her. She was in Paris in 1864 or 1865, and had grown into a remarkably handsome woman, but was just as nice and unaffected as she was when she was simply Miss Leila Macdonald.

SOME new anecdotes of the Duke of Wellington are given in a late magazine article. We choose one of the best showing that the great Duke was as proficient in swearing as Lord Thurlow himself and might be a worse brute :—

"The Duke detested being helped; not from ingratitude, but from two distinct feelings; one, that he did not like to be thought, what he certainly was not, decrepit; the other, that he knew very well that the majority of persons who helped him simply did so in order to be able to say that they had done so. This was to him revolting. Standing opposite to Apsley House in the evening in Piccadilly, when the street was even more crowded than it is now, the Duke was hesitating on the curbstone. A gentleman, nearly as old as himself, made some demonstration of assisting him to cross the road; endeavouring to check the tide of cabs and other vehicles that was setting strongly. When the Duke reached the gate of Apsley House, he touched his hat, and said 'I thank you, Sir.' The elderly stranger immediately uncovered: holding his hat at his knee, he addressed the Duke as follows: 'My Lord, I have passed a long and not uneventful life; but never never did I hope to reach the day when I might be of the slightest assistance to the greatest man that ever lived.' The Duke looked at him calmly; and in a voice not in the least choked by emotion, replied, 'Don't be a damned fool!' and walked into Apsley House."

That certainly beats Thurlow hollow. That Chancellor once damned a bishop through the latter's clerk, but he would probably not have sworn like a thief at an old man who presumed to think him somebody. The——fool! indeed! But who was that? The truth is, the Duke was a great soldier and a good old High Tory statesman, but he was never remarkable for chivalry of soul or even urbanity. His grace was confined to his title. He was capable of great hard-heartedness, as in his Machiavellian arrangement, after the fall of Seringapatam and death of Tippoo Sultan, to keep the daughters of that sovereign in enforced life-long celibacy.

It is about a quarter that a line in the Home papers announced the death, in England, of a retired old Indian, who had been a popular citizen of Calcutta—Dr. David Smith, formerly Principal of the Medical College of this city. Remembering the large space occupied by the deceased in the minds of our Calcutta people, native as well as European, we, being no professional organ, almost went out of our way to notice the subject at great length. Indeed, our account of the deceased's life was the most copious in the Indian press as our tribute to his worth was the most cordial. It was with no ordinary feelings, then, that we closed with the statement, more mournful than death itself, which being "a necessary end,

Will come when it will come"— namely, "He leaves a wife and daughter badly provided for." Since then, specific news of the condition of the family has come. The daughter is a little girl of six years, so that her whole bringing up as an English lady remains to be accomplished. For this and for the support of her poor mother and herself, and for all purposes whatsoever, there is but an income of £60 a year in all. This is obviously an absurdly inadequate provision for the widow and daughter of an English gentleman.

It is strange that the family of a prosperous professional man like Dr. Smith should be left so destitute. Having been a bachelor as long as he was in the Indian Service, he ought to have been able to lay by money enough, as he ought to have done, if he contemplated matrimony. For marrying after leaving the Service, as he did, he would not be allowed to subscribe to the Military Pension Fund for the benefit of his widow. But even if he saved nothing from pay, he must have made a goodly acquisition by his private practice. For several years, his practice was the largest in the metropolis. We suppose, he was of a most liberal disposition. Be that as it was, there is no doubt that he has left his family in want. And that is sufficient for his friends and the world in general. We are glad to see that several of the former, both in India and in England, have come forward to open a subscription to help the widow and orphan. In this country, Messrs. Grindlay & Co., Calcutta, are the Agents. They will receive and acknowledge all sums paid to the David Boyes Smith Fund. Names and amounts of subscriptions will appear in every issue of the Indian Medical Gazette.

The late Professor Smith's eminence as a man of science and as a teacher is indisputable. His success as a physician and popularity as a man are still fresh in Calcutta. We only hope there may be a collection worthy of the humanity and prosperity of this metropolis.

It would seem that British officers and gentlemen may be as great bores and beggars as any unmannered Baboos. It has been necessary to warn British officers now in Moscow and St. Petersburg studying Russian against troubling the British Embassy. Furthermore, they are strictly forbidden to appear in uniform. They should specially never be conspicuous at military functions, such as reviews. The reason given is thought to be a mere excuse :—

"'Why are you not in uniform?' said a Russian Prince to one of our officers who was lately invited by his Russian friends to attend. 'Because,' replied the British officer, 'we have been ordered not to wear our uniforms on any occasion, and, in fact, to make ourselves as little conspicuous as possible. We are told that the Czar does not like to see British officers in uniforms at ceremonies unless they are introduced to his Majesty, and we cannot all be presented.' 'It is not true,' rejoined the Prince; 'we are surprised that any such secrecy should be made about your presence in Russia.'"

We suspect the new sumptuary regulation has been issued by way of a punishment and, above all, a precaution. Some of the students or perhaps other officers have apparently been misbehaving, or at any rate there have been indications of a kind likely to lead to irritation between the two nations and questions between the two Governments. John Bull is a bad customer abroad, and the best—for the prices he glibly pays. And in uniform, his bovine—we mean national brusquerie and self-consciousness are simply exaggerated. Mutual suspiciousness being the normal relation between the British and the Russians, the statesmen of the two countries should be particularly on their guard against any private ebullitions or contretemps that might produce exacerbation. A young Subaltern might precipitate an international conflict by the puppyish sweep at a court function in the bravery of epaulettes and gilt buttons, or his hour's strut at a review. No doubt, it is a hardship to the British officers in exile to be condemned to the obscurity of plain clothes. Not but what as a rule they would in most cases be relieved of the exacting scarlet cloth as of the metaphorical Red Tape. Michael Scott's Captain, who is so very particular in dress as in other things besides, is their butt of jest. It is different in Russia, we conceive. In an ultra-military monarchy, where a mere civilian is a rare bird, where everybody of any consequence sports a uniform, where gorgeous military ceremonies are constantly taking place, the British officer might naturally desire to appear in his proper character.

Ordinarily speaking, the desire is one to be encouraged. The regard for etiquette and sartorial exactitude may, no doubt, be carried too far. But the opposite habit is certainly worse. The present disposition to muft makes its indulger liable to strange mishaps. To mention one out of many instances which must occur to each reader of experience, in 1863 there was a serious difference between England and Brazil over the arrest of certain British naval officers, in the latter Empire. The quarrel was at length submitted by mutual consent to the arbitration of the King of Belgium who, if we remember aright, justified the seizure. Be that as it was, the difficulty would never have arisen but for the British officers having strayed on land in a foreign land without their distinctive mark of recognition, their professional costume.

SACRILEGE is the order in India. Certainly, robbery of shrines and sacred objects is very much on the increase. A few months back, we noticed the repeated offences committed at the holiest of holy places of the Hindus by the very Hindus apparently. Similar depredations at other places have since been reported. It was time enough for the culmination, preparatory to reformation, if, indeed, such a welcome turn is to take place in this Iron Age. And now sacrilege has reached its highest development towards the side of orthodox Orissa.

A correspondent of the Morning Post reports a daring burglary at Laksanath, a village in Balasore, where, at night, a temple was scaled and broken into, and not only were the sacred jewellery and paraphernalia purloined, but the goddess, whose trinkets they were and who was every day decked out in them, was herself carried away. The Police, of course, were nowhere, but they have since been making inquiries. Luckily for them, the other rascals were stupid enough to have left almost exposed in a bush close by some of the holy jewellery, besides a dhootee and some implements of their own. If, after that, they do not trace the robbers, they ought to be whipped out of the service.

Between correspondent and editor, we see the Morning Post makes a ludicrous blunder. The Sindkati—one of the robber's belongings discovered—is described as "a famous instrument of the dacoits used in breaking open locks." This correspondent, though a native, has evidently never seen a "Sindkati," nor heard about it from one who has. The editor probably fancies it to be some importation from the "Young Egypt" of the Far East. It is neither an "instrument for breaking open locks," nor an implement of dacoits at all. The dacoit who was found with it would lose caste and be boycotted as a Black Leg by the Chivalry of Industry. We are afraid our friend's notion of dacoits is hazy. The K-shattriya would sooner go out armed with an awl than the Dacoit with a Sindkati.

THIS is how cleverly the Amrita Bazar Patrika explains away its omission to lash a singular instance of the degradation of Bengali journalism, and makes an opportunity to read a homily to some of its brethren who have been sufficiently human :—

"A Bengali journal cracked some coarse jokes at a Hindu lady of literary fame. The matter was brought to our notice, but though we had no language to express our condemnation of the paragraph, we thought that the best way of dealing with it was to treat it with contempt. To make a lady the subject of comments in the newspapers is to shew utter disregard to her feelings. But Reis and Rayyet took it up, and attacked the Bengali journal with a shoe in hand. Now you must know that though our brother possesses a massive intellect and is deservedly considered the only philosopher amongst the Indian journalists, he is yet as impatient as a child. There was the offending journal before him, and he commenced the onslaught. Forthwith rushed an ally in the person of the Tribune of Lahore. The Tribune not only attacked the offending Bengali journal, but also its ally, who is editor of Hope. The attack of the Tribune was ferocious and vindictive. Hope retaliated, and his return-blows were fiendish. We can assure our brothers that it was not for this that God entrusted them with the task of editing newspapers in India. It was not to bite each other and tear each other to pieces,—not to satisfy personal feelings. But it was to defend the weak against the strong, and to educate the people. Both these gentlemen, Hope and Tribune, are estimable men, highly intelligent, educated, and warm-hearted. We beseech them to forget and forgive, to shake hands and to devote all the energies they possess to the accomplishment of the grand task that they have taken upon themselves."

Seriously speaking, the quarrel of the two last named journals was more worthy of vernacular journalism of the Bangabasi and Dainik type than any journalism in English.

So far as the paragraph relates to us, it is a poor return for saving the honour of the entire Native Press. We admire the lofty delicacy of respecting a lady's feelings by allowing her to be blackguarded in print without a word of protest. Such delicacy is, happily, rare, as also such ladies as would be grateful for such favour of silence. The lady in question herself and her friends certainly do not sympathise with the transcendental reticence of our contemporaries of Amrita Bazar and Hope. She has expressed herself to friends of her own sex in terms of thankful approval and satisfaction of our own humble effort to protect her from outrage and punish the outrager. One of her connections, Baboo S. K. Chatterjee, writes to the same effect in the Indian Spectator. A neglected duty may confront you when least expected. We should not be surprised if hereafter the whole Native Press had to suffer for the sin of one vernacular print, condoned by the fatal indifference of the respectable Native English Press.

THE Americans are a go-a-head people and no mistake. But some of them have gone very far ahead of their normal go-a-headism of the whole body. Here, beyond question, is go-a-headism with a vengeance.

"Citizens of Colorado were dreadfully shocked when the grand jury in session at Denver presented bills of indictment against Secretary of State Rice and the State printers, charging them with conspiracy to defraud the commonwealth of Colorado. According to the published accounts, the last session of the Legislature was charged with scandals which tend to strain the confidence of the friends of universal suffrage. On the last night of the session the railway lobbyists carried in wine by the dozen cases. The sparkling fluid flowed as free as the milk and honey of tradition. Dignity and decorum were forgotten in both Houses, and a pandemonium prevailed until they adjourned. At seven o'clock the next morning the committee rooms assumed the appearance of a temple of Bacchus. The female committee clerks, half-crazed with champagne, were seated upon the laps of some hoary-headed favourite of the Assembly, with one arm around his neck and the other swinging above their heads an overflowing wineglass, and the enacting scenes were suggestive of a Roman Saturnalia. An estimate of the expenses of the session indicates that each word of all the laws and resolutions passed cost 2*l*."

"Go a head," did we say? Rather, is it not a strategic movement in an opposite direction—a march forwards to the rear? It really looks like a vaulting backwards. These Transatlantic Republicans are apparently tracing their steps to the source of their democratic system in Europe. If chronologically the American Revolution preceded the French outbreak, that was a mere historic accident. In the true history of the democratic evolution, the French were the precursors of the Americans. It was the French that brought the republican ideal to maturity and flower. It is true that the English had, more than a generation back, killed their king and established a commonwealth and paved the way for an able and remorseless tyrant without hereditary prestige. But the French did more. Commencing with suppressing the monarchy, the aristocracy, the clergy and the Church, they ended by abolishing God and the Future State by Act of Parliament, and established the worship of a courtesan as the Goddess of Reason. It is that French Festival of Reason that is recalled by these precious republicans (using the word in the sense of our Eastern Hemisphere) of Colorado.

THEIR DANGER AND THEIR REMEDY.

THIS is the day of the combination of Labour. The present year has been specially fruitful in overt manifestations on the most pronounced scale. Calcutta showed the way, quickly followed by Baroda and soon enough by Bombay. Then the disease, suppressed or allayed in the East, broke out with epidemic virulence in Western Europe—at the capital of the British Empire. There, indeed, it was a truly formidable affair. Aided by funds from Australia, the dock-labourers were able to hold out against the Directors. As the employers were firm, the struggle threatened to be a protracted one, possibly developing dangerous proportions and features. Other trades too followed suit, such as gas stokers, tailors, and so forth. At length, the Unions called all the labouring classes in London to join on the following Monday. The prospect was alarming. If the men did not come to terms, it was feared for one thing that the great metropolis would be consigned to darkness, and then the roughs, with which London abounds, might play the devil with her. As if this liability was not enough, the neglect of the retorts might result in incalculable danger to life and property. Luckily, the danger was prevented just in time by concession.

The success of the London workingmen has naturally inflamed the pretensions of the labouring classes throughout the civilised world, who hope, by a similar combination, to better their fortunes. And now news has come of the revolt of the workmen of Rotterdam.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Those who have given these remedies a fair trial freely admit that they inherently possess every property suitable for healing and removing eruptions, ulcerations, piles, abscesses, sores, bad legs, gathered breasts, and all disorders of the glandular system. When carefully rubbed in the Ointment relaxes the swollen muscles, diminishes inflammation, assuages pain, and even alleviates dangerous maladies which may have lasted for months, or even years. Holloway's excellent preparations are effective singly, resistless in combination, and have been recommended by grateful patients to be resorted to as alternatives when all other means of regaining health have failed. Their action is temperate, not violent or reducing.

The situation is far from pleasant to contemplate. It sets us, for one, to reflect on the slender securities of life and property under the modern system. These successive labour emeutes in one country after another, bring out vividly the risks and liabilities of the extensive use of machinery and of the massing of men to minister to our convenience and comfort. We are certainly far too dependent, than is desirable, upon blind forces of great intensity and upon the labour of scarcely more intelligent men in vast numbers.

Every advantage has its corresponding disadvantage. The institution of standing armies made monarchs and Governments independent of the great nobles and feudatories. But the armies themselves might mutiny or dictate to the State, as in old Rome.

Free Trade is good, international competition cheapening the necessities of life and generally lowering prices, but it ruins many home industries. Where, as in England, it supersedes national agriculture in the products for human sustenance, it leaves the means for feeding the nation at the mercy of foreigners and the chances of naval warfare.

Who will doubt the benefit of railways? Yet, they leave the lives of hundreds at the mercy of a single man of no education or character. A desperate man may in a diabolic fit—a thoughtless man for fun—destroy many of his fellowmen. The negligence of a single pointsman may cause a great disaster. So in ships—the larger the vessel the more the proportions of possible annihilation of lives and property by a single man or freak.

It is the same in modern factories—with our great steam and other power works. The possible occasional risks are commensurate with their grandeur and ordinary usefulness. But there are efforts of human ingenuity and accumulated powers which are more risky still. Think of the inconvenience and danger to a whole city from the failure of some of the great organizations on which its feeding and lighting and other necessities and comforts of life and society depend!

If with the progress of science and mechanical improvements, there had been a simultaneous moral progress of humanity all round, there would be less danger. But the fact was not so. There has not been and there is not the same advance in morals. At any rate, there are still vast numbers of savage men let loose in the midst of civilised society—men almost irresponsible for their actions, men of ungoverned passion, whose acts are not reducible to calculation beforehand.

It is impossible, and not expedient, to stop the use of machinery, but great care should be taken in laying and habitually employing it in great towns, where a slight miscarriage might destroy thousands, maybe the very members of Government and the legislature. Care as to what machinery and what sort of it and where and in what way; and care in strict superintendence of its working throughout, day and night. Greater care in special ought to be taken in laying underground systems of gas and water pipes, subterranean railways, and such other mines. For, inasmuch as their operation is not visible, there is the more likelihood of neglect, and the greater danger therefrom.

If Machinery and Multitude of Workingmen are necessary evils of modern society, surely we can minimise their pernicious influences—guard against their worse aberrations. We are afraid we do not always do so. A laissez faire spirit has grown up in these matters—until we do not care to protect ourselves beforehand from the obvious liabilities of the stupendous steam works and other blind forces we are fast multiplying about us. This indifferentism is due, no doubt, in some measure, to the paucity of actual accidents, but chiefly from pre-occupation, in many cases, in similar concerns. Above all, it is due to the teaching of the philosophers of Democracy—the publicists and political economists.

The massing together of multitudes in the same labour necessarily leads to combination. But the law might check it. It might be unwise to suppress what is perhaps the only safety of Labour. It certainly would be unfair to suppress combination of workmen without suppressing combination of employers. But we have gone farther, perhaps, than the proper limit by recognising Trades Unionism. This is to encourage mischievousness—to allow liberty to run to license. Trades Unionism is the efficient organization of combination into a vigorous instrument—a great power. These unions enable workmen to bully, harass, and inflict signal defeat upon the masters. But neither masters nor workmen should be allowed to trouble and distress the others. The policy of permitting such conspiracies—for they are nothing better—is certainly worth serious consideration.

It is all very well to talk of Freedom, but Freedom has its limits. There is no freedom to do wrong. Combination of the character of conspiracy is illegitimate.

In this matter Capital and Labour are not the only factors. Other and grave interests are frequently involved—the interests of society at large and of even the body politic may be concerned. It stands to reason that neither masters nor men should be allowed to combine against the vital interests of others, specially of the State or of society at large.

See how the late strike threatened the metropolis of England and of British civilization. The lives of thousands and millions of property were clearly in jeopardy from neglect of some of the great works for the convenience of the citizens. What, for instance, must have been the consequence, if the gas workmen did not soon return to duty! It is no joke to consign a great city like London to primeval darkness. The criminal classes, with which Babylon is stuffed to the throat, might make short work of it. It is lucky that they have now alternatives in kerosine and candles and, above all, in electric light, but then the combination of all the trades would leave no substitute, and such a combination is quite feasible. If one class of workmen can strike, why not several classes? An obstinate general resolve on the part of the working and labouring classes of the community, is quite within the bounds of possibility. There is nothing to prevent it. An accident may bring it about. A few able and determined wirepullers may effect such a league. Such a universal abstention from work might invite a grave disaster—a tremendous crash.

Such is the danger involved in unrestricted Trades Unionism. It is not every day that all the conditions towards a great danger are present. But they may any day be present. It behoves us to take timely warning from recent experiences. In some instances, great cities were within a measurable distance of a catastrophe. The other day, the maritime commerce of this metropolis was at a stand-still from the cartmen striking work. At another time, some years back, the whole city was threatened with death by poisoning from accumulation of animal excreta in consequence of the nightmen's strike. The other day, in London, the situation was most threatening. And now we do not know how the matter will end in Holland.

It is time for statesmen to interfere. It is worthy of the most anxious deliberation whether the present carte blanche to combine should not be withdrawn. We are inclined to think it should, the Mills and Fawcetts notwithstanding. A privilege which may be abused to the compromise of the best interests of the community, nay, to the destruction of society and civilization, ought not, we are persuaded, to be maintained. At any rate, Trades Unionism ought to be placed under strong and specific legal checks. Society ought, in its interest, to be able to end a strike by mediating between masters and men.

THE TRUTH ABOUT MAHOMEDAN EDUCATION.

THOSE gentlemen who can speak with some authority on the Mahomedan Social and Educational and other questions, and those who are anxious to make a false impression upon the public in the garb of a well-informed and learned Mahomedan give numerous reasons of the backwardness of their co-religionists both in educational and cultural progress. There may be some truth in the assertion that the general poverty of the Mussulmans is a great drawback to their education and that the erroneous educational policy of the Government had kept them behind other natives in the race of progress. But, as far as I have been able to judge, such explanations are not generally applicable in the case of the upper and middle classes of the Mahomedans who can well meet the expenses of their education and who could have made up the deficiencies of School Education in special branches at home. They have not only neglected their English Education, but most of them, as a rule, are very indifferent to their own temporal and religious education, and their Persian and Arabic languages of which at one time they were so proud. While the Bengali Hindu Civilian is successfully passing the Honour Examination in Persian and getting the prescribed handsome reward, the Mahomedan boys are mostly plucked in their second language in the University Examinations and cannot correctly speak or write a few sentences in Persian. By the middle classes I mean, of course, the respectable classes who are not poor and not the lower classes who are well to do. Now I ask the Mahomedan Reformers and Educationists what explanation can they offer of the deplorable educational condition of the upper and the middle classes. I think the parents and guardians of the boys and the present state of the Mahomedan Society are greatly responsible for the undesirable results of the education of boys of these classes. Much depends upon the healthy and salutary influence which the guardians and parents exercise upon the young mind by their examples.

It depends mostly upon the conduct of the parents and guardians of the boys what sort of influence they exercise over the character of their children. Among the females of the high classes there is little which will further the education of the boys, but on the contrary there are many things by which they unintentionally bar the proper education of their own children. There are many guardians who are, in my opinion, barred by their habits and character to do any good to their children. There are others who can set excellent examples and exercise very good influence on the characters of their boys, but by their unusual habits of personal comfort and some erroneous rules of our society they are precluded from mixing with their boys at a time when the foundations of their character are laid and when their society might be most beneficial to the boys. These parents and guardians, who are mostly very conservative people, will on no account make any sacrifices of their own comfort or deviate from the old rules, even for the obvious good of their own sons and other near relations. From his childhood there is a gulf of separation between the boy and his father, which gradually widens as he grows up. When he can most enjoy the society of his father and benefit by it and when he can help his guardian and elders, he is kept at a great distance by them. In 24 hours the father and son or other guardian and his ward scarcely meet once, and there are many instances in which the father never sees his son for days, although they live in the same house in separate apartments. These boys are entirely left at the mercy of an unpolished and unmannerly and uneducated Meajee or Mollah at the very time when his whole character and habits are being formed, and they only see their father when they are sent for some thing particular, or when they have some thing to say, or on ceremonial occasions and at the time of going to invitations and parties. In former days, when Mahomedan Society was flourishing, when there were satisfactory arrangements for their education, the wealthy Mahomedans used to appoint Attaliks (a class of tutor who were chiefly responsible for the good character and manners of those days and who were appointed in addition to other teachers) for training up their children. Now-a-days, the double functions are performed by an incompetent Meajee who generally comes from a lower grade of society and about whom there is but little respectable and gentlemanlike.

The conservative and old Mahomedans consider it below their dignity to mix and associate with their boys, be they their sons or their nephews. In their opinion, there must always be a respectable distance between them and the younger members of their family, including boys. That distance is not in most cases respectable, but deplorable and objectionable. This is only a lame excuse on their part to protect their selfish comforts and inconvenient habits. Those who are conscious of their own bad habits, are, by their common sense and sense of justice, prevented from coming in contact with their boys and relations. They are to a certain extent excusable for keeping themselves aloof from their boys. This time-honored but mischievous separation between the Mahomedan boys and their parents and guardians does great harm to the cause of Mahomedan education in the higher classes, the boys of which in their school days fall an easy prey to the evil influences of the society of bad people. There is, indeed, no safe-guard for them against their being plunged into the maelstrom of evil example. When the boys get spoiled, learn bad manners, and abandon the grand principles of their family, their parents, instead of finding out the true cause of it, become angry with them and blame the present system of education and many other unknown and unobservable things. I can dare to assert that out of 100, in 75 cases, they are entirely and directly the cause of the ruin of their own boys. Had they trained them up in their own way and not treated them like strangers and deprived them of the benefit of their experience and influence, their boys would have never gone astray and blighted their prospects in life. Those parents who have not the courage, honour, and justice to mend or improve their own manners and habits or give their evil ways up for such a noble cause, must be, in my opinion, very cruel, unjust, and indifferent to their own personal interests. The best remedy for curing the educational complaint of the Mahomedan boys of this class is in the hands of their parents and guardians as I have clearly pointed out, and if they neglect to administer it, it is their own fault and they must be responsible for it. It is hopeless to teach boys good manners, and high principles, and form their character by lectures and arguments, as some learned and experienced persons would do. It simply makes them impertinent and unmanageable. Unaccustomed to discipline, left without the influence of salutary example or admonition at home, these unlicked hobbled boys have taken to the notion that argument is the only true umpire between them and their parents and elders—the only tribunal to decide matters. I would advise the Mahomedan guardians and parents of this class to form a committee for self-improvement—for the reformation of their own hitherto neglecting and neglected selves—instead of going up with long petitions to Government, in season and out of season, and bewailing the condition of their co-religionists.

As this class of boys live thus in an independent manner and their actions and conduct are not properly supervised by their parents and guardians, they get more liberty than is good for them. In fact, they do just as they please. Each Mahomedan student becomes a fashionable gentleman before he has passed the Entrance Examination. This statement will be borne out by all who have carefully observed the Mahomedan Boy of the Period. He requires good dress, good shoes and first class toilet and other necessities of self-gratification. These things take up a good deal of his time and gradually and imperceptibly lead him to other and more dangerous paths and germinate in him the habits of extravagance—that plague which has been the ruin of most Mahomedan families. A Bengalee Hindu under-graduate or even graduate in his pupilage never thinks much about combing his hair, not to speak of the dress, whereas a third class boy of the Medressch takes half an hour for his toilet. A student should remain a student until he has finished his education and is able to earn. The Mahomedan schoolboy is not only a fashionable gentleman, but, at the same time, he is a politician, social reformer, educationist and what not. He learns habits of extravagance when in the school, or I should say rather in his cradle, and for this ruinous habit also his guardians and relations are responsible.

If the respectable and upper classes of Mahomedans are actually desirous to see their children follow the footsteps of their illustrious forefathers, they should not lose the opportunity of remedying the defects that I have stated so freely. They must make sacrifices, mix and associate with their sons and young relations at least moderately, and be always in touch with them, so that the natural link of true affection and sympathy between them may not be broken. They ought to do their duty by their children and it should not be entirely left to others. The strong natural wire of sympathy and affection which exists between the father and son and other elder and younger relations, is the safest and surest medium for guardians of conveying the good effects of their examples to their children. Every good trait in the father is imperceptibly and permanently engrafted on the mind of his son. No amount of lecturing can do this work better. Be yourself the model for your son, if you sincerely wish that he should be a model of good according to your own views. A father conceals his bad habit or worse parts of his character from his sons and other boys in the family, and thinks that that separation, to which I have alluded above, will not allow the youngsters to see them, and thus his bad example shall not affect them and he will be saved the mortification of being lowered in their estimation. This fond hope is vain on the very face of it. The mere knowledge of the boys that their parents or elders do a particular objectionable thing or have a particular bad habit, is enough to encourage their minds to that particular vice. They will never say what they feel, but they will not hesitate to imitate them in that way. Therefore, this hiding policy is worse, in many cases, than open and straightforward practice.

The better classes of Mahomedans ought to reform themselves and their habits before posing in the world as reformers, &c. There is ample room for reformation in their own households. They should also give up the habits of extravagance and false displays and discourage them in their sons and relations, by example and not by high-flown lectures which are of no use whatever.

A Mahomedan Reis takes his meals at 3 P.M. and 3 A.M., another leaves his bed at 10 A.M. and a third takes his tea at 2 A.M. Under such circumstances, how can their sons or young relations join him in eating or meet him daily? There are other difficulties for which a gentleman cannot receive his sons or nephews at night at his own apartments, or thinks it would be inconvenient for him to do so.

Let the higher classes of Mahomedans reform their habits and manners, and the classes who are below them will surely follow their good example. Let them take the lead in this matter. For carrying out my suggestions they need not wait upon Government, or call any meeting or invoke any Reformer; they can do everything sitting at home and by themselves. Those Mahomedans who feel and know the force of the facts that I have adduced, never complain of the failure of their sons in education, &c., and their children are true copies of their fathers and forefathers and are taking the lead of the Mahomedan community of India.

A MAHOMEDAN.

METIABROOJ.

September 26, 1889.

Sir,—I regret much to report to you, for the information of the public, the lamented death of Nawab Sarir Ara Zainab Begum Saheba, wife of Prince Jahan Kadr Meerza Bahadoor and eldest daughter of the late King of Oudh. The deceased was born at Lucknow before the annexation of Oudh. By her mother's side, she descended from a noble Syed family of which Nawab Mukhtarud Dowlah was the head. The descendants of this Nawab are now Government pensioners. She was brought up under the sole care of her royal father, and when still a child she was married to her cousin Prince Jahan Kadr Meerza Bahadoor, the most beloved nephew of the King. Even after the marriage, she was not permitted to remain far from her august father and it was for this reason, His Majesty assigned separate and distinct apartments in the Sultan-khanah to the married couple. Both the Prince and the Princess were in the enjoyment of various benefits, presents and tokens of love from the King. It was only after His Majesty's death that the lady was obliged to leave, under orders of Government, her old residence to which she clung with feelings of as much love as of religious sacredness.

Since the death of the King, it is said, she had been pining away. The sorrow attendant on the removal of the family to Shah Munzil, the premises lately rented by her husband, sat deeply on her mind. Her financial prospects were not cheering. She hoped that Government would do justice to her case, but she was therein disappointed. She was in receipt of a monthly allowance of Rs. 600 only granted by Government for herself and her three daughters, and with this scanty income, she was somehow maintaining her position. She was lately suffering from small-pox and fever to which she succumbed yesterday at noon. The best medical aid was called in but to no avail. It was her last wish that her remains should be buried in the Imambarah close to the grave of her royal father and Mr. Upton was good enough to grant the request. It may be recorded here that it was the first act of kindness done by Mr. Upton since his assumption of the office of Agent to the Governor-General. The funeral was celebrated at midnight amid loud lamentations of the husband, brothers and other gentlemen of Garden Reach. There was a large crowd and some Bengali and European gentlemen also attended the mournful procession. All the sons of the late King, with the exception of Princes Mirza Kamar Kadr, Mirza Asman Jah and Mirza Mahomed Jogee, were in attendance and all were in deep mourning. Princes Mirza Mahomed Askari and Furrakh Mirza made the necessary arrangements for the funeral. It is said that Prince Mirza Kamar Kadr, full of prejudices as he is, did not attend the funeral as he feared, death on a Wednesday being an ill-omen, any one joining the ceremony would be subject to the influence of evil stars.

The deceased did not receive due marks of respect and good treatment at the hands of the Government. She hoped that her claims would yet be considered, but met with utter disappointment. According to the Mahomedan law and custom in noble families, the eldest daughter receives one-half of that assigned to the eldest brother, but this fact was ignored by Government in her case. I hope that the justice and sympathy denied to the mother, may be fully shown to the three daughters left by her, and that Government will do some such thing by which their sorrow may be lessened. The young Princesses were in the enjoyment of separate allowances during the life time of the King, after whose death, a monthly allowance of Rs. 600 only was granted to the deceased lady for herself and three daughters, of whom the youngest is still unmarried.

In fine, I do heartily condole with Prince Jahan Kadr Mirza Bahadoor on this sad bereavement. It is the greatest misfortune that has befallen him as can never be repaired in any way. A few days ago he lost his only two grand-daughters, and his eldest daughter is also very ill. Prayer to the Giver of Life is the only remedy in such a case.

Public Paper.

INDEPENDENT TIPPERAH.

Letter No. 476HT—IX-1, dated Chittagong, the 9th July 1888.
From—D. R. Lyall, Esq., Commissioner of the Chittagong Division,
To—The Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

In accordance with the usual custom, I have the honor to forward the report of the Assistant Political Agent of Hill Tipperah, together with the remarks of the Political Agent in original, and to request that printed copies may be sent for record.

2. The report is due from me on 30th June, but was only received on that day, the cause of delay being the non-receipt of information from the Maharaja's officers. The report is less bulky than formerly, but contains all necessary information.

3. The year reported on has been a very good one for the Joo meas, who constitute the bulk of the population; and, as in the Hill Tracts of Chittagong, the cotton crop has been a bumper one, while all other crops were good, some excellent.

The revenue increased in consequence by the very substantial sum of Rs. 47,442, the receipts being Rs. 3,37,352 against Rs. 2,89,910 in the previous year, and Rs. 2,38,805, the average of the three years before then. The income of the State has thus improved by close on a lakh of rupees in two years, yet the only improvement reported is the construction of two small roads.

These will be very useful, but the people can hardly think that they constitute a sufficient return for their paying Rs. 3 taxation, where they paid Rs. 2 two years ago.

The increase of plough cultivation is satisfactory, but it is due to the hill people themselves taking to this mode of cultivation, and not to the migration of the people from the plains, the right given last year to British subjects to acquire rights of occupancy having had so far no effect.

4. The state of things commented on in paragraphs 24 to 33 of the Assistant Political Agent's report is very unsatisfactory, and shows that any change which the Maharaja has introduced has been merely a change in name, and that things are going on in exactly the same way as before; in other words, that the State is being slowly but surely ruined. The new minister has succeeded in raising a much larger income, but he has failed to induce the Maharaja to alter his system of spending, or to introduce any reform in the way of retrenchment.

5. Notwithstanding the efforts of the Jubraj to improve the administration of justice, there can be no real improvement until the officers who administer it, and the police who send up the cases, are properly paid. The large number of criminal sentences reversed on appeal points conclusively to bad work in the courts below. The testimony given in the end of paragraph 35 to the rectitude of the highest court is satisfactory.

6. The question of detention in jails other than those recognised as regular jails, referred to in paragraph 40, may lie over until the further report promised is submitted.

7. The military force is little more than a name.

Out of 263 men of which it consists, 107 are Bengalis, men who may make efficient policemen, but not efficient soldiers. Necessarily better men cannot be got as they are not paid.

8. The occurrence of cases of suttee has been previously reported, and the matter is still pending.

The whole thing is far from creditable to the Government. If the Government did not hear of the cases, it argues a very weak executive; while if they were known of, and no steps taken until the Assistant Political Agent heard of them, the Government is still more to blame.

9. The Political Agent's forwarding letter deals with the great point at issue—the financial state of Government of Hill Tipperah.

It is now nearly three years since I visited the Maharaja, and impressed on him the absolute necessity for reformation, as reported in my remarks in forwarding the report for 1885-86.

He appointed a capable man to the post, but for various reasons he resigned the office after a very short trial, and the fact that he has not yet been paid the full salary claimed, and that even part (Rs. 2,000) of that admitted to be due was only paid between November and February last, shows how difficult it is to obtain money from the Raj.

His successor with the best intentions has clearly no influence, and all his efforts so far have only succeeded in raising the revenue without reforming a single abuse.

I am not prepared to endorse what Mr. Price says regarding the Minister in his 6th and 7th paragraphs, and rather agree with his predecessor's opinion quoted by him in the former paragraph.

10. The real obstacle to reform is the Maharaja himself, and his personal character; and so long as he sets himself against, or even passively resists, radical reform and a severe check on his own expenditure, no reform can be carried out, nor can the state of the exchequer be improved.

The Maharaja has the firm conviction that it would be derogatory to his dignity to act otherwise than he now does, and unless under compulsion of the paramount power, I am quite convinced no improvement will ever take place.

11. The state of things represented in the latter part of Mr. Price's paragraph 14a and paragraphs 15 and 16 is correctly described, and the Maharaja alone is responsible for the state of affairs there represented.

Mr. Price's language is strong, but the state of things represented justifies strong language.

12. I am reluctantly compelled to say that I agree with the Political Agent that matters in Hill Tipperah have now reached such a state that Government would no longer be justified in looking on and letting the ruin of the State be completed. The Maharaja was fully warned by me in September 1885 that reform was imperative, but that Government was most averse to interfere, and wished him to carry out the reform himself.

This he said he would do, but he has utterly failed to keep his promise, and the time has now come for more active interference.

13. I do not agree with Mr. Price's proposals, however, and think it would suffice if Government insisted on the Maharaja appointing a Government servant of the description given in clause 6 of paragraph 18 of the Political Agent's report as Minister with full powers of reform.

I do not think the proposal to appoint the Jubraj as Regent would be agreeable to himself or to the Maharaja; and if the Maharaja only agrees to make over the power of controlling expenditure to an efficient officer, and restricts his own personal expenditure, things will soon come straight.

14. I would also most strongly deprecate the re-appointment of the Manager whom the Maharaja has dismissed as an unnecessary act of direct disrespect to him, which the circumstances of the case by no means call for.

Whoever is appointed Manager of the estates should be free from all connection with the past, and should be subordinate to the Minister.

15. In substitution of Mr. Price's proposals, I would therefore ask Government to demand from the Maharaja the appointment of an officer such as has been described above, nominated by the Government of Bengal, as Minister under pain of removal from the guddi should he refuse to do so, and that such officer should be vested with full powers to deal with the finances of the State for a period of four or five years, subject only to the control of the Bengal Government, the same Government fixing a suitable provision for the private expenditure of the Maharaja, and that such officer should have full powers both in Hill Tipperah and in the zemindaries, and be removable only by the Government of Bengal. Without some such action I am quite convinced no reform is to be hoped for, and that, as before, promises will be made which will be kept in the same way as those already made.

16. While making these proposals, I wish at the same time to express my respect for the Maharaja's private character.

It is solely as a ruler that he fails, but unfortunately in a country like Hill Tipperah, the personal character of the ruler, however amiable, may ruin the State by its weakness, and when such is the case, I think the paramount power is bound to interfere.

17. I may add that I had no previous intimation from the Political Agent that he was about to send up such proposals, and that I should have directed him not to send them up in an annual report had he consulted me beforehand, and that I have decided to send on his report after some hesitation.

I have been induced to do so because the Hill Tipperah report is no longer published in the Gazette, and because after full consideration I could see no way of carrying out the reforms necessary, unless by a radical change.

The annual report on the State also differs in its character from the general run of annual reports, and is the only occasion in the year in which Government reviews the whole management of the State.

18. I concur with the Political Agent's remarks regarding Babu Umakanta Das. He fills a difficult position with considerable tact.

REPORT ON THE ADMINISTRATION FOR THE YEAR 1888-89.

GENERAL STATE OF POLICE, CRIME, AND ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

32. In its numerical strength and general distribution, the police force remained the same as before. In its functions, too, there was no change. It has the dual duty of preserving public peace and collecting revenue. Since the appointment of a Superintendent for each Division in 1886-87, there has been noticeable improvement in the general conduct and tone of this important branch of the Administration. It will, however, be some time before a thorough change for the better can be effected. For, among other circumstances, the rate of pay that is allowed is a great drawback. The pay, as a rule, is Rs. 20 a month for an officer in charge of a station, and Rs. 10 to Rs. 15 for one in charge of an outpost with no prospect for pension and no extra allowance for travelling.

33. There was no noticeable change in respect of crime either in the hills or in the plains. In the former, indeed, offences do not take place often. But most of those that do occur are not reported, the police being located close to British territory among Bengalis far away from the hill villages. The Courts also are situated in the plains near British borders. It is desirable that these institutions should be removed to proper places in the interior. Their removal is sure to be followed by extension of cultivation and increase of population, which are objects of paramount importance to the country.

34. The Sub-divisional Officers have the functions of Magistrate, Judge and Collector. In the last two capacities they do not get proportionately as much work as under the first. This is chiefly owing to the facts that the revenue of most of the mehals are let out in farm or taluk is paid in the Sudder Treasury at Agartala, and that the differences between landlords and tenants, such as are not settled amicably, are generally made subjects of complaints before criminal courts. The laws regarding civil suits are few, but they are a great deal too much in favour of landlords.

35. Besides the three sub-divisional courts, there are five courts at Agartala, viz., three original and two appellate. The latter are generally dilatory; otherwise they work pretty well. Justice is indeed fairly administered when the cases are between subjects and subjects. But when the State or any one having influence in the Durbar is one of the parties, the presiding officers of the Court seem occasionally to lose nerve.

36. There were altogether 585 criminal cases for disposal against 598 of the previous year. Of these, 181, or nearly 31 per cent., were rejected; 54, with 71 persons, remained under trial at the close of the year; and 350, with 703 persons, were tried, 401 persons, or 57 per cent. being convicted. In 234 cases, or in two cases out of every three tried, enquiry had been made by the police, who in 153 cases had arrested and brought up 282 persons, of whom 184 or 79.2 per cent. of the number tried were convicted. This was so far satisfactory. But in respect of it, there were 82 cases of appeal. In 21 of them only the sentences of the lower courts were confirmed, and in 6 the appeal was rejected; while in 41 the sentences were reversed, in 9 modified, and in the remaining 5 further enquiry was directed. Seven of the unsuccessful appellants again carried their cases up to the khas appellate court, where in one the order appealed against was reversed, in two it was modified, and in four confirmed. The whole result therefore was discreditable to the original Courts. It is not always easy for persons who are dissatisfied with the orders of the sub-divisional officers to duly prefer and conduct appeal cases at Agartala where the appellate courts are situated. This is owing to the distance of the place from the sub-divisions and to the delay which generally occurs in the disposal of cases. The matter has been brought to the notice of the Maharaja.

37. Of the total number of cases mentioned above, British subjects were concerned in 218, which shows a slight increase compared with the figure, 198, of the previous year. None of the cases had any especial interest. The number of persons for trial also rose from 213 to 257. Of this number, 223 only were tried, 153 or 68.3 per cent. being convicted. The increase of cases noticed here is due to increase of the facility with which trade and cultivation can be carried on in the State. The former is entirely in the hands of British subjects and the latter partly.

38. The number of civil suits fell from 523 to 478, which is ascribed to the re-establishment of good feeling between the landlord and tenants in a tract in which hitherto there was want of it. In 158 of these suits British subjects were concerned, viz., in 83 as plaintiffs, in 34 as defendants, while in 41 the plaintiffs and defendants were all British subjects. The entire value of the suits was Rs. 43,582, of which the sum of Rs. 7,131 only, or 16.3 per cent., was decreed. This is said to be due to a big case valued at over Rs. 24,000 having remained undisposed of. The total amount of fees realized was Rs. 2,714. There were 39 cases of appeal against the order of the lower court, which, together with 16 pending cases of the previous year, were all disposed of. In 11, the appeal was wholly decreed, and in 3 partly, while in 5 remandment was ordered; in 7 the appeal was rejected, and in the remaining 29 the decision of the lower court was upheld. In reference to these, there were 11 cases of appeal before the khas appellate court, where one of them was decreed wholly and two partially and two were remanded. In the remaining six cases, the decision of the lower court was confirmed.

JAIL.

39. There were four jails or lock-ups in the State, containing at the close of the year 37 prisoners in all. The prisoners were, as usual, treated with leniency. Their out-door work consisted chiefly of making and repairing roads and clearing jungle. When work of this kind was not procurable, they manufactured baskets in the jails. Their earning, however, is always much short of the charges that are incurred by the administration on their account.

40. The practice under which people are sometimes kept in confinement in what are called Alangs, as reported last year, is believed to continue still, but no complaint about it was received during the year.

MILITARY AND FRONTIER MATTERS.

41. There were in the year under report 292 men, rank and file, in His Highness' service. The best portion of the number was engaged on duty in the frontier guard posts, of which there were three in the Koylashar Division on the Sylhet side and one at Eksari on the Gumti towards the side of the Chittagong Hill Tracts. During the period of disturbance alluded to before in paragraph 4, additional posts were maintained in the interior.

42. There was some improvement in the condition of the force to which comparatively greater attention was paid by the administration during the year. A good quantity of ammunition was brought under a license granted by Government, and a supply of arms is also being arranged to be imported for the use of the men, as the guns now with them are mostly out of order. During the year patrol communication was established between the guards of the Koylashar Division and those of Sylhet.

EDUCATION.

43. The number of schools maintained by the state rose from 16 to 18, and that of boys attending the same from 393 to 493. With the exception of two sub-divisional schools and the school at Agartala, the institutions are all ephemeral patshalas which are not always found in working state. The Agartala School not being in suitable condition, many of the children of the Thakur families, who were students there, have gone to Comillah for education. Their expenses are chiefly borne by the state, which pays about Rs. 100 a month on their account. This shows at once the necessity that exists for the school being improved and also the means by which the same can be effected. During the year the Jubraj visited this institution and awarded prizes to the students.

DISPENSARIES.

44. From the four charitable dispensaries of the State 5,003 out-door patients received medicines. Among the members of the military, police and the other establishments of the Administration, 1,152 persons obtained gratuitous medical treatment of whom 1,143 were cured, five died, and four remained under treatment at the close of the year. The total daily attendance of the patients was, on the whole, 48.6. Surgical operations were performed in 249 cases and vaccine operations in 1,946. In respect of the last, a fee of four annas in each case was levied by the Administration, of which the vaccinator received three annas as his remuneration and one anna went to the State treasury to meet such charges of the Medical Department as were incurred in connection with the work. The prevailing diseases of the year were fever, diarrhoea, dysentery, worms and skin affections. Sporadic cases of cholera also occurred at times.

POST-OFFICE.

45. The Government post-office attached to the agency continued to work well. Money-orders and insured covers of the value of Rs. 83,785 and Rs. 3,815, respectively, or Rs. 87,600 on the whole, were issued during the year, against Rs. 78,842 of the former and Rs. 9,856 of the latter, or Rs. 88,698 on the aggregate of the previous year. The rise in the number of money-orders, and the fall in that of insured covers, were both due to want of supply of currency notes. The value of money-orders paid by the office fell from Rs. 52,606 to Rs. 31,116 owing to the Administration on the score of cost not availing itself of the post-office as largely as before in the matter of getting remittances from the sub-divisions. Two new post-offices may now be advantageously opened in the State, namely, one at Sonamura and one at Koylashar. But the Administration does not seem inclined to view with favour any proposal on the subject.

STATE OF COMMUNICATIONS.

46. The state of communications in the country is not good and there was no attempt made by the Administration during the year to improve it. Lahars or hill-paths were cut as usual. But the sub-divisional stations are not yet connected with one another by roads, nor are they connected with Agartala. In the rainy season two of them are accessible by rivers which run through British territory. But the Hill Tipperah portions of these rivers contain many snags and other obstructions for which they are easily passable.

47. Of the two roads that were constructed in 1887-88, as noticed in the annual report for that year, the one which passes through the Chanddagran hills has been kept in a fair condition, but the other has been abandoned. The latter, indeed, was not made in the form of a regular road. It was at best a foot-path passing through precipitous hills and therefore not much used; consequently it was blocked up by jungle soon. It is necessary that Koylashar and Dharmanagar, between which this path was cut, should be connected by a road.

BOUNDARY MATTERS.

48. During the year additional pillars were erected on the line of boundary between Chagalnaya in Noakhali and Hill Tipperah. This line is now sufficiently marked. In the hilly tracts on the Sylhet side, the boundary posts are generally very far from one another, a circumstance which sometimes leads to disputes. In a few cases the administration has already questioned the correctness of the line so demarcated. It appears that the lands therein concerned have all along been within the jurisdiction of the state, though situated outside its boundary as defined and settled. This latter fact did not hitherto come to the notice of the district authorities, as the lands were covered with jungle. It is necessary therefore that inter-visible posts should be erected on the line to prevent the possibility of further disputes being raised.

MISCELLANEOUS.

49. The rule under which no excise shop is allowed to stand within a mile of the common boundary of Hill Tipperah and British territory was found in a few instances to be disregarded on either side. The facts have been brought to the notice of the proper authorities, and it is hoped that the shops, which are wrongly situated, will be duly removed. The rule is a salutary one and should be strictly observed both in this state and in the adjacent districts.

50. The head-clerk of this office, Babu Govind Chandra Dass, is a very trustworthy officer. He performed his duties throughout the year with great care, intelligence and zeal.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From

the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE POLICE AND THE BARBER:

AN EPISODE IN THE HISTORY OF TANTIA THE BHEEL.

SCENE—A FOREST IN CENTRAL INDIA.

A Jemadar (Sergeant) and a few Police Constables are seated near a tree.

Constable No. 1.—What is it shakes so hard that bushy hedge?

" No. 2.—Maybe it is a snake or beast of prey.

Jemadar.—Or one of Tantia's trusty bodyguard

Sent out to see what we might doing be.

But soft! Reach me my gun and load your own.

Constable No. 3.—But hark! A human voice hails through the wood!

" No. 1.—Whence can it be?

Jemadar.— Perhaps the robber scout

Shouts to his fellows news of what we do.

Constable No. 2.—Look! There's a man perched high on yonder tree.

" No. 3.—He shouts again! He shouts to us for help!

Jemadar.—Bid him come down and banish all his fears.

Constable No. 3.—(Raising his voice). Fear, man, no more! We are the Government.

" No. 1.—Even the Police Imperial! Come down!

" No. 2.—Mark how he looks about him as he comes!
(The man descends and advances)

" No. 1.—See how he trembles as he hurries up!

" No. 3.—I've known no greater coward than this man.

ENTER A BARBER.

Jemadar (to Barber).—Compose thyself. Thy mind seems much disturbed.

Constable No. 3.—Sit down awhile and quiet thou thy soul.

Barber.—I would have died with fear but for your help.

Constable No. 1 (to Barber).—Which is thy village? Whither art thou bound?

Jemadar (to Barber).—Thou seemst to be a barber. Art thou one?

Constable No. 3.—His dress bespeaks him one and skill his look.

Barber.—And many a time I've served even princes well.

Jemadar (to Barber).—Well, then, come on, I'll pay thee handsomely,
If payment from Police thou carest for.

Barber (aside).—Thou shalt pay dear! (to Jemadar) I will and do my best.

THE BARBER PROCEEDS WITH HIS WORK.

Jemadar.—The smartest fellow that I ere have known!
How neat and soft his razor fine he plies!

Barber.—E'en so. My motto is a neat clean shave.

Constable No. 3.—'Tis rarely that we come across such men.

" No. 1.—(To Barber.) How didst thou chance to get atop that tree?

Barber.—My house is in a village not far off,
And yester eve I started thence to see
A kinsman who is dangerously ill.
The way I had to go is near the hedge
Which grows beside the tree I saw you from,
And which I scarce had reached when suddenly
I saw before me lie across the path,
Its face away from me and half asleep,

A tiger fierce and strong weltering in blood,
Its massive head reclining, filled with gore,
Against the mangled carcase of a deer.

I felt a thrill of horror at the sight,
And knew not for a while what was to do;
But speedily the danger I was in Drove me to seek a place to hide myself,
And I betook me to that spreading tree,
And on its branches rested till you came.

Jemadar.—Where is the tiger gone?

Barber.— I do not know.

It left the place before I saw you here.

Constable No. 1.—But what was it that shook that bush so hard,
Before we heard you shout from up the tree?

Barber.—'Twas only one of Tantia's robber band
From whose attacks I sought your powerful aid.

Jemadar.—Friend, canst thou tell us aught of Tantia Bheel?

Barber.—I know not much, Sir, of this daring man,
Who is a terror unto all around;
But what I know I'll tell you cheerfully.
His strength is great and courage past compare,
Amazing is his knowledge of these woods,
Where never tiger roamed more fearlessly,
Or faster ran the swift, light-footed hare.

Constable No. 1.—And hence it is that all attempts to catch
This King of Robbers have so useless proved.

" No. 2.—And we ourselves will sure be doing well
To leave this place unsafe without delay.

Jemadar.—No! we shall yet find out the whereabouts
Of this bold outlaw and put him in chains.

Constable No. 2.—No! Be advised. It is no easy thing
To pierce these yawning wilds in search of him.

Jemadar.—But I am now resolved to go at once,
And do not care if you will stay behind.

Constable No. 2.—Not so! we'll follow you where'er you go,
But let us see at first what risks we run.
So, let us ask our friend what he can say
Of where we may the dauntless robber find.

Barber.—The man has not a fixed place to live,
And hard it is to count his many haunts.
His followers are numerous indeed,
To whom he pays his visits one by one.

(Looking up.)—I now bethink me of the only way
To bring to book the curse of all the land.

Jemadar (Eagerly).—Oh! what is it, my worthy friend?

Barber.—(Cutting off the tip of the Jemadar's nose and rising abruptly.)
'Tis this!

Now do thy worst! Know me for Tantia Bheel!

Jemadar.—Help! Help! My friends! Up! After him! At once!

(Exeunt in confusion, carrying off the bleeding Jemadar's body.)

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Secretary of State has spoken on the Public Service Commission Report. He approves of the raising of the age of the Civil Service candidates to 23.

A COOPER'S HILL man has started the idea of an organization of the entire body. To make it a success he proposes an annual dinner. He wishes that they should be recognized as an "Imperial Corps" and the members called "Royal Indian Engineers." Yes, they ought to be a caste, like the Covenanted Civil Service.

THE two sons of the Viceroy—the Earl of Kerry and Lord Charles Fitzmaurice will visit India during the Prince season.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR, accompanied by Lord and Lady Claude Hamilton, reaches Bombay on the 9th November and goes over to his uncle the Duke of Connaught at Poona, and passes five days at Magdalla House before commencing his regular Indian tour. With the advantage of advice from near and dear relation, the Prince ought to be tolerably independent of mere official mantras.

The Prince, among others, visits Hyderabad. The Nizam will entertain him in right royal style and has sanctioned two lacs of rupees for two days' entertainments.

IT has been decided to consider all the stations on the Sind Section of the North-Western Railway as situate on the external frontier of British India. What are the privileges secured by this decision?

THE Pekin Gazette is a thousand years old. During this period, nineteen hundred of its editors have been beheaded at the rate of about two in a year. Notwithstanding the new Official Secrets law, native Indian editors live in much happier times.

THE local under-Congress or the Bengal Provincial Conference was held last week in the British Indian Association Rooms. It was opened by an address by the Hon'ble Dr. Mohendralal Sircar under the presidency of Raja Pearymohun Mookerjee, one of the Vice Presidents of the said Association. A feature of the meeting of the Bengal delegates was the presence of a number of rayyets—about one hundred—from the khas mehals of Jellamutta and Sujamutta in the Midnapore district who complained of the working of the Certificate Act.

THE Indian Mirror makes an article on the Berhampore College the occasion for repeating the oft told tale of Maharanee Surnomoyee's charities. In doing so the writer bungles in true Mirrorial fashion. He does not know even the names and titles of the family. To crown all, he puts her out of her proper caste. For such is the effect of giving her for husband Rajah Kristo Nath Coar. Coar is the designation of a different caste from that which the illustrious lady adorns. There never was such a being as Rajah Kristo Nath Coar.

TOWARDS the end of last week, a telegraphic puzzle vexed Indian society. It was wired from London that "General Sleeman, the Thuggee suppressor, died yesterday." General Sleeman, the Thuggee suppressor, has been so long dead that the telegram might well excite surprise. It must be a mistake—of epithet at least. So the Statesman pointed it out. In setting the matter right, however, our contemporary itself made a curious lapse. Says the Statesman :—

"Major-General W. H. Sleeman of Thuggee fame, to whose efforts principally the suppression of these terrible crimes was due, died at sea on his way home from Calcutta on the 10th February 1856, shortly before the Mutiny."

Was the 10th February 1856 shortly before the Mutiny? We have a notion that the Mutiny occurred in 1857. The out-break at Meerut took place on the 19th May of that year, if we remember aright, or more than a year and a quarter subsequent to the death of poor broken-hearted Sleeman.

MESSRS. SCHNEIDER have prepared plans for a bridge across the Channel from Calais to Dover. The total length is 24 miles, the number of piers 120, the width of openings 320 feet—1,640 feet, in the clear, the head way for ships 180 feet, the greatest depth of water 180 feet, and the height from the foundation to the top of the steel work 600 feet. The work can not now be an engineering impossibility, but the cost is prohibitive.

THE proprietor and editor of the Hongkong Telegraph, Mr. Fraser Smith, sued the proprietor of the China Mail for libel, assessing the damages at 10,000 dollars. The suit has been decreed for 25 dollars only and costs.

THE Municipality has been lucky in its last loan of Rs. 11,15,000. The whole of it has been taken up at 103, the minimum fixed by the Commissioners.

THE slow second-class gun boats on the China Station will be replaced by new first-class, speedier and better armed ones of the Pheasant and Redbreast type.

MR. KASHINATH TRIMBAK TELANG replaces on the Bombay High Court Bench Mr. Nanabhai Haridas removed by death. We are sure Mr. Telang will justify the choice made.

THERE being a difference of opinion between the Electric Light Companies and the authorities, regarding the danger of overhead wires, the several Companies, to enforce their view of the matter, left the principal streets in New York on the 14th in absolute darkness.

THE Pope is at a discount in Rome. Speaking at Palermo, Signor Crispi appealed to all reasonable men to support the Government against Papal encroachments and the designs of Anarchists. The Signor too has announced a proud foreign policy. He said "the foreign policy of Italy aims at enabling Italians to repeat, as in the days of ancient Rome, Civis Romanus sum. Ethiopia had been pacified, and now extends a hand to Italy, who had obtained in Africa the safe frontiers of a vast kingdom open to commerce and colonization." Italy has notified to the Powers that she has assumed control of the foreign relations of Ethiopia.

LORD LANSDOWNE strayed from Simla into Dhami for two days for sport and bagged seven Kharka, two ghural, four peacocks, fourteen chikhor, about a dozen munglies and—last not least—a wild cat.

By the bye, are there any true wild cats, wild, that is, aborigine, or is it, as the Bengali proverb hath it, that the cat—meaning the tame species—by betaking to the woods becomes the wild cat? Here is a toothsome nut for the experts of the Museum and the Zoo to maunch. We hope Lord Lansdowne has not been shooting some poor Alexander Selkirk of a Pussey left, by accident of circumstances, behind in the forest, where giving up her laziness and her luxurious life of civilization, she employed her uncommon intelligence to adapt herself to the new conditions.

THE editor of the Rast Gofar, Mr. K. N. Kabraji, has filed a suit in the Bombay High Court against the proprietors of the Jam-e-Jamshed for libel, claiming Rs. 20,000 as damages.

IN the present year, the German army will be supplied with new artillery and ammunition to the amount of two hundred and twenty millions of marks.

THE Earl of Galloway was charged at the Dumfries Sessions with indecent assault on a girl named Gibson. The child deposed that she and some others were gathering blackberries when the Earl pounced upon her. The defence admitted the gathering of blackberries but not the assault. He had simply helped the girl over a wall to gather the berries. A witness Mrs. Moffatt had heard the child call the Earl a "dirty blackguard" and found him by her. The children's evidence not quite agreeing, the Jury returned a verdict of not guilty and the Earl was acquitted.

THE Lieutenant-Governor leaves Darjeeling on the 1st November, but not direct for the capital. Accompanied by Sir Alfred Croft, Mr. A. W. Paul, Mr. J. C. White and Mr. P. C. Lyon, he goes to Sikkim through Pemionchi, Tumlong, Guntok and Pedong, reaching Calcutta on the 18th November via Daling Fort and Jalpaigori. The Raja of Sikkim meets him at Tumlong.

MR. CLIFFORD LLOYD has been posted to Kurdistan as British Consul.

A COMMITTEE of experts has been appointed to consider the scheme of the Siberian railway.

ON the 18th the Sessions Judge convicted Tania the Bheel of the murder at Bhuiphal in 1879 of Hanmat Patel and sentenced him to be hanged.

THE following lines, received from a correspondent, are not without their moral :—

"The oldest book in the world is the Papyrus Prisse which was found in one of the tombs of the Egyptian kings of the 11th Dynasty. It must have been placed there a few centuries before Abraham's time. It was composed by Prince Ptah-Hotep in the reign of Assa in the 5th Dynasty, so that the author lived about 4,000 years, B. C. How it survived the Deluge which occurred according to the Statesman 104 generations ago I cannot tell you. Perhaps there was a copy in the officers' library of the good ship 'The Ark,' Captain Noah. But if that question interests you, good reader, better apply at No. 3, Chowringhee for information.

What I wish to point out is that even in those days young men were disposed to disobedience and want of humility. This ancient document deplores the deterioration of the then rising generation, laments over the good old times that had passed away when young people were obedient and respectful to those set in authority over them. The author declares that the study of the wisdom of the ancients should be the work of old and young, that humility and obedience are the foundation of all virtue, that God loves the obedient and hates the disobedient, that sons should be obedient and so forth.

I infer from this that the infirmity the Bengalee schoolboy is afflicted with at present is not a new complaint. All ages have suffered from it and survived without any Tawney's Bible. The croakers may take heart again when they consider this."

THE recent strikes in England have filtered down to the schoolboys. In the Scotsman of September 20 occurs the following passage :—

"A large number of the school children in the higher standards at Wilton and Trinity Board Schools, Hawick, have gone out on strike. They marched in processional order between the two seminaries, denouncing the school discipline and calling names at the Headmasters. The pupils state that they want shorter hours, fewer and easier lessons, and better teachers. At Wilton School the strikers form a formidable band, but the malcontents at Trinity are not quite so numerous. Not a few were desirous of resuming their school work again in the course of the afternoon, but the mutinous element is strong; there are to be no 'blacklegs' and they were prevented from doing so."

A PARAGRAPH is going round relating to a family massacre said to be reported from Ouessa, to the effect that a teacher, named Robert Sause, at the Richelieu Lycée, hanged himself to death. The wife forthwith went mad over it, cut her five children into pieces and then threw herself from the window of the third storey of her residence and was picked up dying.

Holloway's Pills.—Liver, Lungs, and Kidneys.—Most diseases of these depurative organs arise from obstructions, over the removal of which these celebrated Pills exercise the most perfect control. A course of them is strongly recommended as a remedy for such chronic affections as liver enlargements, congestion of the lungs, torpidity of the kidneys, and other functional disorders which cause much present suffering, and if neglected lay the foundation of organic diseases. Holloway's Pills are specially adapted for the young and delicate; their gentle and purifying action ranks them above all other medicines. In indigestion, nervous affections, gout, and rheumatism these Pills have achieved for themselves universal fame. They expel all impurities from the blood, and thus restore cheerfulness and vigour.

THE recent Simla census gives a total return of 23,777 persons. Of these, 11,000 are congregated in the Main Bazar.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Viceroy left Simla on the 22nd on his tour to the frontier, and reaches Calcutta by the end of next month. The Council remains, with General Chesney, as Senior Member, presiding. The Legislative, Military and Foreign Departments close at Simla for the down journey on the 2nd, 4th and 16th November respectively.

THERE will be a grand show at Lahore on the occasion of the Viceroy's visit. The Rajas and Maharajas of Faridkote, Kupperthula, Nabha, Jheend, and Patiala, are going there to meet His Excellency. The Nawab of Bhawalpore will receive Lord Lansdowne on his return from Quetta at the Railway station where and when His Highness will feast his illustrious guests who must be sufficiently hungry and impatient to fill themselves after their long ride, through the bleak but bracing Beloochee sands and rocks.

THE Prince of Patiala's lot has been cast in a happy hour. Maharaja Rajinder Singh has assumed, even before the usual time, the administration of his State, the Council of Regency being pensioned off—thanks to Lord Lansdowne and the much abused Foreign Office! There was a Durbar. The Maharaja acknowledged the services done to the state by the members of the late administration. Sir Deva Sing replied on behalf of the Council expressing their satisfaction at the treatment accorded them by the Maharaja. Nuzzers were presented and the new reign announced by a royal salute. The Maharaja is now touring in his territories, receiving the homage of his subjects.

We congratulate His Highness and his people on the event, and hope he will allow himself to live.

As if to balance the account, the Thakore of Bhownugger is under a cloud. At the instance of a Vakil—Chhagaul Soonderjee—the Bombay Government have authorized the Political Agent of Kattyawar to investigate charges of unmentionable practices and of administrative mismanagement against the Thakore Sahab.

THE Indian Congress is degenerating into a sort of parliamentary debating club of the natives under the auspices of benevolent European gentlemen—as the phrase goes. To the shame of India, there is to be another foreign President. The choice of the Cabinet Ministry of the Congress has fallen on Sir William Wedderburn, of that ilk, late of the Bombay High Court Bench, as the fittest organ of the Voice of India in Congress assembled at the coming Session at Bombay. And that amiable philanthropist is not likely to decline the proffered crown. The wirepullers are doing their best to expose the machinery of their show. We expected them to show more forbearance and wisdom.

THE madcaps on the bench are sometimes useful in difficult situations. If one failed Captain Hearsey on this side, another is equal to the occasion that side the water.

Mr. Currie, the Magistrate of Howrah, has granted the summonses applied for against Messrs. Chesney and Dare of the Pioneer. They have been made returnable on the 20th November to suit the convenience of both parties.

"NATIVE journalism in India"—according to the Oracle of British journalism in India—"is conducted on charmingly free and easy lines." And in evidence of the sin of "Native journalism in India" only the following editorial note is quoted from a late issue of the Behar Herald and Indian Chronicle, to wit,

"We claim our usual Dessera Holidays from to-day. There will be no issue of the paper for the next two weeks."

A most unworthy complaint! It reminds us of the Hindu widow who, out of the benevolence of her heart, wishes that others of her sex may have the full benefit of unencumbered persons. (The Hindu mourning for a husband requires a lifelong abstention from wearing jewellery and all decoration* of the person.) As well might Heathen slaves rave at Christian labourers enjoying their Sabbath! This querulous-ness, indeed, is unChristian. It is unworthy of that Faith which, in the best physical needs and highest spiritual interests of poor humanity, bowed down to the earth by the curse of living by the sweat of the brow, has ordained a day of rest every week.

THEY are "silly"ing and shilly-shallying through the Recess over the Great Schoolboy Question. The Times is justifying its Silly Season by introducing the subject and sticking to it, through good report and evil report. Its columns are daily filled with the discussion of the right of the schoolboy tyrants of Eton to impose on all boys, whether they like or not, the games of football and cricket. The other papers, having nothing more exciting on hand, are glad to follow suit. We suppose there would be a howl against the frivolity of the Indian Press if our papers resorted to such a poor method of killing time. The Doorga Pooja Long Vacation, which towards the end is synchronous with the period when the Viceroy in Council is neither at Simla nor at Calcutta, is our Recess. Is it not better that, instead of making a Silly Season of the whole time and yawning in one another's face, the Native Press of Bengal boldly takes the dilemma by the horns and shuts up shop for at least two or three weeks? There is no nonsense about it. It is a frank and natural solution. Are native journalists to be blamed because they do not, in submission to a foreign example which is not exacted by their constituents—and not exacted simply because it is not conformable to the national life—keep themselves and their people in harness all through the twelve months? They could not do much work at a time when they feel themselves fagged and when there is not much material to work upon, and when, society being dispersed, they are not sure of a hearing. Not to submit to be foolish cannot, after all, be a great crime. The Native Press will not drown itself in the Ganges if it be suspected of having neither animus enough nor versatility enough to establish a Silly Season.

WITH respect to the Schoolboy controversy occupying the Silly Season in England, our opinion is decidedly in the affirmative. We say, the young tyrants of the public schools—so young and so unkind!—are quite right in compelling the other lads to go through the discipline of athletic games and break their necks or ruin their constitutions or come by their deaths in the attempt, if need be. Our opinion may not be worth anything but it is formed on orthodox lines. Above all, we can offer high precedent for it. In fact, it is founded on the venerable English principle of two wrongs making a right—which is rational of the national reliance on precedents. The practice of the school authorities themselves justifies the despotism of the young athletes at Eton and other institutions. Are poor students without any turn for Greek or Latin verse, excused that frivolous operation? One might do excellently in philosophy or science—he might have even a genuine capacity for pure literature itself—and yet he would be harassed and harried through the Procrustean ordeal of literary carpentering in the vain effort to make metres in dead languages which the dons themselves know not how to pronounce, and finally sent adrift on the world, marked "dull" and "no good," whereas in a rational system, he might have proved brilliant and made solid acquisitions in knowledge and power. It is the same policy of forcing the round man into the square hole that the more brutal, we mean Bullish, of the Etonians are following in the matter of their recreations and diversions. If the poor weaklings—often the more intellectual of the whole—are unequal to the strain of the gladiator exercises, that is their own fault. They are not even objects of pity. They have certainly no business at such thoroughly British public institutions as Eton. A fellow who is not blessed with a prize-fighter's bones and sinews has no right to intellectual culture, however intellectually fitted he may be for it. The great Public Schools of England will not give him instruction. That may not strike "outside barbarians" as very convincing reasoning. It may not be the Port Royal Logic. It is certainly the British Logic. And we, as in duty bound, are for the British.

THE Native papers of India are accused of writing up the interests of native princes for hire and coercing landlords and bankers and Government servants to see them on pain of being shown up. Whatever truth there may be in the charge, the evil at any rate is neither Indian in origin nor confined to "those abominable natives." Indeed, it seems to be a recognised, though far from hallowed, thing in the West, and to be almost openly practised. It is a tempting business.

You eat sumptuous dinners and pocket your bank notes as well as thunder your patriotism from day to day, and constitute yourself the shield of protection of the righteous and the oppressed and the scourge and terror of the wicked. But it is not all beer and skittles. Occasionally, there is a miscarriage of calculation. All your clients are not equally wise and steadfast. All the victims may not be blessed with the patience of Job. In case of a defection, there is danger to the 'cute editor. Such mutinies are apt to be serious indeed. There is no actual fear of loss of life, except in the American Territories and newer States, but he may be pretty sure of a personal treatment of a far from agreeable order, from being spat upon in the face in public, through slipping and horsewhipping, to tar and feathers.

A case has just occurred in England in illustration of the risks of "pecunious" journalism. The editor of a financial newspaper has come to grief. He had been making a revenue out of the fears of business men and speculators in difficulty whom he threatened to expose. One of the unfortunates was driven, by the treatment he experienced at the hands of this literary harpy, to obtain his own satisfaction in a prompt way with his own hands. He has given the editor a terrible mauling.

THE Barakar Iron Works proving a perpetual drain, the Government have washed their hands off them. The enterprising firm of Hoare Miller & Co. has taken up the working of the mine, doubtless hoping, by economical and smart management, to make a profit. We sincerely wish they may. It will be a damper to the spirit of intelligent speculation and a heavy blow to the prospects of enterprise in an all important industry, if this Company fail. The whole neighbouring country would feel the shock of such a calamity. Between Iron and Coal, thousands of the people are being supported, and the possessors of land have, some of them, risen from indigence to affluence. Many of the local coal miners, whether companies or individuals, have, however, made profitable bargain with the landlords who never suspected that their lands encased such sooty gold. They have grown wiser after the event. There is little cause to repine, after all. It is no small thing to have their country cleared of the jungle, and their income increased, in whatever measure.

THE Chamber of Commerce has done well to draw the attention of the city corporation to the lapses of the Tramway Company. In a letter to the municipality, the Committee of the Chamber point out that in many parts—especially in portions of the tramway traversing the business thoroughfares of the City—"the rails have sunk below the level of the setting, the curves and crossings are in bad order and are dangerous to conveyances, and the public road occupied by the tram lines, is, as a rule, above the level of the street." The letter is equally a condemnation of the municipal administration as regards the Tramways, for by law the Municipal Commissioners have a kind of control over the Company, and it is their duty to see that the Company do not travel out of the strict provisions of their Act. The Commissioners seem content with the mileage they draw from the Tramway Company. They are even jealous of any remission of that revenue on an unprofitable line. But they would not do their duty by the public which suffers by the omissions of the Tramway Company. The Company, on the other hand, try to derive the greatest revenue by suspending necessary repairs and working the horses and men to cruelty.

THE Hindoo Patriot, conducted between a nominal "King" whose "kingdom" was proved in the High Court not to yield him a revenue enough to entitle him to be elected to the town municipality (although the qualification for candidates was no more than the payment of annual rates amounting to Rs. 24), a retired schoolmaster who is a standing Omedwar for any snug fat appointment that might be created or vacant, and a promising young man who has just been enrolled as an attorney, has been inditing a leading article of a single paragraph of two mortal columns to the tune of "the grapes are sour, nor worth a thought." It is dissatisfied with the affairs of the High Court and is specially inconsolable that the barristers and olden attorneys reap all the harvest and that even any occasional crumbs in the shape of partition commissions do not fall to its lackland Rajas and pensioner-leeches. This is a reflection on the successful lawyer driving a roaring business at whose court the Hindoo Patriots are loyal habitual Durbaris! It is clear that their legal member with a literary turn of mind has no partition suit in his office. With the poor print—which by the way, is now a receptacle of private puffs of all kinds—he may now hope to do something. Accordingly, in this very article, the Judge who, adjudging our young man's Chief not "pecunious" enough, disappointed that respectable gentleman in his persistent effort to be elected to the municipal board, has been buttered with an enthusiastic liberality that would satisfy an Eskimo.

The subject is a legitimate one, but no well-conducted respectable paper would treat it in the mean personal way that it is treated. There is room for improvement in this branch of the administration of the Court as in every other branch. Why talk of branches, the trunk itself needs a good thorough shake! The bench itself would be the better for a discriminate weeding.

THE Adyar fishers have caught a great whale—in British waters. Madame Blavatsky has won over another and no less distinguished madame—Annie Besant. This clever lady, so well-known as the colleague of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh in his revolt against his Maker and Religion, and who will be recognised in India as the champion of one of our greatest princesses, the Begum of Bhopal, has announced her belief in the Worshipful Mahatmas. From rank Atheism to fervid Theosophism is not a step to most of us, but the fair neophyte may know better. It is not necessarily a final step. For anything that we know to the contrary, it may be a step to Wahabi-sm.

THIS defection must be a great embarrassment to the Camp of Universal Revolt. Mr. Bradlaugh, in especial, is much to be pitied. He must now carry on the war against God and the statu quo single-handed and alone, as well as he could, without the hearty help of the accomplished philosophist in petticoats. The defection amounts to a divorce in the home of Secularism. It devolves on the good man the duty of maintaining a house divided within itself.

ON the arrival of Colonel Olcott, Mrs. Besant got up a meeting at Finsbury to hear the Gospel from the lips of the Master in propria persona. It was not much of a success, it is to be feared. There was curiosity enough but not that predisposition to enthusiasm which is better than every other thing. The unfortunate Colonel was badgered out of his life by all sorts of questions, pertinent and impertinent. We have no doubt of his acquitting himself as well as possible under the circumstance. Colonel Olcott is a very able man and a brave one.

SOME particulars have reached us of the Doorga Poojah celebrated at Rangoon. Through the exertions of certain Bengali clerks a piece of land has been obtained from Government on which a permanent temple has been erected, it is said, at a cost of nearly three thousand rupees, contributed by a well-to-do Madras gentleman. It was in this temple, which has already been christened as Durga-bari, that the Poojah was celebrated, "with great eclat" as a friend writes to us. A brass image of the goddess, about three feet in height, was obtained from Benares at a cost of about Rs. 450. We are not told whether the image represented only Durga, or, the great goddess along with Lakshmi and Saraswati and Kartic and Ganeqa. A large number of goats were sacrificed every day. On the last day a buffalo, symbolising the great Asura, was sacrificed, as in many houses in Bengal. The worship was performed in right orthodox fashion. An upcountry Hindustani merchant at Rangoon has a few learned Brahmans about him. Well-versed in the Hindu scriptures, these performed the poojah. About five to six hundred people were fed every day. The bill of fare, as in Bengal proper, consisted of thin wheat cakes fried in clarified butter, and the usual sweets. We should like to know how these were obtained. They were evidently manufactured at Rangoon, but then who was the artiste under whose supervision it was managed? If loochees and sweets become popular in Burma, the Burmans will owe more to this native of India than the most beneficent Governor introducing the "blessings" of British rule. There were Manipuri dances and diverse kinds of indigenous tamashas, some of which are pronounced by our friend, who saw them for the first time, to be "much superior to the indigenous tamashas of Bengal." To crown all, a grand party of Kavi was taken from Chittagong. The total expenses are said to have amounted to about Rupees five to six thousand. Subscriptions poured in from every side. Of course, the rich Madras people contributed the lion's share. Altogether, the celebration of the Durga Poojah at Rangoon is a significant fact. The number of Bengalis there is still small. But they are already a power.

THE NEW GAG.

THE MAMLATDARS' ACT AND THE OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT.

LORD LANSDOWNE has now fairly opened his mouth and he has already shown his teeth. That, we take it, will be the general drift of intelligent opinion in India on the late harangues in Council at Simla, and the latest Official Secrets Act just passed. All the several speeches are pervaded by not only the same sentiment but also the same tone. The speakers, it is true, are three, of whom the Viceroy is one, but all three belong to the same Cabinet, and it is the Chief that gives the tone. Not that there is anything like a musical rehearsal or any command on one side and conscious obedience on the other; not in the least; and yet such associates are commonly wont to come to a harmonious understanding on the subject of the tune to be given, the pitch of voice and the manner in which it is to be rendered. This harmony is observed in the present instance. The policy of the Government must, of course, be one, but that important point secured, there is always room left for a good deal of variance. Not so in this occasion. The several speakers on the Mamlatdars Bill did not certainly repeat one another. On the contrary, the mover (Mr. Scoble), the Madras member (Mr. Hutchins), and the President, took up each a different thread of the same story. But there was a wonderful unanimity in their manner. They had no doubt a disagreeable and difficult task. They had to dispose of the public demonstration against their Bill; they had to reply to the criticisms of the platform and the press throughout the country. There was evidently a disposition to perform the operation with delicacy, but the delicacy was scarcely forthcoming. We shall not be surprised if Mr. Scoble has compromised much of his well-earned popularity in the Bombay Presidency. The arguments of all the speakers must be allowed to be thoroughly fair, whether one admitted any of them to be convincing or not. But the attitude towards public opinion was hostile to a degree and even contemptuous. The noble President himself, we are afraid, showed unmistakable traces of temper. There are too little indications of independent criticism by the people of India, and when the best men of the community—many of them acknowledged by high officials themselves to be of striking ability and sterling integrity—come forward in propria persona to state their views on any public question, no ruler who understands his business will snub them for their pains. The most unfair advantage was taken of the fact that many of the representations had come from the side of the country of the Mamlatdars where the sympathy with them must naturally be the greatest, and the worst motives were suggested for the speakers and the writers who had questioned the policy of the Government proposal. Of course, these official legislators were safe from their fortress to pelt stones at their critics outside. The triumph would not have been so easy with some representative Indians in the chamber. On the heights of their ramparts the Government warriors rode to death the high horse of national morality. And there was not a soul to remind them that, after all, it was the corruption of a great British functionary that originated this business, and that they were now trying to wriggle themselves out of a solemn pledge of a British nobleman and a British Government—a pledge given in perfect good faith and so accepted by those to whom it was given. The Viceroy, like an English gentleman, frankly confessed that they were trying to make the best of a bad job. It were well had they all stuck to the sackcloth and ashes which best became them on such an occasion, instead of being oversolicitous to point the mote in the eyes of their expostulators. It is much to be regretted that the President himself, in what was almost his first appearance in legislative debate, should have shown any signs of irritation.

The Official Secrets Bill is a far more serious affair. It is a gratuitous outrage on the people and princes of India. It revives the Gagging Act in the most objectionable way. It is a worse Gagging Act than Lord Lytton's, because it insinuates itself under false colours. Indian and Anglo-Indian readers will understand us when we call this the Gagging Act bendami. It is a far more sweeping measure than the withdrawn Act. That threatened only the Vernacular Press—this is directed against the entire Indian Press without exception. It arms the Government with a tremendous engine for punishing critics of Government and measures and official men. It enables the Executive to silence public opinion when it might have the best claims to be heard and be respected, that is, when it might offer to convict officials of delinquency out of their own mouths, as it were. It will have the effect of suppressing the only constitutional institution in the land for checking official blundering and maladministration. For in this distant Dependency of Great Britain, without a representative chamber on the spot and practically beyond the purview of Parliament in the mother country, the Free Press functions as Her Majesty's Opposition.

This unfortunate Act bears a harmless enough name which is likely to charm many good people and to deceive the unwary. But its object is plain to those who are able to look behind special pretences. It is an ugly monster that is smuggled under the guise of a measure for the maintenance of official secrets of a military and strictly diplomatic kind to which there can be no earthly objection. Is that the motive of the true advisers of the Bill hurried through the Council into law? To us, we confess, it seems that the example of English legislation at Home has been taken advantage of by those Indian officials who were never reconciled to the repeal of the Press Law of Lord Lytton to introduce a gag on the Press by a ruse—by the back-door, as it were. Of course, the idea of silencing criticism of the most serious kind naturally commends itself to the official mind in general. Hence so much quick unanimity on the subject. The Viceroy naturally deferred to the opinion of the experts on the spot. He seems also to have been put out by the attitude of the native Press. That attitude, it is well-known, we do not, in some important particulars, approve and do not share. But his Excellency should not be so touchy and not so ready to make common cause with his subordinates. A constitutional ruler like himself, who has had experience of civilised states in more than one continent, is expected to have a better regard for the Press and to deal somewhat tenderly with its failings. He is best able to appreciate such an institution. Far be it from us to defend any writer who is base enough to fabricate, in whole or in part, documents to bring Government into disrepute. Let him be punished, if such there be. But why harass all publicists and publishers? Why injure the noble institution?

LORD CROSS ON THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

THE Secretary of State's Despatch on the Report of the Public Service Commission is a clever and cautious document. Indeed, it dooms to disappointment the ardent hopes that were aroused by the appointment of the Commission. Commissions, however, it is well known, are respectable British absurdities that generally end in nothing particular. The despatch does not much advance those objects for which the Commission was appointed; indeed, in several essential details, it negatives the Commission's recommendations. For all that, the liberality of its tone almost disarms hostile criticism. All the varied, conflicting interests involved in the question are dealt with in such a skilful manner as to give some degree of satisfaction in every quarter, at any rate not to cause poignant dissatisfaction in any. Neither the Covenanted Civil Service nor the Statutory Civil Service, neither Natives nor Eurasians, can, at all events, find much cause of complaint with the conclusions of Lord Cross. The Commission threatened the Statutory Service with extinction and the Civil Service proper with restriction. The old and traditional designation of the latter Service was also proposed to be done away with. From these proposals the Secretary of State differs, and those Services must congratulate themselves. In fact, all interests have been carefully recognised, and in a manner reconciled, and although his Lordship has differed from some of the fundamental recommendations of the Commission, and virtually left the existing order of things intact, he records his emphatic adhesion to the principle that there should be no restrictions to the admission of natives of India to the higher offices of the public service as they might be fitted for them by education and character. The Secretary of State deprecates any new Parliamentary legislation as both unnecessary and inexpedient, while he relies on the present law and arrangements as sufficient for all purposes, if they are properly interpreted and carried out effectively and in a liberal spirit.

Indeed, Lord Cross leaves things pretty much as they are, while he explains that by this means and without introducing any great changes, the primary object now in view, namely the admission of natives of India to the higher offices of the public service, can be quite as well and effectually served. One of the chief means recommended by the Public Service Commission for widening the sphere of native employment in the higher offices was to reduce by law the number of what are called the Scheduled appointments reserved by a past law to the Covenanted Civil Service, and to transfer them to the list of offices proposed to be thrown open to the Provincial Service. This was a very important recommendation made by the Commission with the view of widening and giving greater dignity to the Provincial Service, and of proportionately restricting the domain of the Covenanted Civil Service. If it met with approval, Parliamentary legislation would have been necessary to give it effect. Lord Cross, however, does not accept this suggestion, on the ground that he believes that the object proposed to be secured by it is capable of attainment by means which are under existing law already available to the executive authorities. Indeed, his Lordship relies upon the Statute of 1870, by which the Statutory Civil Service was constituted, as furnishing sufficient powers by which the Executive Government might always reward natives of admitted ability and fitness by nominating them to the offices reserved by the Schedule to the Covenanted Civil Service. In any case, a large measure of discretion must always rest with the executive authorities, and as the Commission themselves did not propose to give a statutory basis to the Provincial Service, and further as the vital principle of fitness as the sole criterion of eligibility to any appointment, laid down by the Court of Directors so far back as 1834 and uniformly maintained all along was not to be departed from, Lord Cross fails to see how the mere restriction of the schedule by any present enactment can meet the end proposed to be thereby attained by the Commission. The question thus as between the Commission and the Secretary of State resolves itself into this: The Commission says there should be a greater number of appointments for recruitment from the Provincial Service thrown open by Act of Parliament by amendment of the Schedule. These will belong as of right to the Provincial Service just as they have hitherto pertained to the Covenanted Civil Service. Lord Cross replies that no sort of vested interests can be created, as involving a departure from the principle of fitness as the only criterion of eligibility expressed in the Court of Directors' Despatch of 1834, and that selections must continue to be made on that sole test of proved fitness. So that the mere increase of new appointments for the Provincial Service by the curtailment of the Schedule would hardly benefit aspirants for higher employment, whose selection must in each case depend upon the choice of the executive authorities, whereas by a liberal application of the Statute of 1870, which the Commission propose to repeal, it is now quite within the powers of those authorities to adequately reward natives of merit, and even to stretch a point in their favor, should they be disposed in any especial circumstances, to do so.

Lord Cross would thus not only maintain the Statute of 1870 intact as furnishing an effective instrument in the hands of Government for satisfying the claims of native merit and ambition but rely upon that Statute as a substitute, for the present, at least, for any legislation of the kind proposed by the Commission. From this decision we are not disposed to differ. The Commission's recommendation for abolishing the Statutory Civil Service and merging it into the Provincial Service had not our approval. The principle underlying the Statute of 1870, with wisdom and liberality in its application, is quite in harmony with our feelings, as it is capable of remedying some of the defects existing in the present state of things.

Lord Cross endorses the conclusion adopted by the Commission as well as by Lord Dufferin's Government against holding a simultaneous examination for the Covenanted Civil Service in England and India, but on the question of age, he has decided to raise the maximum limit to 23 and minimum to 21. This is a concession of vital importance and will go far to conciliate public opinion in this country.

The Secretary of State does not wholly accept the Commission's suggestion of abolishing the designation of the Covenanted Civil Service and changing it into the Imperial Service. He prefers, that the Service now known as the Covenanted Civil Service should be designated the Civil Service and that each Branch of the Provincial Service should be designated by the name of the particular province to which it belongs, e. g., Madras Civil Service, Bombay Civil Service, Punjab Civil Service, and so forth. The use of the terms Covenanted and uncovenanted will thus be discontinued.

The tangible result of the appointment of the Public Service Commission, is thus reduced to very small proportions. The integrity of the Civil Service and the rights of officers already enrolled in the Service are to remain inviolate. The reduction, however, in the recruitment for that Service yearly in the proportion of one-sixth made in the interests of the Statutory Service, is pointed out by Lord Cross as having already in course of less than a decade expanded the field open to native ambition in no small measure. The extension of the age limit now proposed to be made is likely to have equally favorable effects in the same direction. For the rest, if after the clear and liberal interpretation of the Statute of 1870, its operation in the hands of the Local Governments and Administrations fulfils those expectations which the Secretary of State regards it intended to satisfy, it will be idle to grumble or complain so long as no great departure from the existing system has any chance of acceptance.

THE MINOR WAR ON THE BENGAL FRONTIER.

THERE seems to be some uneasiness with respect to the situation of affairs on the North East Frontier. Our arrangements are not complete. The plan of operations is far too elaborate and grand to be executed in a trice, and it is not so expected to be executed. To work up the hills to the last retreats of the hostile tribes from one side of the country to the other and sweep through the entire backwoods in the rear of Sylhet and Cachar, Hill Tipperah and the Chittagong Hill Tracts, is a great programme, the preparations for which require some time and are dependent on several contingencies. They are doubtless being run up with expedition. Only, they are not yet all ready. Meanwhile, it is feared that the tribes might be beforehand with us. This is, perhaps, giving them credit for an organization which they hardly deserve, and which, so far from any barbarians, even civilized Orientals like the Turks and Persians have rarely displayed. Of course, there is no accounting for savage caprice. As a rule, however, savages are lazy, and the Mongolian and Malayan races on the borders of India Proper are remarkably slow, even when they are freed from pure savagery and have made some appreciable advances in the arts of civilised life.

For some days our officers on the Frontier have been exercised by the apprehension of a sudden raid. The attack has been expected in the direction of the Lungleh outpost. That position is weak, being defended by a small garrison, and a surprise might possibly lead to a disaster. But no such movement has taken place, and we, for our part, have some reason for hoping that none will. According to the latest report, three messengers of the Moliempur Chief, Jacopa, have brought information to Fort Lungleh of the intention of the Shendu tribe to attack the fort in great strength. This may be an idle rumour, like the others of the same tenour which have been in vogue for some weeks. There may be some ground for uneasiness in the absence of any specific news from the Government intelligence department. But from previous knowledge of the habits of the tribes, we know this much that the season for their migrations, whether nocent or innocent, is not yet. There may be exceptions to the rule even among savages, and a Kookie strategist may throw custom to the winds and plan a great surprise. It is certainly by a sudden attack in force on weak numbers that the enemy has any chance. These tribes never showed the pluck to face disciplined troops. And fighting as they do with bows and arrows and lances and old muskets and blunderbusses, it is no disparagement to their courage that they avoid the bloody intruders armed with breechloaders and other arms of precision. They are wise in relying on their local and personal advantages. Their movements are regulated by the nature of the country. That is simply impenetrable during the rains and the succeeding autumn. The low hills are covered from top to the bottom of the valleys with bamboo and other plants and shrubs bound fast together in a network of rattans of endless length. Although these people can make way through the jungle, cutting it down with both hands with their dao differently edged for each, as they run, yet the operation, we fancy, cannot be maintained through any length of time or any great distance, and is practically out of the question when the tropical vegetation is at its height and fullest luxuriance. Not till Nature herself has made matters somewhat smooth for him, does the Lushai or Shendu put forth his art. After the drying up process has thinned the jungle, then is the time for the tribes to move about. As yet, the numerous streams that form the watersheds of the rivers of Chittagong and Sylhet have not dried up to admit of easy travelling. For, in these parts it is the dry channels of the streams that are the natural highways. Not before their periodical roads were ready for them by the usual operation of the seasons, would the Lushais or Shendus or Howlongs think of leaving their baris or bustees. Just now, indeed, their presence is absolutely necessary at home. They have got to look after their commissariat. They have yet to cut their crops. They will starve if they neglect this opportunity. For, they have no previous accumulations to fall back upon, in the event of missing the harvest of one year. With their characteristic improvidence, they have no notion of laying in a reserve stock. So they must imperatively attend to their jooms. Although they live upon animals with delight, and nothing from a snake up to an elephant comes amiss to their table, they have redeeming manhood enough not to be entirely carnivorous.

On these grounds, we take it, the tribes are not coming upon us in a hurry.

JOHORE—A GEOGRAPHICAL PUZZLE.

THE Statesman lately editorially warned the public of Europe against taking any particular notice of the so-called Sultan of Johore, who has gone there to endeavour to raise the wind on some scheme of exploitation of the resources of his territory:—

"A fifth-rate ruler at best, he and his territory are hardly known to any one outside the Straits Settlements."

Differing from our morning contemporary, the Mahomedan Observer, now under new and able management, gives its readers the benefit of the editor's personal knowledge of the Chief in question. He first made his acquaintance in 1876. He has ever since "continued to distinguish himself as a mild, and, for an Asiatic, able ruler." "He has more the tastes of an English nobleman than any other Asiatic potentate we have known." The writer visited Johore in 1883, but although the Chief was absent in China, he was hospitably entertained and his yacht was placed at his service.

"The Palace of the Sultan is pleasantly situated on the outskirts of Johore facing the Strait separating the Peninsula from Singapore by little more than two miles. Johore is a prosperous and growing city, is far in advance of Calcutta from a sanitary point of view, and when we were in Johore materials had arrived for the new waterworks which have since been successfully completed and can boast of a Public Works Department which the Government of India might well take a profitable lesson in economy from. Coffee and tea do well in Johore in both of which the Sultan holds large interests, has from time to time made several large grants of land and other valuable concessions to Europeans, and as a Mahomedan is uncommonly enterprising from whose book a leaf might very well be taken and profitably turned to account by some of our co-religionists in India. We hardly think it is correct that the Sultan has been compelled to proceed to England to raise funds, as we know positively he is not in a needy condition. He is frugal and unostentatious in habit and manner, the Palace is of the most moderate dimensions, handsomely furnished but unattended by idle luxuries, if for no other reason we think he is entitled to special notice. In 1883 there was considerable speculative talk with reference to a Syndicate taking up and working out a large tract of land. We have never heard that it came to anything and are of opinion that the Sultan's trip home now may be to bring the matter to a head. In mineral wealth Johore is second only to Burma, but in vegetable excels anything we have seen in the East. We hope the Sultan may be so successful in his negotiations as he deserves to be. We are pleased to be able to represent the Sultan in his real character, and we have no hesitation in saying he is a model ruler in every sense of the term, wholly void of any evil or vicious habits, takes a warm interest in his territory and subjects."

We are glad to be assured by a writer who knows that this Sultan of the Straits is not in straits. For ourself, we are able from personal observation in some measure to corroborate our Mahomedan contemporary's general picture. His Highness was in Calcutta during the visit of the Prince of Wales. He was a thorough gentleman, without the ostentatious display or noisy surroundings of our Gangetic Indian Princes. Personally he was not only quiet, but seemed even reserved. Perhaps he was not very well pleased with his reception. The Indian Government were far too preoccupied with their royal guest and the potentates nearer home who had been drawn to swell his triumph. Both officials and non-officials, Europeans and Indians, were thus restricted in their attentions. Nevertheless, their neglect was unworthy of a great city like Calcutta, one that claims to be the capital not only of India but the British World in the East. Native Society, not excepting the very Mahomedans who might be expected to be proud of a Mussulman hereditary ruler of farther Eastern Asia, was scarcely aware of his visit. The fact is, there was shamefully gross ignorance about this visitor in all Hind, among all classes, European and Indian. In India, we are not prepared for an outlandish Raja—a veritable Maharaja with an extra-Indian habitat. A Mussulman with a Chinese cast of head and features was no less staggering at a time when the Panthays had not been heard of. To make confusion worse confounded, he called himself a Maharaja. So this distinguished visitor passed unheeded. No one beyond a handful knew who he was and what was his due. Where his country was might be a hard nut beyond the mental cutlery of the more learned Professor or examiner of the Calcutta University—we advisedly except the men of the enterprising and mercantile West and South. Such was the prevailing ignorance that the Post Office itself did not know where His Highness hailed from. We remember that our letters and packets addressed to him at his capital came back to us from the Dead Letter Office, after months during which they had been travelling all over the country and had knocked at the door of every chief, great and small.

After all, Johore is not so unknown to the world of civilization as to the Dark Continent itself of which it is a part, or to the proud, exclusive India of the Ganges. Situated on the vantage ground of one of the leading commercial Highways, opposite the maritime and mercantile sentry box of Singapore, between the Indian and China Seas, it is visited by most merchants and all globetrotters, drawn as much by hospitality as attracted by curiosity. It is now more than a generation since the American Exploring party of Commodore Perry first discovered Johore and its enlightened Chief. Ever since the intelligent traveller has been bound to "do" them. And no wonder. The paradox of an indigenous Mussulman Maharaja of a country beyond the geographical limits of India, is not a whit less singular, and is perhaps more puzzling, than that of an English Raja in the Indian Archipelago. Each is calculated to fascinate the imagination, and each is worthy of the honours of pilgrimage.

MOORSLEDABAD.

Moorshedabad, the 23rd October.

A grand meeting of the Oswals of Azimgunj and Baluchar was held on the night of Friday last, at the Jugat Sett's Bungalow to decide the question of readmission into the Oswal community of Messrs. Indra Chand Dudhuria and Indra Chand Nahata, son and nephew respectively of Rai Budh Singh Dudhuria Bahadur of Azimgunj, who had recently reached home after enjoying a pleasant trip of nearly three months in Europe. This being the first occasion in which Oswals had crossed the Kalapani, it was natural that there should be a great sensation among them. The meeting was convened at the instance of a letter received by the young Jugat Sett Bahadur from the Calcutta Panchayat in which it was strongly urged that the two young men should suffer exclusion from the caste. Almost all the Oswals of this place were present and numbered about two hundred. The proceedings commenced at 8 P.M., under the leadership of Jugat Sett Golap Chand Bahadur, who in a short speech in Hindi submitted the letter from Calcutta for the opinion of the members. It was then read out by the foreman of the Baluchar Oswals, and different interpretations were given to it. After a hot discussion, it was settled that the Calcutta Oswals had not come to a definite conclusion but that the matter had been referred to them. In reply to a question asked by Baboo Hurruck Chand Golicha, Rai Dhunpat Sing Bahadur said that a person does not necessarily lose his caste merely because he touched a foreign land but that the violation of the prejudices of the Sect, such as eating on the same table with persons of different religion, taking food cooked by the latter and consuming intoxicating liquor and meat, condemns him to excommunication, and consequently he was of opinion that a man may lose his caste here and not lose it by going to Europe, according as he does not or does observe its usages. In order, therefore, to decide the present case it was necessary that evidence should be adduced by the accused that they kept their prejudices in tact. There was a solemn silence and parties came out of the building to consult each other. On reassembling after two hours and before the president had proclaimed the unanimous opinion of his fellow brethren, which from the grave looks of the members, it seemed, would have been far from favorable, Rai Budh Singh Bahadur rose and prayed submissively and in a pathetic tone, that his son and nephew be excused their faults and be received in their respective families. His humble attitude and sorrowful words had the desired effect of appeasing the wrath of the Panchayat eliciting a verdict of "all right." Before passing the final order accordingly, the President required of Rai Budh Singh Bahadur to send for the two youths and to ask them to publicly explain their conduct. A carriage and a pair were immediately despatched to fetch them and they arrived at 3-30 A.M. On being questioned as to the nature of the diet they had taken during their passage to and from, and residence in, Europe, they said upon oath that they had taken fruit and milk all the time and never consciously took any unhallowed meal. The order of the meeting that they have been excused having been communicated to them through the president, the assembly dispersed at 4 A.M., amidst loud vociferations of delight.

To celebrate his triumph, Mr. Nahata arranged for his fellow brethren a grand feast which took place at his residence at Baluchar on Monday last. It would have been a success had it not been for the receipt of a telegram from the Calcutta Oswals, who, assembled at a fresh Panchayat, had issued an injunction on their brethren here not to dine with the Europe-returned persons. Only a few relatives of Mr. Nahata joined him but the rest kept themselves aloof. Thus the decision of the local Panchayat was set aside.

Definitions.

(1) any reference to a place belonging to Her Majesty includes a place belonging to any department of the Government, whether the place is or is not actually vested in Her Majesty :

(2) expressions referring to communications include any communication, whether in whole or in part, and whether the document, sketch, plan, model or information itself or the substance or effect thereof only be communicated :

(3) "document" includes part of a document :

(4) "model" includes design, pattern and specimen :

(5) "sketch" includes any photograph or other mode of representation of any place or thing : and

(6) "office under Her Majesty" includes any office or employment in or under any department of the Government.

3. (1) (a) Where a person for the purpose of wrongfully obtaining information—

Disclosure of information.

(i) enters or is in any part of a place belonging to Her Majesty, being a fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard, camp, ship, office or other like place, in which part he is not entitled to be, or,

(ii) when lawfully or unlawfully in any such place as aforesaid, either obtains any document, sketch, plan, model or knowledge of anything which he is not entitled to obtain, or takes without lawful authority any sketch or plan, or,

(iii) when outside any fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard or camp belonging to Her Majesty, takes or attempts to take without authority given by or on behalf of Her Majesty any sketch or plan of that fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard or camp, or

(b) where a person knowingly having possession of, or control over, any such document, sketch, plan, model or knowledge as has been obtained or taken by means of any act which constitutes an offence against this Act at any time wilfully and without lawful authority communicates or attempts to communicate the same to any person to whom the same ought not, in the interest of the State, to be communicated at that time, or

(c) where a person after having been entrusted in confidence by some officer under Her Majesty with any document, sketch, plan, model or information relating to any such place as aforesaid, or to the naval or military affairs of Her Majesty, wilfully and in breach of such confidence communicates the same when, in the interest of the State, it ought not to be communicated, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

(2) Where a person having possession of any document, sketch, plan, model or information relating to any fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard, camp, ship, office or other like place belonging to Her Majesty, or to the naval or military affairs of Her Majesty, in whatever manner the same has been obtained or taken, at any time wilfully communicates the same to any person to whom he knows the same ought not, in the interest of the State, to be communicated at that time, he shall be liable to the same punishment as if he committed an offence under the foregoing provisions of this section.

(3) Where a person commits any act declared by this section to be an offence, he shall, if he intended to communicate to a foreign State any information, document, sketch, plan, model or knowledge obtained or taken by him, or entrusted to him as aforesaid, or if he communicates the same to any agent of a foreign State, be punished with transportation for life or for any term not less than five years, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years.

4. (1) Where a person, by means of his holding or having held an office under Her Majesty has lawfully or unlawfully either obtained possession of or control over any document, sketch, plan or model, or acquired any information, and at any time corruptly or contrary to his official duty communicates or attempts to communicate that document, sketch, plan, model or information to any person to whom the same ought not, in the interest of the State, or otherwise in the public interest, to be communicated at that time, he shall be guilty of a breach of official trust.

Breach of official trust.

(2) A person guilty of a breach of official trust shall—

(a) if the communication was made or attempted to be made to a foreign State, be punished with transportation for life or for any term not less than five years, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years and

(b) in any other case be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.

(3) This section shall apply to a person holding a contract with any department of the Government, or with the holder of any office under Her Majesty as such holder, where such contract involves an obligation of secrecy, and to any person employed by any person or body of persons holding such a contract, who is under a like obligation of secrecy, as if the person holding the contract and the person so employed were respectively holders of an office under Her Majesty.

5. A prosecution for an offence against this Act shall not be instituted except by or with the consent of the Local Government or of the Governor-General in Council.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE BURDWAN RAJ ESTATE AS REPORTED BY MR. OLDHAM.

Since the 1st May 1888 the Burdwan Raj estate has been administered under the new system, by which one joint manager had sole charge of all the landed property under direct management, and his colleague all the other business of the estate. In the absence of one manager the other was to carry on the duties of both, and some few items of important administration were reserved to be conducted by both managers concurrently. The results have been that Mr. Reily has been fully and usefully employed, while the central household administration has been conducted just as it used to be, except for the absence of trouble and friction. In August Mr. Reily was absent for three months on privilege leave, during which no action beyond the maintenance of routine was or had to be taken in the department of direct management of landed property. The retention of the old joint or concurrent department produced a serious complication later on.

On the 13th May 1888 the Maharani of Burdwan died very suddenly. This event at once brought the Dowager Maharani, who thenceforward claimed to be the proprietress, and styled the ward a pretender or usurper, into collision with the managers. The Maharani's obsequies were duly celebrated by her adopted son, but the Dowager Maharani declared that, as there was no such legally adopted son, it was incumbent on her to perform the ceremonies and she summoned the paid priests and other retainers of the Raj to aid her in doing so.

A serious collision would have ensued but for the hesitation of the servants as to whom they were to obey. Both sides appealed to me, and I laid down the principle that the paid servants of the estate were the servants of the ward, and were bound to render him loyal and faithful obedience, and for any act of overt disloyalty to him or disobedience would render themselves liable to dismissal. The Dowager Maharani was given every facility for performing the ceremonies herself without hindrance and interruption, though the assistance of the paid servants of the Raj at them was prohibited. At my request Mr. Reily associated himself with Lalla Bun Behari Kapur in the management of the household during this emergency, and by his tact and firmness avoided the many traps and pitfalls and provocations which were sedulously laid for his colleague. This state of things continued till July, when the Dowager Maharani instituted her suit, thus enabling us to treat her on a formally defined footing as a declared enemy of the ward and his interests. Since then there has been at no time any risk of a recurrence of these collisions.

On the institution of the suit a discussion took place as to how it was to be defended, and the Lieutenant-Governor decided that the conduct of the defence was to be entrusted to Lala Bun Behari Kapur, acting with Government solicitors. Orders, accordingly, were passed by the Court of Wards and communicated to the Managers, and thereupon arose a chain of disastrous misapprehensions. In the discussion as to the defence, Mr. Reily's views had been overruled and he manifested sensitiveness on the subject. As a consequence, Lala Bun Behari did not personally discuss the orders which gave him the sole conduct of the suit with Mr. Reily, and the latter either did not (as he himself says) see them at all, or certainly did not study and realise them. Lala Bun Behari Kapur made the fatal mistake of not giving a copy of them to the Government solicitors. Two days after I had communicated them to the Managers, I received a letter regarding the conduct of the suit from them, signed by both of them.

I at once called for an explanation of the appearance of Mr. Reily's signature, but Mr. Reily, who left for England on three months' leave the same week, did not see the letter; which was partially replied to by Lala Bun Behari Kapur; for in it I had also asked what steps were being taken to have all proceedings conducted on the sole signature of the latter, and this enquiry has never yet been answered. A reference was made to the Government solicitors on the point, and the fact that Mr. Reily had been excluded from the conduct of the suit, was not formally communicated to them or realised by them. As a consequence, all preparations for a defence by the Joint-Managers were made, and early in February

Mr. Reily, without a word of warning, was called on to sign the long and elaborate written statement for the defence. This he naturally refused to do. The Judge refused to allow the written statement signed by Lala Bun Behari Kapur to come on the record, and in reference to it openly said from the bench that he believed, or was under the impression, that Mr. Reily had refused to sign it "because it was not true." The suit being in the High Court's Original Jurisdiction, the Judge pronounced that it was necessary to appoint a guardian for it to the ward. He refused to allow Lala Bun Behari Kapur to be so appointed, and eventually, on his suggestion, I was appointed and filed an infant's written statement, leaving the case to the judgment of the court.

Subsequently the Judge wished to have a supplementary statement, and I signed and had filed one which was substantially the same as that which Mr. Reily had refused to sign. The only statement to which I refused to accede was that made by the Dowager Maharani, and repeated in the draft statement for the defence, that "The issues in the case were fixed on the 28th March."

The compromise with the Dowager Maharani has been carried fully into effect, except for the settlement of the wording of the deed and its execution and the disposal of the jewellery, questions which have been kept since July 1887. The settlement and execution of the deed depend upon it. Regarding it my information is very incomplete, because so much has been done without any reference to me. What I do know about the case may be set down in the following propositions:—

a. The Dowager Maharani wished my predecessor, Mr. Coxhead, to arbitrate on her claims to the jewellery. He could not accept at the time owing to his bad health and approaching departure on furlough.

b. The jewels in question were valued at from 5 lakhs to 7 and half lakhs of rupees.

c. In March 1887 Lala Bun Behari Kapur proposed to offer the Dowager Maharani four and a half lakhs in settlement of her claims, saying that he believed the offer would be accepted.

d. In May 1887 the Board asked the Dowager Maharani if she would accept me as arbitrator in place of Mr. Coxhead, and added that they were ready to give her a lakh of rupees to satisfy her demands for the jewellery, but would not admit any extravagant claims. She replied at once refusing to accept my arbitration.

e. In July 1887 the Lieutenant-Governor on his visit to Burdwan decided that the jewellery case should be treated separately, so as not to impede the compromise in other respects; also that the jewels were valued by a competent European firm. The Dowager Maharani was called on to name the firm and no further steps could be taken in the jewellery case till the valuation was made.

f. Not till some six months after, the Dowager Maharani nominated Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey to be the valuers. In February 1888, she complained to Government about the Board's offer of a lakh (how it originated I can not even surmise), and said she would take five-half lakhs in satisfaction of her claims.

g. In May 1888 the Government offered the Dowager Maharani the services of the Advocate-General or the Standing-Counsel to arbitrate on and finally dispose of her claims to the jewellery. She accepted the latter.

h. In July Mr. Pugh, then officiating Standing Counsel, and also the retained advocate of the Dowager Maharani, came to Burdwan and began the arbitration. It occupied nearly three weeks and was conducted in the most technically formal manner, pleaders being heard on both sides, and the sanctioned fees for the ward's pleader in it amounted to Rs. 2,200.

i. While the arbitration was proceeding, Mr. Coxhead returned from furlough and, as there was no vacancy for him, took charge of the Burdwan district for some hours.

j. Mr. Pugh demanded his fees from me at Rs. 1,000 per day. I had no instructions regarding them and could not pay them. He refused to publish his award till they were paid. They amounted to Rs. 19,000. Eventually Government ordered that the costs should follow the award, and on both sides depositing a moiety, the award was delivered to me in February.

k. The award was wholly adverse. On my report on it, the Court of Wards ordered that no action could be taken on it till the Advocate-General's opinion had been given.

On the 25th March the Dowager Maharani prayed in the High Court that it should be filed under Section 521 of the Civil Procedure Code, and as guardian ad litem I am now replying and showing cause against that prayer being granted.

It only remains to be added that amid all this strife, and notwithstanding the heavy additional burden which it throws on the administration of the estate, the numerous institutions are maintained. With the field season the survey, by a party of the Survey of the Government of India, of the larger estate under direct management in Burdwan, Bankoora, and Beerbhoom began and is in progress. In October and November the system of the estate's accounts was examined with a view to devising means for the easier and better audit by an officer from the Accountant's Department. His report on the subject was not received till January and is still in the press.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.....

Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

No. 396

THE PANDAVAS IN THE HIMALAYA. AN EPISODE OF HINDU MYTHOLOGY.

BY THE LATE MURAD ALI BEG and MITFORD.

But Nakul missed her footsteps from behind him
Crackling the crisp snow-soil, and turned and looked,
And cried to Yudhistir—"Oh brother! stop!
Draupadi can no longer journey forward."
And they all stopped and turned, and Bheem spoke thus
"I will go back and raise her!" and Arjoon
Said—"We will wait till she can move again."
But Yudhistir replied—"Brethren, you rave!
There is no wood here to make up a fire
And we shall never see a fire again;
For far below are the pine-forests left
And never plant grew on the mountain tops.
And if we stay with Draupadi, we all,
Without a fire should stiffen here and die,
Doing e'en for no good, while we ourselves
Should break our vow 'gainst turning back, and lose
Our chance of reaching yonder Mountain-Heaven.
Let her alone! It is but natural.
She was the weakest and must perish first!
Haply ere nightfall we may follow her!"
And Draupadi spoke thus—"My husbands! I
Have ever looked upon my life as nought
But a gift whereby I might do your pleasure,
I know my time is come. I could not journey
Forward again were you to wait for hours.
I would not keep you from the Mountain-Heaven
Nor let you break your vow for nought. But ere
You journey forward in your fated path
I would you all forgive me any word
Or deed by which not wilfully, I know,
But unintentionally perhaps, I may
Have you offended. Give me your forgiveness.
This is the last sole boon I crave." Then each
In turn of age from Yudhistir to Nakul
Said—"We forgive thee. Never wife on earth
Was like to thee, Oh Draupadi, for truth,
And faithfulness, and love, and patient service!"*
O'er the blue shrunken face of Draupadi,
While the death-film was filling fast her orbs,
A gleam of radiant joy played like the lightning
Across a summer cloud, illumining
Each feature now triumphant o'er despair.
And on they tramped. The faithful dog himself
Whined but a moment by the woman's side,

* Despite her five-fold conjugal duties, Draupadi is always described in the Mahabharat as the perfection of a wife, nor from what we see of her conduct, as detailed in it, does the praise seem undeserved. Her principal characteristics are fidelity and submissiveness, and most men will agree that these are the principal "points" of a good wife.

And licked her cold hands, and then plunged away
To follow Nakul. But the woman lone
Still fixed her eyes on the receding band
With the long agonizing farewell gaze
Until they vanished from her swimming eyes,
When o'er her stole the tranquil frozen sleep
From which she ne'er should waken.*

But the six

Still mournfully pressed on. 'Twas bitter work
To force the sinking form against the blast
Which now howled out again. The momentary
Gleam of encouragement that morn—thrice blessed
After the horrid night—had given them,
Had long departed; and all hopelessly
And cheerlessly, but still unyieldingly—
Rather like some cunning machines of steel
Than beings of blood and bone—they clambered on,
Urged onward by a mighty force within
Which was nor courage nor despair but something Seeming both which said—"Ye are a fated race,
As well die moving on as still at rest."†
The raw wind cut them to the very bone;
The thin air hardly filled their yearning lungs;
Making breath painful. Still they held their course,
Northward and upward, towards the highest peaks.
But as they crossed a glacier's slippery face,
The wearied foot of Nakul missed its hold
And he sank reeling on the glassy plain.
He strove to rise, but his enfeebled bones,
Brittle with cold, their wonted function failed.
A broken thigh had sealed his speedy doom.
Although the numbing air forbade now pain.
Faintly he said—"My brothers! Leave me too,
Check not your progress to the Mountain Heaven!"
And Yudhistir looked back, and on his brow
The shade of horror darkened, but he cried,
As if the sight but roused his will to frenzy,—
"Onward! Still onward! To the Mountain Heaven!"
But Sahadev said—"I part not from Nakul,
We are the children of one mother. I
Do not turn back, but where one son of Mádee
Lays his bones there too must the other rest.
We were not joined through life to part in death."
Yudhistir answered—"Be it as you will,
But we must onward on our destined path."
"Tis right for you"—said Sahadev—"But for me

* Perhaps some of my readers are not aware that people frozen to death are believed to first sink into a kind of sleep or stupefaction, which of course is never shaken off, except by the use of warmth and stimulants.

† I do not know whether I have been very successful in portraying the frame of mind which prompted the Pandavas to take the extraordinary step of "losing themselves" in the Himalayas. The words in the text, however, appear to express the impression left on the mind by their whole conduct.

‡ This is also an effect of high-mountain-ascents.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

My place is here with Nakul. On, and fear not!"
 So Sahadev sat him down beside his brother,
 And on the others marched, now only three!
 And the dog circled once around the brothers,
 And whined and licked their hands, and then ran on.
 And up—still upwards—the survivors went,
 High rising up amid the vault of heaven,
 As they would reach the sun. And far beneath
 The lesser ranges lay for countless miles,
 Peak beyond peak emerging from the clouds,
 Spread barrier-like between them and the earth.
 The last few stunted shrubs had long been passed,
 And nought there was around but ice and snow and stone.
 And over head two giant summits rose,
 The last and greatest. Still they climbed aloft,
 Clinging to crags and leaping over fissures,
 Though the wind nearly blew them from the heights
 As it came whirling on with unchecked power.
 The sun was sinking from the western heavens
 And still they knew no pause. Till, with a rush
 A snow-wreath, loosened from the mountain side
 Came roaring downwards. All unmoved they stalked—
 What was an avalanche to such as they—
 Men come to seek their doom? And it passed on
 With a most awful hubbub of all sounds,
 From charging cavalry to thunder-claps,
 Filling the icy air and dazzling their eyes
 With the light flakes it sent as harbingers.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Lieutenant-Governor is on tour in Sikkim. He arrived at Phullut on the 1st. To-day he is at Chiabhanjan. To-morrow he passes on to Dentam, arriving at Pemionchi on the 4th, where he also halts the next day. On the 6th, he goes on to Rahlong. The following day sees him at Yougong, and the day after at Silling Nundong. The party arrive at Tumlong on the 9th, where passing the next day, they reach Guntok on the 11th, Pakhyong on the 12th, Pedong on the 13th, Pesheting on the 14th, Meenglas Gurubatham on the 15th, arriving at Julpigotee on the 16th and at Calcutta on the 18th November.

BOMBAY will observe next Saturday the 9th as a close holiday. That day Prince Albert Victor lands there, it being also the birthday of the Prince of Wales. The Oceanic bringing the royal visitor is timed at noon on that day. It has been telegraphed, however to Suez that she may be in harbour at daybreak that the landing may be effected in the cool hours of the morning. The Duke of Connaught and the Governor of Bombay first welcome the Prince on board the steamer and bring him ashore.

THE Times has sent out Captain Charles Norman as a special correspondent to report on the military resources of the Native States. We believe he is a Norman of the Indian Normans.

THE Bengal and North-Western Railway Company have asked permission of the Secretary of State to join with the main line by a branch the grain mart at Revelgunge and to extend it to Byram Ghat as originally projected.

THE Governor-General has sanctioned a survey of the Desert Railway—a line from Delhi to Kotri, the project being officially styled the Bikanir Desert Railway Survey.

THE Secretary of State has accorded provisional sanction to the estimates of Rs. 1,08,53,996 and Rs. 87,68,127 for the extensions of the Cuddapah-Nellore State Railway, now forming part of the Villupuram-Guntakal Railway, namely, the first for the section from Tirupati to Dharmavaram and the second for the section from Pakal to Villupuram.

THE Bank of Bengal seems determined to put down not only the Doorga Pooja vacation but all Hindu holidays. It keeps itself open to-day, recognising only one of the two days for the Juggodhatri Pooja.

ON the 29th October, the London Chamber of Commerce gave a banquet to Lord Dufferin. There were many Indians present, such as Sir Charles Bernard, Sir Rivers Thompson, Sir Robert Davies, Sir James Fergusson, Sir Arthur Hobhouse, Sir M. E. Grant Duff, Sir Charles Aitchison, Sir Donald Stewart, and Sir Alfred Lyall. In reply to his toast, the ex-Viceroy said that if anything were done to weaken the existing relations between India and England, every householder in the manufacturing districts in England would suffer, and if British capital helped in the extension of railways in Burma, China would in all possibility become open to British Commerce, resulting in a prodigious expansion of trade. Referring to Cashmere, although he was for a policy of non-interference in Native States, His Lordship approved of the deposition of Maharaja Pratap Singh.

AFTER 18 years' service at Whitehall, General Richard Strachey retired from the 1st October on a special pension of £500 a year. In his new place as Chairman of the East Indian Railway Company he will draw £1,500 a year or £500 less than his predecessor Mr. James Crawford did. The Englishman understands that Sir Alfred Lyall has succeeded the General as Chairman of the Public Works Committee in the India Council, proving that an Indian Civilian is well up even to the command of the Channel Fleet.

ON Sunday, a disastrous accident happened to the down mail on the E. I. Railway at the Hatras Junction. The cause was a trivial mistake. The Jemadar in charge of the points turned the train into a dead-siding instead of on to the main line. The train was dashed into the embankment which terminates sidings; the engine was derailed; and the brake-van and the succeeding carriage—a third-class for native females—were smashed. The casualties are given at—killed 13 women and three children; injured 39, many of them mortally. The editor of the Pioneer Mr. Hensman was in the train and he, with the driver and the guard and Corporal Macdonald, of 16 Battery, Western Division, Royal Artillery, and Private J. Grant, of the Royal Rifles (both invalids and on their way home) rendered material assistance in rescuing the women and children from among the debris.

A NEW YORK telegram reports that crops having failed for three successive years in Dakota, over a hundred thousand persons have been rendered destitute.

A SHOLAPORE vernacular newspaper wrote that "the Chief of Akalkote is merely a nominal Chief. He is always confined to the place. Both he and the Kharbari do not attend to the affairs of the State; they are addicted to bad habits." Both the Chief and the Kharbari appealed to law for justice charging the editor with defamation. The case will be taken up by the Poona City Magistrate on the 4th instant.

IN August last, Kimberley exported diamonds weighing 200,638½ carats, valued at £387,886.

AN ardent Congressist writing to a contemporary here thus pays his grudge to one of the leading anti-Congressists:—

"The father of the gentleman, living at Allyghur, who is afraid his throat will be cut by some ferocious Babu if the Congress proposals are granted. (I refer to Professor Beck, of the College, which Syed Ahmed founded, and wishes to keep in the family, and the author of some supremely silly compilations on Indian politics)—has been making an exhibition of himself. Mr. Beck, Senior, visited India last year, and, like some other distinguished visitors to the opulent land of India, brought many presents back with him. He also brought in his luggage a Mahomedan suit of clothes, and is very proud of wearing these on special occasions. A few evenings ago—according to the North London local papers—Mr. Beck invited his friends and neighbours to look at his presents, to see him masquerading in the garb of Sir Syed Ahmed, and to hear his views on India. Alas! Mr. Beck, Senior, seems to be as little regarded in North London as Mr. Beck, Junior, is in India. Hardly any body came to the Assembly Rooms, which had been engaged for the purpose. The report I have before me, gives the following particulars:—

"The platform was very tastefully and prettily decorated by the members of Mr. Beck's family with numerous articles of vertu and curiosities brought home by Mr. Beck from India. Want of space alone precludes us from detailing the whole of them, suffice it to say that the collection formed quite a miniature Indian Museum, and was well worthy of careful inspection from an intellectual and artistic point of view.

In the second part of his lecture, Mr. Beck, having during a brief interval retired, appeared dressed in full Mussulman costume coming on to the platform bowing in true Oriental fashion, much to the amusement of the audience. He presented quite a picturesque appearance in this novel attire, and finally gave an outline of the Mussulman form of worship.'

The want of dignity displayed in the whole affair and the power of masquerading are evidently hereditary among the Becks."

A MEDICAL graduate of the Calcutta University was not allowed to practise at Constantinople by the Turkish Government because he could not produce a diploma. He said that it was not the rule of his University to grant any document of the kind. He was scarcely believed. The matter was brought to the notice of the Government of India which has written to the Indian Universities recommending that steps may be taken by the Syndicates to amend the existing regulations, so as to provide for the issue of regular diplomas and licenses to candidates who have passed the recognized examinations in Medicine and Surgery.

THOSE who know the inner life of the people of this land can never charge them with ingratitude. Notwithstanding the learned argument drawn from the supposed absence of a vocable in the Indian languages corresponding to the English word gratitude, nowhere over the world is the sentiment itself stronger than in India. Here, gratitude, like every other thing, descends from son to son. The story of the Calcutta millionaire Ram Dulal Dey, walking on foot in humble guise to the house of the Dutt of Hatkhola, his former masters, and conducting himself in every way as if the old relation had never been changed, could occur only in India. That story, however, is not unique. Instances of the kind may be cited by hundreds. It is a question whether English education is not altering the people for the worse by striking at the very root of such sentiments as the relic of a cringing past, inconsistent with that 'spirit of independence' which means the ignoring of all inconvenient obligations. The sentiment, however, is too deep to be materially affected even by Western influence. It affords us, therefore, sincere pleasure to notice all genuine demonstrations made by the people in their own quiet natural ways for expressing their obligations to benefactors even among the officials of the Government. Demonstrations in honor of retiring Viceroys and Governors of provinces and even Honorable Councillors and Judges are great things in their way. Their genuineness and sincerity might be subjects of doubt. Wire-pullers, acting from self-interest, might be abroad. Or, the thing might be overdone and degenerate into downright caricature as at the neighbouring town of Bali. It will be in the recollection of our readers how, a few years back, in that old, degenerate seat of the Mahasoyas, a knot of busy bodies contrived to charm the magnates of the land on the cheap. How a Lieutenant-Governor was brought down for show with the offer of immortality by connecting his name with a small seminary for youth, a Secretary to Government by associating his with a smaller girls' school, a Divisional Commissioner, of borrowing (against the law) repute, by naming after him a Dispensary not dispensing fifty pounds of quinine in a whole year, and a District Superintendent of Police by calling, if we remember aright, a little flight of steps or a window or a beam or a rafter—measure fit in their frugal schedule of fame, considering the gradation of the last officer—after him. But there are demonstrations and demonstrations of regard. All genuine movements of the kind, however humble, must command sympathy. The local Gazette, before the Poojah holidays, announced many transfers in the Subordinate Judicial Service. Generally speaking, the transfers announced excited little interest outside the immediate circles of friends and acquaintances in which the officers moved. The people remained unmoved. Only at Howrah there was a little stir, for the pleaders addressed off their outgoing Second Moonsiff. One instance, however, occurred, deserving of notice, for the leaders of local society and their followers, numbering by hundreds, came forward, of their own accord, to mark their sense of esteem for the officer leaving them for a distant station. We allude to the modest but genuine movement at the Subdivision of Barripore for honoring the outgoing Moonsiff, transferred to Patuakhali in Backergunge. Besides calling a public meeting which was attended by representatives of all sections of the local community, and recording a resolution expressive of their esteem for Baboo Bepin Behary Chatterjee and the regret they felt at his transfer, they asked the Baboo to sit for a portrait of his the expenses whereof are to be met from local subscriptions. Knowing that the orders of Government do not permit the presentation of an address, the people resolved to show their feelings in another way, viz., by assembling together for seeing their Moonsiff off by the train. The procession formed for the purpose numbered hundreds of persons. It was a decent and orderly train consisting of the local gentry, the pleaders and the mooktears, and the veritable rayyets of the plough. The Native Christians also, through the head of the local Mission, took a part and almost a leading part. A friend writes to us to say that never before had such unanimity been witnessed at Barripore. It was not an affair of the Sudder station only. Gentlemen came from villages in the interior and some went down from Calcutta on purpose. There were some whose presence could not be expected from their age and ailments.

The example is very rare of a judicial officer leaving a scene of only three years' labour amid such genuine regret. We think the present system of transfer after only a period of three years ought not to be a general rule. The period may with advantage be extended to five years, although there are officers, Indian and European, in whose case even three years would be a long period.

THE Bengal Secretariat Press, if the statement made in the Indian Mirror by a correspondent singing himself "La Phune" are founded on fact, should seem to stand in need of some drastic reform. Is it true that a convict holds a situation of trust and responsibility in that establishment, having been smuggled into the appointment by backstairs influence? Is there also a latrine tax that the Superintendent is allowed to levy on only the Hindu and the Mahomedan employees of the press to the exemption of the European, the Eurasian, and the Native Christian hands? Except in the case of the "readers" and the copy-holders, the usual working hours are stated to be from 6-45 A. M. to 8 P. M. If this be true, it were better to dismiss all the present hands and utilise the more heinous offenders in all the Bengal jails for working the Bengal Secretariat Press, although even then philanthropists will raise their voice on behalf of the slightly over-worked convicts. From a letter addressed to us on the subject, recapitulating with slight variations the statements made in the Indian Mirror, it seems that what the employees want is that the same system as regards working hours and pay that obtains in the Government of India's Press under Mr. Dean may be introduced in the Press under the superintendence of Mr. Lewis. The prayer is certainly reasonable. We hope the Under-Secretaries who are served so faithfully by these poor men in setting off their cleverness to advantage under the pomp and circumstance of Gutenberg's invention and whose statesmanship would certainly have been hidden amid piles upon piles of foolscap traced only with marks of the cadmean art, will not fail to attend to the matter. The Head of the Government himself should bear it in mind that a successful strike among the compositors of the Government Press, sympathised in by their fellow craftsmen belonging to the other establishments in Calcutta, might be a very ugly affair. As a matter of fact, by far the greater portion of the hands in the Calcutta presses belong to the poor middle classes of Hindoo and Mahomedan society and not to those classes that are inured to out-door manual labour. It is impossible for them to bear the strain of thirteen hours' work from day to day. The usual working hours in the Government of India's Press as also in all the private presses in Calcutta are seven. Why should the Bengal Secretariat Press be so singular in its regulations?

THE telegraph has flashed the intelligence of the serious illness of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. He is suffering from an attack of congestion of the lungs. At first it was feared that there was very little hope of recovery. Later intelligence is slightly reassuring. Already Mr. Bradlaugh's claim to the gratitude of Indians is well founded. That he may be spared to serve this country and his own is the prayer of all Indians who take an interest in public affairs to that God whom he himself disowns.

Holloway's Ointment.—The great climatic variations which soldiers and sailors experience render them liable to a variety of diseases, the development of which is favoured by exposure and hardships—often, it is to be feared, by their own carelessness as well. Holloway's remedies afford a safe and easy means of cure for those constitutional and local maladies which are so frequently engendered by residence in unhealthy climates and by incautious living. The Ointment is a wonderfully healing application, as it cleanses the surface of foul sores and ulcers, soothes the throbbing and pain in cases of inflammation, and checks the progress of skin diseases. The Pills purify the blood, cleanse the liver, and remove all noxious matter from the system.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Meingoon Prince has, after all, really escaped from Pondicherry and has reached Saigon safe. The poor man has for nothing given himself so much trouble. He is just a day too late. His return to his native land may cause the authorities some anxiety but no practical difficulty. The spirit of the people has been crushed—certainly their resources are exhausted—and the country disarmed.

SIR MORTIMER DURAND has made over charge of the Foreign Secretaryship to Mr. Cuninghame and goes home on furlough. He takes leave opportunely. The question of the native States is sure to come before Parliament at the next sessions, when the Viceroy's able and accomplished Foreign Secretary will be a tower of strength to the India Office.

THE Imperial landlord has cast his eye on his estate on the south of Beugal Proper. The Engine of measurement is about to be turned against the poor Ooryas. Under the direct charge of Mr. Finucane, the Director of Land Records, the settlement work of Orissa, stopped since 1836, will be recommenced in the present cold season. The chief local officers will be Mr. Reily (late Manager of Burdwan), Mr. Datta, Settlement Officer of Mourbhunj, and Babu Prankristo Roy, Deputy Collector. Here is a good prospect of additional revenue. We only hope the Bengal Government will use its advantage with moderation. The public spirited among our Orissan brethren should quietly watch the proceedings of the officials.

A MOVEMENT has been started in Hyderabad to secure the exemption of private dwellings from the operation of judicial decrees. The matter is to be reported upon by a Commission. It is not a bad idea, if kept within reasonable limits. It is certainly in accordance with Oriental sentiment. The British Indian Code of Civil Procedure has recognized the necessity of some protection to "the materials of houses and other buildings belonging to and occupied by agriculturists." In a country not governed by the feudal system, there is sufficient reason why a man's home should be reserved to him through various vicissitudes of fortune. We hope some attention will be paid to the question in the next revision of the Code.

THE Bombay agitation against the proposed Bombay Sunday mail has borne fruit. It has been agreed that Saturday should be the day all the year round for the departure of the English mail from Bombay. The hour for closing the mail will be so fixed as not to interfere with the half holiday at the close of the week. By this new arrangement, the P. and O. Company are freed from the payment of penalty for late arrival of the mails in London whenever the fortnightly Australian steamer arrives behind time.

A CORRESPONDENT at Simla, who is described as "a keen observer of men and things," warns the Morning Post not to judge Lord Lansdowne too hastily. He says "His Excellency is a strong man who will rule justly and well. You must remember that he scarcely had time to get into harness; but when he once has the coach well in hand, you will find what a really worthy successor to the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava we possess. The Viceroy allows no settling of even trifling matters off the bat of the Secretariats, and his firmness in this respect has caused something like alarm in certain quarters." A fig for such "keen observers!" The Viceroy may be ever so strong but he can scarcely free himself from Secretariat leading strings. And well for him that he cannot. Nor is this eternal jealousy of the Secretariat a proof of keenness of observation. The Secretariats represent Indian experience and capacity.

WITH the pacification of the country, the British authorities are now having leisure for civil justice in Upper Burma. The District Magistrate of Kyautse recently investigated a case of death by torture to extort confession. A village and one constable have been ordered transportation for life, another constable sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and an Inspector to one year's simple imprisonment and Rs. 300 fine. The condemned are all Burmans. The Shwebo Correspondent of the Rangoon Times telegraphs that Mr. Buchanan, Extra Assistant Commissioner, and Lieutenant Thatcher, Hampshire Regiment, have each been fined Rs. 300 by the District Magistrate for causing hurt to certain Burmese villagers.

THE capital sentence passed by Commissioner Lindsay on Tantia Bheel runs thus :—

"You have had an impartial trial, and the assessors find you guilty of leading a gang of dacoits, one of whom, Bijnia, shot Himmatt, Patel of Bhuipal, whom there is evidence to prove that you had spite against, and therefore that the murder was committed by your instructions. Section 396, Indian Penal Code lays down that if five or more persons commit dacoity, one of whom conjointly commits murder, all may be punished with death, penal servitude for life, or rigorous imprisonment for ten years with fine. I, therefore, sentence you to death by hanging, subject to confirmation by the Judicial Commissioner. If you wish to appeal against this sentence you must do so within one week."

Tantia was undefended. He was given no counsel to plead in his defence. The opportunity given him for appeal, therefore, resolves itself into mere sound signifying nothing. Tantia's great name which hitherto conquered, now makes him suffer the extreme penalty of the law for constructive murder. The great man falls without a great trial.

THE Tirputhy temple case is being postponed from day to day. Meanwhile the toils are encompassing the sinners. The excavations proving the disappearance of the buried gold, the Mohunt charged four of his servants, witnesses for the prosecution, with abstraction of the treasure. The case was then put off for the police report. The police now charge the Mohunt and the four accused by him with having misappropriated the missing gold. A Madras sowcar has deposed that he has sold gold for the Mohunt, realising Rs. 67,443.

THE Indian Bureaucracy, in its aristocracy the Covenanted Civil Service in especial, may well stick up its nose, seeing that, however modest in origin and material, it includes some of the best European patronymics. A finer leaven gives flavour to the mass of Browns Joneses and Smiths. The Police is crowded with respectability. There has long been a Tonnere in it. And now we read of a Sir William Stewart serving India as a District Superintendent. No mere holder of a personal distinction—no winner, by hook or by crook, of a cheap Indian knighthood—but a veritable Baronet.

A RETIRED Anglo-Indian advertises a book by himself purporting to sing his administrative triumphs while an executive officer in India on an outlying Frontier. Now he is out of the whole business and the country, beyond the reach of Courts and Commissions of Inquiry, and above all explanation, he is safe to indulge himself in any autobiographical romancing. As regards the truth, instead of "How I helped to govern India" it would have been more to the point for him to call his work "How I helped to loot India." He certainly showed some genius in the line. As for governing, he governed with an eye to the main chance. He may yet be a sort of public benefactor if he will give a few plain directions and practical suggestions to the large number of his countrymen in India who, with the most unquestionable desire to share in the pagoda harvest, are yet at a loss how to proceed about it. Our author might teach them, poor souls! the secret of feathering one's nest in the most unpromising field and retiring with a competence before time. He certainly knows how the most beggarly Raja or Ranee may be made to yield to the local Cæsar what is not due to the said Cæsar.

OUR Indian literary men are not very literary, after all. The writers on the British newspapers here are not often beguiled into an epigram or an allusion. As for apt quotation, it is well that they rarely run that risk. They are so unhappy in their sense of metre. Here is a writer of some smartness in Madras, who is apparently regarded as a great gun down South, who has been tempted and his fall is pitiable. He has in his last lucubration sought to give point to an elaborate effort at "chaff" against Lord Connemara's Private Secretary, in respect of the narrative of the Governor's Tour, with a dispatch which is so remarkable that we reproduce it in its entirety, with its own peculiar punctuation or defiance of all punctuation. It is thus—

"Who will not weep for such a man as he

Who will dare laugh when he in such misery."

The inverted commas at the beginning and at the end are the writer's own, and they are the only marks of punctuation in the lines, besides the final full stop. If they are used for the purpose of emphatically suggesting that the couplet is a quotation, it must be a queer classic from which he drew it. We would rather suppose it to be a parody of Pope, and a strange travesty it makes of one of the most famous couplets of that accurate and brilliant writer. Defiance of punctuation, did we say? It defies all grammar. Nay, it defies not Syntax and Prosody alone, but Arithmetic also. Not only do the lines not scan, but they do not count too, and there is a poor verb somewhere left out. And the paper—the Madras Spectator—which contains this brilliant curiosity of literature, joins in the railing at "Native journalism in India" as a thing "conducted on charmingly free and easy lines." But native journalism is not conducted on such "charmingly free and easy lines."

So much for Madras and the smart Madras. But the matter does not mend in higher latitudes, literary, ethnological, or geographical. Look at the Pioneer. To call it the leading journal goes without saying but scarcely conveys a sufficient idea of the Leviathan. Child of fortune, doated upon by Government and pampered by official favours, it has been placed in a position to command the patronage of the world of readers as well as advertisers. Its resources are unbounded and its arrangements are on a magnificent scale. It has no end of editors, contributors, correspondents, reporters, and retainers of all kinds. The highest civil and military servants of the State are tempted by the princely honorariums offered by it. Of course, it takes care to secure the best Patent. And yet it is scarcely more free than humbler journals from inaccuracy and error. That it has a good staff is wellknown, as also that its productions are usually of a respectable level. It has always too one or two excellent paragraphs, and it occasionally arrests the public with a brilliant "leader," a charming epistle, or an amusing ditty, or informs—sometimes "o'erinforms"—the world with a masterly essay. But it is far from being equal. They are not all picked men, the writers who serve it. And there is no adequate supervision exercised upon them such as we remark in the superior British journals at Home. Here is an instance in point. Our contemporary's Special at the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West's hill capital of Naini Tal is doubtless one of the favorites of the great Establishment. He is a respectable penman for an Indian paper who is perhaps great on the important subjects of picnics and polo. We say "perhaps," because we are no judges of such high matters. But he is not nearly so great in the less recondite matter of pure literature. In his last, he treats us to a short dissertation on picnics, classifying the several kinds. Had he confined himself to this and cognate subjects, nothing would have been better, perhaps—always perhaps. He might have earned the gratitude of "Society" without being anybody's laughing stock. But as in classic times, so at the present day, the cobbler will go beyond his last—with the old result. The Special was tempted to show his wit. And this was his ruin. As one of the principal members of the staff of the leading journal, he probably felt himself bound to be brilliant. It was not enough to be an apt analyser of picnics: he must be apt at quotation. So he racked his brain, and at last thought his memory supplied him out of its pigeon-holes with a snatch from the singing of a great master. But picnics have no more affinity to poetry than Monmouth has to Macedon. And so he contrived only to write himself down. The editors at Allahabad were too distracted with the legal troubles of their Chief at the hands of their obstinate victim Captain Hearsay to lend him any assistance to save their unfortunate scribe.

The Naini Tal Special Letter thus opens:—

"Our life (says a great poet) is but a birth and a forgetting." The great poet is certainly right as regards Naini Tal. There is the inevitable series of social events: the introduction—followed by acquaintance and friendship (I need not go further)—and the parting. Picnics usually accompany and lighten these partings, however; and this is the stage, now all but over, in which we at present find ourselves."

"The stage.....in which we at present find ourselves." The poor Letterist has no consciousness of the stage at which he has brought himself. Verily, such a plunge into bathos at starting goes beyond the worst infelicities of the Anglo-Indian press. To what base uses even great poets may come or be put! Even according to his own reading—and it is a sufficiently original reading—of the poor bard, it is difficult to catch the drift of this writer's thought. How is his "great poet" who, according to him, says "our life is but a birth and a forgetting," "certainly right" as regards Naini Tal? Where is the "birth" and where the "forgetting?" The introduction, the acquaintance ripening into friendship, and the parting, are common all the world over, and no ghost of a great poet might well have been spared the duty of furnishing a text for so obvious a homily. It is again a case of Monmouth and Macedon

But the most notable thing is the quotation. It is rich beyond compare for blundering. We certainly know no writer—poet or prosist—who has produced the remarkable thought that "our life is a birth and a forgetting." There was one bard "who uttered nothing base," who, in probably his grandest flight of poesy, sang—

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting
And cometh from afar;
Not in entire forgetfulness
And not in utter nakedness
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home:
Heaven lies about us in our infancy!

Of course, that sublime vision of the seer would not have suited the chronicler of society at Naini Tal and the philosophical analyser of picnics and polo.

AFTER having suppressed the Praja Bandhu, rendered historical by such suppression, and passed a law for the better safety of official secrets and the punishment of offending journalists, for the better preservation of the internal peace of the Empire, Lord Lansdowne has gone to the N. W. Frontiers to examine for himself the securities against foreign aggression and to secure the loyalty of the frontier clans and khyels. The Viceroy accompanied by Lady Lansdowne left Simla on Tuesday the 22nd October. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab joined the Viceregal party at Lahore and they all reached Rawalpindi in the evening of the 24th. Their Excellencies were quartered at Mr. Commissioner Smythe's. The entry at Lahore was private, yet the municipality assailed the Viceroy with an address and Sirdar Kirpal Singh and his nephew Sirdar Jujan Singh offered to commemorate the advent by the erection of a library building open to Europeans and natives which they asked permission to call the "Lansdowne Library." After replying to the municipal address and granting the prayer of the Sirdars, Lord Lansdowne held a Levee of the civil and military officers. Next morning there was a parade, and an Evening Party by the Commissioner concluded the day's programme and the visit to that military station. The same night, the Lord and Lady parted company, the Viceroy leaving for Khusalgarh where Sir James Lyall had preceded him and the Marchioness for Peshwar the next morning the 26th. The Viceregal party arrived at Kohat at midday on Saturday the 26th, and drove to the Deputy Commissioner's where the Lieutenant-Governor and all the civil and military officers of the District received the Viceroy. There was a Garden Party and a dinner at the garrison mess. On Sunday Lord Lansdowne attended divine service and drove through the city and the fort.

On Monday the 28th, there was a parade in the morning and then the Viceroy rode through the Kohat Pass, arriving at Peshawar in the afternoon, stopping at Anmal Chabutra for lunch. It was at one time feared that the Viceroy would not be able to ride for lameness caused by a kick from a pony but he would not change the programme and so rode on. There was firing too heard in the Pass, but it was attributed to tribal disputes. The party arrived safe at Peshawar at 5 in the evening. Next morning the Viceroy made a sort of triumphal progress through the city which was decorated. There was a municipal address, a Levee, a Katak dance, a Ball. The last was distinguished by a reel, two pipers of the 74th playing while about 20 officers and ladies danced to the tune. Here the Viceroy was joined by his good lady. They left Peshawar on the 30th for Ali Musjid and Luudi Kot. The next day the Viceroy visited the Khyber Pass. The carriage was driven to Jamrud where 360 Khyber Rifles welcomed the Viceroy. Ali Musjid was reached at 10-30. The Khyber Maliks had assembled and were presented to the Viceroy. On return from Luudi Kot, during breakfast, a shot was heard which was reported to be an accidental fall of a rifle, an elder of the Zakha Khel Afridis being shot in the right ankle and severely injured. The Viceroy's physician Dr. Feuü attended the wounded and the Viceroy himself, accompanied by the Commander-in-Chief, left the breakfast table to make personal enquiries—an extraordinary sacrifice for Britons. There was a grand parade of troops. The Viceregal party privately left at midnight for Attock which was reached the next morning. The Viceroy was this day to have gone down the Indus by boat to Til Kafir Kot, reaching it in three days.

The Viceregal party have been unlucky in their riding. In the tramp through the Kohat Pass, Lord Lansdowne was shabbily treated by an impudent pony. His Lordship had the pluck to disregard the pain and ride on. A more serious affair seems to be the kick which the Private Secretary received from a horse on the way to Lundi Kotal. We are concerned to hear that he has been confined in consequence. Colonel Ardagh is a seasoned man, eminently horsey of Turkey and Egypt, and it must be a very severe accident which would disable him even for a time. We hope he will soon recover.

TAKING the cue from the Indian Code, they have passed in England a General Clauses Act which they have named the Interpretation Act, 1889, being 52 and 53 Victoria, Chapter 63—An Act for consolidating enactments relating to the Construction of Acts of Parliament and for further shortening the Language used in Acts of Parliament. [30th August, 1889.] We reproduce here section 18, which specially mentions India in various forms.

"18. In this Act, and in every Act passed after the commencement of this Act, the following expressions shall, unless the contrary intention appears, have the meanings hereby respectively assigned to them, namely:—

(1) The expression 'British Islands' shall mean the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man.

(2) The expression 'British possession' shall mean any part of Her Majesty's dominions exclusive of the United Kingdom, and, where parts of such dominions are under both a central and a local legislature, all parts under the central legislature shall, for the purposes of this definition, be deemed to be one British possession.

(3) The expression 'colony' shall mean any part of Her Majesty's dominions exclusive of the British Islands, and of British India, and, where parts of such dominions are under both a central and a local legislature, all parts under the central legislature shall, for the purpose of this definition, be deemed to be one colony.

(4) The expression 'British India' shall mean all territories and places within Her Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by Her Majesty through the Governor-General of India, or through any Governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India.

(5) The expression "India" shall mean British India together with any territories of any native prince or chief under the suzerainty of Her Majesty exercised through the Governor-General of India, or through any governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India.

(6) The expression "governor" shall as respects Canada and India, mean the Governor-General, and include any person who for the time being has the powers of the Governor-General, and, as respects any other British possession shall include the officer for the time being administering the government of that possession.

(7) The expression 'colonial legislature' and the expression 'legislature,' when used with reference to a British possession, shall respectively mean the authority, other than the Imperial Parliament or Her Majesty the Queen in Council, competent to make laws for a British possession."

The Act comes into operation from the first day of January 1890.

This is the first time, we believe, that Parliament openly claims the suzerainty of England over the Native States.

THE OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT.

THE absorbing topic of the day is still the passing (by the Imperial Council) of the Official Secrets Act, and still more, perhaps, the strong and indignant speech made by the Viceroy on the occasion. That speech is the subject of more speculation than the law itself. A well-known Bengali journal has the characteristic distinction of having forced this rather sudden and hurried legislative movement. The publication in the Amrita Bazar Patrika of a confidential Foreign Office document touching the state of the Cashmere frontier is the immediate occasion of the enactment, notwithstanding anything to the contrary that apologists of the measure may urge. This publication is resented by the Government as an intolerable offence, particularly as while a part of the Foreign Secretary Sir Mortimer Durand's minute is accurately given, the rest is said to be suppressed, and in its place is inserted a passage which imputes to the Government sinister intentions with regard to Cashmere which are, of course, repudiated. The objectionable passage is as follows:—

"Altogether I think our first step should be to send up temporarily and quietly a selected military officer (Captain A. Durand of the Intelligence Department) and a junior medical officer. Both of them will have the support of the Durbar when and where it will be necessary, and they will not display any indiscretion, so that the Durbar may not have any hint of the work they are about to undertake, and they will have to obtain the consent of the Durbar in matters concerning military difficulties. Once we can establish a belief that our undertaking is nothing but the welfare of the Durbar, we are surely to attain our object. Time will show that my view is not a wrong one. In it lies, I venture to hope, the safe realisation of that object which was once contemplated in Lord Canning's time and afterwards it was abandoned after deliberation."

The Viceroy is particularly wroth at this garbled rendering of what is claimed to be an otherwise honest State paper, although, we fancy, the disclosure of any such important State matters, even if there were no misquotations or misrepresentations, would be a source of no small annoyance and vexation. The disclosure itself must be provoking, apart from its manner and circumstances, and one must naturally sympathise with the Government in its feelings in such an unpleasant situation and in its efforts to set its house in better order for the future. There are, it must be admitted, certain classes of public business in which it is essential to the public interests that counsels and confidences should be more faithfully kept, and such incidents are, indeed, a mortifying proof of human weakness and of the futility of all our methods and systems that, in spite of the utmost safe-guards, these counsels and confidences are not, as a matter of fact, so kept. Secrets, however, have such an ineradicable tendency of getting out, in all human affairs, in so many irritating ways, that, with all our natural sympathy with the Government, we cannot divest ourselves of the fear whether the proposed remedy will effectively meet the evil against which it is aimed.

It is a delicate subject, and our position with respect to it still more delicate. We fear, we have already been more outspoken in the expression of our sympathy with the Government and of our fears with regard to the measure than would be liked in the proper quarters. On the one hand, those who are responsible for the security and good government of the Empire are in serious earnest. They have put their heads together to devise how the great interests of which they are in charge could be safeguarded, and naturally look for loyal and honest expressions of public opinion with regard to their proposed measure. It is not an occasion for evading responsibility. As men of business ourselves, we can well sympathize with the needs of business. We know and maintain the sacredness of our own little confidences. How much greater must be the necessity for the maintenance of confidence in the business of a great State. On the other hand, the whole native press is up in arms against the measure, as aimed in especial against it. That press is full of fear and trembling, and we are per force drawn in by fellow-feeling and the sympathy of numbers. The Government of India must be armed, said the Viceroy, with "a weapon which can, if necessary, be used with exemplary effect." That is ominous language in a country unprotected by a popular Chamber. Of course, the safety of the State may possibly require such measures, and in that case we shall be the first to advocate plenary powers for the Executive. But where is the necessity? Lord Lansdowne also said that "the new law is intended to be put in force in such cases, (like the Amrita Bazar Patrika's), and that those who publish official documents without authority will come within its scope, whether the persons by whom those documents have been divulged are discovered or not, and whether those documents themselves are published in their entirety or, as in the present instance, reproduced in a garbled and truncated form." Our position, therefore, with respect to the proposed law is almost a personal one. But however personal, delicate or embarrassing, the occasion needs honest straightforward speaking. We have already said we sympathise with the Government, the interests of which are sacred and paramount. But, nevertheless, we are of opinion that the Government would have shown itself to better advantage by maintaining dignified forbearance on the subject. The Government rests on a sufficiently broad and stable basis to have its equanimity disturbed on slight occasions—occasions which have occurred in the past, without leading to any serious consequences. There was hardly an occasion for punitive measures. Such penal laws are easily turned into engines of persecution. While one portion of the press is thrown into fear, another is almost jubilant, and this curious anomaly is significant. For the rest, such laws soon fall into disuse, and merely encumber the statute book until, at rare intervals, a new victim has to be persecuted. Misrepresentations of the actions of Government, as of private action, must be combated with other weapons. The noble vindication of the sincerity and the good will of the Government in its action towards Cashmere is the best refutation of any charges that may be laid at its door. Opportunities for placing in its true light any action of Government which the public misunderstand or misrepresent are easily found, and an official disclaimer of the kind contained in Lord Lansdowne's speech would go far more to reassure public opinion than the result of a criminal prosecution.

MUNICIPAL SANITATION.

THE following appears in a contemporary :—

"The Report on sanitary measures in India in 1887-88, just issued amongst the Parliamentary papers, is more than usually interesting. It contains, in an appendix, a despatch from Lord Cross to the Government of India, dated January 10, 1889, enclosing a very valuable minute from Sir Henry Yule on the subject of sanitation in India. Sir Henry complains that for the last quarter of a century these reports have been regularly made, reviewed in an able manner by the Army Sanitary Committee, and straightway forgotten. The time has now come for a new and large step forward, for the insanitary condition of India is becoming yearly a more serious political evil. It is alleged against us that cholera, however it may be diffused, is continually being generated in India; and that whilst we laugh at quarantine as useless, and point to sanitary reforms as the only effectual barriers to the spread of the disease, we in India leave these sanitary reforms substantially uneffected. Sir H. Yule adds that 'the gradual but persistent carrying out of local sanitary reforms, and the judgment of the adequacy of the provision made for that object, cannot be left to depend ultimately upon the votes of a municipal majority. It is indeed an essential part of the duty of a municipality to carry out such reforms for the benefit of the locality; but the importance of the results of such measures, and the consequence of their being neglected, extend far beyond their local bearings.'"

We think it high time to warn our municipalities that they do not wreck on this rock of sanitation. They are at best on their trial, and on this question of sanitation their conduct so far has failed to earn the confidence of the authorities. The complaint of their neglecting sanitation is an old one, and now there is a specific proposal for curtailing their powers in this respect which they have in a manner courted so long. There is in each municipality, great or small, a clean and an unclean party—a party of advance, and another opposed to move. Representatives of backward localities and communities have always been a clog on their more favoured colleagues, and where they commanded a majority, the cause of progress was thrown back, and things remained as they were. The history of the great municipality of Calcutta no less than that of smaller municipal bodies in the country at large, affords abundant proof of this. In Calcutta, almost every great reform, whether the Drainage or the Water-Supply, has had to be carried out in the teeth of a powerful opposition. In the country at large, the reason why the repeated recommendations pressed upon municipalities by the Sanitary Officers of the Government remain uneffected is similar opposition from rural representatives. It is time this state of things should cease. The sanitary reports published year after year have been almost systematically neglected, and a part, at least, of the responsibility for this must rest on our municipalities. In the meantime, what havoc is being committed in the land by malarial fever, cholera, and other diseases! Not to go very far into the interior of the country, the villages in the metropolitan districts are at this time passing through a fearful epidemic of fever. The fate of people in the interior must be worse in the absence of even such partial sanitary provisions as exist near the metropolis. Will it be believed that as regards many tracts, there is hardly any adequate supply of drinking water, and that a water famine in summer has become a regularly recurring feature of life in the districts? To aggravate the evil, there is scarcely any provision for medical aid in these outlying tracts. These facts are highly discreditable to the administration and, though in regard to the rural areas, it is not the municipal institutions that are to blame, the responsibility must rest somewhere. Our present object is to say that where municipalities do exist, there should be no reason for the complaint of the continuance of insanitary conditions or the disregard of sanitary requirements. The municipal authorities should act in cordial harmony with sanitary officials, so as not to incur the imputation of being obstructive. If there were this harmony between them, their responsibility would be diminished and they would not come in for so much blame. It would in many cases be clear that the absence of sanitary reforms was not always due to municipal opposition or inappreciation of the importance of those reforms, but to want of sufficient funds. Where this was the case, the municipal authorities, working in conjunction with the sanitary officers, would justly escape censure. They might also reckon upon their aid in any scheme for providing the necessary funds by means of loans from the State or otherwise. But this only in respect of extensive and costly schemes of sanitary improvement. In respect of minor local works, the charge against municipalities must still lie. We therefore warn them to realise their duties in regard to the vital need of sanitation and to work in union with the Sanitary Department. Already, the impression largely prevails in official quarters that they do not attend to those duties well enough. And now here is an expression of adverse opinion from a member of the Secretary of State's Council which they cannot afford to despise.

But while we have no desire to exculpate our municipalities from the charge of neglecting sanitation, is the Sanitary Department itself above blame? Have not the Sanitary Commissioners been guilty of a perfunctoriness and want of heart in their work? Now that the subject of sanitation has attracted prominent attention, these officials may make some signs of activity; but in years past, from the way in which they had gone about their business, one could not but come to the conclusion that they considered their duties consisted in merely submitting Annual Reports to the Government. They never cared to see whether their recommendations were carried out by the local authorities concerned or not. The neglect of these authorities was never so much as noticed, and if under the circumstances the municipalities went on in their old course of apathy and indifference, the responsibility was not entirely theirs.

The reader need scarcely be reminded how repeatedly, times without number, we have pointed out the laches of municipalities as well as of the Sanitary Commissions. We showed how small was the practical good we have so long derived from the Sanitary Departments since their creation. They have, indeed, scarcely repaid the expenditure involved in their maintenance. The inutility of the Sanitary Commissions we have, indeed, insisted upon as a charge against themselves. But the Government holds a different view and lays the blame upon the municipalities entirely. What we complained of with regard to the Sanitary Commissions was that they seemed to regard their duty began and ended with the preparation of written reports, pointing out sanitary defects and suggesting their removal. In most cases they scarcely cared to see whether their recorded recommendations were attended to or not. The Sanitary Departments, in our view, should be executive as well as consultative, and should be armed with power, under proper safeguards, to enforce their demands, and, what is more, with funds provided by the State to help the small urban and rural Committees which otherwise were often debarred by their poverty from carrying out elaborate suggestions for sanitary improvement.

THE MAHOMEDAN EDUCATION CONTROVERSY.

The extraordinary effusion of your Mahomedan scribe in your issue of the 5th October 1889 has roused the just indignation of the Mahomedans and those who are well acquainted with their society. His pretensions of much experience of the social and educational matters of the Mahomedans are mere sound and fury. His assertions are quite out of place and irrelevant and in most cases fabricated. He seems to have not much knowledge of the ins and outs of the society he has recklessly villified.

Your correspondent, under the garb of a philosopher made his solemn appearance and in strong terms expressed his disapproval of the "reasons of the backwardness of their co-religionists both in educational and cultural progress" hitherto given by the experienced Mahomedans. Being unacquainted with, and having no idea of, the addresses and representations made, from time to time, by the leaders of the community to the British Government on behalf of their co-religionists in matters political, religious and educational, "A Mahomedan" says that the poverty-complaint of the Mahomedans "is not generally applicable in the case of the upper and middle classes, who can well meet the expenses of their education, and who could have made up the deficiencies of school education in special branches at home." Your correspondent is quite mistaken in supposing that the chief cause assigned by the Mahomedan patriots to the backwardness of their co-religionists in educational matters "is not generally applicable" to all the sections of the community. It appears that he does not know how the Mahomedan society is formed. Those members of the upper and middle classes whom he speaks of in such high terms are mere exceptions. For the majority of the men of those classes are living from hand to mouth. Moreover, how many of the so-called rich men could be had who could uselessly expend money, on the education of their children under the existing bad and highly defective system? If the present system of education were perfect and the training were suitable to the requirements of the Mahomedans and their society, the condition of the Mahomedans would have been different. I very much doubt whether your correspondent is aware of the "deficiencies of school education" which the Mahomedan boys have to face, and which he calmly recommends to rectify by home study. Can he enlighten us with the solution of his imaginary problem by citing examples from the educational records of any of the civilized nations of the nineteenth century? I would not wish him to trouble himself by researches and bother you with his scribbles by quoting isolated individual instances which are rare and infrequent.

Owing to ignorance and short-sightedness your correspondent made disparaging and untrue statements relating to the ladies of high classes. Mahomedan ladies of the respectable and rich families are generally educated to the extent society requires them to attain. Female education is in full swing in these families. It is the general practice for an advanced lady to perform the functions of a governess in the family. And it is customary for these educated and well-behaved ladies to look after the movements and habits of the infants till the age of four and half years, when they have to undergo the Bismilla Khani ceremony and are placed under the charge of a tutor for instruction. Notwithstanding this new arrangement, these ladies are often required to teach these male infants orally the principles of Islam and to supervise their morals and manners till they attain the age of puberty, when they are not allowed to remain and sleep in the zanana. Under these circumstances one can judge how far your correspondent is correct in saying that "among the females of the high classes there is little which will further the education of the boys."

With regard to guardians he says that "by some erroneous rules of our society they are precluded from mixing with their boys" and owing to their bad and objectionable habits they keep themselves aloof from their children. He further opines that this separation resulting in the want of sympathy and love is the cause of the ruination of the Mahomedan boys. This is an absurd idea. Indeed, the actual truth lies rather in the opposite direction. There is no absence of affection and love among the Mahomedan parents and guardians for their children. On the contrary, they are more tender, more touching, in their regard and solicitude for them than the guardians of young folk of the more advanced nations in the world. Instead of creating "a gulf of separation between the boy and his father," rather too much love and attachment often become regular obstacles in the way of proper training of the young. Overwhelming affection of the parents generally makes the boys impertinent, and with impunity they often neglect to carry out, or act according to, the instructions given to them by their tutors. It is also natural that frequent and daily meetings of the father and son excite the paternal love to a climax which does not allow the doting parent to endure the pains that might be produced by witnessing the darling punished or chastised by the tutor. To avoid the evils accruing from this the civilised nations of Europe and the wise men of other climes adopted, in the interests of their children, such plans, which separate the pupils from the family circle, and put them under proper care and training, and allow them to enjoy the company of their dear and near relatives only on special occasions and for fixed periods. Having not the mental faculty of judging and appreciating the utility and advantages of this separation between the father and son, and not knowing how this practice has become a national custom, "A Mahomedan" unhesitatingly finds fault with the Mahomedan guardians and wickedly attributes it to their social evils. The social evils which he makes so much capital of can be found in Christians, Hindus, Jews, Mahomedans, &c., including Princes, Dukes, Earls, Lords, Nawabs, Maharajas, Rajahs, Zemindars, and all the rich and wealthy men, of the Old and New worlds. Are not the politicians, statesmen, tradesmen, and the luxurious and licentious men on the same footing with each other in observing the child-separation custom above alluded to? Yes, they are so very busy about their own affairs that they scarcely get time to pay proper daily attention to the education of their children. In consequence of which they cannot but entrust to competent men what they themselves could not do in the interests of their own children. Regarding those Mahomedans and non-Mahomedans who keep their sons and relatives in boarding houses or allot separate rooms for them and meet them occasionally during their academical life, your correspondent explains their motive by stating that they "have not the courage, honor and justice to mend or improve their own manners or habits or give their evil ways up" and calls them "very cruel, unjust and indifferent to their own personal interests."

He seems to have a peculiar notion of educating the young. According to him youngsters cannot properly be educated unless the society they belong to is thoroughly free from social evils. He wants guardians to be the models of virtue, and to wield the rod themselves and be the instructors of their own wards. To follow his plan we must overhaul the Education Department and clear it of those who are not what they should be in their private lives. In the same manner, without a thought as to the practicability or possibility of the thing, he officiously advises the Mahomedans to reform their own households first and then think of the education of their own children.

Your correspondent's suggestions for remedying the existing evils are as erroneous and injurious as could be. The frequent association and companionship of the father and son during the latter's academical life should be discouraged as much as possible rather than encouraged. The boarding system at educational centres which the Government has consented to patronize should be placed on a sound basis after the English Boarding Schools and Colleges. Especial arrangements should be made to accommodate the children of the "upper ten" and give them proper education according to the requirements of Mahomedan society. Public spirited Mahomedan gentlemen should arrange for the formation of local committees for the management of these hostels and occasionally see whether the pupils are properly treated and taught. If the Mahomedans of the upper and middle classes entrust the education of their children to the local Boarding House Committee the condition of our society will be changed for the better within another generation.

A SOBER MAHOMEDAN.

NARAIL.

10th October, 1889.

SIR,—Nothing can be more satisfactory than the feeling of amity that subsists between the Hindus and Mahomedans in the rural parts of East Bengal.

Unfortunately a serious rupture has broken out between the Chandals and the Mahomedan cultivators of parts of our District. There are frequent fights between the two parties, armed with "lathies". This state of things is causing considerable unrest amongst the people and may extend to the whole of the District, unless strict measures are taken by the authorities to suppress it. The cause of this ill-feeling has not been found out yet.

Public Paper.

No. 1959.

From C. J. Layall, Esq., C.I.E., Officiating Secretary to the Government of India.

To the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Simla, the 21st October 1889.

SIR,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 3/9 (Confidential) dated the 23rd September 1889, submitting an explanation from Babu Tinkauri Banerji, an Assistant in the Office of the Director of Public Instruction, in regard to his connection with the Praja Bandhu, a vernacular newspaper published at Chandernagore. In reply, I am to communicate the following observations and orders.

2. The attention of the Government of India has been drawn to the following scurrilous and seditious articles which have recently appeared in the Praja Bandhu newspaper:—

- (1) that of July 12th on "the Englishman's crooked policy;"
- (2) that of the 23rd August, on the Famine Fund;
- (3) those of the 30th August—one headed "Brother, why seek to have the Raj any more?" and the other on Cashmere affairs;
- (4) that of 9th September on Cashmere;
- (5) that of the 13th September, also on Cashmere;
- (6) that of the 20th September 1889 on "Englishmen, the benefactors of India."

3. On the appearance of the first article on the "Englishman's crooked policy" a report was called for from the Bengal Government on the general character of the Praja Bandhu newspaper, and information was asked for as to the name, residence and occupation of the Editor and his general reputation. The report received shows that the Praja Bandhu is published at Chandernagore. The late Editor, Ashutosh Sen, was not long ago sentenced by the French Courts to three months' imprisonment and fine for publishing a defamatory article about a priest, and his appeal to the tribunals in France against his sentence was rejected. On the expiry of his term of imprisonment Ashutosh Sen was again employed on the staff of the Praja Bandhu. The nominal Editor during several months past, in which interval the articles noticed in paragraph 2 appeared, is reported to be one Nirod Chandra Mukerji. This man is said to be a cousin of Tinkauri Banerji, the Managing Proprietor, who is an Assistant in the Office of the Director of Public Instruction in Bengal. Tinkauri Banerji was called upon for an explanation of his connection with the Praja Bandhu. The date on which he received the call is not stated in your letter, but it was on the 5th August that the Government of India called for a report, and on the 6th September he published a declaration that he had severed his connection with the Paper and was no longer Managing Proprietor. It seems probable that between those dates he had become aware that the matter had attracted the notice of Government, but the reason which he himself assigns for having withdrawn from the management is that "the lawsuits, prosecutions, &c., in which he became involved through his connection with the paper had become unbearable." He has offered no apology for allowing his newspaper to be used for the purpose of scurrilous attacks on the Government which he serves and of promoting disaffection. The articles referred to are of such a character that if the Paper had been published within British India the Editor and Publisher would have been indicted under the Indian Penal Code. By issuing it from Chandernagore, which is Tinkauri Banerji's native town, he evades prosecution, but he has been guilty of gross misconduct and disloyalty to the Government whose pay he enjoys, and he cannot be permitted to escape altogether with impunity.

4. By becoming Proprietor of the Paper, and a fortiori Managing Proprietor, Tinkauri Banerji has contravened the standing orders of the Government of India as contained in Home Department Resolution No. 19—1134, dated 8th July 1875. These orders prohibit any Government servant from becoming the Proprietor of a newspaper without the previous sanction in writing of the Government he is serving, and direct that such sanction shall only be given in the case of newspapers mainly devoted to topics not of a political character. As Managing Proprietor Tinkauri Banerji is distinctly responsible both for the scurrilous tone of the Paper, and for the publication of the seditious articles 1 to 4 mentioned in paragraph 2 of this letter, as well as for earlier articles of the same character which have not been specifically quoted.

5. The Governor-General in Council directs that Tinkauri Banerji be dismissed from the service of Government, and I am to request that the necessary instructions may be issued for his immediate removal from his appointment in the Office of the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal.

6. I am to add that the Governor-General in Council has further decided to put in force against the Praja Bandhu the provisions of section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, VIII of 1878, and section 60A of the Indian Post Office Act, XIV of 1866, and a notification to that effect will be published in the Gazette of India.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

C. J. LYALL,

Offg. Secretary to the Government of India.

THE GAZETTE NOTIFICATION.

POST OFFICE, GENERAL MATTERS.

The 26th October, 1889.

No. 5419.—Under section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, the Governor-General in Council hereby prohibits the bringing or taking by sea or by land into British India of any copies of past or future issues of the newspaper styled the Praja Bandhu and published at the Vyás Press, Chandernagore.

Law.

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT, 1889.

[52 & 53 VICTORIA, CHAPTER 52.]

An Act to prevent the Disclosure of Official Documents and Information.

[26TH AUGUST, 1889.]

BE it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. (1) (a) Where a person for the purpose of wrongfully obtaining information—

Disclosure of information.

- (i) enters or is in any part of a place belonging to Her Majesty the Queen, being a fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard, camp, ship, office, or other like place, in which part he is not entitled to be; or

- (ii) When lawfully or unlawfully in any such place as aforesaid, either obtains any document, sketch, plan, model, or knowledge of any thing which he is not entitled to obtain, or takes without lawful authority any sketch or plan; or

- (iii) when outside any fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard, or camp belonging to Her Majesty the Queen, takes or attempts to take without authority given by or on behalf of Her Majesty, any sketch or plan of that fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard, or camp; or

(b) where a person knowingly having possession of, or control over, any such document, sketch, plan, model, or knowledge as has been obtained or taken by means of any act which constitutes an offence against this Act at any time wilfully and without lawful authority communicates or attempts to communicate the same to any person to whom the same ought not, in the interest of the State, to be communicated at that time; or

(c) where a person after having been entrusted in confidence by some officer under Her Majesty the Queen with any document, sketch, plan, model, or information relating to any such place as aforesaid, or to the naval or military affairs of Her Majesty, wilfully and in breach of such confidence communicates the same when, in the interest of the State, it ought not to be communicated; he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction be liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one year, or to a fine, or to both imprisonment and a fine.

(2) Where a person having possession of any document, sketch, plan, model, or information relating to any fortress, arsenal, factory, dockyard, camp, ship, office, or other like place belonging to Her Majesty, or to the naval or military affairs of Her Majesty, in whatever manner the same has been obtained or taken, at any time wilfully communicates the same to any person to whom he knows the same ought not, in the interest of the State, to be communicated at that time, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to the same punishment as if he committed an offence under the foregoing provisions of this section.

(3) Where a person commits any act declared by this section to be a misdemeanour, he shall, if he intended to communicate to a foreign State any information, document, sketch, plan, model, or knowledge obtained or taken by him, or entrusted to him as aforesaid, or if he communicates the same to any agent of a foreign State, be guilty of felony, and on conviction be liable at the discretion of the court to penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than five years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour.

2. (1) Where a person, by means of his holding or having held an office under Her Majesty the Queen, has lawfully or unlawfully either obtained possession of or control over any document, sketch, plan, or model, or acquired any information, and at any time corruptly or contrary to his official duty communicates or attempts to communicate that document, sketch, plan, model, or information to any person to whom the same ought not, in the interest of the State, or otherwise in the public interest, to be communicated at that time, he shall be guilty of a breach of official trust.

(2) A person guilty of a breach of official trust shall—

(a) if the communication was made or attempted to be made to a foreign State, be guilty of felony, and on conviction be liable at the discretion of the court to penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than five years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and

(b) in any other case be guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction be liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one year, or to a fine, or to both imprisonment and a fine

(3) This section shall apply to a person holding a contract with any department of the Government of the United Kingdom, or with the holder of any office under Her Majesty the Queen as such holder, where such contract involves an obligation of secrecy, and to any person employed by any person or body of persons holding such a contract, who is under a like obligation of secrecy, as if the person holding the contract and the person so employed were respectively holders of an office under Her Majesty the Queen.

3. Any person who incites or counsels, or attempts to procure, another person to commit an offence under this Act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and on conviction be liable to the same punishment as if he had committed the offence.

4. The expenses of the prosecution of a misdemeanour under this Act shall be defrayed in like manner as in the case of a felony.

5. If by any law made before or after the passing of this Act by the legislature of any British possession provisions are made which appear to Her Majesty the Queen to be of the like effect as those contained in this Act, Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, suspend the operation with-in such British possession of this Act, or of any part thereof, so long as such law continues in force there, and no longer, and such order shall have effect as if it were enacted in this Act.

Provided that the suspension of this Act, or of any part thereof, in any British possession shall not extend to the holder of an office under Her Majesty the Queen who is not appointed to that office by the Government of that possession.

The expression "British possession" means any part of Her Majesty's dominions not within the United Kingdom.

6. (1) This Act shall apply to all acts made offences by this Act when committed in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, or when committed by British officers or subjects elsewhere.

(2) An offence under this Act, if alleged to have been committed out of the United Kingdom, may be inquired of, heard, and determined, in any competent British court in the place where the offence was committed, or in Her Majesty's High Court of Justice in England or the Central Criminal Court, and the Act of the forty-second year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter eighty-five, shall apply in like manner as if the offence were mentioned in that Act, and the Central Criminal Court as well as the High Court possessed the jurisdiction given by that Act to the Court of King's Bench.

(3) An offence under this Act shall not be tried by any court of general or quarter sessions, nor by the sheriff court in Scotland, nor by any court out of the United Kingdom which has not jurisdiction to try crimes which involve the greatest punishment allowed by law.

(4) The provisions of the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1887, shall not apply to any trial under the provisions of this Act.

7. (1) A prosecution for an offence against this Act shall not be instituted except by or with the consent of the Attorney-General.

(2) In this section the expression "Attorney-General" means the Attorney or Solicitor General for England; and as respects Scotland, means the Lord Advocate; and as respects Ireland, means the Attorney or Solicitor General for Ireland; and if the prosecution is instituted in any court out of the United Kingdom, means the person who in that court is Attorney-General, or exercises the like functions as the Attorney-General in England.

8. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires—

Any reference to a place belonging to Her Majesty the Queen includes a place belonging to any department of the Government of the United Kingdom or of any of Her Majesty's possessions, whether the place is or is not actually vested in Her Majesty;

Expressions referring to communications include any communication, whether in whole or in part, and whether the document, sketch, plan, model, or information itself or the substance or effect thereof only be communicated;

The expression "document" includes part of a document;

The expression "model" includes design, pattern, and specimen;

The expression "sketch" includes any photograph or other mode of representation of any place or thing;

The expression "office under Her Majesty the Queen" includes any office or employment in or under any department of the Government of the United Kingdom, and so far as regards any document, sketch, plan, model, or information relating to the naval or military affairs of Her Majesty, includes any office or employment in or under any department of the Government of any of Her Majesty's possessions.

9. This Act shall not exempt any person from any proceeding for an offence which is punishable at common law, or by military or naval law, or under any Act of Parliament other than this Act, so, however, that no person be punished twice for the same offence.

10. This Act may be cited as the Official Secrets Act, 1889.

Short title.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

The Commissioners of Calcutta have resolved to offer to the holders of the 6 per cent. Municipal loan of 1870 for Rs. 4,00,000 repayable on the 1st January 1890, the option of exchanging such debentures to the extent of Rs. 2,85,000 for 5 per cent. debentures of the Municipal loan bearing date the 1st January 1890 and having a currency of 30 years.

The rate for the exchange is fixed at a premium of Rs. 3 per cent. payable by parties accepting the offer, on the amount of the 5 per cent. debentures that may be allotted to them.

As the amount of the 5 per cent. loan available for transfer is Rs. 2,85,000 only, it will be understood that the full amount of the 6 per cent. debentures, namely, Rs. 4,00,000 cannot be exchanged.

Holders of the 6 per cent. debentures desirous of effecting transfers should communicate their wish in a letter to reach the Secretary to the Corporation on or before the 20th December 1889.

Such portion of the 6 per cent. debentures, as may not be exchanged, will be repaid in cash on application made on or after the 1st January 1890. Interest on these debentures will cease on the 31st December 1889.

JOHN COWIE,

Secretary to the Corporation.

THE BENAZIR FAIR— RAMPUR STATE.

NOTICE.

The annual Benazir Fair at Rampur will be held this year on the bank of the Kosi river, by the Rampur and Moradabad road, from the 24th to 30th November. Trades-people of all kinds have been invited with their wares from different parts of the country, and, besides the usual assortments of imported and other miscellaneous goods, special care will be taken to have some of the notable indigenous manufactures of the Province, as of Fatehgarh, Manipuri, Tilhar, Moradabad, and Rampur itself amply represented. As an additional attraction, the Fair will this time combine an Agricultural and Cattle Show. The Director of Agriculture and Commerce has been asked to provide a set of farming implements, some of which will also be shown in working. The Cattle Show will include horses, ponies, mules, cows, bullocks, and buffaloes, and will offer a good opportunity to parties wishing to buy or sell such animals; the State itself being prepared to purchase a fair number to replace those that have become unserviceable. Fodder for cattle brought for show will be provided free of cost.

The tradesmen's stalls, and tents for visitors will form a well ordered camp, with due care for sanitation. For the amusement of visitors there will be a varied programme of wrestling, elephant and ram fights, military sports, &c., ending with the usual display of fireworks. European visitors will be very welcome, and will find every arrangement made for their comfort.

BENGAL BONDED WAREHOUSE ASSOCIATION.

In conformity with section 5 of Act V. of 1854, a General Meeting of proprietors will be held on Wednesday the 15th instant, at noon, for the inspection of accounts for the half-year ended 31st October last, the declaration of a dividend and the transaction of any other business that may be brought forward.

TRAVELS & VOYAGES IN BENGAL

BETWEEN

Calcutta and Independent Tipperah,

BY

SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,

(the last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa.)

Latterly Minister of the Tipperah State.

CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoo Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following :—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river :—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye :—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting :—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.

Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE PANDAVAS IN THE HIMALAYA.

AN EPISODE OF HINDU MYTHOLOGY.

BY THE LATE MURAD ALI BEG né MITFORD.

(Concluded from p. 494.)

And when it had departed—they were two !
Arjoon had vanished ! “Onward”—cried Yudhistir—
“Onward ! my brother, to the Mountain Heaven !”
And Yudhistir, and Bheem, and that gaunt dog,
The last survivors of the Pandav band,
Still trudged their weary way. They staggered now,
And e’en the giant Bheem reeled to and fro,
But Yudhistir still madly shouted out—
“On ! ever onward to the Mountain Heaven !”
And so they reached the summit next to them,
And stood and looked around. Before them lay
Another snow-flat through which sprouted rocks,
And then another peak rose from its bounds
To an appalling height—the last and greatest—
No other summit rivalling it as far
As eye could reach.

And on it from the west
The setting sun shot clear its silvering beams,
Making it sparkle like a diamond,
And the quick glitter fell upon the eye
Of Yudhistir, who raised his hand and shrieked—
“Oh brother ! Onward ! See you not the glory
That shines upon us from the Mountain Heaven ?
Beyond yon summit we shall surely find it !”
And now they went across the snowy flat
Floundering and stumbling ‘mong the ice and snow
Till Bheem found out he suddenly was stopped
As if immovable.* Another effort,
And then he reeled and fell. And looking well,
He saw that from his leg a foot had snapped
Clean at the ankle. And the other’s toes
Had also broken off, but when he knew not,
Since the intense cold stopped all sense of pain.
He tried to rise, but could not. There he lay
Painless, but maimed and helpless, on the snow.
Then he raved loudly, tossed himself about
In vain but frantic struggles to go forward,
And thus he spoke with fury—“What is this ?
Am I—is Bheem—to die like a dog here ?

* The whole of this seems, to a certain extent, an exaggeration at first sight. From, however, the accounts of travellers, aeronauts, &c., it does not appear improbable that a party of men, recklessly pushing forward towards the summit of the Himalayas, might experience the various mishaps described in the text, unless the stupor and exhaustion due to the cold and the rarification of the atmosphere, absolutely incapacitated them from proceeding before the condition of the body described was attained. In historical times, however, no one has been known rash enough to try the experiment, and if so, none at least have returned to tell the result.

I have still strength to reach the Mountain Top
And see the Heaven Yudhistir promises.
I yet am fitter for the march than he.
But for the snapping of a cursed foot,
That seems turned into glass, I must forego
The journey, though not whelmed as Arjoon was,
Or worn like Draupadi and Mádrée’s sons.
And has my giant strength come to this ?
Oh ! oh !—and then, with a wild howl, he dashed
His mace so hard on a rock lying near
That mace and rock alike were smashed to atoms.
And Yudhistir looked back and sternly muttered—
“This comes of wedding with barbarian wives !
This comes of pampering a shameless belly !
I fear me he will die more like an Asur
Than one of Aryan blood.* Let him. I go Alone to seek and find the Mountain Heaven !”
Thus the last Pándav, followed by the dog,
Moved onward on his course towards the peak.
He gained it. As the sun dipped in the west,
There stood Yudhistir on the highest peak
Of the most lofty of the loftiest range
Of mountains on the earth. Though he had left
His toes and fingers on the ice below,
And though the blood was oozing from his mouth,
And from his ears and nostrils ; though his breath
Came faint and labouring through his ice-locked jaws ;
Though his dim eyes swam as he looked around,
And saw on either hand, like plains spread out,
A never-varying sea of mountain tops—
He gained the summit—sank upon the rocks—
And cried in all his bitterness of heart—
“Where, Source of all things, is the Mountain Heaven ?”
And then a mist grew round him, and he saw
The gaunt dog changing to a monstrous form,
All rich and gay with colors and with gems.
And the form said to him—“Oh Yudhistir !
I come to take thee to the highest Heaven
Which thou so well hast earned by perseverance,
And justice, and devotion. I am Yam !
Fear me not. I am kind unto the Just.
I followed thee from Bharatkhand to see
What thou wouldst do, and aid at this thy end,
And as a dog I served thee.” Yudhistir Asked but one question, and ’twas this—“Are those My brothers four, is Draupadi awaiting

* Bheem, the Ajax of the “Great War,” is throughout its whole history (although not without some good qualities) made out to be the fiercest, most barbarous, most sensual, gluttonous, and at the same time, obstinate, obtuse, and imperturbable of the Pándavas. He is, as Yudhistir says in the text, the most “un-Aryan” of the lot. His strength is that of the clown, his mind that of the usual character ascribed to giants. In short, he has more affinity to the Rákshas, whose daughters he marries, than to his own people.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

Me in the Heaven thou namest?"* Then said Yam,
 "No! They have all been subject unto nature
 And to its frailties. And for thee, thou art
 As thyself knowest—a Godhead's incarnation,
 Dharma in person." Answered he, "I left
 My wife and brothers on the path behind
 To find a heaven for all and not for one.
 Hence! I will none of you. Where they are gone,
 There I too will depart, to meet their souls
 And those of Kunti, and my father, and
 The goodly heroes that once grouped themselves
 Within the palace of Hastinapur!
 Hence! Is Vyás not here, to drive him off?"
 Then darkness fell upon him. In an hour,
 Unmarked by mortal eye, on that lone summit
 Lay stretched a stiffened corpse upon the snow,
 O'er which a gaunt dog, faithful to the last,
 Howled in his agony.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

ACCORDING to the last official report, dated the 19th October, the distress in the Patna Division is now confined to the flooded area, and the resources at the Commissioner's disposal are ample to meet all existing requirements. Orders have been issued for closing gratuitous relief as far as possible, and it will be continued, if at all, in the shape of works.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR does not go to Travancore, as previously arranged. The Durbar has already been put to the expense of Rs. 50,000 for preparations already made. It is, however, saved the subsequent expenditure. That ought now to console the Maharaja for the honor withdrawn.

LORD LANSDOWNE has paid Rs. 500 to the 15th Bengal Cavalry men who furnished the mounts for the Viceregal party during their visit to Lundi Kotal, and Rs. 400 to the Artillery men who drove His Excellency to Ali Musjid. The men doubtless regard the payments as presents. By a bad old custom, both men and beasts are always at the disposal of the "big wigs" who want their services. And the "distinguished visitors" not unoften work the poor horses to lameness or worse.

A YOUNG Swiss woman, Miss Emily Kempen, successfully graduated herself in the Zurich University as a Doctor of Laws. But her own country which granted the degree gave her no opportunity of practising the profession she had chosen. She therefore went over to the New World, where there are no old world prejudices against women, and set herself up in Broadway, New York, where she has been for several years. The New York State, while allowing women to practise law, has no institution where they could study it. Miss Kempen, in grateful recognition of the welcome given her by that State, has taken upon herself to supply the desideratum. She has received sufficient encouragement from lawyers, clergymen and well-known women. A building too has been secured. Already applications have been received from eleven candidates for admission.

SIR DONALD MACKENZIE WALLACE has arrived in England and settled down in London, Victoria Street.

DURING 1888-89, Rs. 1,31,000 gold was tendered to the Calcutta mint for coinage, and 15,073 mohurs valued at Rs. 2,26,100 were coined.

* A similar incident is recorded of one of the Northern Barbarians when (in the decline of the Roman Empire) whole tribes embraced Christianity en masse. A bishop was baptising the horde, and it came to the shrewd old Norseman's turn. "Bishop," said he, "before I am sprinkled, I want to ask a question." "Ask!" "Tell me, Bishop, whether in the Christians' Heaven which you promise I shall meet the souls of all the good warriors of my tribe dead before me?" "Oh, no!" said the Bishop, "they were heathens and are in hell." "Then," growled the old warrior, drawing back, "I would rather be in hell with my fathers than in Heaven with Christian strangers, and I shall do nothing that may place a barrier between us." This story is evidently the Western analogue of that of Yudhistir, and is one of those many but strange coincidences of Eastern and European Folklore often met with.

THE Resident is being banquetted in Hyderabad. On Saturday the 26th October, there was a Minister's state dinner in the Bashir Bagh Palace. On Wednesday following, Munir-ul-Mulk entertained the Resident. The week closed with a breakfast by the Nazim to the Resident.

THE Gaekwar of Baroda has founded a chair of Therapeutics in the Grant Medical College, at a cost of Rs. 30,000. The first appointment goes to Dr. Bahadurji as Professor of Chemical Medicine and Pharmacology. He had been to England and the Continent and studied in London, Vienna, Berlin and Paris.

THE Indigo Planters' Gazette is developing enterprise in a new direction. In these days of official jealousy of the Press, it is no small credit to our contemporary to bring to light interesting, if not "secret," official papers not yet published in the Gazette. In its issue of November 5, the Indigo Planters' Gazette publishes a valuable report of a Collector under the head of "An Account of the Burdwan Raj Estate as Reported by Mr. Oldham." We can guess with tolerable certainty that it will next come out with the interesting annual report on the Cuttack Mehals—unless our contemporary is childish enough to prove us a false prophet at the expense of its readers.

THE Governor-General in Council has determined that of the "corrupt" Mamludars in the Crawford Scandal, Lakshman Moreshwar Deshpande, Lakshman Chintaman Phadke, Rámchandra Yashwant Chaulbal, Bákrishna Govind Sindekar, Devráo Kacheshwar Chincholikar, Ganesh Pandurang Thakár, Vishnu Raghunáth Kelkar, Moro Raghunáth Bivalkar, Váśudev Rámchandra Patvardhan, Sakhárám Chinnáji Joshi, Janárdan Eknáth Sahasrabudhe, and Rámráo Hanmant Rájguru need not be dismissed from the public service.

THE existing grant of the four extra pensions of £100 per annum each, yearly, to senior officers of the Indian Medical Department, in the proportion of two for the Bengal and one each for the Madras and Bombay Medical Services, as compensation for the withdrawal from Sanitary Commissioners of the rank and privilege of a Deputy Surgeon-General, will not apply to officers who may be appointed to the Service on and after the examination of August 1889.

THE Governor-General in Council has ruled that a candidate for the Secretariat Clerical Service is competent to compete simultaneously for vacancies in the Secretariat Clerical Service of both the Governments of India and Bengal. On passing the examinations successfully, a candidate's name will be placed on the lists of the passed of both the Governments. The names of selected candidates will remain on the lists until they are provided with appointments or until they become liable to have their names removed from the list under Rule 11 of the Rules published in Home Department Notification No. 1817, dated the 3rd July 1888, and in the Government of Bengal Notification dated 29th April 1889.

AT the instance of the Director of Public Instruction, the Bengal Government has revised the rules for the award of junior and senior scholarships. There will be 150 junior scholarships, for the Bengal schools, namely, 10 first grade with monthly stipends of Rs. 20; 49 second grade at Rs. 15; and 94 third grade at Rs. 10, besides the two specials—one second grade and one third grade—established in 1879 for the sole benefit of the Rungpore zilla school. The 150 are tenable for two years in the affiliated colleges in Bengal and in the United Kingdom, always subject to good conduct and satisfactory progress. But no candidate will be eligible for a scholarship who has not studied for the whole session previous to the examination in the school to which he belongs at the time of presenting himself at the Holloway's Pills.—When inclement weather checks to a considerable extent the action of the skin, an alternative is required to compensate the body by means of other channels. Holloway's Pills can be confidently recommended as the easiest, surest, and safest means of attaining this desirable end without weakening the most delicate or incommencing the most feeble. When from frequently recurring chills or the inhalation of impure air the blood becomes foul and the secretions vitiated, these Pills present a ready and efficient means of cleansing the former and correcting the latter. By this salutary proceeding disease is arrested at its outset, its pains and inconveniences averted, and the nervous structures saved from the depressing effects entailed upon them by an illness.

Entrance Examination, unless he has been transferred within that period with the sanction of the Circle Inspector. The first grade scholarships are the reward of the ten candidates who obtain the highest aggregate marks. The second and third are distributed among several Commissionerships thus :—

The allotment to each district will be notified before September in each year by the Commissioner of the Division in consultation with the Circle Inspector. This as regards the third grade, the second grade scholarships will be the prize of the best students in the division from whatever districts. Scholarships not taken up will be at the disposal of the Director of Public Instruction for deserving candidates from other divisions to stimulate collegiate education in the backward districts. The primary condition exacted of scholarship-holders is to be able to read and write with facility and correctness one of the vernacular languages of Bengal. They will be further required to pay the usual schooling fees in Government Colleges but never more than Rs. 10.

Besides the 150, the Rules provide for 20 special scholarships of Rs. 7 for Mahomedan students passing the Entrance Examination and failing to obtain any more valuable exhibition, and for three, one of each grade, open annually to female candidates, educated in any school in Bengal, and tenable in any collegiate institution approved by the Director of Public Instruction.

The senior scholarships are fifty in number, 10 of the first grade at Rs. 25 and 40 of the second at Rs. 20, and tenable for two years, with the sanction of the Director, in any affiliated college in Bengal to be selected by the holder, and in the United Kingdom, subject to good conduct and satisfactory progress. The first grade scholarships are open to general competition, the second being restricted to the Divisions of the Province—in the proportion of 10 to Calcutta, 4 to the Presidency Division, 8 to Burdwan, 3 to Rajshahye, 7 to Dacca and Chittagong, 6 to Patna and Bhagalpore, and 2 to Orissa. The second grade scholarships are not awardable to first grade holders but payable only to the respective divisional students passing in the first or the second division, excepting Behar and Orissa. In special cases, candidates from the last two territorial divisions falling below the second literary division may be rewarded. Senior scholars will not be excused the usual schooling fees, in whole or in part.

The Mahomedans, again, have the special advantage of 20 additional scholarships—ten of Rs. 10 and ten of Rs. 7; and the female scholars of two, one of each grade.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

BLOOD is thicker than water, and the Chesneys have, after all, succumbed to the everlasting truth. Passing over the names of Colonel Williams, R. E.,—recommended by the retired member, General Strachey himself—Sir Theodore Hope, Sir Juland Danvers, the present Public Works Secretary at the India Office, General William Trevor, late Public Works Secretary in India, and Sir Guilford Molesworth, the Pioneer very naturally nominates General Chesney for the vacant seat on the India Council. "It seems quite possible," it says, "however, that Lord Cross may look beyond the local circle, and strengthen his Council by the addition of General Chesney, a prominent Public Works officer before he joined the Military Department, who might, or might not, be found willing to leave the post in this country that could badly spare him."

NOT, at any rate, till Captain Hearsey has exhausted his energies and resources in his pursuit of justice against the Pioneer. The same afternoon that Mr. Justice Norris threw out the complaint of the Captain in the last criminal sessions against the chief editor of the Pioneer, General Chesney commemorated the paternal relief on the release of his own by an afternoon tea party at his office at Simla, at which he received the congratulations of the highest ladies and gentlemen and rulers in the land. To the trial itself he gave what assistance he could—of rather a left-handed kind. The Calcutta Military Department was subpoenaed to produce documents and wrote for instructions to Simla. The order was not to produce before the Court any official paper on the ground of there being no orders of Government on that behalf. Next day, the head of the Department telegraphed for all the papers in the Calcutta office relating to the Captain.

It has dawned upon Government that "the basis of compensation to be awarded for revenue-paying lands taken up under the provisions of Act X of 1870 is intended by the said Act to be the actual price for which the land, subject to all its burdens, and, among others, to the burden of the payment of land revenue, would sell in the market." It has therefore found it expedient to revise the rules on that behalf with reference to the new light. It has been ruled accordingly that the proprietor shall, except as provided in Rule VI, be relieved of liability to pay revenue to the extent of the Government demand upon the said land to be taken up under the Act. The principle of partial abatement of revenue is thus laid down :—

"IV.—If the land be not liable for a specific amount of revenue, but be a portion of an estate or tenure which is liable for a specific amount, the proportion of Government revenue to be deemed payable in respect of the land taken shall be ascertained under the following rules :—

1st—When an estate has, within twenty years next preceding the date of the commencement of proceedings for the acquisition of any land situate therein, been subjected to a detailed settlement, or has formed portion of an estate brought under division under Regulation XIX of 1814 (superseded in Bengal by Bengal Act VIII of 1876), made after inquiry into and record of the assets of the estate, the Government revenue to be deemed payable in respect of the said land shall bear to the assets of the said land the same proportion as the Government revenue of the whole estate bears to the assets of the whole estate, as shown in the settlement or division proceedings.

2nd—When there may have been no such settlement or division as aforesaid, then, if the area of the estate is known with accuracy, the amount of Government revenue to be deemed payable in respect of the portion of the land taken shall bear to the Government revenue of the whole estate the same proportion as the area of the said portion bears to the area of the whole estate.

3rd—When the Government revenue deemed payable in respect of the land taken cannot be determined by either of the above rules, one-fourth of the net rent (i.e., the gross rental less a deduction of 10 per cent. for the expenses of collection) of the said land shall be taken to be the amount of Government revenue thereon chargeable.

V.—In determining the amount of compensation to be tendered, the Collector shall take into consideration the fact that the land acquired is subject to the burden of the payment of Government revenue."

The exception alluded to above runs in these words :—

"VI.—In the event of the proprietor declining to accept an abatement of revenue, such circumstance shall not entitle him to any compensation over and above the amount tendered on the original basis of calculation. In cases, however, in which the area of the portion of land acquired does not exceed one-twentieth part of the area of the estate, it shall be competent to the Revenue authorities, if the proprietor of the estate so desire, to pay to the proprietor the computed value of the revenue deemed payable in respect of such portion, on the condition of his continuing to pay the revenue of the entire estate without abatement : provided that, in computing the value of the revenue so assigned, the basis of calculation shall not exceed the number of years' purchase, (if known), upon which the market-value of the proprietor's profits, i.e., the tender of compensation has been determined. Thus, if the market-value of the said profits has been computed at 12 years' purchase, the capitalized value of the revenue deemed payable in respect of the portion of land acquired shall be calculated at not more than 12 years' purchase of the amount of revenue in question."

THE Calcutta municipal Act (II. B. C. of 1888) Section 132 requires that "the valuation made by the Commissioners subject to such alterations as may from time to time thereafter be duly made, shall be entered in the assessment book, and the assessment calculated on the said valuation shall, subject to such alterations as aforesaid, be deemed to be the amount payable during the whole period for which the valuation is in force, and this period shall be calculated from the commencement of the quarter next succeeding that in which any such amendment shall be so authenticated; and until such date the old valuation shall continue in force, notwithstanding that the period for which it was made may have expired." The section has been the subject of discussion in the municipal office, and various opinions were expressed as to amounts of the rates to be collected when a new valuation has been made and objected or appealed to. The Advocate-General was applied to in the last instance, and here is his opinion :—

"Under Section 129 of Act II of 1888 (B. C.) the Commissioners are directed to enter the valuation made by them in the assessment book. If no objection is raised to any such valuation, and therefore no appeal against it (see Section 137) the assessment calculated on such valuation shall be deemed to be the amount payable during the whole period for which the valuation is in force.

If there should be an objection made against the valuation and the objection being overruled either wholly or in part, there should be an appeal, the amount adjudicated on appeal, which is final and binding, should be entered without delay in the assessment book, and in that case the time from which the assessment in the new valuation is to be made will run from the commencement of the quarter next succeeding that in which the entry of the new valuation shall have been made. Similarly, where an objection has been raised and either allowed or overruled and no appeal is preferred in the latter case, the assessment on the new valuation will run from the commencement of the next quarter next succeeding the entry made in such objection.

If the objections and appeals are altogether unsuccessful, so that no amendment or alteration of the valuation is possible, the assessment calculated in the valuation shall be the amount payable during the time for which the valuation is in force."

Specific questions were put to Sir Charles Paul, as in the following :—

"Case No. 1. Suppose a house is valued at Rs. 1,000 a year. The valuation of the district in which it is situated (Section 129) expires in the first quarter of 1889-90, during that quarter the Commissioners revalue it under Sections 129 to 132 at Rs. 1,500. The owner objects under Section 135, the objection is heard in the second quarter of the year and the valuation reduced to Rs. 1,300; the owner appeals under Section 137 and the appeal is decided in the fourth quarter of the year, the valuation being reduced to Rs. 1,200. On what valuation are the rates to be levied during the second, third and fourth quarters? Some say Rs. 1,500 the second, Rs. 1,300 the third and fourth, and Rs. 1,200 from the first quarter of 1890-91. Others say Rs. 1,000 for the second, third and fourth quarters and then Rs. 1,200.

"Case No. 2.—A new house is built and completed in the last quarter of 1888-89. In the first quarter of 1889-90 it is valued under Section 125 at Rs. 2,000. On objection it is reduced in the second quarter to Rs. 1,800, and on appeal in the fourth quarter to Rs. 1,500, should no rates be levied during the second, third and fourth quarters, or should they be levied on Rs. 2,000, 1,800 and 1,500 respectively?

"Case No. 3.—Same facts as case 1 except that on objection the valuation of Rs. 1,500 is sustained in the second quarter and on appeal it is again sustained in the fourth quarter. Should the rates during the second, third and fourth quarters be calculated on Rs. 1,000 or on Rs. 1,500?

"Case No. 4.—Same facts as case 2 except that the objection is unsuccessful in the second quarter and the appeal unsuccessful in the fourth. Should the rates during the second, third and fourth quarters be calculated on Rs. 2,000 or no rates be levied?"

His answers are :—

"Answer to Case 1.—Rs. 1,000 for the second, third and fourth quarters and then Rs. 1,200.

"Answer to Case 2.—According to the terms of Section 139, no rates can be levied for the second, third and fourth quarters, there having been no previous or old valuation.

"Answer to Case 3.—The valuation being sustained in both stages there can be no alteration or amendment provided for in Section 139, therefore the rates should be calculated on Rs. 1,500 during the second, third and fourth quarters.

"Answer to Case 4.—In this case the valuation being unaltered, there can be no amendment or alteration provided in Section 139, therefore the rates should be calculated on Rs. 2,000 for the second, third and fourth quarters."

It is plain, the old assessment must rule until the new has been finally fixed, and no new valuation is to be entered in the Assessment Book until it—for the period of valuation—is binding after the disposal of the objection and the appeal, if any, from the decision on objection of the Chairman, the new valuation taking effect from the subsequent quarter.

ARABI the unblest is pining away in his exile, as well he may. There is no torture to the high soul conscious of the power—the capacity and the will—to do great things as forced inaction. A correspondent of the Birmingham Post, who has spent sometime in Colombo, thus describes the Egyptian patriot :—

"A few years ago he was altogether a jovial and well conditioned fellow; now he looks dyspeptic and unhappy, and wears his forty-nine years as though they were many more. While his companions seem to live in ease and comfort, and are determined to enjoy the life to which fate has for a while consigned them, Arabi is restless, unhappy, and oppressed with a morbid fear that he will die in exile. Occasionally he exhibits a little interest in the possibility of growing Ceylon products in Egypt, but he soon relapses into his now habitual state. In the ordinary amusements of the isle he takes little interest, and the monotony of his life seems to be only varied by occasional drives to the houses of the more popular members of Colombo society, a visit to the cinnamon gardens, or an infrequent stroll along the Galle Face beach. His family take life more easily. His wife, and his sons, and his daughters (one son excepted) spend a considerable time in Egypt; but the one son, a young fellow of twenty-seven, remains permanently with his father."

Whatever the political necessity of the hour for shipping the patriot out of his country, that necessity, we hope, no longer exists. If it be still inexpedient to restore him to Egypt, there can be no reason for permanently depriving Islam of one of her best sons. The Sultan might be persuaded to pardon the Egyptian patriot, and he might be of service to the Porte. At any rate, he might be given a home in Asiatic Turkey. Abdul Kader had, after all, a better fate. And he was a more formidable foe of the Power that treacherously captured, imprisoned and exiled him.

ACCORDING to the Home News, Sir Lepel Griffin is engaged to Miss Marie Leupold, the daughter of a Goanese and Naples merchant. She is described as a fascinating young lady of twenty-two. He met her at Homberg where she was staying the last summer on a visit with her grandmother, who is a daughter of Mr. Gray of Dilston and sister of Mrs. Tell Meuricoffre, of Naples, and Mrs. Josephine Butler. We wish Sir Lepel happiness and the young lady joy. If the marriage could have been arranged two years earlier, he would not have lost the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab.

A GREAT journalist, who was a scholar of equal merit and modesty as well as a sterling man, has passed away in Mr. George Eliot Ranken. He will be forgotten as the editor, for fifteen long years, of the well-known Roman Catholic organ, the Tablet. Had he written a sensational novel or a successful burlesque, or bungled as a Colonial Governor, or led his regiments to useless massacre, he would have had a chance of some sort of immortality. Born in 1828 and educated at Eton and Oxford, he had a brilliant academic career. He joined Oxford at the height of the Tractarian movement and was, like so many of the best men of the period, drawn in the Catholic revival. More truly honest than many of the originators of that movement, young Ranken, at the age of 21, declared himself and formally joined the Roman Catholic Church. His tutor, the more worldly Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, who had cherished the most splendid dream of renown and prosperity for his favorite pupil, was shocked. His family and personal friends were inconsolable. He did not care; nor complained, even though he actually lost a big fortune by his act of fidelity to his conscience. He was called to the bar, we believe, but did not join it. For sometime he acted as a clerk or private secretary at the War Office. Afterwards he went to Rome where he was made a Privy Chamberlain by the late Pope. His fine English mind wearied of the petty employment in a suffocating Italian atmosphere. So he finally came back to England and assumed the charge of the Tablet in 1871, resigning it on account of ill-health in 1886. That protracted illness was his last.

A CASE of great interest to commercial people has been just decided in England. So long ago as 1879, the then new firm of Hasse & Co., butter and margarine men, engaged one Bilbee, a butter and margarine man of twenty-five years' standing, on his offer to tout for orders for them on commission. "As regards your commission," wrote Hasse & Co. to Bilbee, "we hereby agree to allow you one and a half per cent. upon all orders executed by us and paid for by the customers arising from your introduction." It proved a fine connection. Hasse & Co. flourished under the flow of orders of Bilbee's customers. But prosperity and wealth do not dispose men to righteousness and grace. Hasse & Co. seem to have more and more conceived a grudge against Bilbee as they filled their coffers from his business connections and his activity and address. At last, in the beginning of last year, they thought themselves long-established and strong enough to kick their old ladder. In February 1888, the commission agent was suddenly dismissed. Bilbee, of course, ceased to attend their place or work for them, but he nonetheless claimed his usual commission on their business from the customers he had procured them. They declined payment, and Bilbee went to court. The moral obligation is clear to all minds with a tincture of the moral sense. But the resisting goules relied upon the law. And well they might in a country in which, often enough, Law is one thing and Equity another. It was so long since Bilbee had brought them many of their customers, that they hoped that the court might declare his equitable claim on them lapsed. They doubtless fully expected that at the worst a matter-of-fact British tribunal would not go the length of endowing their dismissed man—a mere servant as they chose to regard him—with a perpetual profit on the future orders of the customers he had introduced to their house, even after they had severed their connection with him, as no longer requiring it. They have been totally disappointed. The court proved too subtle for their oleaginous baseness. Lord Justice Lopes held them down to their bond. According to the terms of their agreement they must continue to pay Bilbee his one and half per cent. on all the customers he had ever brought them, so long as they might choose to supply them.

WE see that Mr. Moore has revived his evening theatrical paper The Bee. The literary conduct is good—better than ever. Small as is the space reserved for the editor, he gives delectable reading. So far as we have seen in this country, such papers are mere advertisers—for the theatre and the opera to begin with, the blank space being filled with some theatrical notices copied from other newspapers or anecdotes of the drama and music culled from some book. The Bee is more of a genuine Saturday evening sheet on a small scale, with interesting jottings and spicy paragraphs occasionally swelling to the dignity of "leaders." It is rather an impudent fly, the Bee, and it has commenced with poking irreverent fun at its elders, but an evening literary "artiste" must be smart at any rate—even at the sacrifice of friends. We are not concerned of the antics of the Bee on its noble horns. But its "chaff" shoots quite above the head of the new Herald, we are afraid. It is, however, capable of superior things. Thus the ever-watchful Bee has caught the great James Payn of the Englishman in the act—of dishing up one of old Lavator's physiognomical stories as a fresh phrenological anecdote. That would be a feather in the cap of more important publications.

THE Bee lately stood up for the honor of the hive against the common notion that the Anglo-Indian papers of Upper and Northern India had the monopoly of literary excellence, and instanced in proof of its protest an article in the Indian Daily News of the 25th October. That was really an admirable "leader" in our morning contemporary, and if "fadists" and philanthropists could be silenced by sound sense vigorously and smartly put, the Quixotic India reformers in England would receive their quietus from such an exposure. We may add that not long ago we read a charming article in the Statesman on Marlowe, the precursor of Shakespeare, which would have been embraced with open arms by those who "boss" the Saturday Review or the Spectator and would have done either paper honor. And only the day before yesterday we read in the Englishman one of the ablest, wisest things we ever recollect on the Liquor Traffic. We are accustomed to associate the Indian press with illiberality, unreasonableness and rancour; but such an article, so calm and moderate, so well reasoned, with all the essential facts stated, nothing extenuated nor ought set down in malice, could scarcely be expected in Great Britain, where not only politics in general but even scientific questions of finance and currency are the sport of party.

WHILE staying in the Poona Royal Family hotel, Mr. Malabari, of the Indian Spectator, was despoiled of his despatch box containing about Rs. 4,000. For this loss, John Renton Denning and George Goggin, non-commissioned officers of the Bombay Army on the Attached List, were committed by the City Magistrate Mr. Plunkett and tried for theft of the box and its contents by Mr. Crowe, Sessions Judge of Poona. The prisoners admitted the abstraction but with no dishonest intention, saying the whole thing was a practical joke. Evidence was adduced as to character which was spoken of very highly by Colonel Dundas, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army, and Colonel Chard, commanding the 2nd Battalion Royal Fusiliers. The Assessors—two Europeans and one native—were impressed by the evidence and found both the accused not guilty in the absence of dishonest intention. The Judge was not so easily taken in. He disagreed with the Assessors and was so convinced of the guilt of the accused that he sentenced each of them to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The matter will be taken up to the Bombay High Court, and a subscription is being raised to pay the law expenses.

THE King Luis of Portugal is dead. His eldest son Prince Carlos, Duke of Braganza, has been proclaimed King as Carlos First.

THE British South African Company have obtained a Charter from Queen Victoria to exploit the region between Bechuanaland, the Transvaal, and Portuguese territory. It, however, reserves the right to the Crown to take over and administer the territory after twenty-five years.

MR. Bradlaugh has had a relapse, but he is now pronounced out of danger. He has been medically advised an Indian tour. He has refused the offer of a public subscription to meet the expenses.

ON the release from jail of Orator Surendranath Banerjee, they raised a Fund which they called National now amounting to only Rs. 19,303-0-11, namely, donation Rs. 16,928-7-7 and interest on Government securities Rs. 2,374-9-4. The Fund Holders have now transferred the Fund to themselves as Indian Associationists, by a resolution, which, imitating the will of Peter Isaac Thellusson, leaves the fund to grow until it reaches the maximum of Rs. 50,000, by fresh donations but not by accumulation of interest. The interest on Rs. 16,000 will be applied by the Indian Association to uses which it thinks national, but no part of the fund is to be devoted to any purpose, national or otherwise, unless you have put into the hands of the Association another Rs. 34,000. It took 6 years to raise the Rs. 16,000 and, at that rate, it will take another 7 years to come up to the required figure, provided Surendranath libelled another Judge of the High Court and were again sent to prison.

THE event of the week in Europe is the visit of the German Emperor to the Sick Man. His Majesty who had been to Athens, left that city on the 31st October, for Constantinople, escorted by the German Squadron, and next evening passed through the Dardanelles. Grand preparations had been made by the Sultan. Their Majesties dined together on Saturday over a most cordial conversation. On the 4th, there was a grand banquet at the Yildig Palace, which over, the Sultan took and introduced the Empress to his daughters and the ladies of the harem. At the banquet, the Emperor personally invested the Sultan with the Hohenzollern Order. The Sultan, in return, expressed his deep gratitude for the honor and loaded the Emperor and Empress with the costliest gifts. On the 6th, the Imperial guests took leave of the Sultan and sailed for Venice.

IN March, 1886, the Maharaja of Scindhia, for the cantonment of Morar restored to him, ceded to the British Government in full sovereignty the town and fort of Jhansi with certain adjacent land. To bring them within British laws, the Jhansi and Morar Act XVII of 1886 was passed incorporating the ceded places with the rest of the Jhansi district which has been British since 1853. A question has now cropped up whether the Indian Councils Act, 1861, under which the Jhansi Act of 1886 was passed, gives the Governor-General's Council authority to pass such a law. Section 22 empowers the making of laws for the "Indian territories now under the dominion of Her Majesty." It is therefore contended that the Indian Council is not competent to make laws for places and territories which were not at the passing of the law of 1861 British dominion. By the use of the word "now," the Council is precluded from legislating for subsequent acquisition of territory. The question has been set down for the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, and will be argued next week.

MR. Hume has threatened to withdraw from the Indian National Congress, unless, at its sitting in Bombay next December, Rs. 40,000, the expenses of the Indian Political Agency in London, for the year 1870, are guaranteed. He writes:—

"If all these good and worthy men cannot so combine as to effect the raising, yearly, promptly and without my having to dun you for every rupee, of the paltry sum of thirty thousand or forty thousand rupees required for that primary essential, the English Agency, then it simply means that you and I have been wrong, and our opponents who declare us unfit for self-government right, and the sooner I gave up the vain attempt of making ropes of what I have hitherto believed to be good fibre, but which, tried by the money test, seems threatening to turn out something very like sand, the better it will be for all of us."

The withdrawal of the General Secretary means the extinction of the Congress, which never had any vitality of its own. What at almost any time would have been of doubtful policy, was forced into premature birth and hitherto maintained by the ambition and purse of some perturbed spirits, and the noise of notoriety hunting or duped understrappers. Mr. Hume has now discovered his mistake of attempting to make bricks out of straw.

THE Mohunt of Tirputi has been committed on charges of criminal breach of trust and criminal misappropriation.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1889.

THE OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT.

A CONFESSION.

WE have to-day a humiliating task to perform—to make an important recantation. It is always a torture to human vanity to confess defeat or error. But it has to be done sometimes. Duty must be done at any cost. As, in the long run, it is pleasanter to think well of our neighbours rather than ill, we hope, notwithstanding the sorry figure we may cut before the public, we shall not be without a set-off of internal satisfaction, under the self-inflicted operation. At any rate, we cannot carry the burden of wrong-doing in an important matter. For it is no light thing to wrong the Fountain of Law and authority. And we have blundered into that offence. There is no getting over it, the case is so clear. Writing during our holiday, far away in the country, on the Official Secrets Act, in dependence chiefly on the exposition of it in the Council, with our natural jealousy of every measure purporting to curtail the liberty of publication, we were frightened by a bugbear of invasion of our dearest rights as British subjects. We raised the cry of "wolf!" in all good faith and seriousness, but it was in reality nothing better than the fabled warning, so far as any hostile raid into the fold or flock was concerned. We armed ourselves cap-a-pie and stepped valiantly forward to fight and even commenced to fire and hack away at the enemy, but we were warring with a windmill of our own fancy. On coming to town and looking into the matter, and examining the Act, we discover the great mistake we committed. We find it a harmless enough thing. It might be put to bad uses, but that is a different question. That suggestion is bred of jealousy of Indian officials. But it is forgotten that the terrible Indian Bureaucracy had nothing to do with the inception of the measure. It is an emanation of British statesmanship khas and pure, and has run the gauntlet of party and radical criticism at Home. There are all the necessary safeguards against abuse. As for this country, it was already law in it when the Government of India introduced it here. It had already passed in England for all British Possessions. The Indian Act is simply a reenactment. The Hon'ble Mr. Scoble said as much, but we gentlemen of the Press—not very much different from Bismarck's gentlemen of the pave, perhaps—we were not going to take a member of Council's word on trust. In justice to us all, we must say that the Lord President put us on the wrong scent. (Is it possible His Excellency meant to apply a practical test to gauge the perspicacity of the Indian Press?) Indeed, the Indian Act is a trifle milder than its prototype of the Mother Country. So far as the Press is concerned, there is not a shadow of menace against it. Nay, there is not a word about journals or journalists, publishers or printers. All our rage has gone for nothing. And we, for one, must gulph down our humble pie with as good a face as we can command.

ITALY IN THE COMING STRUGGLE.

THE October number of the Contemporary Review contains an article headed "The Triple Alliance and Italy's Place in it," signed "Outidands." It is generally attributed to the fertile pen of the Grand Old Man of infinite energy and work. Apart from the personality of the supposed author, there is nothing very remarkable in it. As a mere anonymous essay, or even as one published in the name of any ordinary literary man, it would not have attracted particular notice. It shows no special knowledge but presents the facts known to all newspaper readers. It is only Mr. Gladstone's name that makes people call it a powerful exposure of the Alliance as a combination that makes for war. The writer argues against the pretensions of the Alliance as a League for the maintenance of peace by showing that the Alliance of the Three Powers leaves the Powers against whose combination it is directed not only free but also able to make war. That in itself is not a very recondite proposition. Nor is it made out in any subtle Gladstonian way. The ordinary daily and weekly press might have been left to make the obvious suggestion and point out the glaring facts, as indeed they were doing. The pith of the case is contained in the following :—

"Granting that the German army is at this moment the first army in Europe, it seems not an unreasonable opinion that the Russian and the French, or the French and the Russian, armies are the second and the third, and that Austria and, in the fifth place, Italy, have to take rank behind them. Suppose we attempt roughly to measure relative strength by the threefold test of (1) numerical amount of army 'with the colours' and navy, (2) population, and (3) revenue, we obtain, on resort to popular sources of information, something like the following results :—

	Germany with Austria and Italy.	France and Russia.
Army and Navy ...	1,652,000	1,578,000
Population (Europe only) ...	113,000,000	125,000,000
Revenue ...	£279,000,000	£237,000,000

There is nothing in these figures demonstrative of gross disparity, or of an incapacity on either side to wage, if so minded, a deliberate and determined struggle."

That is a mere statistician's argument; it may be even a financier's; but it is certainly no statesman's. It is nations that make and maintain wars, and are nations mere populations and revenues? According to this writer's way of thinking, China would be perhaps the greatest Power in the world. Nor is it the view of a soldier or a strategist. At any rate, this view is no argument against the Powers of Central Europe coming to a mutual understanding and compact for defensive and offensive purposes, in view of possible eventualities from the combined hostility of their powerful neighbours in front and rear. On the writer's own showing, the German Powers were quite right in forming the League he deprecates and embracing within it the Mediterranean Power.

Perhaps the only distinct piece of internal evidence to connect the Great Liberal Leader with the authorship is in the Italian portion of the thesis. The remarks on Italy and specially their tone seem to betray the Roman—or shall we say the Neapolitan—hand of the politician whose revelations of King Bomba's courts and prison-houses were the handwriting on the wall preceding the downfall of the petty sovereignties whose existence was in the way of Italian nationality. Be the writer who he may, he is inconsolable at the idea of Italy joining the League. He upbraids her for her impertinence. He chides her for her rashness. He actually abuses her for her insensate behaviour. Lastly, he appeals to her honour. Why on earth should she make common cause with her hereditary task master and oppressor? The writer says :—

"Every maxim of policy, every suggestion of commonsense, and the dictates of a necessity nothing less than trumpet-tongued, forbid to Italy all intermixture in Cisalpine antipathies or conflicts. It is best to be plain on these occasions. We will therefore scruple to say that the appearance of Italy in the Triple Alliance is no better than a gigantic piece of political tomfoolery, which is so strange as to be grotesque, and which would even be comic if it were not ruinous. But there she is, and the fact of her presence is perhaps the most signal illustration ever yet afforded, in the political sphere, of the proverbial remark that fact is stranger than fiction. When, by the greatest master-stroke of the last half-century, the illustrious Cavour sent 15,000 men to the Crimea, and thus secured for his country, at almost no cost or risk, a contingent place among the Great Powers of Europe, a result was achieved which was nothing less than stupendous with reference to the means employed. Never was there such a case of good brickmaking without straw."

That is, at any rate, a legitimate treatment of the subject. It essays a practical argument with practical men on a practical subject. The case, however, can hardly be said to be made out. On the contrary, the example adduced makes for the directly opposite policy—that which Italy has adopted—not the one that is sought in the Contemporary to be enforced. Signor Crispi may well claim to be treading in the footsteps of his great predecessor. On the face of it, there was no more reason for Cavour to plunge his country into the vortex of the Crimean War than for the present ministry to undertake the risks of a party to the coming European struggle. Nay, there was far less reason. We are old enough to remember the amused surprise with which Cavour's negotiation to have the honour of being permitted to send his 15,000 unfortunate mercenaries to perish on the heaths and rocks of Krim Tartary, was received by the world at large. By all indeed save perhaps a few experts in affairs, it was regarded more as the fancy of a mad patriot than the sober step of a sane statesman. For it should be borne in mind, that at that time there was no Italy. It was the petty principality of Sardinia that thus sought to pay this costly nuzur—honourarium—for the glory of being admitted into the Councils of the Western Powers—as a younger little sister. Had the War been with the Powers of Central Europe, or had Prussia or, better, Austria sided with Russia, or shown any distinct preference for her, there might be some, however, inadequate cause—at least a sentimental reason—for poor Sardinia, by a hazardous alliance, to show her pique against the hereditary task-master of the illustrious but then unhappily disunited Peninsula. But that was not so, whatever the secret leanings of the Court and Cabinet of Vienna. But the statesmanship of the move was vindicated by the event. Cavour's calculations proved correct to the farthing. England has always sympathised with Italian aspirations after nationality, and France repaid her obligation with interest. Italy was freed from the Alps to the Adriatic. At this day, surely a United Italy might, with far greater propriety as with much more confidence, tread the maze of international affairs and put herself forward as a party to war and peace.

But what shall we say of such grandmotherly counsel as this?—

"Plainly, she ought to recollect the great service rendered her in 1866 by Germany, and the yet greater service which she received from France in 1859; a service still greater than that of 1866, because he that breaks the first link of the captive's chains makes the most effectual contribution towards his complete and final freedom."

Herein, we confess, we discern something like the inspiration of the Grand Old Preacher. Here, if anywhere, is Mr. Gladstone in his effusive side. It would no doubt be unseemly and unfortunate if Italy should range herself against her liberator, but France did not assist the Italians without a price. In fact, the liberation was paid for before, as we have seen, and afterwards, as is well known, by the treaty of March 24, 1860. Nations have got to look to the present and the future. Such a reminder is as little to the purpose as would be an appeal to the panLatin sentiment.

THE DEVASTATIONS OF MALARIA IN LOWER BENGAL.

A REMINISCENCE OF INDIVIDUAL NATIVE GENIUS AND AN EXAMPLE OF NATIONAL INDIFFERENCE.

THE Mirror's London Correspondent, noticing a paragraph in the Society paper, the Hawk, expressive of surprise at the fearful mortality in Bengal from malarious fever from the blocking of the drainage of the country by railway embankments, writes:—

"So far back as 1872, if I remember rightly, the whole question of this continuous and cruel depopulation of a portion of the Lower Provinces of Bengal was demonstratively traced to the railways of the country by the late Rajah Degumber Mitter, the author of the five thousand rupees Prize Essay on the subject. It might be useful, Mr. Editor, to refer to that essay in the present controversy."

The writer is quite off in his dates and facts. There is no such brochure by the late Raja Degumber Mitter—that is, no Prize Essay, successful or unsuccessful. The deceased Bengali gentleman received no prize, because he competed for none. He published largely enough, and with rare intelligence on the subject of the depopulation of the country from malarious fever, but not as the author of a Prize Essay.

The whole question of the devastations of the Epidemic Fever in Bengal was of a much earlier date than 1872. A dozen years before, it had been pressed on the attention of Government, until, in 1864, a Commission was appointed to inquire into this cause of fearful mortality and the best means of combatting it. Three European medical officers and one lay Baboo were charged with this important commission. That layman was the lamented Degumber Mitter, since made C. S. I. and finally Raja. The working of that Commission affords a crucial example of the value of native assistance, rightly chosen, in the administration. The Commission visited the affected parts, and others too. But, while the foreigners found themselves at sea, the native was able to see clearly into the matter. For once, the doctors did not disagree—except with their lay colleague. The medical Commissioners suggested all possible causes without being able to fix their minds on any prime adequate cause. Not so Baboo Degumber Mitter. With his knowledge of the topography of the country and his early experience at Cossimbazar, he arrived at the conclusion that the disease was due to augmented dampness of the soil arising from obstructed drainage, itself chiefly owing to the multiplication of roads and embankments and the construction of railways. This view of the minority was contained in a memorandum by Baboo Degumber Mitter which appeared as an appendix to the Report of the Epidemic Commission. We remember its treatment on the publication of the Report. It was not to be endured that a mere Baboo should hit upon the truth which had for years eluded all the European officers, executive and medical, of the administration, and had just escaped the elaborate inquiry of the faculty. Nor was the complaint against road-making and railway construction as introducers of fever into the country to be listened to by the engineers. It was, in fine, against the European grain. Accordingly, both faculties and British officials and non-officials all combined laughed the brilliant deduction—supported as it was by so much knowledge and such a mass of facts—out of court. But they had no idea of the persistence of their Bengali. Baboo Degumber Mitter, having seized what he conceived to be the truth, devoted himself to its recognition by the public. His effort were at last crowned with success. A determined man of a single idea is a very formidable customer. Opposition with all its weapons of ridicule and special pleading gradually wanes before his singleness of purpose. So it was. Baboo Degumber knew the importance of his discovery to his poor country with its population prostrate by disease and killed off by thousands, and he never rested till he had converted the public and the Government. He caused Government to circulate his Memorandum and call for th opinions of the Divisional and District officers. He caused it to institute fresh inquiries. Both the Local and Supreme Governments, relying on the reports of doctors and engineers, decided against him. But he never lost heart. His native friends joined him in the dissemination of what was the truth, if not quite the full truth. Among one or two others, we recollect with satisfaction having ourselves, in more than one journal, political and medical, espoused the cause and pointed out the evils of a general obstruction of rural drainage. Then came Dr. Sircar into the field and did the cause yeoman's service. He did not give easy adhesion to it, but hesitated long while he examined the question himself, but, when he was once convinced, he advocated the theory loyally, with all his enthusiasm. The author of the theory himself defended it ably in the columns of a weekly paper, and afterwards republished his six articles with a preface in pamphlet. The London writer under notice has possibly this tract—The Epidemic Fever in Bengal—in his mind. It was not long after that the engineers were silenced and the doctors in chorus sang—

It is—it is the cause, my soul!

As a matter of course, the Government adopted it. From having been the creed of an unprofessional Babbo, it became the orthodox creed that the gradual obstruction, during a long series of years if not ages, to the natural drainage of the country, latterly aggravated by activity in making roads and embankments for railways and other objects, by causing a permanent extraordinary increase of dampness in the soil, caused the virulent type of malarious fever which devastated the land.

Unfortunately, nothing was done. Indeed, it was not easy to do anything adequate to the demands of the situation. Accordingly, there was a fresh outbreak of the Epidemic in 1875, and again and again has the monster of death and disease made its appearance in the peaceful villages of Lower Bengal. Indeed, the area of malarial influence has gradually extended, until most parts of the Delta are now embraced. The Government cannot be charged with neglect of duty. The people are more to blame—specially the propertied and thinking classes. The remedy lies in a national awakening.

DACCA.

November 5, 1889.

The Rev. Mr. Hay of the Baptist Mission is a zealous preacher of Christianity. He is an intelligent, kindly disposed man and can well influence the hearts of his congregation. He takes an interest in the native students. Some time ago, he and some other gentlemen started an association for the moral improvement of the Dacca schoolboys. But his recent baptism of a student of the Dacca Jubilee School has given him a bad name with the people. The boy, it appears, attended the Bible class held in the Baptist Mission Church, for more than a year, and was gradually won over to Christianity. After the baptism, he was sent away to Burisal. In the meantime, the guardian of the boy brought a charge against the Rev. gentleman of kidnapping or secreting. The boy appeared and said that he had embraced Christianity of his own accord and had no mind to return to his father. The Magistrate, however, kept him with Babu Gopi Nath Sen of the New Dispensation Church, and permitted his elder brother to live with him. The following day, the boy went home with the Magistrate's permission. He has, now, we hear, given up his new faith. It seems to be the fashion of the day to fall foul of Christian missionaries, whether they have really done amiss or not; and Mr. Hay's lot has not proved an exception. But our countrymen would do well to take care of their own children before they proceed to abusing missionaries and others. Mr. Hay, after all, is not so much to blame as some of us are pleased to imagine.

It is a healthy sign that the educated people of Dacca have learned to take an interest in manly exercises. Through the exertions of some energetic young men of the town, a wrestling was arranged to take place the day before yesterday, between two Punjabis and two well-known Dungeers of Dacca. People began to gather at the spot from an early hour, and as the day advanced the crowds grew thick. Several influential gentlemen, both Hindu and Mahomedan, were present. The spectators numbered about three thousand. Constables were appointed to maintain order, but to no purpose. Every one was trying his best to occupy a prominent place. As the arrangements were not very wisely made, there was little space left for the wrestlers to move in. Disorder and utter confusion prevailed amongst the spectators; consequently, the wrestling could not take place at all. So every one had to come home disappointed at about 4 or 5 O'clock. It is not yet definitely known when the wrestling is to take place again.

The price of rice which had been so high, has fallen a little. The prospects of crops are favourable, and the general health is good. Winter has begun to set in. On the 27th of October, we experienced very bad weather. Rain and storm continued the whole day, and the water, which had begun to retire, rose very high all on a sudden.

Public Paper.

MR. HOPKIN'S REPORT ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE TRIBUTARY MEHALS OF ORISSA FOR 1888-89.

Having assumed charge of the Tributary Mehals at the end of February last, I was during the remaining portion of the year busy in mastering office details and in inspecting Balasore. My predecessor, Mr. Worsley, has furnished the following note about his Gurjat tour:—

"In the last week of 1887-88 I had marched to Angul, and was there, on the 1st April 1888, examining settlement questions with the tehsildar and his assistant. I visited the public institutions at Angul, viz., the hospital, police-station, jail, and school, and distributed prizes to the schoolboys. On the 4th April I left Angul for Dhenkanal, marching along the Sumbulpore-Cuttack road, and through Hindole state, the Chief of which I met, to Bhowpur (37 miles), whence I followed a fairly good road of 13 miles in length in the Dhenkanal state, arriving at Dhenkanal on 7th. There I stayed till 12th, holding sessions and making the usual inspections, and returned to Cuttack by 14th idem. From 7th to 19th September I was engaged in marching to and from Dhenkanal and in holding sessions in that state. On this occasion I again visited the public institutions, and I had the pleasure of distributing prizes to the boys and girls of two good local schools. From Balasore I accompanied His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to Nilgiri state on 27th November, and returned to Cuttack the next day. On the 10th December I commenced my cold-weather tour. I first visited the western part of Cuttack district, including Banki, and then struck into the tributary states, marching up the right bank of the Mahanuddy through Khandpara state to Belpada in Dasappa state; then crossing the river, and travelling down its left bank through the states of Narsingpore, Baramba, Tigris, and Athgur, and recrossing the river at Kukhur Ghât, four miles from Cuttack, on 28th. At Kantillo, in Khandpara state, the Rajah met me, and from that place I visited his capital, which is about seven miles to the south, and is prettily situated at the foot of some hills. The Rajah's authority and power struck me as being particularly great among his people. He is fond of horses and of sport, and takes much interest in his gardens, which are well kept and contain some choice fruit-trees. I had no time to inspect his office, my tour having been undertaken mainly for the purposes of inspecting the states of Narsingpore and Baramba, which are under direct management, and of getting a general knowledge of other states and of their inhabitants. From Kantillo I proceeded to Belpada, where I was met by the Rajah of Dasappa. This Chief has not exercised any civil and criminal jurisdiction for some time, this power being exercised by a manager, Baboo Jugga Mohan Ghose, whose appointment was sanctioned in Government letter No. 86P.D. (Political), dated 21st June 1888. The Rajah acutely feels his present position, and owing to his loss of power little outward respect is shown to him by his people, whose behaviour towards him during my visit contrasted strongly with the submissive conduct of the people of Khandpara towards their Chief. A careful inspection of the Dasappa and Khandpara offices was, I believe, made by the Assistant Superintendent, Baboo Nanda Kishore Dass, in the last quarter of the year. I reached Narsingpore, which is six miles north of Belpada, on 18th December, and inspected the Manager's office and registers, and the jail, thannah, and dispensary. The new jail is a good substantial building. I found collections of rent to be greatly in arrear owing to the short outturn of the saradh harvest and to the pressure which had prevailed for some months by reason of high prices. While I was encamped at Narsingpore I visited Moraripur (five miles east) to see the site of a proposed embankment, $\frac{3}{4}$ mile long, estimated to cost Rs. 8,200. It appeared to me that the utility of such an embankment was questionable under any circumstances, but that in the existing financial condition of the state the undertaking of such a work could not be justified; and I accordingly made a report to Government to this effect (letter No. 12P.W., dated 5th January 1889), and my views were approved (letter No. N-5-2, dated 12th February 1889). The young Rajah is an exceedingly intelligent and attractive boy of five or six years of age. On 20th December I marched to Champeswar, six miles east from Narsingpore and near the boundary of Baramba state. An excellent bungalow has been recently built here at a cost of Rs. 2,000, and it is situated at the foot of a very beautiful hill. The following day I moved on to Baramba, 12 miles east, along a very fair road. The Manager's office here had been burnt down a few days before my arrival, and most of the state records had been destroyed. There was therefore little to inspect in the shape of papers. I visited the thannah, the dispensary, and the new jail, which is being built on the plan of the jail at Narsingpore, and distributed prizes to the boys of the middle vernacular school, which is also attended by six girls, one being the daughter of the Manager and another the daughter of his amlah. A proposal had been made by my predecessor to build a new house for the Raj family at Ogalpur, six miles south-west from Baramba, and to make Ogalpur their chief place of residence, and a sum of Rs. 6,000 had been sanctioned towards the construction of the building; but finding the family much opposed to the project, I visited Ogalpur and came to the conclusion that it would be best to retain and repair thoroughly the old family house at Baramba, and to build only a small summer-house at Ogalpur. The site chosen for the new house is a fine one, being on the top of a low hill near the Mahanuddy and commanding a view of Banki eastwards and of Kantillo westwards on the opposite bank of the river. But apart from natural scenery and an old temple on the bank of the river, where the presiding goddess of the family is supposed to reside, there is little in the neighbourhood to interest the family, and nothing to compensate them for the loss of old associations and surroundings. I therefore submitted a proposal to Government in accordance with the views and wishes of the family. The young Rajah and his half-sister, aged nine and seven respectively, are fine, strong, healthy children, but shy and silent—very different from the lively and chattering little Chief of Narsingpore.

"On 24th December I marched from Baramba to Tigris, 12 miles north-east. In Tigris state there is more open country and more cultivated land comparatively than in any state I have seen. The Rajah of this state is a young man of feeble character, very timid and reticent, and is evidently under the complete control of his uncle, a shrewd and grasping old man. The Rajbari is an insignificant building in the midst of a jungle, which is commonly reported to be kept up as a refuge for the Raj family in the event of an invasion. An examination of the office registers and verbal enquiries showed that few cases, either criminal or civil, are tried during the year, and that the state of police administration is very defective. I subsequently addressed a letter to the Rajah upon this subject. On the 26th December I marched to Athgur, 12 miles from Tigris. The Rajah of this state I had seen on several occasions on my journeys to and from Dhenkanal. He keeps a good body of police for a native state, but is a grasping Chief, and does not take sufficient interest in his people. A school at Athgur, which some years ago was one of the best in the tributary states, has fallen off greatly during his time. Though pleasant enough in private life, he is very obstructive in official matters."

The Assistant Superintendent, Baboo Nanda Kishore Dass, was out on tour for 104 days during the year.

In April he went to Dhubalesur, in Athgur, to take up a criminal case which arose out of a boundary dispute between the native state of Keunjhur and the Sukinda Peschush mehal in Cuttack. After going into the case he found that it involved an intricate question about jurisdiction, and on his suggestion it was referred to the Magistrate of Cuttack, who could take it up either as Magistrate of that district or under the sanction of the Superintendent, Tributary Mehals, given under section 188, Criminal Procedure Code.

In June and July the Assistant Superintendent was engaged in marching to and from Dhenkanal and in holding sessions and hearing appeals in that state, and during the first week of August he was similarly engaged at Berhampur, in Athgur.

On 25th August the Assistant Superintendent proceeded on a visit to Baramba and Narsingpore to make enquiries about the condition of the people and the prospect of crops, which, owing to want of sufficient and seasonable rainfall, threatened to be failures. He found that the prospects in both the states, specially in Baramba, were not very encouraging; but as there was still time to make another effort by transplantation of seedlings, he made tuccavi advances for the purpose, and otherwise gave such help to the tenantry as seemed needed. In this work he was occupied till the 4th September 1888.

Owing to the death of the late Rajah of Pal Lehera and minority of his son and successor, it became necessary to take charge of the state, and the Assistant Superintendent was deputed there for the purpose. He was engaged in this work from the 11th of September to the 4th of October.

On the 9th January last the Assistant Superintendent commenced his cold-weather tour. He first proceeded to Dhenkanal, and remained there till the 15th idem, holding sessions, hearing appeals, and disposing of original civil cases. He did not inspect the Manager's office or the public institutions, as Mr. Worsley intended to visit the state shortly after for that purpose, which, however, he was unable to do.

From Dhenkanal the Assistant Superintendent proceeded to Angul, inspected the tehsildar's office, the local dispensary, the middle vernacular school and some of the primary schools, and made enquiries regarding the condition of the people. He found that pergunnahs Taras and Purnagar had suffered much from loss of crops. There had been more or less failure of the rice crop throughout the estate. He therefore recommended remission and suspension of the collection of rent, opening relief works, continuing the concession that had already been granted of gathering edible natural products from the reserved forests, and later on making tuccavi advances.

From Angul the Assistant Superintendent proceeded to Atmullik. He found that there had been failure of crops during two successive years and distress was apprehended, but the Rajah seemed quite alive to the necessity of relieving distress when it appeared, and was doing all that was needed. He carefully considered all the relief measures adopted or proposed by the Chief, and gave him necessary advice. He then inspected the Rajah's office, jail, school, and dispensary, and then proceeded to the Road state.

In Road the Assistant Superintendent made the usual inspection of the Rajah's office, school, jail, and dispensary, and was glad to find that the Rajah had established a female school, in which his and his Dewan's daughters with others were being taught. He was, however, chiefly occupied in enquiring into the general management of the state, which from certain information received in the office did not appear to have been going on satisfactorily, and also in enquiring into the condition of the people. After careful local enquiry he came to the conclusion that the last crop had been a very poor one and the people had to contend against two successive bad harvests, and generally where there was a crop the produce was very small. From all that he saw of the people, he felt no doubt that in two or three months more there would be great suffering amongst the people. He found that the Rajah had rendered some relief in the shape of remission of rent, grain advances, etc., and urged upon him to mature his plans for future relief operations, which he said he had under consideration, without delay.

As regards the general management of the state, he found that the Rajah was not taking any personal interest, and the examination of the records of a number of cases showed that the Dewan, in whose hands the administration of justice practically rested, had shown want of judgment and ordinary common sense. Both Rajah and the Dewan were warned by me, and I understand that the former is since attending office and is taking a share in the administrative work.

From Road the Assistant Superintendent proceeded to the Khondmals. He made the usual inspection of the public offices, schools, and communications.

He found that in the Khondmals, as in the neighbouring native states, the outturn of the last rice crop had been a poor one, and the cold-weather crops had not been good. It was therefore apprehended that from April till the harvesting of the next crop there would be distress; but he had no reason to think that there would be serious calamity if the mango and mohul crops were good, and in that case it was only for the "pans" that some assistance in the shape of public works was needed.

From Khondmal the Assistant Superintendent proceeded to Daspalla by the Metcalf ghatti. He found that a part of the ghatti had been cleared, but much yet remained to be done, and, in consideration of the heavy expense the work involved, it had been stopped by Mr. Worsley.

In Daspalla he found that the Rajah and the Dewan were on good terms, and the latter was not only carrying on the judicial administration of the state, but had also been entrusted by the Rajah with the management of the state revenue. Here also he found that the crops had failed and distress was apprehended, and he advised the Rajah to adopt early measures of relief. He then made the usual inspection of the Rajah's office and jail, and proceeded to Nyagurh. Here he examined the Rajah's office, jail, dispensary, and school. He made enquiries regarding an agrarian rising that had taken place, and took necessary action in the matter. Here the last rice crop did not appear to have been so great a failure, but everybody whom he questioned said that the failure had been great, and some people had already emigrated in search of food. He exhorted the Rajah to open relief works, and as the latter had no money he advised him to ask Government for a loan.

From Nyagurh the Assistant Superintendent proceeded to Ranpur, where he made enquiries regarding a serious combination that had been formed by certain influential parties against the present administration, which he succeeded in breaking up. He then inspected the Rajah's office, jail, schools, dispensary, and some of the public works executed at the head-quarters and in the interior of the state. He found the Dewan had effected various improvements. He particularly noticed the several roads and the irrigation works that had been constructed, and the neat and cleanly appearance of the town. He noticed that there had been partial failure of crops and distress was apprehended in certain parts of the state. He prepared, in consultation with the Dewan, a scheme of relief operations, and then returned to Cuttack.

Mr. Wylly, Manager of Mourbhunj, was away from his head-quarters for 74 days during the year. On the 13th November 1888 he made a short tour through the pergunnahs Deuli, Majholbhag, Barpoda, Mantri, Kottadiha, Rahanda, and Sathilo, and inspected the crops reported to have been seriously damaged by early cessation of the rains. He found that the extent of damage had been much exaggerated, and that nowhere in these pergunnahs had the cultivators lost more than five annas of their crops. He returned to his head-quarters on the 17th November 1888, and on the 24th idem came to Balasore on account of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's visit to that town. He returned to Baripada on the 28th November. On the 15th of December he marched through pergunnahs Uperbhag, Bamunghati, and Panchpir. This time he was absent from Baridapa for a month, i. e., till the 15th of January 1889. During this period he inspected the subdivisional offices at Bamunghati and Panchpir, and also the settlement work of Bamunghati and the public works completed and under construction. On the 2nd February 1889 he again went on a tour through the pergunnahs lying on the west and east of the Borabalang river, and returned to Baripada on the 23rd of February. In the second week of March 1889 he came to see me at Balasore, and returned on the 11th of that month. From the 18th to 23rd March he was in camp in pergunnah Rahanda. The subdivisional officers of Bamunghati and Panchpir in Mourbhunj visited every important place in their jurisdiction at least once, and sometimes oftener.

The Manager of Dhenkanal was out in camp for 85 days, during which he visited almost every part of the state with the exception of one bisa (pergunnah) only out of the 24 bisas of which the state is composed. While on tour he made enquiries into the state of crops and the condition of the people. He travelled through the interior of the state, visiting the Bysinga subdivision. He made enquiries regarding the boundary disputes between Dhenkanal and the neighbouring states of Athgur and Hindole and the zemindary mahal of Killa Sukinda in the Cuttack district. He also inspected the state dams and other public works, held local enquiries into village boundary disputes, and disposed of several applications for remission or reduction of rent. The Assistant Manager in charge of the Bysinga subdivision in Dhenkanal spent 94 days on tour during the year. He visited almost all the parts of the subdivision.

The Manager of Baramba spent 33 days on tour, during which he was chiefly employed in making enquiries into the state of crops and the condition of the people, and in supervising the relief works.

The Manager of Narsingpore was on tour for 106 days during the year, including 19 days occupied in coming to Cuttack to attend the durbar of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. During the 87 days he was in the interior of the state he enquired into the state of crops and of the people, disposed of a number of petty cases on the spot, and also inspected the state dams and water reservoirs.

The tehsildar of Angul, who is also the settlement officer of the estate, was out on tour for 133 days during the year. He visited almost all the pergunnahs in the estate, inspecting schools and pathsalas, holding local enquiries into cases, and also into the condition of the people, and performing various duties in connection with settlement of the estate.

Mr. Taylor, tehsildar of the Khondmals, was in camp for 147 days during the year. He thoroughly visited the eastern half of the estate. He inspected the road works, and decided several disputes about land after personal local enquiries.

THE BENAZIR FAIR—

RAMPUR STATE.

NOTICE.

The annual Benazir Fair at Rampur will be held this year on the bank of the Kosi river, by the Rampur and Moradabad road, from the 24th to 30th November. Trades-people of all kinds have been invited with their wares from different parts of the country, and, besides the usual assortments of imported and other miscellaneous goods, special care will be taken to have some of the notable indigenous manufactures of the Province, as of Fatehgarh, Mani-puri, Tilhar, Moradabad, and Rampur itself amply represented. As an additional attraction, the Fair will this time combine an Agricultural and Cattle Show. The Director of Agriculture and Commerce has been asked to provide a set of farming implements, some of which will also be shown in working. The Cattle Show will include horses, ponies, mules, cows, bullocks, and buffaloes, and will offer a good opportunity to parties wishing to buy or sell such animals; the State itself being prepared to purchase a fair number to replace those that have become unserviceable. Fodder for cattle brought for show will be provided free of cost.

The tradesmen's stalls, and tents for visitors will form a well ordered camp, with due care for sanitation. For the amusement of visitors there will be a varied programme of wrestling, elephant and ram fights, military sports, &c., ending with the usual display of fireworks. European visitors will be very welcome, and will find every arrangement made for their comfort.

THE Pran Kissen Chowdry Fund

FOR SUPPLYING

INDIA WITH NATIVE SCIENTIFIC
MEN OF EUROPEAN TRAINING.

Under a benevolent Scheme now in operation for several years, started by Baboo Pran Kissen Chowdry, for assisting meritorious but poor Indian students, under certain conditions, to go to Europe for competing for the Indian Service, there is now room for a native student, of sound health, who, having passed the Calcutta Government Medical College, may desire to compete for the Covenanted Indian Medical Service. Passage and expenses for two years' residence in England will be paid out of the fund of the Scheme.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. S. C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.

Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

THE FAREWELL OF THE ROYAL JOGEE*

BY THE LATE MURAD ALI BEG and MITFORD.

Argument.

Bhartrihari, brother of the celebrated Vikramāditya, whose era is still the current era of most of Hindoo India, was also a renowned king of Oojein. Owing to the discovery of the infidelity of Mungala, one of his wives, with a certain Jogee, he abandoned the world and became an ascetic himself, making over the throne to Vikramāditya. The traditional ballads of India assert that when about to set out for the woods, Vikramāditya and Pingala (another of his wives) attempted to dissuade him from his purpose, but in vain. The common belief is that he succeeded in eating the "Amrit-Phal" or "Fruit of Life," and consequently being immortal is wandering about India till this day, ala the Wandering Jew, King Arthur, Barbarossa, Thomas the Rhymer, &c.

The Hindoo or Mahomedan ascetic when addressing a woman calls her "Mae" (Mother). This, with the well-known Indian custom of "word-relationships" (Mookh bole Suggae) under which it is held disgraceful to entertain any feelings towards a woman once called from German "her" or "Sister," other than those appropriate to a son or brother, is the basis of the speech to Pingala.

Stand from my path, oh brother! check me not!
What wilt thou barter for my new-gained freedom?
The pomp and state I lately flung from me?
Am I not sick of it? The richest mess
Will cloy the mouth of one who hungers not,
And what desire have I not sated oft?
Wealth, power, glory, from my childhood up,
Have been attained by me without an effort,
And luxury has hung round me uncalled for.
The luscious wine frenzy—the clasp of woman—
The patter of mailed hosts behind their leader
The wild breast-heave amidst the din of victory—
The melting love-languor of choicest music—
Sweet cup, rich meal, soft raiment, poet's praise,
And statesman's flattery—all these were for me.
Sweeter than these the unchecked will of one
Who knew no master—found no obstacle—
And sweeter still the rapture of revenge,
As one by one, they who but dared to dream
Of hate to me, or mine, were all swept down.
Until, sweetest of all, the burning rage
Of jealousy was cooled the other night
By the hot blood of Mangala and her lover
Dripping along my sabre-edge.* Away!
Rest thou among the rose-bowers of my gardens!
Sit thou upon the golden cushioned seat,
With all the slaves and sycophants of Oojein
Prating their lies around thee! Listen thou
To the soft songs of dancing-girls and bombast
Of mercenary bards! And let thy tongue

* Bhartrihari, suspecting his wife's fidelity, watched one night instead of sleeping as usual. He saw her leave the palace, swim a river, and go to visit a Jogee who, notwithstanding her abject protestations of affection, insulted and reviled her until, bribed by sundry offerings she had brought with her, he at length complied with her wishes. Having satisfied himself of the reality of his wife's guilt, Bhartrihari broke from his concealment and cut both to pieces. Then, returning to his palace, he next morning resigned the kingdom to Vikramāditya, became himself a Jogee, and has never since been heard of.

Give forth the sentence, nine times out of ten
As far from justice as is hell from heaven!
There are enough of curses on my head
Earned while I reigned, without wishing for more!
Sayest thou—'A prince should always justice deal,
And then he would be loved, and never cursed'?
Boy thou! thou knowest nought! When thou hast reigned
For a short six months, thou wilt find the truth!
No judge, except a prostitute in place,
(And those who sell themselves for gold are few indeed)
Aught purposes but to discharge his trust.
But lying witnesses, and cunning tales,
And all the strange phenomena of life,
Make justice hard to mete or get. The rich,
The reckless, the most skilful—these are they
Who win; even when wrong. In every clime,
In every age, and under every form
Of government, the weakest has the best baggage lay un-
In this world is no justice. Even He—
The immortal Lord of all—but seldom helps
The righteous, poor and helpless, while his sword
Flames in the vanguard of the strongest host,
Ominous of triumph! 'Tis a glorious dream
For a young king to muse o'er all the good
What he will do his people: No more crime!
No more gaunt famine! no more foul oppression!
But all prosperity, content, and joy!
Yes! let him try it—after a few years
Ask him how he has sped and what he thinks.
Ha! Ha! Ha!
And thou too, Pingala! I have called thee "mother"
And all is o'er between us! Hie thee back,
And think of me until another lover
Shall make the love-flash twinkle in your eyes,
And the hot love-breath pant from your red lips.
Vain are thy tears, and claspings of my feet,
And furious vowings you will die with me.
Either thy love is false or true. If false,
Parting will cost thee nothing. When you go,
You will but laugh among your confidants
At the great skill with which you played this farce.
If true—'twould be a monstrous crime in me
To take thee, nursed in luxury, to the jungle,
With one whose heart has no more room for love.
A dozen days of weeping will console thee,
And after some few months of quiet sorrow,
Another love will win your thoughts from Bharthari.

* The Cretan and Polish Insurrections, the Fenians, Mentana, Capromonte, Puebla, Sedan, the first and second sieges of Paris and, not to mention other wars and battles further back, notably,—Copenhagen and Waterloo.

+ It is to be observed that I have not come across any written mention of this lady, though "Mangala" is often mentioned. Oral tradition (ballads, &c.) mentions her as a wife of Bhartrihari who much opposed his abandonment of the world. As such I introduce her.

'T is not in human nature to live lonely
 For either man or woman, whatso'ever.
 The foolish poets, or more foolish moralists
 May prate of constancy, or chastity,
 Or love unchangeable. Ah ! These are but dreams
 Of a perfection unattainable, vain,
 Put forth by those who rather search their brains
 For some recondite theory of love*
 As a pure faculty of Soul, instead
 Of what it is—a matter-prompted instinct
 Fed by fair forms and close companionship,
 Full diet and young blood. Nay, loose my garment !
 I tell thee I am flying to the wilds
 From thee and such as thee, and all their follies ;
 And shall I carry with me half Earth's troubles
 And burdens in a woman ? If thou art
 True in thy protestations, weep not for me,
 But feed my faithful horse with thine own hands.
 That was a faithful friend ! A pleasure ever
 Without alloy, to mount his glist'ning back
 And hear his snort of welcome ! My Goo-roo
 Has told me I shall drink the Amrit-Cup,
 And traverse this fair land for ever, now
 Here and now there, through countless generations
 And changing dynasties, but much I doubt
 Whether I e'er shall feel such joy as twice
 I have—when first in boyhood I rode out,
 And when I slew the Jogee, Mangalá loved.
 Fool ! What have I with pleasure ? I—
 The restless heritor of deathlessness—
 The Royal Incarnation of satiety ?—
 What but to watch in calm and listless thought
 The ceaseless current of unbounded time—
 The All which ends in Nothing ! This it is
 To which we come at last. My wife and brother,
MARVELOUS as happy-as you can,
 this wonderful Man you never shall see more.
 Back with you to the Palaces of Oojein.
 And leave me to the wilds.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE Lieutenant-Governor arrives at Calcutta next Monday.

A LONDON telegram says that on the 11th, in Mexico, General Corona, Governor of the State of Taluco, was stabbed with a poniard and killed by a lunatic.

THE new feature in the revenue administration of Hyderabad is the concession granted to rayyets for the encouragement of arboriculture and gardening.

BY a Gazette notification, the rules for the regulation of appointments in the Secretariat Clerical Service of the Bengal Government and attached offices, are made not to apply to the office of the Superintending Engineer, Sone Circle, when vacancies are filled by recruitment of officers who have already served on the permanent establishment of any Public Works Office in the Sone Circle for not less than seven years.

TWELVE candidates from the Burdwan Division, 2 from the Presidency, 28 from the Rajshahye, 19 from the Dacca, 4 from the Chittagong, 24 from the Patna, 5 from the Bhagulpore, 3 from the Orissa and 2 from the Chota Nagpore Divisions have passed the Revenue Agent's Examination of August 1889.

AS a matter of course, Mr. J. S. Armstrong, Collector of Customs, Calcutta, whose term as a Port Commissioner expires on the 22nd instant, has been given another term on that Trust. The notification is dated the 12th. Who shall say now that the Bengal Government is dilatory ?

* Byron's lines in "Don Juan"—

"Oh Plato, Plato ! Thou hast paved the way
 By those confounded fantasies of thyne," &c., &c.

It would be highly satisfactory to the public, as it would be a step towards a better administration of law and authority, if appointments made and authorities conferred on officers were Gazetted before the actual working of those orders.

THE Calcutta Gazette of the 13th November 1889, publishes the price-lists of staple food-crops in the local areas of Bengal, prepared under Section 39 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885, for the period from the 1st April to the 30th June 1889 as approved by the Board of Revenue.

IT will be remembered how the great English swimmer Captain Webb lost his life in attempting to beard the lion of cataracts. A go-a-head American has now succeeded in the desperate feat. Walter Campbell is his name. He was not all alone, but his faithful dog, inappropriately named Jumbo, bore him company. With no more than an ordinary cork belt, he launched himself in a boat from the Maid of the Mist Ghat and reached the Canadian waters safe and sound, without so much as a scratch. Jumbo was not hurt either. Of course, they could not maintain themselves in their vessel. And towards the end the man had fainted. As the exploit is so extraordinary, we better give the pith of the account in the New York Herald :—

"As the first heavy waves of the whirlpool rapids were met the boat was swamped and Campbell and his trembling 'Jumbo' were thrown into the torrent. The adventurer clung to his boat a moment and then he was swept along in the boiling surge. A cry of horror went up from the spectators. The swimmer went dashing through the mass of foaming water, but little was seen of the dog, and Campbell was hidden occasionally by the white caps which covered him with clouds of spray. When he came in view he was seen pawing the waves in an effort to swim, but the water tossed him about so that in the four or five minutes he spent shooting the rapids it did him little good. The skiff shot out into the whirlpool ahead of Campbell and the dog also led him a little. Both man and dog circled around the boat trying to swim ; but when Campbell was swept near shore his friends succeeded in saving him. Campbell, who claimed to have been conscious up to this time, fainted, but was quickly revived with whisky. He was rubbed down, and taken to the Suspension Bridge. The dog had preceded him by half a minute."

HERE is an anecdote showing how in the West, as in the East, it is the correct thing to make a present of an article which particularly catches the fancy of a friend :—

"Rachel, the famous tragedienne, was as avaricious as she was gifted. On one occasion she was invited to dine at the house of a wealthy Parisian who worshipped her genius. Observing a magnificent bouquet of flowers that adorned the centre of the table, she exclaimed, 'How lovely !' 'Pardon, mademoiselle,' said her host, with true French gallantry, 'permit me to give it to you,' at the same time lifting the flowers out of the massive silver vase in which they rested. 'But, monsieur,' said Rachel, 'twas the vase that I admired.' 'It is yours also,' said the ever polite host. When the repast was finished she asked her friend to send her home in his own carriage, as she was afraid some one might rob her of her silver vase if she returned in a public cab. He assented readily, but as he handed her into the vehicle he said imploringly, 'You will at least return my carriage, will you not, mademoiselle ?'

A very proper admonition ! What a pity that beauty should be base and genius wedded to avarice !

HERE is a pretty romance in real life :—

"A highly romantic incident occurred a few days ago at Huber's, the well-known Vienna photographer. An elderly gentleman, apparently a foreigner, went to have his portrait taken ; but as he had to wait a few minutes for the usual preparations, an album of specimen photographs was handed to him. All at once the employes in the next room heard a shriek, and, hurrying to the salon where the stranger was waiting, they found him lying senseless on the floor. When he came to himself he explained that the album at which he had been looking contained a photograph which he was convinced was that of his daughter, whom he had not seen for twenty-one years. The features were so like those of his wife that he could not be mistaken. He said that unfortunate circumstances had compelled him to leave her twenty-one years ago, at a time when his daughter was only three years of age. He had made every effort to find out the whereabouts of his family a few years later, but had not been able to discover any trace of them. He had long since acquired the conviction that they were both dead. The photographer told him that the portrait in question was that of a teacher of the pianoforte residing in Vienna, giving her name and address. It was arranged that the stranger, Herr M—, of New York, should call on her the next day, and that in the meantime she should be warned of his intended visit. The lady turned out to be his daughter, and has already left Vienna with her father for the United States. He is a wealthy speculator, and the poor music-mistress has suddenly found herself heiress to a fortune of several millions of dollars. Herr M—, prior to his departure, presented Herr Huber with a splendid diamond breast-pin."

The Fictionists of England who have of late been going in for plots with a pleasant ending, may make something of that.

BABU Hurro Chunder Chowdhry of Sherpur-Town, Maimensing, is truly a modest man. Although a man of progress and of munificence, he loves to hide his light under the bushel—of his own kith and kin. According to the East, he has established a dispensary and called it, after his eldest son, Hem, —a newspaper press named Charu, his second son,—a library, named Hemanga, his third son,—a school named Hirun, his fourth son, and—an Atithsala named after his mother Srimuty Tara Money Chowdhurnay. They are all good works, if not all of them charities, and it is a pleasure to see a great landlord in the back districts showing such an example of useful liberality and healthy activity. The list, we remark, omits the wife, or the mother of the children who give names to the “institutions.”

MR. HENNIKER HEATON, M.P., has issued a small pamphlet for the reform of the English postal system, entitled “Sixty Reasons for an Enquiry.” It is no system at all, if he is to be believed, and he gives substantial reasons for faith in him, but an administrative Banian tree, the growth of years and of blind chance, watered by neglect and incompetence. Thick as leaves in Vallombrosa are the anomalies of this magnificent botanical monster. We reproduce the following summary from the Times of India :—

“The postage of letters from England to Australia, for instance, costs £1.792 per ton, while the same quantity of newspapers goes for £37. The carriage of 200 letters costs £5, while a parcel of the same weight is carried by the same ship for three shillings and sixpence. The postage of a newspaper to Australia is one penny, but a letter of the same weight is charged 4s. A newspaper under 4oz. in weight is charged 1½d. to Ceylon, and only 1d. to Sydney, 5,000 miles further, although the Australian mail steamers actually call at Ceylon. While England can only send to Australia a paper of less than 4oz. for 1d., one weighing 11oz. is brought from Australia for the same charge. New Zealand letters by the Peninsula and Oriental or Orient Lines are carried for 4d. the half-ounce, while if they go by the New Zealand Company's ships the rate is 6d., although they are all shipped at Plymouth, and the four-penny post is often quicker of the two. The postage from England to British India, Ceylon, Hongkong, Labuan, the Cape, and many other parts of the world is just twice as great as the rate charged to the same parts in Germany and France. A letter from Germany to Australia or New Guinea can be sent for less than 2½d., but from England to Australia only the cost is 4d. At Shanghai and at Zanzibar a letter sent to England through the English Post Office costs 3s., while if it is sent through the French or German office the charge is only 2½d. One firm alone in England saves £1,300 a year by sending its correspondence from France instead of from home. Still more absurd is the fact that a letter from New York to Singapore via England goes for 2½d., while one from England only, carried in the same mail steamer, is charged twice as much. Again, a letter from England to Australia is charged 6d., but if it is sent on another thousand miles to New Caledonia the postage is only 4d., and this is 1½d. more than the French Post Office asks. From England to Queensland, via Brindisi, a 6d. stamp is required, while the answer travelling by the same route can come for 4d. From Fiji to England is 10d., while from England to Fiji the postage is sixpence.”

We hope some one would take the trouble to institute a searching inquiry into the Indian Post office. The postage rates between India and Europe are still too high.

THE Hon'ble Dr. Gooroo Das Banerjee has taken one month's medical furlough to the 15th December. Next week, he performs his mother's shraddh which could not be done in proper time owing to his illness. The “assembly” of friends and the public takes place on the 8th Agrayayan=22nd November. On the same day, will be held the ceremony of the consecration of the cow.

MR. J. WESTLAND, C.S.I., retired from the Bengal Civil Service from the 30th October 1889, unwept and unsung.

THE Gazette of India of this day notifies that “Sir H. M. Durand, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign Department, is granted furlough for one year, under Article 340 of the Civil Service Regulations, and with effect from the 22nd November, 1889.

The furlough granted to Sir H. M. Durand, in Foreign Department Notification, No. 73-C.G., dated the 26th November, 1887, is converted into special leave under Articles 264 and 348 of the Civil Service Regulations.”

The second paragraph is too much for mortals not initiated in the mysteries of the Foreign Office. The furlough granted two years back is now converted into special leave.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR is now in our midst. His Royal Highness reached Bombay last Saturday, the birthday of the Prince of Wales. The Oceana bringing the prince arrived in the harbour at eight in the morning—several hours before time, and caught Bombay napping. So there was some delay in landing the prince which could not be done before noon and even then without all arrangements being complete and all persons and personages being present. Such of the Municipal Commissioners as could be present presented him an address. After replying to the address, the royal visitor drove to the Secretariat, by way of the Queen's statue, and, after a halt of few minutes, to the railway station, where a special train was ready to start for Kirkee. In the hurry to attend to the Prince, the royal baggage lay uncared for which again delayed by two hours the start for Kirkee, which was reached at 6-30. At Kirkee there was no and the punishment of not known when the special would arrive. In the evening there was a dress dinner at the Government House in honor of the occasion. Two toasts were drunk—of the Queen and the Prince of Wales. In giving the latter, the Governor welcomed Prince Albert Victor to India. After the dinner, the prince received in the banquetting hall the Raja of Kolhapur and the chiefs of Akalkote, Mirajkar, Bhore and Phultan and the prince of Bhownugger. The next day, the Prince attended divine service at All Saint's Church, the Bishop of Bombay preaching the sermon, which was based on the 24th and 25th verses of the 3rd Chapter of Daniel. The subject dwelt on was freedom, to attain which, the Bishop said, one must strive after self-control, contentment and obedience. In the afternoon, the prince held a reception of native gentlemen, with whom he freely chatted. Next day, Monday the 11th, the prince visited the Pabutti-hill and the temples. The same evening Poona was illuminated. The 12th was opened with a review of troops on the general parade ground and concluded with a state ball at Ganeshkhind, the prince dancing the state quadrille with lady Reay. There was a parade too of the cavalry the next morning, the 13th. In the evening, there was dinner at the Magdala House and a torchlight tattoo. “The latter,” says the special correspondent of the Englishman, “provided a grand sight, which was witnessed by some thousands of spectators. The men belonging to the eight Regiments at present in garrison assembled at Ghorpuri shortly after nine o'clock, and with massed bands, preceded by the cavalry, marched to Magdala House. The approach to the house itself and New Magdala House were literally covered with buttis, arranged most artistically, the extent and magnificence of the illumination quite baffling description. The troops arrived a little past ten o'clock and marched with flaring torches through the grounds of New Magdala House to the compound of the Duke's residence, where crowds of guests were accommodated in a huge shamiana.” The prince was allowed perfect rest on the 14. In the afternoon he took leave of the Governor and left for Hyderabad at 7 in the evening in a special train provided by the Nizam.

The special was late by an hour-and-a-half and reached its destination at about noon. The station was elaborately decorated. The Nizam himself, the Resident, the minister and all the high state officers received the prince. He then drove in the Nizam's State carriage to the Bashir Bagh. In the afternoon, the Nizam and his minister visited His Royal Highness, who then returned the visit to the Nizam driving through the city to the Palace. There, the Nizam showed the prince through the stables, and then the State jewels were displayed. In the evening, there was a ball at the Residency which was illuminated.

SOME reproach has been cast on Madras for her lukewarmness in respect of the visit of the Prince. But it was scarcely deserved. His Royal Highness is sure of a cordial welcome wherever he goes throughout Her Majesty's wide dominions in India, and Madras is no exception. There was no occasion for going into anticipatory loyal fits at the very sound of the "advent." Madras, like Calcutta, has now come forward and is preparing. Rangoon has voted Rs. 10,000.

The nature and conditions of the visit point to the suitability of moderation in the reception. Gush towards a contingent second future sovereign is the very reductio ad absurdum of Loyalty. Fuss on any scale is forbidden by the private character of the Tour. That character was announced from the first and has been maintained, so far as it has been possible to maintain against the importunity of uninstructed loyalty or the officiousness of restless wealth.

The Visit was evidently planned as a Tour for amusement and edification. Perhaps full regard was not paid, in the arrangements, to even Oriental requirements, or at least to the satisfaction of Oriental impressions. The Prince's Toshakhana will hardly strike his Imperial Grand-mamma's subjects as very princely, we are afraid. The wardrobe is just that of a travelling shikari of the military profession—say, a cavalry officer. Here is the inventory given in the English papers of the kit of the head of the royal party.

"One uniform of the 10th Hussars, two suits of green Junga cloth for hunting in the jungle, and a suit of pig-sticking riding clothes made of light leather."

LORD KNUTSFORD has taken the start of Lord Cross in Constitutional Reform in the East. A step at any rate has been taken in Ceylon. A small step to be sure, but something is better than nothing. And anything for a beginning. The Legislative Council of Ceylon was composed back with you to thibers, eight official and six unofficial ones, under the Aud and Governor President. The chiefs of the principal public departments and Provinces were ex-officio members, namely, the Major-General, the Colonial Secretary, the Attorney-General, the Auditor-General, the Treasurer, the Government Agents of the Western and Central Provinces and the Surveyor-General. Of the six unofficial members, three were representatives of the Singhalese, the Tamils and the Burghers, and an equal number of representatives of the mercantile, planting and general sections of the European community. This Council has now been enlarged by the addition of three members, one official and two non-officials. Of the latter, one is to be taken from the Singhalese of Kandy, and the Mahomedans have, for the first time, got a representative. The Head Collector of Customs is the official added to the Council. The appointments are all made by Government and the unofficial members are not necessarily unconnected with Government. A Singhalese gentleman, now acting as Police Magistrate of Gompola Panabokka, Ratamahatmeya, has been chosen by the Governor to represent the Kandyans. It is satisfactory to learn that both his appointment and that of Abdul Rahman as representative of the Mahomedan community have given equal general satisfaction.

THE High Court Long Vacation closed on Friday the 15th. The Judges resume work on Monday the 18th. Mr. Justice Wilson presides at the Original Side. Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Trevelyan have been set down for the Criminal Appellate Bench. The Chief Justice has associated with himself Mr. Justice Norris for the Patua Group.

THE Dacca Prakash defamation case is on the Monday's board. We hope the advocate for the editor will not fail to put before the Court the treatment he was subjected to after the order for bail, as evidence of the spirit in which the lower Court viewed the interference of the High Court in the matter.

THE Jhansi Full Bench case was argued on Monday last by Mr. A. Strachey on behalf of Government, as amicus curie. It did not take him long. It was the business of a moment to charm and be charmed. He supplied the Judges with printed copies of argument he had drawn up. After a short discussion, the Chief Justice, who had come down the same morning prepared to decide against the Government, was quite overpowered. Convinced against the grain, he stopped the counsel in the midst of his address, the other Judges being also of the same mind, and decided in favour of Mr. Strachey. No body, we see, argued the case on the other side.

WE heartily congratulate Mr. W. C. Bonnerjea on the success of his daughter Nolini at the London University Entrance Examination. We are also glad that this will not be the end of her education, but she will join the Ladies College at Cambridge, Girtton. The Bonnerjeas should cultivate their fair flower to the utmost, if only to see what the Indian female genius is in these days capable of. Though the lady is a Christian, both are pure and excellent Hindus by birth, and they are engaged in an interesting experiment. When we come to think of the end of it all, we confess we are overpowered with sadness. They are only raising at great cost a hot-house rose, to be admired and smelled by foreigners, out of the senses of their own countrymen, far away from India. She may take Sanskrit for a language, but at the best she will lispi like Europeans. What a fate for the daughter of a hundred Rishis! Certainly, the most spirited Bengali lyric will waken in her no thrill. In fine, she will not know her own and be ashamed of them if she knows, and hate them accordingly.

A Dacca paper condemns the practice of extensive adulteration of the ordinary articles of food in the city of the Nawabs—Abdul Ghuni and Ashanoola, specially naming ghee, oil, milk, sugar, sweetmeats, bread, rice, mutton and salt. It calls the practice criminal and calls for the aid of the police. No number of prosecutions can make our food pure, or secure us, in this age of commerce and cheapness, genuine or healthy articles for diet or wear, unless our people are in a position to pay for them or prefer the more expensive to the cheaper and unhealthier articles.

As for Dacca, it has always been a wretched place—since, at any rate, the debris of the genuine Nawabate was swept away. No respectable Hindus were ever domiciled there, and now a parvenu House, founded by a 'cute adventurer, has established itself on the ruins of the old Mahomedan families. Its ruins are Dacca's most respectable contents—from the silted Booree Ganga to its miserable fort. Its great gun is—a rusty piece of ordnance, recalling the glories of the past. The river still flows and, for four months in the year, presents a noble front. The City of the Great Mogul's Nawarah is still rich in its boating rather than shipping. All else is mean and disagreeable. It is an Eastern Colonge (of Coleridge's epigram). Dirty sights meet you at every turn and horrid smells attack your nose. Its birds are crows which are endless and keep caw-cawing from before early dawn till far into the evening. Its air is heavy and its water foul. Its morals are no more pure. It has a bad name for mercenary ruffians, secretly employed by the citizens for insulting and licking each other in the street. It abounds in drunkenness and prostitution. It is about the only Mahomedan city—Lucknow not excepted—where send and sharddkhoree are no reproach. Its magistracy is bad—its municipality the worst in India. It has not even the usual recommendation of a country town—cheap living. It consumes more liquor than any other place—it certainly contains more liquor shops than Chandernagore, the French town of free liquor, and it imports all the worst abominations of Radha Bazar, Calcutta. Everything is dear and nasty. For good meat you have neck-beef in plenty. The milk is poor. Fuel is scarce. And Ghee is not to be had for love or money. And this is the City of the so-called Pilaw-eaters. And such is Dacca—the City of the Twa Nawabs! What wonder that the older inhabitants sigh for the days of poor Ghaziooddin Hyder!

THE Bangalore European paper has a long notice of Mr. Justice Thumboo Chetty's late address at the distribution of prizes of Rai Bahadoor Arcot Narainswamy Moodelliar's High School. The article is set off with several quotations, hackneyed perhaps but not inappropriate, from writers sacred and profane, from the Psalmist and the Apostle to Shakespeare and Tennyson. We cannot however say that the writer quite escapes the risks of the dangerous game of this literary embellishment—in rash dependence on the memory. The only quotation which is at all fresh—although even that occurs in Byron at the head of one of his most popular shorter pieces—is thus marred :—

“———now stand aloof,
Like cliffs that have been rent asunder,—
A dreary sea now flows between.”

Coleridge has it thus :—

They stood aloof, the scars remaining,
Like cliffs, which had been rent asunder ;
A dreary sea now flows between.

MISS Emily Baring, who is favourably remembered in India as the daughter of our former Governor-General Lord Northbrook, is engaged to Colonel Crichton. We are not told if he is an Admirable one of that ilk. The uniform and epaulets have confessedly a charm for the fair sex, but every

Captain or Colonel, or Knight in arms,

Whose chance on some defenceless doors may seize,
is not necessarily a desirable match. The lucky suitor in the present case is presumably a gentleman of mature years. He is certainly no unfledged bachelor. He is, rather, an expert. He has run the gauntlet—passed through the experiment. He is peculiarly fortunate in having gone through it unscathed. He has tasted the sweets of matrimony, and retains its relish. He, at any rate, did not find it a Dead Sea apple. He has loved and lost, and is again to the fore to love. He is probably just the man to lead an unsophisticated young damsel through the joys and sorrows, and guide her in the duties of married life. This seasoned widower has but one disadvantage that we can discern. He is handicapped with half a dozen children. It is perhaps on that account that he now prudently loves—a Baring. A London correspondent says, hitherto she kept house for her father, now she will do so for the Colonel. And why not?—Unless the noble lord re-eives the Colonel on his establishment as a “domestic son-in-law.” Otherwise, who will keep house for him now? Is he going to marry too? He is not too old for wedlock for an Englishman.

Warrents Knight of the Indian Mirror now and again delights to bully the British if they do not listen to him. He threatened Government with insurrection if the Doorga Pooja holidays of the Bengali clerks of Calcutta were curtailed. He has now discovered that the Bengali are no good, and the Government knows it. It appears that in Bengal there is one Policeman to 2,601 inhabitants, in the North-West Provinces one to 1,323, and in Madras one to 1,456. In the Punjab and Bombay, the proportion is even more adverse to the character of the population for love of order.

OUR contemporary informs its readers, with evident pleasure, that its l'ère noire, Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace, has quietly settled down in a street in H———as Ruskin calls the thoroughfare in London which goes by Her Majesty's name.

SIR MORTIMER DURAND is still tarrying in India and hesitates to sail for Europe. He is now at Allahabad on his way to Bombay. Although much improved, it is said he is still in a critical condition. Sir Mortimer is unwilling to go, but the doctors insist on the voyage. The patient sometimes proves the better physician than the attending sawbones.

MR. ALLAN HUME is progressing apace. He was last heard of as the National Congress. He has now constituted himself India. In his new capacity he has been telegraphing to Miss Bradlaugh—

“India sorrowing. Universal prayer for your father's recovery.”

Except for such identity, or at least on the supposition of Mr. Hume's bona fide belief in such identity, that telegram and its wording would be a grave offence against society and a sin against the very God of Prayer. We have not heard if the Churches in India have set apart a day of mourning for the benefit of the sturdy atheist. Mr. Hume doubtless knows his own society. But certainly Mr. Bradlaugh's name has not been heard in any mosque or devdlaya. A more prudent man would have taken care to secure some structure of justification. Why did not Mr. Hume himself send a Dali to Holy Kalighat to appease the grim gory goddess, consort meet for the dread Destroyer? It were not a great matter. As he has already paid Rs. 10,000 towards last year's expenses of the Congress Jatra a few more would not have mattered.

THE Coryphæus of the Congress has recovered his temper. His trials have been enough to break the heart. But he cannot in honor abandon the bantling of his own bringing-forth and up bringing. He only acted in a huff after a famous Padre President of the Bethune Society, who at a stormy meeting left the chair and the society in a huff to keep himself in readiness for the intercession of his followers, in his carriage at the door, like

A violet by a mossy stone

Half-hidden from the eye!

As might be expected, he has been drawn out of his pouting place. And now the ephemeris of the party—the Mirror—informs us that he has left Simla and is on the way to Bombay for the coming fray.

As a poor man just living on his brains, Mr. Bradlaugh should not be allowed to be a loser by his visit to India. He is a public lecturer by profession, but in India no body would go to a lecture by paying an admission of a Rupee or two. Under these ideas, his Indian friends talked of raising a fund to reimburse him. Mr. D. Gostling in the Indian Spectator of the 11th instant wrote—

“It is no use, therefore, for any committee to invite Mr. Bradlaugh to India, unless we are prepared to put our hands in our pockets. The least we could offer him for a three or four months' absence from England would be Rs. 3,000, and including travelling expenses it ought to be Rs. 4,000. I am prepared to subscribe Rs. 150 to Rs. 200, if these amounts can be made up.”

Mr. Bradlaugh has, however, declined the offer of his Indian friends to pay the expenses of his Indian tour. All anxiety on that score has, happily, been removed by the present of £200 by a brother M. P., Mr. McEwain.

Mr. Bradlaugh has done right. He knows England. Many a promising politician has been ruined directly he has been known to touch pelf.

WE are truly concerned at the latest bulletins regarding Mr. Bradlaugh's health. At first it seemed that he fell diplomatically ill to find a decent excuse for stumping it in India at a time when his constituents must need his presence at home. How else could we understand the announcement that his doctor had advised him to go to India. A direction for change to a Southern or warm climate would have passed unchallenged. Besides, the tone and statements of the journals of the party precluded the idea of anything like an invalid's landing or convalescent's trip. Mr. Bradlaugh was coming as a figure of Rajit twelve labours for the regeneration of India and the punishment of the horrible British on the spot. So much for overzealous friends. There is no longer room for doubt that the matter is serious with the new friend of India. An abscess has appeared in the left leg. He is not only bedridden but loses strength. Complete rest has been enjoined.

FOR picking a leaf—valued for purposes of prosecution at 4 annas—from a plantain tree in the garden of a reverend gentleman, and at his instance, an old servant of his named Krishna Gopal has been sentenced, by the Bombay Esplanade Police Court, to as many days' rigorous imprisonment. Here, verily, is a precious brace of inexorables! Both the reverend prosecutor and the lay judge are to be congratulated on the feat accomplished. The ephemeral flimsy plantain is one of the commonest and cheapest plants, and, admitting of transplantation at any stage of life, it may be easily replaced. Throughout the country, strangers are freely allowed to take the leaves from the trees for use as temporary vessels for putting their rice and curry or bread or sweetmeats upon. It was only by a stretch of judicial fiction that a leaf or two could be valued at 4 annas, where one sixteenth of the sum would have been preposterous. What would have been the measure of punishment, if, instead of the leaf, Krishna Gopal were bold enough to denude the tree of its fruit and deprive the reverend owner of the pleasure of his dessert of an evening? And to think of the sanguinary result of cutting down the precious ecclesiastical plantain—parent of the fruit of the sacred repast!

Well may Christianity be at a discount with such exemplars of the sublime precept to offer your neighbour your left if he smite you on your right cheek! And with such luminaries on the bench, what wonder that it is growing into a custom for suitors to leave court with the compliment of a slippering to the judge!

The case under notice is far from singular in its brutal injustice. We deliberately say injustice rather than severity. It is rank injustice to award substantial punishment—punishment at all—where the demands of the most scrupulous judicature might be satisfied by discharging the poor accused with a reprimand. It is bad enough to be under a microscopic and exacting system of law which makes mountains of mole-hills and permits the heaviest punishments for the simplest transgressions. If the discretion under such a Code is exercisable by a magistracy without discretion, the people may be deemed doomed.

THE Municipal Commissioners met for the first time after the holidays on Thursday. They had a heavy file to dispose off, but they stuck to one item of business—the last annual report, which has already been resolved upon by the local Government. Of the 31 members present, five complained that it was useless to discuss a matter which had already been disposed of by the Chairman in consultation with a committee appointed for the purpose, and that it was a farce to deliberate on a thing past recall. Mr. Gasper, as the mouthpiece of the Five, actually proposed a vote of censure on the Chairman. There was a hot debate, and Mr. Gasper's motion was lost. The Commissioners, by a resolution, however, justified the action of the Chairman, recording their opinion against a future practice of the kind. Mr. Gasper was technically right, no doubt. But he chose a wrong occasion to rake up a question which undelay this opposition—the strained feeling between the Chairman and the Health Officer. The Chairman was out with his in the following strain:—

"I say, then, in the first place, that there is no personal squabble whatever between Dr. Simpson and myself. (Applause). I was one of the most active in bringing Dr. Simpson out to India. When Dr. Simpson first came out he lived in my own house with me. He has always been a personal friend of mine. I appreciate as much as anybody can the single-minded devotion with which he attends to his business, the one object which he sets before him—the well-being and the health of Calcutta. Gentlemen, the position between Dr. Simpson and myself is simply this, that, soon after Dr. Simpson came out, he adopted what I considered an injudicious line. Instead of giving the Commissioners credit for the good work they did and adding to that the work that remains to be done, he adopted a particularly fault-finding policy and allied himself more particularly with that party of the town, whose special object it is to run down the Commissioners, and whom you know in your heart of hearts to be hostile to your well-being (Great Applause). Gentlemen, I regret—I most sincerely regret—that your Health Officer has adopted that policy. I think it a mistaken one. Instead of trying to convince your reason, he has tried to run you down outside (Applause)—tried to run you down in the Press—tried to run you down by getting gentlemen to make sensational remarks against the administration of the Corporation (Applause), simply because he thought it the best way of gaining his purpose. Gentlemen, so far as Dr. Simpson's honesty of purpose is concerned no one can say a single word against it. (Applause). It is simply a question of tact. Did he go the right way about the care of the sanitation of the town? Gentlemen, he did not. My views differ but very little from his. When I found he was pressing those views in an unofficial manner, in an unpracticable manner, when I found he was pressing those views in a way which made you shrink back from the abyss of expenditure which lay before you, what was my duty? What was I to do under those circumstances? I stood as a go-between. The result has been that Dr. Simpson's friends, because I have endeavoured my very best to recommend his schemes to you in a practicable way, have, in what I must describe as the meanest way, turned upon me, and accused me of stopping the path of progress. You know, gentlemen, that a fouler libel has never appeared in the Press. I am ashamed indeed that Dr. Simpson's friends can stoop to taunt me in that way by misrepresenting me as they have done (Applause). I have tried to get many of Dr. Simpson's schemes accepted by you; I have tried to throw oil on every occasion on which your feelings were hurt, but at the same time I have known it was idle to treat Calcutta as if it were a city as wealthy as Birmingham, Liverpool, or Bristol. We must cut our coat according to our cloth. We must also conciliate the feelings of the people. We cannot lightly treat those feelings which have sunk deep into the hearts and sentiments of the people of this country for years and years. These, gentlemen, are the causes of the difference between Dr. Simpson and myself, and I must say I am astonished to see how Baboo Notendia Nath Sen, who himself opposed him, can to-day pose as the friend of Dr. Simpson. It is one of those things which may well surprise us (Applause). Gentlemen, I need not say, for you know it very well, how up to the very last moment I advocated almost everything that Dr. Simpson put before you. (Applause). Have I not done violence to my feelings because I felt the necessity of supporting him? He is the Health Officer, and he must be supported."

If Sir Henry Harrison has introduced into the country and cherished in his bosom such a viper, he has our fullest sympathy. What says Dr. Sircar? In any case, even a Health Officer in an Eastern city ought not to be condemned unheard. There is the complaint. We must allow a reasonable time for the answer.

THE SULTAN AND HIS VIEWS ON THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE ROOT OF TURKISH ADMINISTRATIVE DIFFICULTY.

WHATEVER may be the Sultan's deficiencies as a master or as head of the Turkish administration, His Majesty is no fool. He is not, though, the typical able or wise Oriental Prince who has the vaguest possible idea of the outside world and of other countries and Powers and is at the mercy of political forces from without. It will be remembered that, not long ago, Professor Vambery, the great traveller and linguist, paid a visit to Constantinople where he delivered a striking Lecture on Islamite Culture. During his visit he had a private interview with the Sovereign, and was understood to have met with a cordial reception. A Hungarian journal, the Pest Lloyd, appears to have interviewed the professor on his return. Extracts are given in the British Press from the account published in that paper. The Sultan seems to have talked very freely on most of the burning points of the Eastern Question of the hour. There is no reason to distrust the report; in fact, the subsequent course of events confirms its accuracy. Thus, with regard to the Triple Alliance, according to Mons. Vambery,

"the Sultan thinks he had better adhere to the policy of strict neutrality, which at least saves him from being hampered by the well-meant but sometimes disagreeable counsels of an ally, as was the case in former periods. The forthcoming visit of the German Emperor the Sultan looks forward to as a happy event of the greatest importance. This opinion has been shared by those high officials at the palace and at the Porte who know the efforts Russian diplomacy has made for some time past to interfere with the projected visit. The Sultan's views on the Bulgarian question are that Bulgarian affairs are taking a quiet course, and that events in Bulgaria are not likely to have any influence affecting his dominions. His Majesty abstained from uttering any opinion on the question of the Bulgarian throne."

The Emperor of Germany has since come and gone, and Turkey has not joined the Alliance. The Kaiser was wise enough not to draw the Sultan into it. He also gave him sound advice—to rely rather on the natural allies of Turkey, and, for the rest, to avoid giving offence to its natural enemy, Russia.

At that time the Sultan was happy to see that Shakir Pasha had brought Crete round to submission and quiet. As for the "atrocities," they were evidently of Greek invention, specially as the Russian Government itself, through their Ambassador, had congratulated Shakir on the restoration of order in the island.

The Sultan spoke with feeling on the Armenian agitation. He was bitter against the Gladstonians who clearly seemed essaying to make a second Bulgaria of Armenia. But where is Armenia? "All my subjects," said the Monarch,

"are equally dear to me, but those who speak of Armenian autonomy should first create an Armenia in which this autonomy could be introduced. There exists an Armenia in Europe, but none in Asia Minor, where, in the five villages of Erzeroum, Van, Moush, Bklis, and Diarbekir, the Mahomedans form two-thirds, the Armenians only one-third, of the population; whereas in Bulgaria the Mahomedans form only one-fourth of the inhabitants. It would be the greatest injustice to exterminate all Kurds and Turks, in order, out of one-third of the population, to form an autonomous Armenia."

Of course, His Majesty would with his whole strength resist such a policy.

All that shows that Turkey is now ruled by a sovereign who knows his affairs and is conversant with the politics of Europe at large.

We only hope that His Majesty will only grant the necessary reforms in administration in Kurdistan and all legitimate relief to his Christian subjects, who, as he confessed, are equally dear to him—as sovereign—with those of his own persuasion. An able Armenian journalist has lately written on the Armenian question with great vigor and effect. There is a vein of exaggeration throughout the article, and it is not difficult for even outsiders like ourself to point out its weak points. But on the whole he makes out a strong case. The truth is that the complaints mostly touch defects that are common to the Turkish administration. Such, for instance, is corruption. It is rampant throughout the Empire in AMERICA is a New World, undreamt of by the enlightened Greeks, the conquering Romans, or even the far-navigating Tyrians or Carthaginians. It was unknown to Europe of the Middle Ages, though unrecording Scandinavian mariners may have drifted to its shores. It was by an accident that Columbus discovered it, in 1492. It was peopled by adventurers, corsairs, runaways, and other restless spirits from the Old World. The United States were no exception, and these now are not only the domicile of the most prosperous and enlightened citizens in that Hemisphere but constitute one of the foremost nations of the world. The country is now one still—a land of colonists and settlers—of parvenus, if you will. But it has already passed

After all, the best commemoration for all time and all the world came from the hand of a British woman. It is yet so handy that we are able to present it to each of our readers —

The ocean-eagle soared
From his nest by the white wave's foam,
And the rocking pines of the forest roared --
This was their welcome home !

There were men with hoary hair,
Amidst that pilgrim-band—
Why had they come to wither there
Away from their childhood's land?

There was woman's fearless eye,
Lit by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth.

What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?
—They sought a faith's pure shrine!

Ay, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod!
They have left unstained what there they found—
Freedom to worship God!

No American has written on the subject half so well.
We wish this poetry might stir the soul of India.

MR. CURRIE AND THE HOWRAH MUNICIPALITY.

THE Howrah municipal prosecutions against the late assistant Tax Collector Chunilal Mullick, which had created a considerable stir in local society, have all ended in acquittal. Torn by factions, over all which the Magistrate-Chairman rides the high horse, the Howrah Municipality presents the extraordinary spectacle of rewarding incompetence and persecuting ability and devotion. Before the late prosecutions began, Chunilal Mullick, in view of the large arrears of taxes, had been asked by the Vice-Chairman to suspend his work at the desk and assist the Sircars in the work of collection. Working with honest zeal, Chunilal succeeded in realising more than Rs. 10,000 within a short time, including demands which had been barred by limitation. Some of the Commissioned Officers, who had been the greatest defaulters, seeing those views in it inconsistent with their dignity and privilege to pay their dues regularly like ordinary rate-payers. It may easily be conceived how some of these men regarded the honest zeal of their servant in applying the same law to themselves and their constituents equally. The Vice-Chairman was too high to be touched. But not so the poor assistant Tax-collector. A thick crop of charges of corruption against this poor man startled the town one morning. A strong and sensible Chairman would have at once seen through the devise. Unfortunately, it was Mr. Currie of bumptious repute that was called upon to exercise his discretion in the matter of these accusations. With that singular felicity which this officer always displays when the question is how to override the law, he united the functions of Magistrate and Chairman in almost all the orders he issued on the case. The charges were made over for "judicial enquiry" by Mr. Currie to some of his inexperienced Deputies and Sub-Deputies. With no more knowledge of the law and procedure than could be expected from officers of their standing in the service, these men submitted extraordinary reports recommending the prosecution of Chunilal Mullick. All the cases were tried by Mr. C. N. Banerjee. The accused was defended by Baboo Ambica Churn Bose, of the High Court, who did not spare Mr. Currie during the conduct of the trial, pointing out at each instance the singular mistakes and misconceptions of the Magistrate-Chairman. One of the cases against Chunilal requires particular mention. In course of his rounds for collection, the khatta books of a 'native firm' showed a debit entry of Rs. 15 in the name of "Hridaya Baboo." The Assistant Assessor of the Howrah Municipality is named Hridaya Kristo Banerjee. Chunilal, probably suspecting that the "Hridaya Baboo" of the khatta books was no other than Hridaya Kristo Banerjee, the Assistant Assessor, placed a copy of the entry with the date in the hands of two of the local Commissioners. The latter inspected and marked the books and addressed the Municipal Secretary to move the Chairman for an enquiry. Mr. Currie had recourse to his "judicial enquiry." The name of the Deputy who conducted the enquiry should not be permitted to remain unknown. Baboo Haripada Bhattacharjee, for that is the gentleman's name, recommended the prosecution of Chunilal on the charge of having given 'false information' to a public officer. One of the partners of the firm, a released convict, stated that the "Hridaya Baboo" of his khatta books was not Baboo Hridaya Kristo Banerjee the Assessor. No effort was made by the enquiring officer for the production of this "Hridaya Baboo." No question was asked about his whereabouts or personal description, or even about the full circumstances of the payment to him. The statement by the municipal Secretary, who is also the Assessor, that his Assistant Hridaya Kristo Banerjee is a very honest servant, although the Secretary's knowledge of the person dates from only three years or three years and a half back, was regarded as sufficient to exonerate the Assistant Assessor from all suspicion, and inculcate Chunilal in having given "false information." Mr. Currie accepted the report and ordered a prosecution. The trying Magistrate, Mr. C. N. Banerjee, treated with just disdain the story of an unknown "Hridaya Baboo" having come to the poor firm at Sulkeah for purchasing corrugated iron sheets and depositing at once Rs. 20, and of his having subsequently come again for return of his money when Rs. 15 only could be handed over to him, the balance not having been available. This "Hridaya Baboo" must have dropped from the clouds, for nobody at Sulkeah knew or knows anything about him. The receipt said to have been given him by the managing partner of the firm set forth his name as "Hridaya Baboo." No question was asked him at the time as to his surname although he was a Bengali. He never turned up for claiming the balance. The firm does not ordinarily deal in corrugated iron. And yet this "Hridaya Baboo" had selected this firm for purchasing that article. Mr. Currie's order for his production at the trial could not be carried out. Altogether, the story was preposterous in the extreme and could not impose on the gullibility of a chit. Traces of tampering with the accounts were obvious. A Magistrate of ordinary penetration would have dismissed the case immediately after the deposition of the managing partner of the firm. Mr. C. N. Banerjee, however, although his judgment has given general satisfaction, allowed the proceedings to drag on from day to day and week after week, and by the time he acquitted the accused, the latter became a ruined man. Perhaps Mr. Banerjee could not do otherwise, seeing that it was his official superior who had ordered the prosecution and that the case itself had attracted considerable attention. The deposition of Baboo Haripada Bhattacharjee under cross-examination promised at one time some curious disclosures. That convenient section, however, of the Indian Evidence Act which foolishly protects official confidences of every sort, served to conceal the true facts of the case. Magistrates may hold all manner of consultations with their Deputies actually entrusted with the trial of cases in which they (the Magistrates) are themselves the real prosecutors. But section 124 of the Indian Evidence Act prevents the disclosure of what is settled in these consultations! This is the law of the land, and we submit! All is well, however, that ends well. Chunilal has got his character back but not yet his situation. He is a ruined man, for his debts amount to more than he possesses in land and movables. That, however, is the inevitable result of the laws under which we live. Who is to pay the poor man his expenses? The beauty of the whole affair, is that, although Chunilal has not yet got his situation from which he was illegally suspended (for though a municipal employé on more than Rs. 20 a month, he was suspended by the Chairman in his executive capacity and without the slightest reference to the Commissioners at a meeting), Hridaya Kristo Banerjee, the Assistant-Assessor, has got an increase of pay. I do not mean to even insinuate that he and the "Hridaya Baboo" of the suspicious khatta books are identical. All that, however, I do mean to say is that the circumstances of the case are extraordinary and that Mr. Currie, to be consistent with himself, should have ordered a "judicial enquiry" for spotting the "Hridaya Baboo" of the case before considering the matter to have terminated, and before allowing an increase to Hridaya Kristo Banerjee, the Assistant Assessor, whose reputation must be held to be under a cloud till something more is definitely known of the extraordinary "Hridaya Baboo" of the khatta books, whose personality constituted a problem which, to say the least, was not clearly solved.

THE "CORRUPT" MAMLUUDARS.
ACT NO. XIV OF 1889.

An Act to indemnify certain witnesses.

Whereas by an order, dated the sixteenth day of October, 1888 a Commission was appointed by the Governor of Bombay in Council under Act XXXVII of 1850 (for regulating Inquiries into the behaviour of Public Servants) for the purpose of enquiring into certain imputations of misbehaviour by a public servant;

And whereas in the course of the proceedings before the said Commission, and of certain enquiries preliminary to or connected with the said proceedings and undertaken by direction of the said Governor in Council, and in the investigation and trial of certain criminal charges against one Hunmuntrao Raghavendra, statements were made and evidence given by public servants and other persons, by reason of which statements or evidence the said public servants and other persons became or might become liable to suits, prosecutions or penalties under the Statute 49 Geo. III, Chapter 126, or the Indian Penal Code, or otherwise;

And whereas it is expedient to free the said public servants and other persons from all liability to civil or criminal proceedings in respect of any cause of action or charge arising out of any admission of an offence in any statements made or evidence given as aforesaid;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. No suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall be commenced or continued against any person in respect of any cause of action or charge arising out of any offence admitted by him in any statement made or evidence given before the said Commission, or in any enquiry undertaken by direction of the said Governor in Council preliminary to or in connection with the proceedings of the said Commission or in the course of the said investigation and trial.

No. 1527.

From C. J. Lyall, Esq., C.I.E., Offg. Secretary to the Government of India,

To the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

Simla, the 28th October 1889.

SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 16994 dated the 17th ultimo (with enclosures), submitting for consideration and orders (1) the cases of certain native officials incriminated by the disclosures made in connection with the enquiry into the charges against Mr. A. T. Crawford, and (2) proposals for the award of compensation to the officers who may be dismissed.

A copy of a petition from Yashwant Ballal També, one of the officials already dismissed on the recommendation of the Government of Bombay, is also submitted with the remark that although no effect can be given to the requests preferred in it as regards an official placed in the category of those who volunteered the payment of bribes to secure their own objects, the Government of India might deem it advisable, in case it thinks any other officials should be placed in that category, to obtain from such persons a written explanation.

2. In reply, I am to say that the Commissioners' report on each case with which they dealt, the evidence recorded in their Proceedings, your letter under acknowledgment and its enclosures, and, where Sir Raymond West has referred to individual cases, the observations on them contained in his minute, have been carefully perused by the Governor-General in Council. It appears to His Excellency in Council that the incriminated officials who need not be dismissed may be divided into two classes, namely, men who paid under actual and extreme pressure, and men whose payments were made for some personal benefits or to avoid some evils, but yet do not clearly come within the purview of the Statute 49 George III, Cap. 126.

As regards the suggestion that each man to be dismissed should have a further opportunity of offering a written explanation, I am to point out that every person who had paid a bribe, even if he has not offended against the Statute, has committed an offence under the Indian Penal Code. This being so, every such person has rendered himself liable to dismissal, and cannot claim to be reheard or formally tried as to the amount of pressure put upon him. Each official has either before the Commission or in the inquiries which preceded its meetings made statements inculcating himself. The statements made before the Commission have been formally weighed and examined by the Commissioners, and those which were made in the preliminary investigation by officers not called before the Commission may be accepted as true as against those who made them. If the circumstances disclosed in these statements appear in any cases to justify condonation, the offence can be condoned as an act of grace, but the Government of India is unable to countenance any further protracted inquiries in the matter. Should there be, however, any individual cases not yet decided in which the Bombay Government has become aware of any special extenuating circumstances, it is at liberty to bring them before the Government of India; and, on the other hand, it can withhold compensation from any of the men dismissed with regard to whom it can be affirmed that they actually spoke untruths before the Commission and thereby violated the condition on which they received guarantees of indemnity.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—These world-renowned remedies are confidently recommended to miners, navvies, and all who have to work underground, or where noxious atmospheres exist. The minute particles of coal or metal which permeate the air in such places tend to block up the lungs and air-tubes, giving rise to bronchitis, asthma and palpitation of the heart. In Holloway's remedies will be found a safe and easily used medicant, for the penetrating properties of the Ointment relieve the local congestions and the mildly laxative effects of the Pills cause the liver to act freely, and the breath to become unembarrassed. By early resort to these remedies many a serious illness may be averted, and soundness of health maintained.

3. With these preliminary remarks, I am to convey the orders of the Government of India regarding the case of each official mentioned in your letter under reply:—

(1) Lakshman Moreswar Deshpande—The Commissioners did not wholly negative the view that he paid money to Hanmantrao under threats of ruin. They did indeed think his fear of Hanmantrao's influence over Mr. Crawford somewhat exaggerated, but it seems impossible to doubt that Hanmant was really regarded as Mr. Crawford's agent and able to carry out his threats as to fulfil his promises. Deshpande swears that he paid most reluctantly after repeated demands and threats, and the Governor-General in Council accepts this view and the recommendation of the Bombay Government that he should be placed in the category of officials who paid only under extreme pressure in order to avoid unmerited degradation, or to ward off some other evil consequence. The Governor in Council should, however, endeavour to arrange that Deshpande is not retained in any specific office for the sake of which he seems to have paid money, and this should be regarded as an essential principle in the case of every one of the incriminated officials who is allowed to remain in the public service.

(2) Bhagwant Balwant Pradhan—The Commissioners did not believe his story, nor the evidence of his witness Atmarám. According to Hanmantrao's version Pradhan's payments were made in order to secure promotion. If Hanmantrao's statement was true, Pradhan did not tell the whole truth, but whether judged by his own story or that of Hanmantrao he comes within the first category. The Governor-General in Council cannot accept the doctrine that his conviction that "unless he followed the general example and paid a bribe his claims would not be recognized" is enough to make the case one of extortion and not of voluntary corruption. It is evident that no one would pay for what he can obtain without paying, and on his own statements Pradhan clearly purchased his office corruptly. He should be dismissed.

(3) Lakshman Chintaman Phadke—He appears to have first paid a sum of Rs. 500 to procure the cancellation of an order involving his transfer and reduction, for which there does not seem to have been any justification. His second payment was made with a view to obtain favourable consideration of a complaint made against him to the effect that he had withheld the pay of certain village officers in order to induce them to submit their accounts without delay. In this matter he clearly acted bona fide, though perhaps from an excess of zeal, to enforce punctuality, and the Government of India cannot regard the charge against him as serious or one for which his suspension for three months was not ample punishment. In Phadke's action in this case the Governor General in Council is inclined to think that he was influenced by the fear of similar treatment to that experienced by him in the first case, which was one of virtual extortion. In consideration of this circumstance, and as it is questionable whether the case comes under the Statute, His Excellency in Council accepts the Bombay Government's recommendation that he should be placed in the second category.

(4) Rámchandra Yashwant Chaulal—His case appears to have been clearly one of extortion. He engaged, however, to pay Rs. 1,500 if he could be confirmed as a mamlatdar, and he paid Rs. 500 on account; but Mr. Crawford was suspended a week later and he did not obtain what he had bargained for. He appears to be still a mamlatdar, and to avoid his holding a post for which he is legally disqualified, he should be transferred to some other appointment of equal emolument.

(5) Bákrishna Govind Sindekar—The payment made by him was in order to obtain cancellation of a transfer from the Nasik District, where his home is, and where he wished to remain. It is not clear that this is an offence against the Statute, and he may be excused from dismissal, but in the opinion of the Government of India he should be permanently debarred from serving in the Nasik District.

- (6) Devráo Kacheshwar Chincholikar---His case closely resembles Sindekar's, as he paid for cancelment of a transfer or to obtain a better station. He should not be allowed to remain at Shirpur, but he need not be dismissed.
- (7) Ganesh Pandurang Thakár---His case is considered by the Bombay Government as one of a forced loan, asked for by Mr. Crawford himself and paid through Hanmantrao. The Government of India is unable to accept this view, or to believe that Thakár ever expected to be repaid; but having regard to all the circumstances disclosed in Thakár's evidence, and to the high character which he appears to have borne, it will not insist on his absolute dismissal. It must, however, be clearly understood that under no circumstances is he to be made a Deputy Collector.
- (8) Wáman Dáji Nagarkar---This officer paid two sums of Rs. 500 each, the first to obtain a transfer from an unhealthy station, the second for promotion. He too calls these payments "advances," but he says he did not take any acknowledgment of them or make any arrangement for their repayment. At the same time he admits that he went to see Hanmantrao "in consequence of what he had heard." The Governor-General in Council sees no reason for removing him from the first category. He should be dismissed.
- (9) Vishnu Raghunáth Kelkar---His case appears to have been one of extortion. He made two payments in order to avoid "vexatious removals and possibly degradation." Although the Commissioners remark that he was not persecuted but well looked after, it is observed that he was transferred five times in six months. He may be placed in the second category.
- (10) Vithal Tikáji Uplap---He was implicated while employed as Karbhari in the Akalkot State in the payment of a bribe of Rs. 10,000 by the Chief of that State to Mr. Crawford, but denied the matter persistently till he found it could not be concealed, or thought it better policy to speak out. He did not receive any guarantee of indemnity. There does not appear to be any doubt about his guilt, as he sought Hanmantrao and brought him to the Raja, and settled that the latter should pay Rs. 10,000 for his powers, and, though it is asserted that he acted most reluctantly, he was promised and obtained extraordinary promotion on his own account and he himself paid the money on every occasion. His own promotion followed immediately on the first instalment, whereas the Raja's powers were not given till the payment was complete. He should be dismissed. As he received no guarantee, the question of granting him compensation does not arise.
- (11) and (12) Rámchandra Govind Mangrulkar and Vishnu Bápuji Soman---These officials having retired on pension, the only question in their case is the indemnity against suits, &c.; and as, under the Act as passed, the indemnity extends to every one implicated, no orders are called for in connection with them.
- (13) Moro Raghunáth Bivalkar---His case is one of clear payment for promotion, but there were extenuating circumstances which seem to justify his being placed in the second class. The Governor-General in Council is, however, of opinion that it would be well if he were given some other post equivalent to a mamlatdarship, or, if this cannot be arranged, at all events transferred to another Division.
- (14) Váshudev Rámchandra Patvardhan---Being ill, he agreed to pay for transfer to a cool climate (Poona). As he is no longer there, he may be left in office.
- (15) Sakhárám Chimnáji Joshi---His chief object in agreeing to pay was apparently a healthy station. His services may be retained.
- (16) Káshináth Vináyak Bháve---This officer distinctly bargained in person for office and confirmation, and he is rumoured to be corrupt. His "disappointments" were due to the rule that alternate promotions should go to graduates, and he can only mention one supersession. His services should be dispensed with.
- (17) Rámráo Hanmant Rájguru---Rájguru is not a mamlatdar but only Deputy Ch'tnis. He is a young man, and if he is to be believed, he had nothing to do with the bribery himself, and as he has not been promoted, and will not be, in consideration of the payment, he may be allowed to retain his old office.
- (18) Janárdan Eknáth Sahasrabudhe---He was suspended by the District Magistrate of Satara, and when the case came up to the Commissioner for disposal he made his first payment to Hanmantrao in order to procure a successful issue. The second payment was made upon his being threatened with removal to a bad climate. Allowance may be made for the apprehensions he was under and for his belief that Mr. Crawford was really corrupt, and as there is some doubt if a payment under such circumstances by a man already in office comes within the Statute, Sahasrabudhe may be retained in the public service.
3. As regards the question of the compensation to be allowed to the dismissed officials who received a guarantee, it is proposed in paragraph 27 of your letter under acknowledgment---
- (1) that they should be placed on a separate list (not as employes of Government), and that each should be granted for the present a monthly stipend equal to the pay of which he was before his dismissal in receipt;
- (2) that when in the natural course the turn of the dismissed official for promotion to a higher grade would arrive had he remained in the service, his stipend should be raised to the amount of salary payable to an officer in that grade;
- (3) that as soon as the officer would, had he continued in Government employ, be entitled to pension, he should be treated as if he had retired, his stipend being reduced accordingly;
- (4) that in the event of any of the officers referred to obtaining other public or quasi-public employment or a salaried post, the rules under which officers are lent to foreign service should, if this could be conveniently done, be applied by analogy to his case, and the payment or salary received by him in such employ should go in reduction or discontinuance of the Government stipend, but he should be allowed to retain his pensionary rights.
- I am to say that, with one exception, the proposals made in your letter appear to the Government of India to be unobjectionable. The grant of increments of stipend to the dismissed officials does not commend itself to the Governor-General in Council, who is of opinion that the requirements of the case will be fully met by the continuance to each officer of his existing salary. It must be remembered that he will perform no duties and that it will be open to him to add to his income by private work. His Excellency in Council is accordingly pleased to sanction the first of the above proposals, which has also received the approval of Her Majesty's Secretary of State. The third and fourth proposals are also sanctioned by the Government of India.

I have the honor to be,

SIR,

Your most obedient Servant,

C. J. LYALL,

THE BENAZIR FAIR—

RAMPUR STATE.

NOTICE.

The annual Benazir Fair at Rampur will be held this year on the bank of the Kosi river, by the Rampur and Moradabad road, from the 24th to 30th November. Trades-people of all kinds have been invited with their wares from different parts of the country, and, besides the usual assortments of imported and other miscellaneous goods, special care will be taken to have some of the notable indigenous manufactures of the Province, as of Fatehgarh, Manifpuri, Tilhar, Moradabad, and Rampur itself, amply represented. As an additional attraction, the Fair will this time combine an Agricultural and Cattle Show. The Director of Agriculture and Commerce has been asked to provide a set of farming implements, some of which will also be shown in working. The Cattle Show will include horses, ponies, mules, cows, bullocks, and buffaloes, and will offer a good opportunity to parties wishing to buy or sell such animals; the State itself being prepared to purchase a fair number to replace those that have become unserviceable. Fodder for cattle brought for show will be provided free of cost.

The tradesmen's stalls, and tents for visitors will form a well ordered camp, with due care for sanitation. For the amusement of visitors there will be a varied programme of wrestling, elephant and ram fights, military sports, &c., ending with the usual display of fireworks. European visitors will be very welcome, and will find every arrangement made for their comfort.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; and those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "Last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.

Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE GRAVE OF LOVE.

[From Mrs. Elizabeth Akers's The Silver Bridge, and other Poems.
Boston and New York.]

Come, let us make his pleasant grave
Upon this shady shore,
Where the sad river, wave on wave,
Shall grieve for evermore ;
Oh, long and sweet shall be his dream,
Lulled by its soothing flow—
Sigh softly, softly, shining stream,
Because he loved you so !

Fair blossom daughters of the May,
So lovely in your bloom,
Your ran' must stand aside to-day,
To give our darling room ;
These dew-drops which you shed in showers
Are loving tears, I know—
Bloom brightly, brightly, grateful flowers,
Because he loved you so !

Here all the warm, long summer days,
The yellow bees shall come,
Coquetting down the blossomy ways
With loud and ringing hum ;
While warbling in the sunny trees
The birds flit to and fro—
Sing sweetly, sweetly, birds and bees,
Because he loved you so !

Here with their soft and cautious tread,
The light feet of the shower
Shall walk about his grassy bed,
And cool the sultry hour ;
Yet may not wake to smiles again
The eyes which sleep below—
Fall lightly, lightly, pleasant rain,
Because he loved you so !

And when the summer's voice is dumb,
And lost her blooming grace,
When sighing autumn tempests come
To weep above the place,
Till all the forest boughs are thinned,
Their leafy pride laid low—
Grieve gently, gently, wailing wind,
Because he loved you so !

And when beneath the chilly light
That crowns the winter day,
The storms shall clothe his grave in white,
And shut the world away—

Above his sweet untroubled rest
Fall soft, caressing snow—
Drift tenderly across his breast,
Because he loved you so !

AUTUMN, 1885.*

Yes, Autumn comes again and finds me here,
Last year I thought I should be elsewhere
Than 'mid these fading falling leaves ; for there,
Beneath life's tree whose leaves are never sere
But green throughout the great eternal year
I thought to lie, and breathe the tranquil air,
And see my boy who, being for earth too fair,
Is fairer still in that celestial sphere.

Perchance for me his little heart did yearn ;
Haply to meet me at the golden gate
He oft would wander, stand awhile, and turn Away to cry " My father's fingers lace
Content thee, little one ; my heart doth burn
For thee as thine for me, but God says " Wait ! "

OUR DREAM.*

Perchance to men it may not be given
To know things real from things that seem ;
If, living on earth, we dream of heaven,
Why, then, I hold it better to dream.

Let us dream on 'mid the splendid shadows
That make existence a gladsome thing,
The dim deep woods and the flowery meadows
Where fairies frolic and skylarks sing ;

Where bright shapes linger, and angel faces
Glow in the gleam of a visioned day,
And o'er the uplands on grassy spaces
Fond lovers wander, fair children play.

Let us dream still, then, nor strive to sever
Things that are real from things that seem,
Let us slumber on for ever and ever
And know no waking from life's glad dream.

*Verses of a Prose Writer. By James Ashcroft Noble. (D. Douglas, Edinburgh.)

Holloway's Pills.—Indigestion.—How much thought has been bestowed, and what voluminous treatises have been written upon this universal and distressing disease, which is with certainty and safety dispelled without fear of relapse by a course of this purifying, soothing and tonic medicine ! It acts directly on the stomach, liver and bowels—then indirectly, though no less effectively, on the brain, nerves, vessels, and glands, introducing such order throughout the entire system that harmony dwells between each organ and its functions. Dyspepsia need no longer be the bugbear of the public, since Holloway's Pills are fully competent to subdue the most chronic and distressing cases of impaired digestion, and to restore the miserable sufferer to health, strength, and cheerfulness.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

GENERAL Bradford, in charge of Prince Albert Victor in India, has, before he has delivered back his royal charge, been honored with the appointment of A.-D.-C. to the Queen. That may also serve as an additional incentive to Indian loyalty in the reception of the royal visitor.

MR. Bradlaugh—we are relieved to learn—is better again. He has permission of the doctors to take drives and to visit India.

HERE is a telegraphic puzzle from Lushai Land which amuses the Pioneer :—

"Send also six Babus, male, about seven feet long and 6 inches round. None procurable here."

That "specimen of telegraphic literature," as our contemporary calls it, does not at any rate proceed from the unspeakable Baboo. It seems to disclose a desperate situation at camp. No doubt, they made a great mistake by starting without a proper complement of so needful an article. The Baboos who gave the Empire to Great Britain cannot yet be dispensed with. Jack Sepoy and Jack Baboo are the two pillars of State to whom the British are strangely ungrateful. Nevertheless, half a dozen Baboo giants are too much of a good thing for such a trumpery business as the Lushai affair. A scarecrow or two from Chittagong would suffice.

DELAWARE seems the most Liberal if not the least barbarous of the United States. It lashes without compunction brutes guilty of ill usage to women or children. The discipline is effective—so far at least that no one is ever brought up for a second offence. Not that they are charmed into chivalry by the cat, but the victims of the infliction immediately leave the State—"for good." By this style of administration, the State is enabled to dispense with a prison.

THE Punjab University has secured a new privilege to the Viceroy and Governor-General of India. Lord Dufferin was honored with the Degree of Doctor of Literature of that University. Lord Lansdowne is the Oriental Bait.

MAHARANI SURNOMOYEE, of Cossimbazar—God bless her and her worthy counsellors!—has come to the rescue of the Sanskrit College, Calcutta. She has agreed to pay annually, for five years, Rs. 600 for a number of free studentships.

FORT William is to be sewered. Mr. G. W. Winckler, A.M.I.C.E., late of the Public Works Department, lately visited the place on behalf of Messrs. Shone and Ault, to draw up a project. We hope the Calcutta Drainage system will not be repeated. It is time to devise an inodorous and innocuous scheme.

THEY are starting a company at Bombay for the manufacture of boilers, engines and economisers. This is a step in progress. Here, in Bengal, our Zemindar-Engineer Mr. B. Pal Chowdry is already supplying brass things to the railways and others.

GOVERNMENT has offered a reward of Rs. 500 for the discovery of the murderer of one Shaik Selim, of Gouripore, two miles distant from the Dum Dum Cantonment, and free pardon to the accomplice, for giving up the murderer. The culprit is said to be a European soldier who has given the slip to the Police.

ON the retirement of the Duke of Connaught, Major-General Sir George Greaves comes to the Bombay Command.

MR. E. J. SINKINSON, Secretary to the Government of India in the Department of Finance and Commerce, goes to Burma on private affairs, on a leave of about six weeks from the 8th December next, rejoining on the 20th January.

THE Maharaja of Vizianagram has gone for a stay of two months at Madras, where he arrived on the 13th instant.

ONE Bahadr Rai Kedarnath Chatterjee has been succeeded by another Bahadr Rai Abinash Chandra Banerjee in the chair of the Balli Municipality. These two "braves" between them have long ruled the roast.

THREE more Honorary Magistrates for the Presidency town of Calcutta—Moulvie Mahomed, Mr. R. Y. Remfry and Mr. E. O. Moses. The old groove again! Now that the List is being cleared of the dead, the absent and the absents, we should like some fresh blood to be introduced. Why is the Department of Science and Education, for instance, so systematically neglected to hug to the bosom only tuft hunters? Some of the brightest men in the country, native and European, belong to it. It is invidious to give names, but one may be hazarded. Professor Wood-Mason, a good classic and a great man of science, who had originally studied for the bar, who as scientific traveller and navigator has come in contact with the masses, and as Superintendent of the Indian Museum has departmentally to enquire into many complaints, including theft cases, would be an acquisition to any honorary bench in any country.

UNDER a new ruling, taking effect from the next financial year, a license for the sale of opium or of an intoxicating drug or of poppy-heads is ordinarily liable to cancellation with forfeiture of the sum advanced, unless the shop be opened within the 15th April. The licensee nevertheless continues liable for the license fee for the month. The Collector is also given the power to cancel for any cause specified in it, the license or permit granted by him to a druggist, entailing the loss of the fee paid or payable for the month.

IN September last, there were from Calcutta 2,215 emigrants to the Colonies: 1,064 to Demerara, 533 to Trinidad and 618 to Mauritius.

THE Indian Daily News calls the members of the Calcutta Corporation Municipal Registrars—evidently as registerers of the decrees of the Chairman or the General Committee. This is no reproach to the general body of Commissioners. The tendency of modern municipal legislation has been to ignore the Commissioners as a body leaving to the General Committee of 18 Commissioners and the Chairman the entire business of the Corporation. The Chairman by himself is empowered to "exercise all the powers vested by the Act in the Commissioners. Provided that he shall not exercise any power which by the Act is directed to be exercised only by the Commissioners in meeting. Nor shall he act in opposition to, or in contravention of, any orders passed by the Commissioners at a meeting; and if any order passed by him under the authority vested in the Commissioners is brought before a meeting of the Commissioners and modified or disapproved of by them, the Chairman shall, as far as possible, modify or cancel such order so as to bring it into conformity with the order of the Commissioners in meeting." Again, "when the Chairman and the majority of the General Committee are in accord, and inconvenience is likely to result from delay, it shall not be necessary before action is taken to wait for the confirmation of the Commissioners in meeting, but if the Commissioners in meeting do not confirm the action of the General Committee, such steps shall be taken to carry out the orders of the Commissioners as may still be practicable." At the same time, "it is competent to the General Committee—which is the Budget and Finance Committee of the Corporation—to deal with all matters which "may be expressly referred to it by the Corporation, or as may not be referred to any other standing or Special Committee."

THE Governor-General in Council has sanctioned the separation of the Calcutta Naval Artillery Volunteers from the Volunteer land forces of India, and the conversion of the Battery into a Naval corps, to be designated the Calcutta Naval Volunteers under the orders of the General Officer Commanding the Presidency District.

ITALY has publicly announced her assumption of Protectorate over the coast northward of Vismayu, two and-a-half degrees north.

THE last number of the Edinburgh Review publishes the following anecdote in illustration of the "internal economy" of Russia :—

"A very eminent German diplomatist, who represented his Government at St. Petersburg during the reign of the late Emperor, received one day a scrap of paper written by a man who said he was a German, and that, without a trial or accusation of any kind, he had been put into a gang of convicts, and was being marched to Siberia. The Minister went to the Imperial Foreign Office, and begged that inquiry might be made into the truth of the story, which was promised, but nothing came of it, though he continued to press his demand. One day, happening to meet the Emperor, he seized the opportunity of telling the story. The Emperor readily promised that inquiry should be made, and the wrath of the Imperial Chancellerie was 'intense'; but at last the truth came out. It proved that a prisoner had escaped from a convoy bound to Siberia, which consequently arrived at a small town in the interior one short of its proper number, and the officer in charge, knowing that he would be in a scrape if he did not deliver his proper tally, adopted the simple expedient of laying hold of some one else to take the place of the missing man. Unfortunately for him, the substitute happened to be a German. The man was, of course, at once released, though of this it may well be believed that he would not have had the slightest chance if he had happened to be a Russian."

UNDER the head of Bengal, we read in a Mysore paper the following remarkable paragraph, apparently taken from one of our contemporaries on this side :—

"A rising young artist.—We are glad to hear that Baboo [we won't advertise him gratis], about whose talents we had the pleasure of speaking some time ago, has just been complimented by H. E. the Viceroy on his ability as a painter from photographs. The painting of the Viceroy, executed by this young artist is a good likeness, and speaks highly of his skill. It is always a pleasing duty to us to encourage Indian art, and we congratulate Baboo—on his success as an artist."

Our Bengal journalists are not famous for appreciation or knowledge of art. Who, then, among them, has been making this extraordinary discovery of a new painter, we wonder? Is it our new and not unpromising contemporary which, out-Reising Reis and Rayyet, has commenced a "Newspaper and Review of Politics, Literature, Society"—"and Art"?

We, for our part, though always on the qui vive for the least symptoms of art culture or artistic talent among our countrymen, have not yet come upon the new genius. A genius he must be who has been complimented by such a hereditary connaissanceur and patron as the Viceroy. We should like to see a true copy of the viceregal autograph. If this is the artist who exhibited a portrait in oil of Lord Dufferin at the Town Hall on the occasion of the Mahomedan Literary Society's braverson last year, he must have made a prodigious leap towards perfection in a trice.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Calcutta Corporation, to begin with, has voted Rs. 2,000 towards the reception in the metropolis of the Prince now touring in India. That sum is intended to meet the cost of an illuminated address and the casket to be presented. Public bodies and persons will be invited to concert other measures for entertaining the Prince while in Calcutta. It was at first proposed to invite him to visit the Pulta Water Works—the first of its kind in India and perfectly Indian in character, and a vote for Rs. 10,000 was asked for. But the Commissioners in meeting thought differently. One legal Commissioner pointed out that, though belonging to the Calcutta Corporation, the Pulta Water Works were situate beyond the limits of municipal Calcutta, and the law limited any expenditure for entertainments to Calcutta. By the present programme, the Prince is due here after his visit to Burma, on Friday the 3rd January in the afternoon, and will remain till Monday the 13th when he leaves by the mail train for Benares.

FOR the Hathras Junction accident, resulting in the death of 18 persons and injury to 39, the pointsman Juggunnath has been sentenced, by the Joint-Magistrate Mr. Forbes of Aligarh, to three months' simple imprisonment. The good Magistrate viewed the omission as the act "more of the weakness of human nature than active negligence." It was not "deliberate and active negligence." The Indian Daily News takes Mr. Forbes to task for so leniently disposing of the case. If pointsmen cannot be more heroic, our contemporary advises "all sufferers by the accidents which negligence entails to sue the Company responsible for swinging damages."

THE Punjab supplies the newest matrimonial sensation. Three persons—Ismail, Araf and Amir—each claimed one Khatun to be his legally wedded wife. The first claim was laid by Ismail in the Court of the Magistrate of Jhang, who was applied to to order restitution of conjugal rights. Araf applied at Mooltan, and the two suits were heard together by the Jhang Magistrate. The woman denied that she was the wife of Ismail accepting Araf as his lawful husband. The Magistrate accordingly rejected Ismail's suit and gave Khatun to Araf. A third claimant now appeared in Amir, who accused both Ismail and Araf of imposition upon the Court and of conspiracy to deprive him of his own—his lawful prize, the same Mussamut Khatun. While this complaint was maturing for a hearing, Ismail took up his grievance to the District Court and ultimately to the Chief Court, which last called for fresh report. Sir Meredyth Plowden has now decided that neither Ismail nor Arif has any claim to Khatun to whom they were never married. He also holds that the marriage contracts and registers are forgeries. He has further ordered the confiscation of the documents and prosecution of Ismail and Araf for forgery and perjury, and of the two mullas for making false entries and giving false evidence. What of the suit of Amir? Is poor Khatun to have none left out of her multitude of husbands?

A LAWYER-political may sound an anomaly. But it is just the thing. We do not mean a mere Nisi Prius man able to bamboozle juries into verdicts and heavy damages in his favour, but an educated man grounded in the principles of jurisprudence and of English and Indian law. The late lamented Evans Bell once read a paper before the East India Association in which he traced much of the wrong-doing of the Residencies—the frequent pragmatical interference of British agents accredited to native princes with the internal administration of native states—to the gross ignorance of international law prevailing in the Corps Diplomatique. Many doubtless regarded the opinion as a paradox, but no one, we are persuaded, can candidly study the subject without coming to the same conclusion. We for one, at any rate, have always been of the same view. Accordingly, we hailed the appointment of a practised administrator who had served as Secretary to the Legislative Council to the head of the important Residency of Hyderabad. As a good man as well as able officer, Mr. Fitzpatrick went and won all hearts. His opportunity for proving his metal as a judge was not long in coming. A libel case furnished the occasion. So far as we can see from the summary in the Pioneer, the judgment is worthy of any High Court bench. The libel

"complained of was published at Karachi, at the instance of a person residing in the Residency Bazaars, through a letter posted in the Hyderabad city. The law in force in the three different places being substantially the same, the main question involved was whether under the Criminal Procedure Code as extended to the Residency Bazaars the accused could be tried by a forum whose territorial jurisdiction does not extend beyond a few acres of land forming the Residency for a crime committed outside. It was contended for the prosecution that the Criminal Procedure Code being in force in both Sind and the Residency Bazaars the venue might lie in either locality. There is, however, says the Resident, a fallacy in this argument. No Act of the Legislative Council could as such be extended by its own vigour or made extendable as territorial law to places beyond the line of the Residency Bazaars. When the Governor General in Council in his executive capacity spoke of extending the Act of the Indian Legislature to places beyond the line this expression, though admissible as an ordinary colloquial one, was not strictly correct. What he does is not to extend the Act, but to even enact another law similar for the place in question. It is just as if the legislative authority in Ceylon or Chandernagore were to enact that the provisions of our Code should be applied to the country under their control. Thus Karachi and the Residency Bazaars are not by reason of the so-called extension of the Criminal Code brought under one law or system of jurisdiction."

The question of territorial jurisdiction has cropped up in other parts of India. Whatever may be thought of the Resident of Hyderabad's conclusion, there can be but one opinion of the perfect independence and fairness and grasp of principle shown in the judgment. Such a Resident is a possession to be prized. Mr. Fitzpatrick's influence on the administration of Hyderabad and of Berar cannot but be improving in all directions.

WE take the following Notes from the Calcutta column of the Indian Planter's Gazette.—

"There is every probability of the Honourable Mr. Justice Wilson replacing the Honourable Mr. Justice Norris on the Original Side of the High Court, but it is not yet an assured fact as our contemporaries believe.

In the ordinary course of events, the present Judge has two years more to run in his place, and though the lists of the various other Benches has been made up, and the Honourable Mr. Justice Norris's name is coupled with that of the Chief Justice, no name has been assigned to the Original Side.

Should the Honourable Mr. Justice Norris vacate the Original Bench, the native section of the community will rejoice muchly, for this learned judge has too much of the honest straightforward 'facts-is-facts' Englishman in his character to please their sensitive disappreciation of the strict rules of veracity.

Perhaps his successor will make greater allowances for the national failure."

And this from a parvenu nation of pedlars and hucksters among whom adulteration has been raised to a science and falsehood to a fine art, to the most ancient race who have civilised the world, who did not know what chicane, guile or evasion was until the stranger came and set up shop and school on their shores, whose literature and annals are full of the most sublime lessons of fidelity, whose every-day life at this moment, even in this degenerate age, under abnormal conditions, exhibits the most heroic examples of honour and truth!

Whatever the case with Judge Norris, we regret we do not find any trace of the "facts-is-facts" Englishman in the Gazette's Calcutta Gup-pist. Instead, we discern the Baboophobist and no mistake.

THE fact of facts is, that the retirement of Mr. Justice Norris from the Original Bench is a relief to all Old Post Office Street. During his incumbency, the file was quickly cleared and institutions were few. Such suitors as were still tempted, had cheap disposal of their cases, and the disposer made no secret of it. Whatever the demeanour of the Judge on the Bench, we had for once the right man in the right place. Both Court and Judge were original.

WE learn by telegram that on Sunday the 17th November, a large meeting of Mahomedan noblemen and gentlemen was held at the Yunani Medical School, Delhi, to welcome Nawab Abdool Lutef, one of the patrons of the institution, who is now touring in the Upper Provinces. The committee of the school, headed by the President Sayed Hadi Hussain Khan Bahadur, Honorary Assistant Commissioner, formerly Minister of Jaura, and Prince Mirza Suraiyi Jah Bahadur, head of the Imperial Family of Delhi, Nawab Saidaddin Ahmed Khan, of the Nawabate of Loharu, Shamsululema Munshi Zukaullah Khan Bahadur, and others presented the Nawab with an elaborate address couched in most complimentary terms for the genuine test he had always taken in the cause of Yunani Medicine and for his lifelong labours in promoting Mahomedan education and general improvement. The Nawab, in returning his cordial thanks for the great and unexpected honor done to him by the leaders of Delhi society, appears to have made a notable speech. He detained the meeting for a couple of hours, dwelling on the marvels of Greco-Arab Medicine, and benefits which are sure to be derived from such a school by those who resorted to the Yunani system of medical treatment, owing to religious and social prejudices, in preference to other systems of medicine. In conclusion, the Nawab exhorted his countrymen to come forward and do their best to assist this noble institution which had been founded by Hakim Abdul Majid Khan, (son of the famous Hakeem Mahmood Khan,) who deserved the most grateful thanks of the native community.

It may be pleasant for a retired gentleman of fortune to write M. P. after his name. A man of fortune may even regard the distinction not dearly purchased at an expenditure of half a lac of Rupees. But sometimes there are liabilities of a more serious character. A candidate may be called on to pay a cost more dear in every sense—touching his very person. Certain constituencies are more rowdy than others, and some rivals are not very scrupulous. The muscular politics of boroughs like Kidderminster are not likely to suit the taste of gouty old grocers or stout old aldermen who may aspire to the dignity of a seat in the House as the next best thing to a baronetcy. Such respectable politicians must view with anxiety the symptoms of growing vulgarity in the war of and for candidates. Formerly, the worst projectiles employed on such occasions were rotten oranges or hen's eggs. Now actual stones are coming into fashion, even in Counties.

On the 25th October, Mr. Arthur Strauss, the Liberal Unionist candidate for Mr. Conybeare's seat for the mining division of Cornwall, attended a meeting of the electors at the village of Troon, whom he addressed. At the conclusion of his speech, he was examined on his views. The leader of the Conybeare party in particular put questions to the candidate. Others of the free and independent did not understand this sort of thing. Impatient of the palaver, they applied a more summary method of testing the capacity of the candidate's head and heart. They made free use of their hands, letting fly stones at him. While he was engaged answering their questions, he was assailed by these dangerous missiles in showers. Several of these just missing their aim smashed the windows behind. One weighing two pounds however violently hit him on the head. Mr. Strauss seems to be unusually strong-headed and steady of heart. He shamed the stone shot. During the hail of stones, he went on smilingly bowing to this side and that like a prima donna amid a shower of bouquets, through the catechism and the rest of it. A strong body of friends brought him away whole.

IN India, indignation at failure of justice, occasionally descends to slippers and slipping of the Judge by an infuriated suitor. In a free country, where the people are not disarmed by law, the castigation takes a different shape—with powder and shot. It is telegraphed from London that one Arnemann, a German, dissatisfied with the finding of County Court Judge Bristowe at Nottingham, shot him in the back—fatally, it is feared.

MR. JUSTICE Fitz James Stephen—the philosophical defender of despotism and bad faith and of bullying from the criminal bench—is evidently above care for the opinion of the world. His dispensation of patronage is worthy of the Briton who poochpooched Her Majesty's Proclamation to India of 1858 as waste paper. A big brawny animal with a strong capacious head, an eye for the main chance and a stomach for any amount of creature comforts, a regular John Bull, endowed with more than the usual philoprogenitiveness of the race, he seems to take advantage of every opportunity of providing for the young Bulls of the family. The other day, he made one of his hopefuls—or perhaps hopeleses—Clerk on the South Wales Circuit Assize. Not content with this, he has now given the office of Clerk of Assize on the Northern Circuit to his eldest boy.

That sort of family appropriation of public patronage is by no means unexampled in Great Britain. The Stephens are only following in the footsteps of the House of Bethel. Nor are the dignitaries of the Law alone in this. The Church is not more self-sacrificing. The London Daily News, noticing the last appointment, slyly remarks that Mr. Justice Stephen

"evidently acts on the principle frankly and at the same time ingeniously avowed by Bishop Davies, of Peterborough, who exclaimed, 'Why should an excellent young man be prevented from receiving a good living which happens to be in my gift merely because he is my son-in-law?'"

THE sympathy for Mrs. Maybrick yet lives. The extreme sentence of law on her has been modified to one of penal servitude for life. Her children have been taken in in other families, and now a Committee have been formed bearing her name which has resolved to apply for a writ of Habeas Corpus, on the ground that the sentence of penal servitude for life is illegal and ultra vires.

THE recent Labor strikes in London have brought out Capital. Reuter announces the gift by Sir Edward Guinness—which may well stagger an Indian philanthropist—of a quarter of a million sterling for the erection of dwellings for the labouring poor. Of this sum, two hundred thousand pounds are to be appropriated in London and fifty thousand in Dublin.

IT is an indubitable proof of the inefficiency and vanity of Orthodox Medicine that the more intelligent practitioners are on tip-toe watching for the announcement of discoveries and improvements. When they do come upon any promising novelty, they are far too ready to introduce it, to think of putting it to a preliminary test, or even examining its credentials. With famine eagerness they seize upon it to cover the deficiencies of their system or the disappointments of their own practice. They make the most, and, of course, not the wisest, use of it. It was thus that when the virtues of mercury—an old Eastern specific—became known to Europe, whole nations were poisoned with it. Thus was bark abused. Thus Mesmerism. Thus when Professor Simpson, pursuing a hint of our own townsman the late Mr. Waldie's, successfully employed chloroform in accoucheuring, how many were the accidents upon its administration in other hands! Strychnine and hydrate of chloral number their martyrs by hundreds at the hands of the doctors. Similarly, slain by the new drugs Antifebrin and Antipyrin, hecatombs have been offered in the well-meaning but ignorant recklessness of a pretentious scientific imbecility. The most notable latest discovery in medicine is Cocaine, and it is repeating history with scrupulous fidelity. It was heralded with the usual trumpet peals of applause. Here at last was the genuine saviour of the flesh—the rescuer from all its accumulated load of ills, hereditary and acquired. All the doctors rushed to arm themselves with it to conquer the domain of sickness. There was a rage. The excitement spread to even the lay world. Patients themselves proposed it as they were wont to press for chloral or calomel. The stir indeed is far from over. Meanwhile, the doctors have begun to fight shy of their darling. Facts, repeated in various directions, leave no room for concealment. Ugly accidents, which cannot be gainsaid or explained away, are opening their eyes. They still persist in calling it a valuable medicine, but they now add that it is an exceedingly dangerous drug. The first warning, we believe, came from a record of some forty cases published by Dr. Mattison about a couple of years back, in which cocaine was medicinally administered. Several of these patients died from the effects of the drug, and in the rest of them poisonous symptoms were developed, though not to fatal severity. We are afraid many of those who recovered were permanently injured in health. In a French professional journal—the Archives de Médecine—Mr. Dufournier has now given the results of a patient inquiry into the subject. It is a startling disclosure.

"Among the phenomena characterizing this form of poisoning one observed in a patient of Dr. E. Bradley is worthy of special mention. This patient was taken with facial paralysis, from which he did not recover for six months. Other symptoms are hallucinations, great excitement, and cerebral agitations; and finally, Dr. Leslie Callaghan in one case saw the entire body covered by a scarlatiniform rash."

The mildest form of the poisoning, which he described as follows, is bad enough:—

"Dr. Szunman, wishing to remove a large wart situated at the base of the thumb of a young girl of twenty, injected under the skin, close to the wart, one cubic centimetre of a one-in-ten solution of cocaine. The patient felt no pain, but as the little wound was being sewed together she suddenly lost her colour and fainted; her pulse became weak and slow and her hands and feet stiffened. Water was dashed in her face, and she recovered consciousness, but she did not regain at once her sense of feeling, as she kept asking where her hands were. By this time the stiffening has extended to the whole of her person; but these alarming symptoms quieted down little by little, and by half an hour's time they all came to a happy end. This case represents the mildest form of poisoning by cocaine. Between this form and the cases in which death ensued come in a series of severer forms in which the alarming symptoms lasted from three hours to five or six days."

That such a drug, in certain doses and in particular subjects, must have a homicidal effect, goes without saying. And so it is. We read:—

"Dr. Baratoux mentions the case of a druggist, who under the impression that he was attacked by diphtheria, sprayed his throat with a solution of cocaine; for seven or eight hours he passed from one syncope to another, until finally succumbed. Dr. Abadie reports another case—a woman of seventy-one. She received a hypodermic injection of four centigrammes of cocaine in her lower eyelid, before undergoing a trivial operation in that region. At the close of the operation she fainted, and her face became purple as in asphyxia. In spite of the fact that artificial respiration was performed, and that hypodermic injections of ether and caffeine were made, and though the latter seemed for a moment to revive her, this unfortunate woman died five hours afterwards."

So much for the vaunted cocaine and for Therapeutic Progress! It is to be hoped that medical men would be more cautious in accepting on trust new and powerful medicines. The public, at any rate, should be on their guard against being experimented upon.

IN the Jhansi references, the Full wisdom of the High Court, N. W. P., has declared in favor of the Government. It declares that the Governor-General in Council had jurisdiction to pass Act XXII of 1886, in spite of section 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, (24 and 25 Vic., c. 67,) restricting the Governor-General to the then existing territories, in the words of the law "now under the dominion of Her Majesty." It was plain, that if the section were allowed to have an independent existence, no Indian legislation could be made for after acquisitions, and the Act of 1886 would be inoperative. But the Court is inclined to think that, by subsequent legislation, Parliament has widened the scope of Section 22, giving it ampler verge than suggested by the actual words, and the Governor-General in Council has been otherwise empowered to legislate for after acquisitions. In 1864, a portion of the district of Darjeeling was annexed to Her Majesty's dominions, and Parliament must be presumed to be aware of the fact when, in 1865, it enacted 28 and 29 Vic., c. 17, which, purporting to recite Section 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, omitted the word "now," thereby, it is argued, extending the legislating power of the Governor-General to territories past, present and future. 32 and 33 Vic., c. 98 of 1869 recites in the preamble that "whereas doubts have arisen as to the extent of the power of the Governor-General of India in Council to make laws binding upon native Indian subjects beyond the Indian territories under the dominions of Her Majesty, and whereas it is expedient that better provision should be made in other respects for the exercise of the powers of the Governor-General in Council, &c." From this recital doubting the absence of power over subjects beyond the Indian territories, the Court presumes the non-existence of doubt as regards the subjects of the Crown within the Indian territories, no matter when such territories had been acquired. It is a far-fetched inference, we are afraid. Anyhow, it is a bad case when a Judge has to argue down a distinct law by recourse to the preamble of a later enactment which does not distinctly annul the older law. The chief reason which swayed the judgment of the Court seems to be that

"between the 1st August 1861 and the 11th August 1869 not only had territories in India been acquired but legislation by the Governor-General in Council for such territories had taken place. In 1864 part of the district of Darjeeling had been acquired by conquest, and on the 8th March 1867 Act XIX. of 1867, which applied to the district of Darjeeling, including the part of that district which had been acquired by conquest in 1864, was passed by the Governor-General in Council. In 1866 Mauza Kheria had been ceded to the British Government by the Maharana of Dholepur, and on the 10th September 1868 Act XXII. of 1868, which related amongst other things to the administration of civil and criminal justice in Mauza Kheria, was passed by the Governor-General in Council. In 1865 the Bhutan Duars were acquired by conquest and cession, and on the 23rd July 1869 Act XVI. of 1869, relating to that territory, was passed by the Governor-General in Council."

The Court is satisfied of the legality of the several Indian Acts named because "it was obligatory by statute to lay before both Houses of Parliament copies of all Laws and regulations made by the Governor-General in Council. Consequently prior to the passing by the Imperial Parliament of the 32 and 33 Vic., c. 98, it must be assumed that that obligation had been complied with, at least so far as Act XIX. of 1867 and Act XXII. of 1868 were concerned."

If the laws were by themselves ultra vires, mere reporting of them to the Imperial Parliament does not validate them. The last argument is that

"to hold that the Governor-General in Council has not power to legislate except in respect of Indian territories which were on the 1st August 1861 under the dominion of Her Majesty would lead to anomalous results which the Imperial Legislature must have foreseen and could not have intended."

The question is whether Parliament has provided against the contingency.

We are not convinced of the cogency of this judgment whatever the policy of it. If it was a deliberate act of Parliament—and there is no reason to doubt that it was not—to limit the powers of the Governor-General to existing territories, the limit must be specifically withdrawn for the Governor-General to lay claim to unlimited acquisition and legislation.

CAPTAIN Hearsey, in his pursuit of justice, has fared no better on the other than on this side the Hooghly. Both the Calcutta and Howrah Courts would not go into the merits of the case. Both threw out the suit on technical grounds. We give below Mr. Currie, the Howrah Magistrate's view of the prosecution:—

"This is a case of defamation brought by A. W. Hearsey against G. M. Chesney as Editor and W. J. Dare, as Printer, of the Pioneer paper, in the issue of which on the 26th January appeared an article in which complainant was spoken of in terms complained of as defamatory. This paper, being posted to and received at the Mechanics' Institute in Howrah, may be taken to have been published here. The accused are admittedly Editor and Printer of the Pioneer paper. They were prosecuted on account of this same article by the same complainant in Calcutta on account of publication there, some three or four months ago. The case against Mr. Chesney was committed by the Presidency Magistrate to the Sessions, but that against Mr. Dare was withdrawn from the Presidency Magistrate's Court, by prosecutor's Counsel after consultation with prosecutor and his attorney. This is proved here by evidence of the prosecutor's evidence, and therefore the case against Mr. Dare here must fail. The withdrawal was not on any special ground, but a simple withdrawal of the case before it actually came to trial, and therefore acted as an acquittal under Section 345 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I can hardly say I acquit Mr. Dare, though a charge was drawn up against him, as he has really been acquitted before, and therefore the proceedings here against him fail as nul ab initio.

Mr. Chesney was in the former trial acquitted at the High Court Sessions by a jury. I had read no reports of the case, but had vaguely heard of it, and understood that the case failed for want of proof of publication in Calcutta, and that those proceedings, therefore, would not bar proceedings elsewhere. However that may be, and assuming for the moment that publication of the article complained of in Howrah is proved, the first consideration is whether Mr. Chesney is connected with the publication. It is urged for the accused that the evidence of the prosecution only shows that Mr. Chesney was Editor of the Pioneer paper, and that, in the ordinary course of business, he passed all articles. There is nothing to show that he ever saw this particular article, or passed it; and that therefore he cannot be held liable, criminally, for it, or its consequences. I think this contention is sound. It is true that Mr. Chesney in the Presidency Magistrate's Court said that he accepted responsibility for the article, but I doubt whether a man can accept criminal responsibility in face of a denial of commission of the offence, and under the decision cited (Regina vs. Ramsay and Foote and Regina vs. Bradlaugh) the accused's actual knowledge and complicity in publication must be proved. Now this has not been done, and therefore Mr. Chesney must be acquitted. For the prosecutor it is urged that such a rule was made under a Special Act in England, which Act does not apply here; but, as the Act was to enunciate a general principle of law, it cannot but be held to apply here. Again it is urged that great hardship would result from such a rule on account of the excessive difficulty of proving who, in a newspaper office, was responsible for, and cognizant of, a particular defamatory article. Whatever may be thought of such a plea in general, it cannot apply in the present case, as complainant has produced evidence as to the actual writer of the article; as therefore there is nothing directly connecting accused with the matter complained of as defamatory, the Court under Section 258 of the Criminal Procedure Code acquits Mr. G. M. Chesney of the charge against him under Section 500 of the Indian Penal Code.

Will Captain Hearsay test in the High Court the law laid down by Mr. Currie? We are not sure that enough evidence was adduced to connect Mr. Chesney with the publication in Howrah. The Magistrate, however, is silent on the charges of abetment which were wanting in the Calcutta prosecution. If the High Court support the view taken by Mr. Currie, Mr. Chesney will have done a real service to journalism in this country. The only question is, whether what is sauce for the goose will be sauce for the gander.

A NOTABLE social function in native society in Calcutta took place yesterday, in connection with the death of the mother of one of our High Court Judges—the last not the least. Baboo Gurudas Banerjee had fallen so ill from exposure and strain in attendance upon his mother, that he was unable to perform the obsequial ceremony of the 10th day. He took the first opportunity after his recovery of performing it on Wednesday on the bank of the Holy River. Yesterday was the Day of Assembly, and of the consecration of the Bull and of Gifts for the soul of the deceased. The weather which had been foul and rainy from the previous week was arrested for the day—in deference, as Hindus believe, to the pious old Brahmani gone to her rest—or else there would have been a mess of the whole thing, so far at least as the sight or the comfort on all sides were concerned. It is needless to say that everybody attended on whom—according to our beautiful mourning custom—Baboo Banerjee had waited. The articles consecrated were all substantial. If the silver vessels were small, they will be given away whole. The process of distribution by cutting to which more massive plate is subjected, is shabby and, perhaps, unscriptural. One gift was much to our taste—the Vedas published by Pandit Satyabrata Samasrami, of which we remarked several sets. This was an improvement. The srudha is as old as the Vedas, and nothing can be a more appropriate offering to Brahmans and Pandits on such an occasion. We hope the example will be followed. The Veda was chanted on the occasion by the same Pandit. Another point that we noticed with great pleasure was in connection with the consecration of the enfranchised Bull. The stamping with red-hot iron is a cruel business. In this case, it was a nominal operation.

THE weather is unseasonal. Since Thursday week, the sky is over-cast, and it is drizzling and raining. The days are dull and the nights are cheerless. Only yesterday, the sky was a little clear, but the sun did not warm. The Bay has not been quiet. Storm signal "No. 3" was hoisted on the 20th, and passenger vessels were not allowed to venture out.

THERE has been a quiet and bloodless revolution in Brazil. Monarchy has been abolished; the empire has been proclaimed a Republic; and Dom Pedro and his family have been packed off to Europe.

THE example of the working men has infected the very boys. There is mutiny in the Schools and Colleges. A telegram of yesterday reports a disturbance at Glasgow University on the same day. The students, resenting their exclusion from the conferment of degrees, hustled the Professors and the Principal, smashed the panels of doors, and drenched the Professors who were inside with buckets of water.

AFTER being flted by the Nizam, Prince Victor had been to Madras where the Governor did him the exceptional honor of driving him through the Black town. The Prince is to-day at Mysore.

THE Viceroy is nearing the end of his tour. He left Quetta on the 20th. After doing Lahore, His Excellency arrives at the capital on the 30th. The Levée has been announced for the 10th December. Cards will be received till next Saturday, the 30th November.

THE Lieutenant-Governor returned to Belvedere on Monday last.

THE Amrita Bazar Patrika writes:—

Reis and Rayyet condemned in common with us the Secret Act, but our contemporary, after a careful examination of the measure, has recanted. He says:—

"So far as the Press is concerned, there is not a shadow of menace against it. Nay, there is not a word about journals or journalists, publishers or printers. All our rage has gone for nothing. And we, for one, must scruple down our humble pie with as good a face as we can command."

As our brother does not give his reasons more fully, and as the sections of the Act are stubborn facts, we cannot agree with him, nor is it necessary. Since the Act is harmless there cannot be any objection on his part to publish a secret document. We hope to be able to send him one very soon. —The Amrita Bazar Patrika, Nov. 14.

All right. We only hope it will be a sound state paper. But this sort of challenge should not be bandied about in public. Defiance of the powers that be—some, of good, others of evil, and all human—is none of our policy. Journalism is a serious business—in a land in which it is the chief, nay, the only popular palladium of the liberty of the subject—it is a sacred duty. Those undertaking it ought to be prepared for the worst, but they should not set up a hostile camp against Authority—which has a far more difficult and infinitely important charge. They should not frivolously—from a mere spirit of braggadocio—give offence. For ourselves, we have never shrunk from danger or, what is harder to face, universal obloquy, where the call was clear, and our brother of the Patrika knows this as well as any man. All alone, on a memorable occasion, as he will remember, we led the forlorn hope. If he had looked into our columns more carefully regularly, he might have kept his glove.

But, it is said, we have not given our reasons more fully. We think we have said enough, however briefly. We could not well do more in proof of a negative. The onus is with others to establish the wind-mill. Where is the wheel? where the sails? where the wind? A great deal of writing has been produced, to which we too had contributed our mite, but vastly little to any purpose, so far as the law itself is concerned. A good deal indeed is beneath argument. We differentiate the Bill or Act from the speaking in respect of it. We confess we ourselves were deceived by what was said in Council. We are, of course, not surprised at the panic, but we decidedly object to its duration. The thing is being overdone.

OUR contemporary continues:—

The Indian Mirror, no doubt referring to the article of our contemporary, says:—

"According to some people, the Official Secrets Act is harmless, so far as the public Press is concerned. They argue that as the Act makes no mention of journals or journalists, publishers or printers, it cannot be a threat against the freedom of the Press. In the absence of an authoritative ruling on the point, this simple view of the matter may be open to question. It is the communication of a certain kind of information, which the law makes penal; and the publication thereof in a newspaper may be held to be a communication. Under Section 3 (2) of the Act, one is held liable to punishment, who 'wilfully communicates' information 'to any person to whom he knows the same ought not, in the interest of the State, to be communicated.' It may be pleaded that a newspaper does not communicate information to any particular 'person.' But will that plea stand good in a Court of Law?"

The law was enacted to punish traitors, and so, properly speaking, those who are not traitors have nothing to fear. But the head of the Government declares, in distinct terms, that he will use the Act to punish journalists and publishers, and His Excellency makes his intention still more clear by referring to "a scandalous disclosure." And when the Viceroy says that he will use the Act to punish the journalists, it is enough for us, for the Magistrates who will try the cases are the servants of the Government. A Magistrate has very little choice in the matter, and we have no trial by jury in India."—The Amrita Bazar Patrika, Nov. 14.

Whatever the head of the Government may say, we are, thank God, not in Dahome, but are British subjects on British soil. If we do not live in Great Britain, we still live under a Constitution. It is not enough for us that the Viceroy says this or says that. The law is the thing. The Viceroy is not above the law. Not Dalhousie was above it, and to talk of a Viceroy in these days as above it, is bosh. Lord Lansdowne cannot mean anything so preposterous as is attributed to him. The threat—if threat it was—was a brutum fulmen. If any thing hasty was said, it must be remembered that the Lord President is no lawyer. Perhaps, there was a spice of kingcraft in the sortie beyond the four corners of the Bill. His Excellency must be struck by the ease with which we "surrender judgment hoodwinked."

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1889.

THE DESPISED RURAL WATCH AND THE FAVOURITE CONSTABULARY.

THE police force in these Provinces consists of the regular police and the rural police. The strength of the former in the year 1888 stood at about 23,000, in officers and men, maintained at an annual cost of about 41 lacs of rupees. The rural or chawkidari police is far more numerous, consisting of 1,69,523 men, whose pay amounts to about 56 lacs of rupees, besides a number of them being in the enjoyment of chakran lands, the area of which stood in 1881 at above 14 thousand bighas. The rural police, therefore, while seven times more numerous, does not cost in anything like the same proportion, although this cheapness is to a great extent due to the fact that it is a body of men only, without any officers of its own. For administrative purposes, it is placed under the control of the officers of the regular police. Making allowances for this, it is still the cheaper division of the police, and one might thus be prepared if it were found to be somewhat inferior in inefficiency to the more costly branch of the service. Remembering, however, how very responsible is the work expected from a police service, one can scarcely be at ease to find even a cheap police force to be so bad as it is depicted by its own superior officers. The last Bengal Government Resolution on the administration of the police department contains the following remarks on the inefficiency of the rural police:—

"The conduct of the rural police or chowkidars seems to have shown little improvement.....In Bankoora they are reported as 'very negligent in the performance of their duties'; in Midnapore they are said to have had a hand in nearly all the dacoities occurring during the year; Hooghly is described as an 'Augean stable'; in the 24-Pergunnahs it is said that the Chowkidar is now paid with greater regularity, and his wants are attended to, but he does not make a corresponding return in the way of giving sufficient assistance in the prevention and detection of crime; in Dinagepore and in Dacca the chowkidar is said to be too much under the control of the punchayet; and from Khoolna there is what the Inspector-General calls 'a melancholy account of the inefficiency of chowkidars heretofore.'" The statements are borne out by the number of punishments having increased from fourteen to sixteen thousand in the year under review.

Such is admittedly the character of the rural police, but what of the superior and more expensive branch? The Government has, indeed, never concealed from itself the weak points of the regular police. The extent of its illiteracy is admitted, and the abuses and crimes of which it is guilty are commented on and published in the annual reports and resolutions. With all this, there seems to be a lurking tendency in officials to extenuate its failings and to deal leniently with a Department of its own creation and organization. Indeed, since its organization upon its present basis, the constabulary police is by this a fairly old institution, and there must naturally have been some degree of improvement effected in its character, in the years it has been in existence. Nothing would be more natural than such improvement brought about merely by time, as well as the more experienced supervision brought to bear upon it. For ourselves, nothing would give us greater pleasure than to find real signs of such improvement. But notwithstanding the favorable view which the Government and its officers are accustomed to take of the working of the regular police, we are precluded by that experience of the actual conduct of the police in its subordinate officers, which our closer contact with the people of the country affords, from too readily chiming in with the official view. If the rural police is, in the eyes of officials themselves, so bad as to have a hand in every great crime, the regular police, in its lower ranks, is hardly much above that character. The Government, however, seems inclined to take a more charitable view of the question. In the present resolution, after referring to the cases of torture, extortion, and embezzlement, to which the police were parties, as well as to the fact that even, where there were no judicial convictions, in a large proportion of cases the offenders were departmentally punished, Sir John Edgar argues as follows:—

"It is worthy of consideration how far the statistics of judicial cases against the police can be accepted as indicating an improvement in the conduct of the force. It certainly appears probable that the number of cases brought to trial forms at least as large a proportion of those committed as in previous years, for such considerations as the opening up of the country generally, the spread of education and of information, and the existence of the press, render it less likely than formerly that instances of extortion or oppression on the part of the police are allowed to pass unnoticed. If, however, this conclusion be correct, that the proportion of cases actually brought to trial is at least as great as formerly, the conclusion appears sound that the steady diminution in the number of cases against the police in the last eleven years is, at any rate to a large extent, due to an actual improvement in the conduct of the police themselves. The Lieutenant Governor notes with pleasure such signs of improvement as exist, as the indignation which fresh cases inevitably excite is apt to give rise to the impression that the tendency is towards deterioration rather than improvement."

The argument with its qualifications has no doubt great force in it. Nor can it be denied that the indignation excited by individual cases of police oppression goes far to exaggerate the popular hostility against the department and the system in general. One is, however, naturally slow to rely upon inferences drawn from statistics which are not always free from elements of uncertainty and disturbance. For the rest, admitting that, in the course of more than a decade, there has been some perceptible improvement in the character of the police, the argument at the best has only a negative value. The police may not be so vile as in past years. But suppose the rate of progress were slow enough to tax the utmost patience of the long suffering people. It is not claimed that the department is all that it should be. It is indeed admitted by the highest authorities that there is considerable room for improvement. Its corruption has become a byword. In any case, the public sentiment on the subject cannot be summarily ignored. If as regards the judicial service, it is not only necessary that it should be just, but it should also have a reputation for being so, may not the same double necessity apply to the department of watch and ward? We quite appreciate the moderation shown in the above guarded defence of the police system. But considering the responsibility of this branch of the service, and the great powers which are placed in the hands of an uneducated and irresponsible agency for the most part, one should think it is high time for the Government to turn its attention seriously to a scheme of police reform, as soon as its financial position enabled it to do so.

THE ROTTEN POLICE.

WE are tired of the Police. We are tired of writing about its misdoings. Of its abuse of power, its illiteracy in the lower ranks, its sinecurism in the upper, and its all but general corruption amongst the Sub-Inspectors and Head Constables, the Press has said enough, and yet the demands made upon us to show up its real character are unceasing. Such demands come every day—nay, are pressed every hour. And the cry is, Still they come. They come from actual victims of the Police as well as from the more numerous body of general sympathisers who are indignant eye-witnesses or ear-witnesses of their sufferings and yet can render no help. In their helplessness, both run up to the Press for assistance. But what can the Press do beyond pointing out in general terms the features of the Police—its defects, and the need of its reform? Of cases sub judice in which the Police were directly or indirectly implicated, it were not safe to speak. Nor could charges of corruption against the Police be otherwise than vaguely dealt with without access to evidence of a kind which was not always forthcoming. In the absence of specific facts and evidence, all that we could do was, in deference to the prevailing public sentiment, to hint vague and general charges of dishonesty. But our officials are accustomed to set little value on such charges. They want specific allegations supported by specific facts, both of which, from the very circumstances of these cases, are often not available.

Is the general sentiment of the community at large, however, on that account, to be disregarded? Is it unfounded, because of the difficulty of establishing it by legal evidence? A whole community is not likely to make such mistakes. The life of their own Police is always before them—always open, and they are more likely to know than officials. They have, for instance, a Police sub-inspector drawing a monthly salary of from Rs. 50 to Rs. 80, and the public impression is that he is such a corrupt man, in league with publicans and keepers of gambling-houses and all sorts of bad live-ers, that in his short incumbency having had to investigate a couple of murder cases, and some cases of heavy theft, he has put a large sum in his pocket. As a matter of fact, they know he was in a position to dispose of, to the best advantage, his two daughters who had attained marriageable age by incurring an expenditure out of all proportion to his public earnings. There might be some exaggeration in the estimate of the amount of money so acquired; it might not be, as many thousands as is the current story but something less, but is the popular impression altogether false? To its cost, the country at large knows too well that, far from being false, such local opinions are often too true. Nor are these guardians of our security careful to hide their practices. One of them—and he, a smart officer in the eyes of his superiors—made no secret of his money hunger, but went about proclaiming the respectability of his birth and connections and the necessity he felt of adding illicit to his licit gains, in order to live in a style suitable to his position and to secure suitable marriage alliances for his children. And when he is transferred to another station, and his successor comes, and the new comer is greeted with stories of his predecessor's corruption, they are told to console themselves with the fact of his having exercised great moderation and self-restraint while he remained with them. What bribes he took from them were but a flea-bite compared with his usual capacity for them as shown in other places. In a single murder case, at a particular station, he is stated to have netted Rs. 7,000. And the new man goes on retailing similar stories with the evident object of showing that men must live somehow or other, and when they could not on their own fair earnings, they must stretch their hands for others, and before he has stayed many months, he proves that he deserves to be no less "smart" an officer in the books of the Magistracy. Indeed, one man is as bad as another, and there is no cure for the evil without a thorough overhauling of the system.

It is indeed, strange how such things can systematically be going on without, except in rare instances, the culprits coming to grief. It is certainly curious, but not strange. The things are managed so secretly. The Police have the services of a clever agency of auxiliaries in their doings, and those whom they fleece are too deep in crime themselves to think of anything else except escaping with their skin. Murder cases are the most desirable windfalls in a policeman's career. A few such cases, and he has feathered his nest. The cases miscarry at the Sessions and the murderers escape, and the Judges tear their hair and gnash their teeth, but the policeman is a made man. These evil practices of the Police must be quite well known to every experienced Magistrate and Judge, and if they fail to amend the department, our countrymen need not be uneasy under the charge, so often brought against them, of being too weak to protect themselves from the corruptions of the Police.

It is a stale topic. Nor should there be much need now of insisting upon it. There can be no two opinions now as to the rottenness of the system. In his famous St. Andrew's dinner speech, Lord Dufferin, by way of a compliment to the Press, admitted that the Government had been satisfied of the truth of what the Press had so persistently alleged as to the incompetency and corruption of the Police, and that the Government had decided upon adopting measures for its improvement as soon as its financial difficulties were removed. This announcement came upon us as a delightful surprise. We had never looked for it from the lips of a departing Viceroy, far less on the occasion of a social and festive gathering. But it showed how alive was the Government to real grievances, and, in that light, it was a triumph of the Press. Lord Dufferin's remarks on the subject are now of historical importance, and we only hope his successor will take an early opportunity of redeeming his pledge.

NOTE AS TO THE GUIDANCE WHICH CAN BE DERIVED FROM THE HISTORY OF PREVIOUS ATTEMPTS MADE BY GOVERNMENT TO PROMOTE EMIGRATION FROM INDIA TO BURMA.

I find it frequently asked what has been the cause of the failure of all attempts made by Government to promote emigration to Burma? Put in this form, the question is somewhat embarrassing to one who believes that the efforts made in this direction have been attended with a certain degree of success, inasmuch as it assumes the failure as an ascertained fact. Nor can I accept, as altogether satisfactory and conclusive, the answer given in letter No. 1197, dated the 7th July 1885, from the Burma Administration to the Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India, which attributes the supposed failure to the following causes :—

- (i) The intense dislike of natives of India to abandon their homes and settle down in a foreign country. The result of this feeling is that it is only the lower classes of the population that are induced to move, and they are useless as agricultural settlers.
- (ii) The agency which Government is compelled to employ is very varied, and the agents often induce the people to abandon their homes by fallacious promises, the non-fulfilment of which produces discontent amongst the immigrants.
- (iii) Government is unable to watch over the immigrants and protect them against the petty annoyances which they meet with in a new country amongst people differing from them in language and customs. These petty annoyances prevent the immigrant from settling down quietly, and induce many of them to give up the undertaking, take to other occupations, or return to their homes.

The most remarkable fact as to the emigrants who leave Behar for the colonies is that they are to a very large extent Brahmin and Rajput cultivators, men placed sufficiently high in the social scale to feel the pressure of poverty, while it is certainly within the power of the State to secure that those who deal with it shall understand the conditions of the agreement. As to the petty annoyances supposed to induce immigrants to abandon a country where the people differ from them in manners and customs, the reply is that the bulk of the immigrants do not quit Burma, they quietly settle down in the province.

The main object of the three schemes of State-assisted emigration which have been worked in Burma was to induce Indians to settle here permanently, not quitting the country at the end of the working season, as is the practice with a large number of those who come on their own account. And in this it would appear that success has been in every instance attained. Under the Bengal Emigration Scheme of 1875 the number brought to Burma was 7,396, of whom 843 were lost sight of afterwards, some of them returning to India, others remaining in this province, but avoiding contact with the officer charged with the duty of recovering from them the cost of bringing them over. It may be assumed that by this scheme 7,000 persons were added to the permanent population of Burma. Under the Madras scheme of 1876 the number imported was 758, none of whom are known to have returned. As to the Behar Scheme of 1882, I can find no account of the number landed, which was certainly small; but it appears that those who came remained in this country. On the whole some 8,000 Indians are now probably in Burma, who, but for these attempts, would never have crossed the Bay; and it may fairly be said that these 8,000 settlers share the comparative prosperity enjoyed by the labouring classes of Burma generally. They found employment readily enough during the first working season, and with the assistance of the Government depôt tided over the period of slack employment which sets in with the monsoon. After the first year they merged in the Indian population settled here, and at a later period were found to deny that they ever came over at the expense of the State, apparently for the reason which would induce an English workman to object to publishing the fact that he had at one time received parish relief. Attempts which have resulted in the prosperity of 8,000 individuals are not to be considered as altogether futile, though we may wish that the number had been far greater.

The history of the first emigration scheme shows that many immigrants can be made to pay the cost of their expatriation within a very short period. A charge of Rs. 21-4, afterwards raised to Rs. 23-4, was made against each immigrant on this account; the amount, though it did not recover all expenses, being considerable, as the actual cost of passage is Rs. 10 only. Of the 7,397 emigrants this charge was paid in full by 29-28 per cent. before March 1876, that is within one or two years, 20-64 per cent. had at that date paid more than half, 37-41 per cent. less than half, and only 11-95 per cent. had made no contribution. The cost of the passage can, by a measure which I will propose tomorrow for the consideration of the officers of the Burma Commission with whom I am acting, be reduced to Rs. 5; and the experience of 1876 gives ground for hope that a sum so small as this could be recovered within the year in the great majority of cases.

The financial results of the emigration have been assumed to be unsatisfactory because an account has been taken only of the expenditure incurred, no reference being made in the correspondence to receipts which should be considered as a set-off. There is a gain to the revenue under many heads in the transfer of a tax-payer from a district where he can only make two annas a day to one in which he makes eight, but in so far as this gain is indeterminate, I will not refer to it. In the increase of the population of Burma, however, the exchequer has a very special and definite interest, inasmuch as every man here pays a capitation-tax of Rs. 2-8 for a bachelor and Rs. 5 for a married man, which, since the equalization of the salt duties, is a clear addition to the taxes which he would pay in India. This tax is not imposed on immigrants for the first five years of their residence: after that period they became liable to it like others. Thus in this case of permanent settlers there appear to be a gain to the State, which may average about Rs. 4 per man; and I believe that against this there is no real set-off in the shape of increased cost of administration, this being provided for by the other taxes which the immigrant pays. I do not find any very clear statement of the cost of immigration, but taking that given in Mr. Bridges's letter No. 1197, dated the 7th July 1885, the account is as follows :—

Bengal Immigration Scheme of 1874	...	Rs. 1,25,000
Madras Scheme of 1876	...	" 37,448
Behar Scheme of 1882	...	" 33,000
Total	...	Rs. 1,95,448

If we suppose that the 8,000 persons permanently added to the population of Burma by these schemes to be now represented by 3,000 adult males paying Rs. 12,000 a year in capitation tax, it would follow that Government receives over 6 per cent. on the money invested.

A greater financial success may fairly be claimed for the subsidies to steamer companies paid from 1882-83 to January 1884, by which rates were reduced to Rs. 5 from Calcutta, Rs. 8 from Madras, as against Rs. 10 and Rs. 19 at present charged. This was followed by a great increase in the number of immigrants, many of whom settled permanently in the country. The precise figures are matter of estimate, but it is probable that the amount expended on the subsidies, two and three-quarter lakhs, has already been more than repaid. As stated in Mr. Bridges's letter already quoted, the number of immigrants in the first year of the reduced fares was 72,000, nearly double that of the year immediately preceding. The experience of the Lovers of arguings to take the steps within our power to rectify the same.

While the history of former undertakings is on the whole encouraging, it certainly contains some passages which should serve as warnings, showing us the difficulties to be expected and the dangers which we should avoid. The Secretary of State for India, in his despatch No. 108, dated the 12th October 1876, remarked that the Bengal scheme of 1874 had failed in its immediate object, only about 1,500 of the labourers imported having come from the districts afflicted with famine in 1873-74. As a matter of fact no attempt was made in 1874 to select emigrants from one part of Bengal rather than another, and all suitable persons recruited were accepted; but any attempt which we may now make will have special reference to the over-populated districts, and such limitations are doubtless embarrassing. Even where the area of recruitment has been extended to the whole of Madras or of Bengal, the work has always proceeded slowly, and the numbers obtained were insufficient to meet requirements or to afford full occupation to the staff. In 1882 very few recruits could be found in Behar, and those were of inferior quality. The proposals now under consideration avoid, as far as possible, the difficulties thus disclosed. It is suggested that grants of land made to zemindars should be conditional on cultivation by inhabitants of the districts over-populated, and these should also be selected for settlement on Government clearances. The zemindars would select suitable men in their own interests, probably being able to do so on their own estates, while Government would choose fit persons in this country.

It is also a fact that the attempts made to settle Indians as cultivators on waste land have almost always failed, the immigrants, though classed as agriculturists, preferring to work as labourers. This was certainly not due to any stint on the part of Government in offering to advance money, the principle accepted being that the settler should be found in a house, found in food till his crops grew, in bullocks, agricultural instruments, and in fact in everything he might require. It was said that the emigrants feared to contract the debt which would have resulted from accepting these advances, and that they were not fit to act as pioneers of cultivation. However that may have been, they avoided the Government settlements, and if they reclaimed land at all, did so on their own account. I quite accept this as a warning against sanguine projects. The work of reclamation is never easy, and it becomes far more difficult when it has to be done by strangers in a foreign climate. But it is probable that capitalists working for their own profit may succeed where officials have failed. And even on Government estates, now that an experienced officer has been appointed Director of the Agricultural Department, more time and attention can be given to what is no doubt a most troublesome task.

In speaking of failures, it is well to confess that the British Burma Labour Law of 1876, with its elaborate rules, has failed completely. As a law enabling private capitalists to import labourers under contract, it has never, I believe, been enforced even in a single instance. I find large employers of labour in Rangoon ignorant of its existence. Indeed it would seem, from the proceedings of the Chief Commissioner in the Department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce, No. 324, dated the 8th June 1878, that the Provincial Administration did not at that time realize that the law permitted such contracts, at least that is the only interpretation I can place on the following passage:—"The radical change which was made in the original Bill when passing through Council, whereby the system of contract between the labourer and Government was substituted for the system of direct contract between the labourer and private employers without any dictation on the part of Government as to the disposal of his labour was, in the Chief Commissioner's opinion, unfortunate." Such a change was indeed made in the Bill by the

Select Committee reporting on the 12th July 1875, but the Act was ultimately framed so as to permit of private employers importing labourers on their own account, as is done by the Assam tea planters—a fact of which few people here seem to be aware. The Act is double-barrelled, admitting of importation of labourers either by Government or by private parties; and it may be said that while one barrel has missed fire, the other has never been even loaded. Government did indeed import the Madras coolies under the Act in 1876, but could get no one to take them over in accordance with section 48, and had to permit the workmen to make their own terms irrespective of the law. The elaborate rules for hiring out to private employers labourers engaged by Government under the Act have never come into force, and indeed they contemplate an amount of sanitary and other supervision which is not, I am informed, in the least adapted to the free conditions of life in Burma. It may be that in this province a simple law is needed to enable those who import labourers to recover the cost of so doing from the wages of the immigrants, but on this subject I do not at present offer any opinion.

MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE. NOTIFICATION.

Simla, the 3rd September, 1889.

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General will hold a Levée at Government House, Calcutta, on Tuesday, the 10th December, 1889, at 9-30 P.M.

All Civil and Military Officers and the Native Officers of the Native Regiments of the Garrison are invited to attend.

Gentlemen purposing to attend the Levée are requested to send their cards to the Aide-de-Camp in waiting, not later than Saturday, the 30th November, 1889, after which "No Cards" will be received, and to bring with them to the Levée two cards, with their names legibly written on them—one to be given on entering Government House; and the other to the Aide-de-Camp in waiting at the time of pointing out in general. Gentlemen who have not already been presented at the Court of St. James, or at Government House will be good enough to add the names of Gentlemen who will present them.

Gentlemen wearing uniform will appear in full dress.

Gentlemen not wearing uniform will appear in evening dress.

The carriages of Gentlemen (except such as have the private entrée) attending the Levée will enter by the North-East Gate, set down under the Grand Staircase, and pass out by the North-West Gate.

No card for the new presentation can be received after the 30th November, 1889.

By Command,
WILLIAM BERENFORD,
Lieut.-Colonel,
Military Secretary to the Viceroy.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS OF THE BENGAL BONDED WAREHOUSE ASSOCIATION

FOR THE

Half-Year ended 31st October, 1889.

1. Your Directors submit for examination and approval the Accounts of the Association for the half-year ended 31st October, 1889.
2. On the 30th April last, the uncollected Rent Bills amounted to Rs. 12,007-8-8; during the subsequent six months bills were issued for Rs. 59,774-4-4; of these two amounts Rs. 58,720-3-2 have been realised, leaving Rs. 13,151-9-10 outstanding.
3. The divisible surplus amounts to Rs. 40,072-6-2. Your Directors propose to set apart as usual the sum of Rs. 2,000 to the credit of the Repair and Building Fund.

4. The Hydraulic Lifts continue to work well and satisfactorily and it is entirely owing to the facilities afforded by the Lifts that the Association has been able to deal with the increased volume of business which flowed to the Warehouse during the past half-year. The Directors are aware that this increase of business is mainly due to exceptional causes affecting the Import trade. They therefore recommend that advantage should be taken of the large earnings of the half-year to make provision for charges on Repairs Account which it would be unwise to further postpone, seeing that they must always be dealt with as a charge against revenue in excess of the sum required to be set aside under the 18th Bye-law. The Directors accordingly propose to carry the sum of Rs. 6,000 to credit of Repair Account.

5. After deducting the sums to be set apart under paragraphs 3 and 4 of this Report the Divisible balance will be Rs. 32,072-6-2, of this amount your Directors recommend that Rs. 22,000 be applied in payment of dividend of Rs. 16 per share and the balance Rs. 10,072-6-2 be carried to next half-year's account.

THE BENAZIR FAIR—

RAMPUR STATE.

NOTICE.

The annual Benazir Fair at Rampur will be held this year on the bank of the Kosi river, by the Rampur and Moradabad road, from the 24th to 30th November. Trades-people of all kinds have been invited with their wares from different parts of the country, and, besides the usual assortments of imported and other miscellaneous goods, special care will be taken to have some of the notable indigenous manufactures of the Province, as of Fatehgarh, Mani pur, Tilhat, Moradabad, and Rampur itself, amply represented. As an additional attraction, the Fair will this time combine an Agricultural and Cattle Show. The Director of Agriculture and Commerce has been asked to provide a set of farming implements, some of which will also be shown in working. The Cattle Show will include horses, ponies, mules, cows, bullocks, and buffaloes, and will offer a good opportunity to parties wishing to buy or sell such animals; the State itself being prepared to purchase a fair number to replace those that have become unserviceable. Fodder for cattle brought for show will be provided free of cost.

The tradesmen's stalls, and tents for visitors will form a well ordered camp, with due care for sanitation. For the amusement of visitors there will be a varied programme of wrestling, elephant and ram fights, military sports, &c., ending with the usual display of fireworks. European visitors will be very welcome, and will find every arrangement made for their comfort.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]
 The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887

If we have before noticed Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is because the little book is either due to a happy chance, or, on the contrary, a matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.

Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

A PRINCE of literary men is on his Grand Tour par excellence. Sir Edwin Arnold, the brilliant journalist and poetical interpreter of the East to the West, is globe-trotting for health and the Daily Telegraph. Crossing over to the New World, he has passed through the United States, from shore to shore. His experiences are, of course, being published in his paper. His reception at White House was cordial. One must not, however, rely too much upon republican temper. Cousin Jonathan is a most touchy animal; the slightest breath might raise a storm. It was, we take it, no easy trial to the frank British man of letters to steer through the formalities without hurting the susceptibilities of a vain, irritable parvenu people. Sir Edwin was equal to the occasion. His Oriental studies and his former life in India must have taken the brusque, blunt Englishman out of him. Indeed, both sides acquitted themselves to perfection. President and Pandit palavered one another, parrying attacks and avoiding pitfalls with the dexterity of finished diplomats.

Sir Edwin has now sailed for Japan. As befitted a Poet, he parted singing. Before leaving Cambridge, he read to the Harvard Club in San Francisco the following sonnet:

A FAREWELL.

America! at this thy Golden Gate,
New-travelled from thy green Atlantic coves,
Parting—I make my reverence! It behoves
With backward steps to quit a queen in state.

Land! of all lands most fair and free and great;—
Of countless Kindred lips, wherefrom I heard
Sweet speech of Shakspeare—Keep it consecrate
For noble uses! Land of Freedom's Bird,

Fearless and proud! So let him soar that stirred
By generous joy, all men may learn of thee
A large life; and Europe, undeterred
By ancient wrecks, dare also to be free
Body and soul;—seeing thine Eagle gaze
Undazzled upon Freedom's Sun, full-blaze!

OUR native readers, we are afraid, are not familiar with the very name of San Francisco. And before the opening of through railway communication connecting Yankeedom with the El Dorado of the Great Republic and forming as it were a channel by land between the two Oceans, the state of knowledge on the subject in Europe was not much more enviable. Nowadays, tourists from Europe who can afford the expense generally—to speak in downright vernacular, “go the whole hog.” And no wonder. The idea of a straight run from the Atlantic to the Pacific over the Rocky Mountains and across the boundless Prairie, through so many of the stripes and stars, is fascinating to most souls. Then, California itself is a charming country. A Land of Gold, with endless resources of every kind, it has a glorious climate and the noblest scenery. Of this great and prosperous free State, San Francisco is a worthy capital, in a situation of unparalleled advantage and unique dignity.

To lovers of literature, it has a special interest. It is the home of Bret Harte.

Sir Edwin's beautiful sonnet reminds us of the brilliant American's address to the City. It is as follows:—

SAN FRANCISCO.

FROM THE SEA.

Serene, indifferent of Fate,
Thou sittest at the Western Gate;

Upon thy heights so lately won
Still slant the banners of the sun;

Thou seest the white seas strike their tents,
O Warder of two Continents!

And scornful of the peace that flies
Thy angry winds and sullen skies,

Thou drawest all things, small or great,
To thee, beside the Western Gate.

O lion's whelp, that hidest fast
In jungle growth of spire and mast,

I know thy cunning and thy greed,
Thy hard high lust and wilful deed,

And all thy glory loves to tell
Of specious gifts material.

Drop down, O fleecy Fog, and hide
Her sceptic sneer, and all her pride!

Wrap her, O Fog, in gown and hood
Of her Franciscan Brotherhood.

Hide me her faults, her sin and blame;
With thy gray mantle cloak her shame!

So shall she, cowléd, sit and pray
Till morning bears her sins away.

Then rise, O fleecy Fog, and raise
The glory of her coming days;

Be as the cloud that flecks the seas
Above her smoky argosies.

When forms familiar shall give place
To stranger speech and never face;

When all her throes and anxious fears,
Lie hushed in the repose of years;

When Art shall raise and Culture lift
The sensual joys and meaner thrift,

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money order, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

And all fulfilled the vision, we
Who watch and wait shall never see,—

Who, in the morning of her race,
Toiled fair or meanly in our place,—

But, yielding to the common lot,
Lie unrecorded and forgot.

THE Governor-General in Council has, under the Sea Customs Act prohibited the bringing into British India by sea or land of pieces of copper or mixed metal which, not being coin as defined in the Indian Penal Code, are intended to be used as money. The prohibition, however, does not apply to travellers bringing in good faith not more than hundred such pieces for their own use.

It has been formally notified that at and after the examination to be held in the year 1892 for the selection of candidates for the Civil Service of India, no candidate will be admitted to the examination whose age was less than 21 and more than 23 on the 1st April preceding the date of examination.

THE Government has revised the rules about the importation at Calcutta and other ports of petroleum, and made new ones for its possession and transport in all the territories administered by the Lieutenant-Governor. They of course refer to large quantities. It is also time to bring its domestic consumption under stringent rules, if it is yet to be allowed. The Petroleum Act XII of 1886—other than the sections relating to dangerous petroleum and the importation of petroleum—has been extended to

1. The Municipality of Calcutta.
2. The Port of Calcutta,
3. The Baranagore Municipality.
4. The South Suburban Municipality.
5. The Chitpore and Kasipore Municipality.
6. The Manicktollah Municipality.
7. The Municipality of Howrah.

ractical effect. The interpretation of the law is now the chief thing. Baboo Nundolal Bose, who is chiefly responsible for the new clauses in the law for assessment of residential buildings, as in interest bound, has taken the matter to Court. Mr. Sconce, the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, has taken time till next Wednesday to publish his opinion. The matter must go to the High Court.

THE Government estates No. 305 Khasalpoore in the District of Nuddea and No. 1667 Chur Peer Bux in Noakhally are to be surveyed for record of rights under the Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1886.

A BURMAN Barrister in Rangoon was refused license for a gun because he was no landholder. He therefore qualified himself for the license by purchasing, in the Burmese cemetery, a piece of land measuring six feet by three.

THE next Criminal Sessions of the High Court commences on Wednesday the 4th December under the presidency of Mr. Justice Norris.

THE presidentship of the Ranaghat Municipality has passed from one Pal Chowdry to another. Babu Surendranath having chosen a different and a higher sphere of action, the Ranaghat people as represented by their Commissioners have complimented his House by the selection of another scion of the distinguished family who have made Ranaghat what it is. The Government too has accepted the nomination.

BABOO Surendranath has come to Calcutta to set up the Zemindari Panchayet. An office has been secured and the office-bearers elected. The Panchayet has the approbation of the good and true, and if it succeeds in accomplishing a fraction of its objects, it will be a blessing indeed to barrister-jockeyed Bengal and vakeel-ridden Bhárat.

INSTEAD of the 17th February 1890 as originally carelessly fixed for the next Entrance, F. A., and B. A. Examinations of the Calcutta University, the Entrance examination will begin on the 24th February and the F. A. and B. A. examinations on the 10th March.

WE give below the dates for the several examinations in the University of London for the year 1889-90. No serious book of politics has in our day been more lucky Bryce's on America. The critics vie with one another in lavishing it their praise. The sun has reached the meridian, however, and necessary consequences are following. The learned author of Holy Roman Empire has been caught in his own elaborate net. London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes :—

"Professor Bryce's ingenious idea of securing a copyright in the United States for his great book 'The American Commonwealth,' by including in it certain chapters written by American authors, threaten involve a most unlooked-for and unfortunate financial calamity. The third volume contains a chapter of twenty-six pages on 'The Two Ring in New York City,' written and copyrighted by Frank J. Goodnow, a writer on the staff of the New York Evening Post. It appears that Mr. Goodnow is too young a man to have had personal knowledge of a series of events culminating in 1871, and that he relied upon old files of partisan New York papers in preparing his account of the Two Ring. Throughout this account he classes Mr. A. Oakey Hall, who was mayor of the city from 1869 onwards, among the corrupt members of the Ring. Even in mentioning the fact that Mr. Hall was acquitted after an exhaustive trial he adds the qualifying line—'But he has chosen to live out of America.' It happens that Mr. Hall is now a naturalised British subject, and is a well-known resident of London. He did not leave America until some ten years had elapsed after his acquittal, and he came then to England to occupy a position of great responsibility and trust, which he still holds, as the legal adviser in Europe of Mr. James Gordon Bennett. Mr. Hall has brought a suit against Professor Bryce for 20,000*l.* damages, and his solicitor, Mr. George Lewis, has embodied the entire chapter in his bill of complaint. By an unfortunate coincidence, which nobody deplores more than the plaintiff, the papers in the suit were served upon Professor Bryce on his wedding-day. The Professor is still abroad, and it is not expected that the case will come up for trial before the Christmas holidays."

FOR an extension of the Tirhoot section of the Assam-Bihar State Railway from Pertabgunge to Kunwa Ghat—a distance of 8 miles—lands measuring about 200 acres of standard measurement with an average width of about 200 feet, have been declared under the Act.

Mr. A. Manson having retired from the Covenanted Civil Service, Mr. F. H. B. Skrine, Officiating Magistrate and Collector, Rungpore, gets a lift to the second grade.

Mr. C. F. Worsley, Commissioner of the Chota Nagpore Division, has been appointed Commissioner of the Orissa Division, Mr. W. H. Grimley, hitherto officiating, has been permanently given the Commissionership of the Chota Nagpore Division. That promotes Mr. G. Toynbee, Magistrate and Collector of the second grade, to the first grade, and Mr. R. C. Dutt from the second to the first grade. Mr. Joint Magistrate K. G. Gupta too comes in for his share, being appointed a Magistrate and Collector of the third grade, but he will continue as Junior Secretary to the Board of Revenue.

Mr. H. Millet having retired from the 3rd October last, Mr. G. C. Sconce has just been confirmed as Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court. Mr. Thomas Jones gets a lift and becomes the Third Judge. Mr. K. M. Chatterjee could no longer be overlooked, but tho' continuing to act as the Third Judge, he is Gazetted the Fourth Judge. We hope he will be now allowed to draw the full emoluments of his place.

THOUGH the Government is not prepared to sanction an additional Judge, it has approved an estimate for about a lac of rupees for an additional wing to the Court for Small Causes.

THE Mohunt of Tirupati's prosecution of the four winnenses has failed. After an enquiry of 10 days and examination of sixty witnesses, the Magistrate has dismissed the complaint. The trial of the Mohunt himself commences on the 2nd December at the Chittoor Sessions.

LORD Harris has been selected to succeed Lord Reay in the Governorship of Bombay. Mr. Brownlow replaces Lord Harris as Parliamentary Under-Secretary at the War Office.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

ENGLAND repudiates the assumption by Portugal of sovereignty over the dominions north and south of the Zambesi. Portugal explains that she has no intentions to encroach on others' rights but that she discovered the exploited territory long ago. It becomes not the Lion to bully the Cat.

LORD Salisbury has given another exposition of the English Foreign Policy. The guiding principle, he announced at Nottingham, is peace with all the world and stern preparedness for any emergency. Three days earlier, on the 25th, in opening the Italian Parliament, King Humbert spoke to the same tune. He was thankful to the Powers for the concert existing among them and the assurance of peace. But there are certain questions which were not yet settled. It was therefore necessary to strengthen the Army and Navy without any undue weight upon the budget.

A FIRE of American proportions has destroyed a square mile of houses, including four Banks and several churches, at Lynn in Massachusetts. The damage is given, at the first estimate, at ten million dollars. Another disaster by the same agency is telegraphed from Boston in the all business part of the city entailing a loss of 8 millions.

THE Antwerp Fire has found two more victims—of law. The proprietor and manager of the Cartridge Factory which exploded have been sentenced to imprisonment of the respective terms of four years and eighteen months, besides being cast in damages and costs of 12,000 fr.

ON the 28th., there was a terrific explosion of 3,000 barrels of Gunpowder on board a vessel in the Marseilles docks. The crew fortunately escaped uninjured.

THE differential tariffs between France and Italy have been abolished.

ON the occasion of the late visit of the Czar to Berlin, the officers of the Kaiser Alexander Regiment of the Prussian army invited the Emperor of Russia, as Honorary Colonel of the Regiment, to a luncheon. The eating must have been prodigious, and the drinking—like fishes! It was a meeting of the devourers and imbibers of Central and of Eastern Europe. And when Teutons meet Slavs at the social board, then comes the tug of war, you know—with knives and forks. According to the custom of the natives, from eating and drinking, they proceeded to drinking pure and simple. In the fervour of the moment, they pledge each other over the glass and are profuse in compliments before emptying it. One man stands up and, in a gushing speech, recommends his companions to fill their glasses and drink in memory of a certain man or body of men or institution or sentiment. Of course, they can never want pleas for their peculiar amusement. If only a select number make regular speeches, all vociferate their concurrence and, before the close, often burst into singing. This is what is called toasting and drinking healths. On this occasion the Emperor of Germany proposed the health of the Emperor of All the Russias in an unusually clever speech, as follows:—

"Reminiscences play a great rôle in a fête such as this, in which we are celebrating a regiment with a glorious part behind it, and which has, at the same time, the honour of finding itself in presence of its Imperial Chief. These reminiscences recall to me the period when my august grandfather, then a young officer, received the order of St. George in front of the enemy, and how in a bullet rain the command of the Kaluga Regiment. It is in the name of these souvenirs that I drink to the common traditions of glory of the Russian and Prussian armies. I wish to honour those who heroically fought at Borodins in defence of their fatherland and who conquered beside ourselves at Arcis-sur-Aube and at Brienne. I drink to the healths of the brave defenders of Sebastopol and the valorous combatants at Plevna. Empty your glasses with myself in honour of our comrades of the Russian army. Hurrah, Hurrah, Hurrah!"

That is, indeed, a miniature gem of post-prandium eloquence. The Great Frederick himself, with all his literary pretensions, never came up to such felicity of thought and neatness of expression. The soul of the present Kaiser is decidedly French.

THE Viceroy's tour concluded at Lahore. There he received the distinction of Doctor of Literature at the hands of his lieutenant and Chancellor of the local University. At the same capital, he gave an audience to the Members of the Cashmere Council. Of the fond hopes of the Maharaja's friends have not been fulfilled. No more being said about the unfortunate Prince. Thence the Viceroy for the metropolis and reaches it to-day. The programme of rect, will be found in our advertisement columns.

WE take this opportunity to remind the Military Secretary that there is no longer such a functionary as the Chairman of the Justices. The two offices of Chairman of the Corporation and Commissioner of Police have been separated by the new Municipal Act, and two distinct persons now fill the places. There ought to be some permanent assistant to the Personal Staff to take note of these little things so as to avoid unseemly blunders.

WE have much pleasure to announce, on the best authority, that Colonel Ardagh, notwithstanding his accident on the Frontier, was able to accompany the Viceroy throughout the tour. The Pioneer gratuitously caused anxiety to his friends by informing the public that the Private Secretary was laid up for a time at Peshawar. There was no truth in the report.

HOMER was always accused of an occasional nap. With advancing years, the habit has grown upon him. The demi-official in the Press should be taken E. & O. E.

THE metropolis is preparing to receive the Prince. The Calcutta Corporation has voted Rs. 2,000 for an address and a casket. On Wednesday, at the British Indian Association Rooms, there was a nondescript gathering of incompatible elements which after a storm terminated in what was courteously taken for a preliminary meeting of all sections of the community, to consider the steps towards a suitable reception. Unfortunately for the foolish men who had apparently planned a stealing march on the public, though fortunately for the credit of the capital, some good men and true happened to be present. The leading European merchant, supported by the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, was truly a godsend on the occasion, for men like Sir Alexander Wilson and Mr. Clarke will stand no nonsense. So the great scheme for the partition of Poland was dissipated to the winds. Maharaja Jotendra Mohun Tagore took the chair. It was resolved at the instance of Sir Alexander Wilson to call a public meeting, through the Sheriff, at the Town Hall, for the very purpose for which the preliminary meeting had been called. Sir H. Harrison, who seems to have been in the secret, brought out his favorite nostrum of a compact secret committee to forestall the public voice. Sir A. Wilson would none of it. Sir Comer Petheram was like himself. He knocked Sir Henry's pet on the head, and finally proposed the same thing. In deference to the Chief, it was decided to ask the Lieutenant-Governor to preside at the Town Hall, and a Committee was formed to make the preliminary arrangements. Although the Chairman had gushed of unity of races and cordiality, the Mahomedan community was virtually ignored in the constitution of the Committee.

THE meeting was neither a quiet nor a cordial one. But we pass over the ebullitions. There was only one incident faintly approaching the amusing. The Resolution moved by the Chief Justice was seconded by Prince Jehan Kadr. Notwithstanding, Babu Kungo Lal Banerjee "thundered" it, to quote the immortal language of a Secretary to our Congress. Sir Comer Petheram informed him that "thundering" was inadmissible. That there is room in such matters for a second only and it had been filled. But the Baboo has won his object, in spite of law and the Chief Justice. He not only proved his loyalty to the meeting, but has got the reporters to announce him to the world as the seconder.

ON the 26th, at the Bombay Town Hall, Mr. H. S. King, M. P., the champion of the Uncovenanted, was entertained at a Banquet to which the Covenanted and others were invited. The chair was given to Sir Henry Morland. There were present Judges of the High Court, members of the Civil and Military Services, and representatives of the Press. In reply to his toast, Mr. King spoke of the apathy and indifference of the House of Commons to the grievances of the Uncovenanted Service and said that many members regarded the Uncovenanted Civilian as a dangerous beast, the product of a tropical soil and an Eastern imagination. This was ominous.

7. His offence enough (in India the English are all Scotch, as it might say), but to jest at the almighty House of Commons against the grain of the strong element of old fogginess present. Adding, all went merrily as a marriage bell, till, in retort to John Gorst's remark that India was too poor to pay the pensions of Service at two shillings a rupee, Mr. King said that the plea amounted to saying that India was too poor to be honest. This was too much for Mr. Justice Parsons, who rose and interrupted the speaker, saying that as one of Her Majesty's servants he could not remain and hear the Government attacked. He was called to order by the chairman, who saw nothing in the remark to call the guest of the evening to order. The other diners approved the action of the chair by hearty applause. This proved the last straw for the back of the judicial camel, and he left the hall in a huff. After this judicial exhibition, Mr. King naturally had not the heart to proceed further. He doubtless felt that that his harmless pleasantry about tropical soil and Eastern imagination, followed by his blunt characterisation of the Under-Secretarial plea, had bounded back, like a curse come home to roost. Another Justice—Mr. Scott—came to his brother's rescue. Putting the best face on the matter, he was sure that Mr. Justice Parsons' only reason for leaving was that he did not wish to take sides in a controversy with Government. Not that he, Mr. Scott, was any more anxious to be enrolled on the bad books of the Government, but that Mr. Parsons was nervous. Mr. King was now himself again and concluded his speech as best he might. Every subsequent speaker alluded to the incident of the evening. Mr. Grattan Geary, in responding to the toast of "The Press," significantly remarked that it was a rule in all sound journalism not to use any language which would be out of order if uttered in the House of Commons, and that there was nothing in the remark of Mr. King—to which exception had been taken by Mr. Justice Parsons—to which either the Speaker or Sir John Gorst himself would, on that ground, dream of taking exception.

GURU GUNGA AICH must do penance in the felon's jail for the sin of calling a spade a spatie. The High Court (Mr. Justice O'Kinealy and Mr. Justice Trevelyan) has confirmed the conviction by the Magistrate and the sentence by the Zilla Judge, in the Dacca Prakash libel prosecution. We quote the judgment of the High Court:—

"O'Kinealy, J.—In this case the petitioner, Guru Gunga Aich Chowdhry, of Dacca, was convicted of the offence of defamation, and sentenced to one month's imprisonment with a fine. The case went on appeal before the Judge of Dacca, who upheld the conviction, and remitted the fine of Rs. 500. Subsequently the applicant obtained a rule in this Court calling on the other side to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside; and the ground on which the rule had been obtained, and indeed the only ground that had been argued in this Court is that there is no evidence on the record to show that the articles in question, although written, it is said, in extreme bad taste, would harm the reputation of Rup Babu. This question was discussed before the Judge in the Court below, and he found that there was evidence sufficient on the record to show that the statements in the articles would harm the reputation of Rup Babu. It seems to us difficult to understand how any person reading the articles could come to any other conclusion. We have considered whether it would be proper under the circumstances of the case to reduce the punishment, but no such application was made; and indeed, looking at the manner in which this case has been carried on from the Magistrate's Court, and even in this Court, it would be impossible for us to do so. Admittedly hardly anything could be in worse taste than these articles, and yet not a single word of apology, nor the slightest reason to show that any apology would ever be given by the accused, nor the slightest statement of any apology by the accused in reference to the articles, having been made. He fights the case on the high ground that he has committed no offence whatever. We think that the conviction and sentence should be upheld, and that the prisoner should serve out his time in jail."

The defence was mismanaged throughout. The editor was specially handicapped by financial difficulty. He has been woefully betrayed. Those whose mouth-piece he had been, deserted him at the first sound of danger. Those few who still sympathised with him and on whom he relied for assistance failed of heart and purse at the last moment. Whatever the lapses in the lower Courts, we had hoped for a proper presentation in the High Court. But the upper Judges were so convinced of the case for the prosecution or of the worthlessness of the defence, that they delivered their verdict, without calling upon the Advocate General, retained by the prosecution, to reply.

Off with his head—so much for Dacca town!

THE "fierce light" of the new Religion, it appears from a vernacular contemporary, has captured a young widow, Gyanada by name, of the village of Sahebganj, in the Burdwan district. Her husband died recently, leaving an infant son by another wife. Gyanada is full-blown and childless. Cherishing no affection for the child born of a co-wife, she felt doubly alone. So young and so unfortunate, she naturally hoped to find solace in the teachings of the gospel of liberty, equality and fraternity preached by some enlightened young men of the neighbourhood. She was sure of society, at any rate. The young men of light were not long in being metamorphosed into young men of leading. At last,

Dreadfully staring
Thro' muddy impurity,
As when with the daring
Last look of despairing
Fix'd on futurity,

she plunged into the embraces of a creed which recognizes no veil and is the home of the homeless and refuge of the forsaken. She was conveyed away, with all the moveables in the house, at dead of night, and lodged in one of the Homes in Calcutta. The matter has been brought into prominence by the institution of a suit in the Burdwan Court for restitution to the minor of the property removed from the house. The indignation of the relatives of the deceased husband takes this form, as the British Courts in their wisdom will not afford any relief for the abstraction of the widow, who is of age and competent to choose her own course of conduct, however revolting to true Oriental feeling.

KHAN BHADR Mahomed Yusaf, Messrs. J. E. Caithness, D. W. Madge, W. Craik and W. J. Simmons, Babu Sham Churn Law and Rai Bahadr Prem Chand Bural have ceased, by resignation, to be Honorary Presidency Magistrates. They are well out of it perhaps, considering the pass to which Government have reduced the office, but then the mischief is that their places will immediately be filled, possibly by a sorry lot, with all the attending ills to the town from a depreciation of the Police bench.

It is not perhaps known to the public that, while the exalted Stipendiary do not tarry beyond lunch, the poor Unpaid are confined volens from 12 to 5 O'clock.

MR. VENNING, Officiating Judicial Commissioner, of the Central Provinces, is of opinion that Tantia must be hanged. His reasons are:—

"Under any circumstances, dacoity is one of the gravest of crimes.

dation. We are glad, therefore, to see the Overland Mail, which cannot be accused of undue leaning towards native pretensions, give a quiet rebuke to the more unreasonable part of the British press in India. Says the O. M. :—

"We are rather sorry to see that some of the Indian papers are going to extremes against the unfortunate mamltdars. They blame the Government for proposing to keep as much of the promise made to these people as was not illegitimate. The Bombay Government agreed to keep them in office. That, it has been held by the Secretary of State, was not lawful. But we do not see how the Government can in honour refuse to give the men the utmost benefit of the promise, so far as it relates to a mere question of money. If the men cannot hold the offices, they are entitled to whatever income would have accrued to them in virtue of the offices, and that, we understand, the Government proposes to grant to them. It is bad enough to have been obliged to break the solemn undertaking of the Bombay Government, and the feeling expressed in India on the subject cannot be ignored, though it is to be regretted. If the dismissed mamltdars are generously dealt with, it should tend to convince the protestants that faith has been kept as strictly as the law and policy allowed. The mamltdars will still have just ground of complaint."

We have always been of the same view. We have no quarrel with the Government of India, any more than with that of Bombay. The latter have done all they could to keep their plighted word, and the former, in carrying out the behests of the Home Authorities, have made the best of a bad job. Nor are we prepared to attribute to the Secretary of State aught beyond an error of judgment in a subject of great difficulty. His arguments have considerable weight—his scruples are most honourable to him. He has undoubtedly acted in perfect sincerity for the good of the State and of the people. We, for our part, hold him ill-advised in making a needless case of conscience of the matter. We think him inconsistent in standing on punctillio with respect of some, while he lets off others. We can only lament the unfortunate decision arrived at by the Secretary in Council. It is a misfortune to the people whose interests are identified with the growth and character of British Rule, that British honour should be tarnished by a plausible taint or constructive speck. To us, who have to interpret the British to the races of the East, it is unutterably painful.

We have no personal interest in the fortunes of the Mamltdars—no sympathy for them beyond what all right-souled men should feel for men in distress, whether they be Hindu Mamltdars or British Commissioners. But truth is truth, and it gives us great pleasure to find the truth acknowledged in a paper known to be conducted by an eminent English man of letters. "The Mamltdars will still have just ground of complaint." And that is the simple truth. We pointed out how it was so, in our article of the 26th October. For all that, although we would gladly see the decision in the case rectified, we are, under existing circumstances, satisfied with the assurance of the Government that full monetary compensation will be paid for loss of appointment and prospects.

THE MOFUSSIL MUNICIPALITIES.

The Resolution of the Government on the working of the municipalities in these Provinces during 1888-89, is of more than usual interest. It clears up some doubtful points, and lays down a new policy in regard to the prosecution of sanitary measures. The details of administration also are not without interest. The number of municipalities has increased from 141 in the previous year to 147, and their income shows an increase from 29 lacs of rupees to nearly 30 lacs and a half. The municipalities included in the second schedule of the Act, numbering forty-six in all, which did not possess the privilege of electing their Chairmen were, in most cases, allowed to nominate their Chairmen, and the gentlemen so nominated were appointed by the Government. The official element in the constitution of these municipalities is steadily on the decrease. We do not know if the thorough depletion of the official element is as well as it is, but it is not at all satisfactory or creditable to those concerned to find the proportion of Europeans diminishing from nearly 23 per cent. in 1881-82 to about 9 per cent. in the year under review. Various efforts have been made to interest Europeans living in the interior in the affairs of the municipalities, with apparently little effect. Wherever they have been brought to these Committees, they have either soon tired of their connection with them, or otherwise proved failures. In Behar, indeed, the indigo-planters are reported to have supervised the execution of works in their neighbourhood, though they did not regularly attend meetings. The attendance, however, is the recognised test of interest, and, judged by that test, even against the Behar Europeans judgment must go by default.

There has been a rapid increase of income during the four years that the new system of Local Self-Government has been in operation. The increase is from Rs. 26,65,997 in 1884-85 to Rs. 30,49,772 in 1888-89. It is in the income from taxation proper that this increase chiefly shows itself, being derived principally from conservancy cess, that is, the latrine rate, and property and house tax. The increase, however, is far from being equally distributed over all the Divisions. Indeed, it was small or nominal in several Divisions, probably due to the tendency in the elective system to lower the rate of direct taxation and to look for increase from sources which did not touch the ratepayers directly. With this unfortunate tendency checked, the future development of the municipal income has, it would seem, not a bad prospect, although we should deprecate too fast running up house assessments among a population who normally live from hand to mouth.

The most important announcement contained in the present Resolution is that of a new sanitary policy. It relates to the subject of Government Loans to municipalities, for the promotion of sanitary improvements. There has been a change in the policy of the Government of India in this respect, and under orders of that Government dated 1st January 1889, loans will be freely granted to municipalities "for works of public and general convenience and utility, such as drainage and water-works, bridges and the like, but not for works which are merely or mainly ornamental or convenient, such as town-halls, public gardens or market places." Though these orders were passed in 1889, little or no effect could, for want of time and necessary preparation, be given to them in the years 1888-89 and 1889-90, but for the year 1890-91 a sum of Rs. 12,40,000 has been provided for expenditure upon works of sanitary improvement to be carried out by means of loans advanced by Government.

The most important schemes of sanitary improvement now in an advanced stage of preparation, which have already been under the consideration of the Government of Bengal, and which will be first taken in hand in furtherance of the new policy, are (1) The Howrah water-works (2) Howrah drainage (3) Sanitary survey of Burdwan (4) Drainage and water-supply in Culna (5) Drainage and water supply in Hooghly (6) Drainage in Serampore. There are similar schemes in a fair state of progress for the improvement of the municipalities of Midnapore and Bankoora. These are all works which, in Sir Stuart Bayley's opinion, cannot and ought not to be met from current income, and His Honor is prepared favorably to consider any loan applications which may be made by the municipalities concerned.

These orders will give a great impetus to sanitary improvement and, we fear, to local taxation as well. The great point is to devise systematic schemes of permanent utility and to lay out such large funds as will now be placed at the disposal of municipalities for their gradual accomplishment. What is now done is to fritter away the small funds which they can devote from the current revenue in partial works of drainage which leave no trace of lasting good behind them. In some municipalities, large sums of money are almost thrown away in this manner. A permanent establishment of coolies is always found employed upon the surface drains of important streets which, beyond giving a temporary appearance of spruceness to these thoroughfares, does little real good. They might be more usefully employed in the interior, but then these are sequestered places and no one would see the municipal activity there. This state of things should now cease. Instead of spending small sums of money in this ridiculous way, the Lieutenant-Governor suggests that funds should be accumulated by careful husbandry from current income with a view to undertake, in the first instance, the sanitary surveys of municipalities and the preparation of complete schemes. Towards this end, the new Sanitary Board, which has lately been sanctioned and which will now be constituted without delay, will be a great aid. When these schemes are ready, the municipalities have to apply to Government for loans. District officers are expected to interest themselves in furtherance of the new policy. The Sanitary Commissioner is already engaged in a systematic inspection of the metropolitan municipalities, and the Government expresses a hope that he will succeed in inducing them to co-operate with one another for the improvement of their sanitation. They should work together and not in isolation. The municipalities hitherto pleaded their want of funds, in extenuation of their failure to carry out large schemes of drainage and other sanitary improvements. This stock plea is now taken away, and they must now make up their minds boldly to embark upon a scheme of systematic sanitary progress, be prepared to incur loans, and add to their resources sufficiently to be able to pay up the interest as well as the capital in a fixed period. The Government will not contribute anything from Provincial funds in aid of such works. The Government Resolution is explicit on this point. It says: "Good water and good drainage cannot be obtained in any city for nothing, and the cost of defraying such sanitary improvements must be met in future by the municipal rate-payers, and can no longer be defrayed either in whole or in part, as has sometimes been done in the past, by funds levied by Government from the general public. It is precisely in matters of this kind that the distinction in the appropriation of funds raised by Provincial and local taxation should be rigidly enforced." We do not know whether it is contemplated to have recourse to additional taxation. Proposals of that kind are already in the air. There is talk of an education cess and of some other cess, probably a sanitation cess. However much we might feel the necessity of sanitary improvement, we must strongly disapprove of further taxation even for such a purpose. Existing resources are not incapable, by careful and economical administration, of providing the required funds. As it is, there is great deal of waste, and of corruption too in ministerial officers.

While fully alive to the failings of the new system of Local Self-Government, the Government and its officers generally speak favorably of its working on the whole. We may speak of the detailed criticisms made by the several Divisional Commissioners hereafter. In the meantime, we quote the concluding remarks made by the Lieutenant-Governor upon a review of the municipal year:—

"The views of the Lieutenant-Governor have already been sufficiently expressed in this Resolution. It is clear that good and honest work is being done in municipalities. Expenditure is annually increasing; large and important works of drainage and water-supply have been taken in hand, and are in various stages of progress, while in all departments there are signs of improved administration, and of the active interest taken by Municipal Commissioners in the duties entrusted to them. On the other hand, the failings which are inseparable from the working of all such local bodies are conspicuously evident. Personal jealousies and party strife are too common, and operate very prejudicially to the public welfare; there is a tendency on the part of Municipal Commissioners to benefit themselves and their own class to the exclusion of the poorer members of the community; there is a not unnatural reluctance, or timidity it may be called, in embarking on schemes of improvement until the necessity for expenditure has at last been forced upon the Municipality by outside pressure; there is an absence of that practical attention to details which can only be acquired by long experience in administrative work. These are deficiencies which time alone will remedy, but the results of the past year show that decided progress, slow in some places, but comparatively rapid in others, has been made. Municipalities not less than District Boards are in need of systematisation, and the remarks which have lately been recorded by the Lieutenant-Governor on the working of District Boards during the past year are equally applicable to municipal institutions. It appears that the establishment of a Local Government Board, somewhat on the lines originally contemplated, will soon become an administrative necessity in this province."

It is significant, and our Municipal Commissioners should take note of the fact, that as the Government Resolution is coming more and more explicit and plain in pointing out the failings of the new system, the Commissioners, but those who elect the Municipal Committees, set themselves in earnest to remove those causes which now hamper the work of these Committees. In all elective towns, there should be an organization of leading men to secure the election of only the right sort of men. The difficulty in this country is to get at the best men. The way in which Government nominations are made is also not always free from blame. Looking to the circumstances of this country, chiefly as regards the educational backwardness of several castes and classes of people, the franchise might also be raised to a higher limit.

SUBURBAN IMPROVEMENTS.

BABOO Cally Kissen Tagore, who is now living at his Baranagar garden house, has had his attention drawn to the unsatisfactory condition of some of the public roads in the municipality, and, with his usual liberality, has offered to contribute a sum of Rs. 6,300, being the amount estimated by the Chairman, Rai Bahadur Prasanna Kumar Banerjee, as the cost of macadamizing them. The offer has, of course, been thankfully accepted by the Municipal Commissioners, who, to mark their sense of the generosity of the noble donor, have resolved to name those roads, one after him, and another after his father, the late Baboo Gopal Lal Tagore. Baboo Gopal Lal Tagore and his no less renowned son have so long lived in Baranagar and been associated with its public affairs, that we quite approve of the action by its Municipal Commissioners in connecting their names with their town. The Baranagar Social Improvement Society with its public library and the vernacular and other schools of the town have, for years, received aid at the hands of Baboo Cally Kissen. It was also, we believe, principally through his assistance that the Anadaha Girls' School has been provided with a house of its own. The Dukhineswar Vernacular School owes its building to some extent to his beneficence. And now Baboo Cally Kissen Tagore has founded a devulay and dedicated one of his two country houses to the purpose, where poor people are fed every day. It is such unostentatious liberality that truly deserves recognition, and though Baboo Cally Kissen himself may seek no honor, the Municipality owed it to itself to honor him for the interest he has of his own motion shewn in its welfare.

The leading men of Baranagar, however, have started a new and a very good proposal in connection with the disposal of the sum offered by the Baboo. They suggest that advantage should be taken of a good round sum like this to supply a long-felt want of the town, namely, a public or municipal Town hall and office, with a room for the public library which, with its rich store of books, is going to waste from want of suitable accommodation. A handsome contribution like this is quite a windfall, so far at any rate as Baranagar is concerned, and such an opportunity is not likely to occur soon. The Municipal Commissioners should now use this sum as the nucleus of a fund for the erection of a municipal office building, with a little attempt at gardening, and, above all, with accommodation for public meetings and for the library. They themselves had contemplated creating a Sinking Fund for the purpose, and they have not, we believe, abandoned the idea. They might now supplement Baboo Cally Kissen's contribution with a contribution from the municipal Fund, and thus secure an object on which they as well as the general community seem to have long set their heart. Not that Babu Cally Kissen himself, if the matter were put before him in its just light, might not be disposed to give something more in aid of such an object. The mouths of the Commissioners in this connection are of course shut, but the public may well lay the matter before him. We hear it is proposed that some of the Commissioners with other public-spirited citizens of Baranagar, headed by the municipal Chairman, should wait upon Babu Cally Kissen Tagore on the subject. Indeed, Baranagar is not without its especial claims upon consideration. When, on the occasion of the simultaneous wedding of his two sons, large endowments were made for the promotion of education and other worthy objects, the Baranagar Social Improvement Society, through its then President, the late Dr. Waldie, did not fail to put in its claims for some suitable donation in aid of its work. Unfortunately, the amount of the allotment which Babu Cally Kissen had made for such charitable purposes had already been exceeded. Still, our friend's reply, intimating that he would be prepared to consider any practical suggestions which the Society might have to offer. The matter, however, was not pressed, in the hope that opportunities would turn up in future, when a suitable application should be made. Such an opportunity has now come, and as the provision of such a place where the local public could meet on even terms, and the library be accommodated, as well as the Municipality could have rooms and out-houses for its business, would be of the greatest advantage in the present state of Baranagar, the proposal has our heartiest sympathy, and we have no hesitation in recommending it to our eminent fellow-townsmen. By gratifying the wishes of the community, he would reap the blessings of all classes of the inhabitants of Baranagar and its vicinity.

GAMBLING IN TOWN.

Permit me to draw through your columns the attention of the Police Commissioner and the Bengal Government to the existence of a gambling house in Uriapara Lane, in the Padda Pukur Section of the Town. As usual, the house has been made the refuge of the Budmashes and the rowdies of the town. Monday before last, seven persons were arrested but they were let off on a technical plea. The nuisance shows no signs of abatement. Unless the higher authorities interfere the local Police will not be in a mood to exert in the matter.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Abscesses, Erysipelas, Piles.—Unvarying success attends all who treat these diseases according to the simple printed directions wrapped round each pot and box. They are invaluable to the young and timid, whose bashfulness sometimes endangers life. Though apparently local, diseases of this nature are essentially blood diseases, but a little attention, moderate perseverance, and trifling expense will enable the most diffident to conduct any case to a happy issue without exposing secret infirmities to any one. The Ointment checks the local inflammation and alleviates the throbbing pains. These directions also clearly point out when and how Holloway's Pills are to be taken, that their purifying and regulating powers may assist by adjusting and strengthening the constitution.

THE WILL OF THE LATE NAWAB SIR EKBAL-UD-DAULA, G. C. S. I.

[A Translation.]

In the name of God, the Most Merciful.

The principal, essential, and short but useful Wasiatnama (Will) of Ekbal-ud-Daula written in the hand and pen of Ekbal-ud-daula. At Garara (house) near Dayala (river) on the 9th day of Rabi-ul-awal, 1300. A. H. (18th Jany. 1883.)

This pamphlet is in my pen from its beginning to end. It should be read carefully and attentively, because I have written it in haste and in a fast hand. Those persons who are acquainted with my handwriting would read it faster and better.

In the name of God the Most Merciful, which is the best of names.

Pith of piths and abstract of my Wasiatnama.

The place of my interment shall be the outer or the inner underground room in my town house at Kazimain or the country house in the Sahra of Kazimain. I shall be interred, shrouded and washed on the Ina-ashbaria Shia principle professed by me, in the manner thought proper by Shaikh Mahomed Maksud Ali, or Shaikh Mahdi Abdul Ghafter of Kazimain, or Shaikh Mahomed Taki, son of Shaikh Hasan Shustari. The corpse shall be borne with dignity and honor. I shall be washed and shrouded by the hands of my habituated servants present, and not by the hands of others, who are strangers and have not standing. I shall be washed in my own house and not at any other place. The palace at Kazimain has no sweet water and no one gets there sweet water to drink, nor can it be brought from the stream. Hence I drop (the plan) of my being interred in that place. I shall be interred either in the outer or the inner underground room (vault) of my house at Kazimain, which is inside the city of Kazimain. The outer underground room is, however, better than the inner one, and it is by all means easy to inter me there.

The Sar Khadama (head servant) and vakil (agent) in respect of my domestic affairs and the attendants on my tomb, shall after me be Abul Hasain Kandhari and Khizr and his other brothers, and his son, generation after generation, and no other, provided each and every one of them be wise, able, accomplished, competent and efficient; that is to say, this post shall continue in the line of descent of Abul Hasan. Whoever shall be fit shall perform this duty properly and adequately. Inasmuch as this is a long line, some wise man will, at all times, be of course available. As Abul Hasan and Khizr are of old standing, experienced and tried persons, and know everything, good and bad, they can perform this duty; but God knows, which one of their descendants shall, after them, be wise and competent to discharge it. Abul Hasan and Khizr's remaining up to the day of my death in my service is also an important condition, and if it so happen that in my lifetime they be discharged from service, they shall be excluded and debarred from discharging the duties of agent, executor and head servant. Nawab Mirza Mahomed Hasain Khan and his children and brother will be quite sufficient to do the work without the co-operation and interference of any other. When the condition is gone, the object too for which the condition was laid is gone.

The British Resident at Bagdad shall, after me, be the agent (vakil), executor (Wasi) and superintendent in the affairs of my house, tomb, and testamentary injunctions (Wasaya), but with the superintence (nazarat), consultation (mashwarat) and accord (ittifak) of Abul Hasan and Khizr and their able and wise descendants, and Nawab Mirza Mahomed Hasain Khan of Arcot, in Madras, and Agha Mahomed and the other sons of the said Nawab and Mahomed Taki Khan, his brother, and no one else. The said Nawab, his descendants and brother will no doubt, for the sake of my long-standing friendship with him, accept to do this work, and, God willing, shall well perform it, in consultation and conjunction with Abul Hasan and Khizr. They will never fall out with one another.

The female servants of my Harem, black or white, shall each receive one thousand Rupees as present, and be allowed to leave after apologies are made to them on my behalf. They may go wherever they like. Only a reasonable and just request, out of foresight and prudence, shall be made to them to lead a life of chastity and modesty wherever they may live and not to do unlawful and bad deeds; because God has blessed lawful acts. They are female servants who have attended me at night in the same manner as male servants have attended me during the day, and are emancipated and free. They have no right upon me other than that of service done to me. I was obliged to avail myself of their services at night. It is necessary that they should be made to leave my house with great respect and decorum. Moreover, if it be possible, some of my old trustworthy servants should attend them for sometime and come back after seeing them to the places of their destination. The only thing I desire is their chastity, respectability and honor. They (the old and trustworthy servants) should exert themselves head and heart for them (female servants) and see them arrived with comfort and honor to whatever places they may like to go. Such places should, however, be places of due decorum and decency and not brothels, gaming houses and places of amusements. When they shall leave, great respect and honor should be shewn them by every body, because they have been the servants of my house and partners of my nocturnal retirement and have lived in my house with modesty and decency. They should after me leave my house and go wherever they like with modesty and decency. As for the rest, their luck is in their hands. Great respect is to be shewn them when they shall leave, as they have been my night attendants and confidants, and I also showed them respect on account of their being secluded and on account of my naturally kind and charitable disposition.

After me, the power of reducing and increasing the staff of servants and dismissing and appointing them shall be with Abul Hosain, Khezer, Nawab Mahomed Hossain and Agha Mahomed, who may dismiss and retain whomsoever they shall like. They should soon dismiss the supernumerary and unnecessary servants and give them their wages, because there is no need of a large number of servants after I am gone, especially of ashchi (cook), qahwa chi (coffee-server), sufra chi (table attendant), nawatir (watchmen), sais (grooms), &c. They shall retain the services of so many as may be necessary and needful, for running errands, for protection of the house and for attendance on my tomb. They shall dismiss those who are not fit to be retained. There are, however, several old servants of mine who should not during their life time be turned out of my house and excluded from attending my tomb, such as Sayyid Hosain Yazdi and Mahamud Khan Hindi. They are attendants, old and trustworthy, and it is not becoming that they shall, after me, go from door to door and be in want of bread. They shall remain in the house and attend my tomb so long as they are alive. If they go away and leave the service of their own accord, they are at liberty to do so. They shall get nothing. They are not much in want and have means. This order, however, does not apply to those who would go away during my life time.

All the three Armenian brothers who are in my service, should leave after me. They shall receive one month's pay from my purse as present and reward; because their work is to serve guests at table and they are also not very trustworthy and faithful; as also because if they remain, the work entrusted to Abul Hasan, Khizr, Nawab Mahomed Hossain and Agha Mahomed would be interfered with and not done properly. After me, they would not be of any service to me nor would they be of any use in attending my tomb, nor for any of all the other work above referred to. It is necessary and needful to dismiss and discharge them and they shall be forced and compelled to leave in the manner prescribed by me. They shall, on no pretext and excuse whatever, be retained as servants of my house; as after me, they would never be of any use to any. Their staying would cause confusion, mischief and disturbance. They are employed by me only to serve guests at the table.

From among the servants and other than servants who have been dismissed, discharged, expelled and discarded during my life time, not even one shall, after my demise, on any pretext and excuse or at the request or recommendation (of any one), be ever allowed and admitted in my house to do the work to be done after me, or have anything to do therewith; such as Allah Vardi and Yawar, both of whom have been expelled from my house, being found fault with and guilty of dishonesty, bad deeds and malevolence. They were faithless.

Among my present servants, some are bad characters, scamps, idlers, drones, thieves, worthless and dishonest fellows, and I pardoned them several times. It is not proper that servants like these should attend my tomb, and do other work. They should be discharged and dismissed. Whoever shall remain shall be good, respectful and decent and such as may be diligent, humble, of good character, and peaceful.

Abul Hasan and Khizr should be paid double the amount of the salary they used to receive in my life time, so that they may not steal, embezzle, and covet my property and that of others. The other servants shall get what they now get. On the other hand, their pay should be increased, if thought proper. So that they may not steal and give way to avarice. An adequate monthly allowance shall be fixed for one of the sons of Nawab Mahomed Hassain Khan so that he may devote himself to the service of my tomb. I hope that Abul Hassan, Khizr, Nawab Mahomed Hassain, Agha Mahomed, and the brothers of Agha Mahomed, will live in harmony and unity as brothers like milk and sugar and dispute and dissension never find their way among them. One is to help and assist the other, so that no interruption and disturbance may take place in the work to be done after me and in the arrangements of my tomb.

The account papers, and papers showing demands, as also the documents, deeds and muniments, &c., are with Khizr. Khizr knows where they are.

The inner and outer apartments of my house, in Bagdad and Kazimain are, by the grace of God and favor of Mustapha and Murtaza, replete with money in cash, things, precious stones, gold, silver, kiran (Persian coin), rupees, British and French sovereigns and Ottoman liras (gold coins) and innumerable furniture. There is no account or list of them. Those in the outer apartments are in the custody of Khizr and Abul Hassan, especially Khizr, who knows to read and write, and those in the inner apartments are in the hands of my female servants. They shall not steal and embezzle them. If they do so, they shall be made by force and threats to give back the things to the British Resident at Bagdad. The female apartments of my house at Bagdad and Kazimain are full of money in cash and things, as also the rooms in the outer apartments of my house at Bagdad are replete with all sorts of money in cash and things. But their number is not certain, nor is there any list of them. I have solely to depend on the honesty of my female and male servants. I am sure that the monthly allowance I get from the British Government will cease and be stopped on my death. I offer it as a present to the Government and it would constitute a saving of the Government. And I die without any to come after me, and without son, without heir.

A leathern bag always remains in my pocket. In it there are keys fitting all the locks. The Resident shall on my death take out that bag from my pocket. Should any of my servants dishonestly take it out he shall be responsible to and punished by the Resident. There will be no worse embezzler, nor a greater hypocrite nor a more faithless and deceitful creature than he. He shall be severely punished and dismissed immediately from my service for life.

My animals shall be sold at a just price but not by auction. Other superfluous articles of my house shall also be sold but not by auction. If they do not sell, they shall remain in their places, in a manner that they be not eaten by worms and rats. I do not like that one should go round with them and sell them, lest they form the subject of joke of friends and foes, and purchasers laugh and utter words, good and bad, becoming and unbecoming, and utrakibis (buffoons) crack jokes at them. None of my household furniture, books and pictures, &c., shall be sold. They shall remain in their places under the care of my senior head servant (Sar Khadama).

My age is now seventy three years. Money (charity) for prayers, fastings, Zakat and Kharas, &c., shall, according to the direction of Shaikh Mahomed Maksud Ali and Shaikh Mahdi Abdul Ghaffar, or Shaikh Mahomed Takhi, son of Shaikh Hasan Shustari, be given to real mendicants and beggars by Abul Hassan Khizr, Nawab Mahomed Hassan, Agha Mahomed, Agha Hassan and Nawab Mahomed Taki, so that the rightful persons may receive it and it may not be wasted and may not go into the hands of sleek Sheiks wearing huge and showy turbans and be swallowed up by them. Of course Shaikh son of Yasin, costermonger (bakkhal) of Kazimain, shall by no means interfere in or meddle with this work of mine, because he is not an honest man. The prayers I have said, the fastings I have done, the pilgrimages that I have made during my life time, are, to my view, not acceptable and useful and are of no avail to me, because they were defective, incomplete, meaningless, and perfunctory. God is kind acceptor of repentance and forgiver of sins.

After me, the duty of distributing wasaka (allowances) shall continue to be done and performed justly and conscientiously by Nawab Mahomed Hassan, and, after him, by his descendants and his brother as my agents; because I have come to know by experience and by means of trial that among all the Indian servants of and pilgrims to the exalted thresholds (the tomb of saints) there is no more and certainly no trustworthy and wise man than the said Nawab. This word of mine is not in a subdued and depressed tone but in a loud voice. It is clear as the sun to every one, high and low, that he is free from selfishness and self concept. Nawab Mahomed Hassain is a matchless man among his peers and equals, and among others, Agha Mahomed is also like him, that is to say, he is a son better than his father. The Resident at Bagdad shall allow the work of wasaka (distribution of allowances) to remain in the hands of the said Nawab and his descendants, especially Agha Mahomed and Agha Hassain, because both these youngmen are able, wise, and of rare ability. The Resident shall not lend ear to and believe any word uttered selfishly and interestedly by any one against them. There are many people, who, out of malice, envy, evil motive, dishonesty, and ill-feeling, are enemies of Nawab Mahomed Hassan and his children. No word of any one shall be given ear to and listened to. Such shall eat dirt and be unsuccessful. The Resident may hold this opinion of mine as worthy of approval and shall entrust the work of distribution of Wasaka to the said Nawab and his children. He shall not entrust it to any man other than the said Nawab and his children; because it will be spoiled and wholly spoiled as at the time of Ahmad Agha and Mahdi Hossain. Neither of them performed the work with honesty and integrity. Whatever they did, they did badly. It was wholly unfair. For distribution of the wadika there will be found no man in all and every way better qualified than Nawab Mahomed Hossain and his children.

I make an endowment of the property on both sides of (river) Bagdad and those at Kazimian and of the palace in Sahrai Kazimian and the house occupied by the Resident, &c. and the orchard and the palace Garara and other properties that hereafter may be purchased and built by me at any place, and the Karbalai Mualla, all and every one of them, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of my tomb and retaining the necessary servants. All those properties shall remain as they are and shall never be sold or mortgaged. The houses shall be repaired and the expenses in connection with my tomb and monthly salaries of a small necessary staff of servants and of my head servant shall be paid with the rents, the proceeds, and the usufructs of the same. The house at Kazimian shall be set apart for the residence of my servants and of the guardian of my tomb, and for their comfort and convenience I have made an endowment especially of the house occupied by the Resident for the purpose of defraying the expenses of my tomb, so that with the rent thereof the work prescribed by me may be done. None of my property shall be sold, mortgaged or granted in gift. They shall remain as they are. The servants appointed to keep watch and farsh, &c., shall remain in their places in the same way as they are in my lifetime. If a house be leased, let it be leased, if not, not. It shall remain in its place as it is, under the care of servants, head servant (sar kadama) and agents (wakala.)

The land in Makhtunia and Chahsalia is owned by me conjointly with two Arabs. It shall remain as it is and in its usual state for ever. It shall on no pretext and excuse go into the hands of X, Y and Z, especially into those of Pachachizadas who are never and by no means to get it. It shall remain in the ruinous state as it is till the end of the world. No one shall interfere with it.

The money in cash is already cash. The things shall be sold and converted into cash. The entire cash shall be invested in Government securities either in Calcutta or at Bombay and be in the hands of the Resident, &c. The expenses of my tomb and wages of servants of my tomb shall be kept in deposit either in Calcutta or Bombay, but the interest thereof shall be remitted to the Resident, &c. and my agents, and with it shall be defrayed the expenses required for my tomb, servants and head servant for ever and ever. My money in the Bank of Bagdad shall also be invested in Government securities, for the said purpose. My money in the Bank of Bagdad has evidently been misappropriated by Osmanli rogues. The Ottoman Government is security for this Bank. It is necessary that the Resident at Bagdad shall, through the British Ambassador at Constantinople, recover this money of mine in whatever way he can from the Ottoman Government and shall not give it no peace or rest. The account thereof is known to Khizr. The Resident shall not allow the scamps of Bagdad to stomach my money in the bank. Dishonesty in this had its origin in the directors of the said bank, members of the Committee and the Commissioners of Bagdad, who, through avarice for illegal gratification, advanced money to people without securities and exhausted the capital of the Bank and deprived me of my right. Indifference, negligence and avarice have been displayed in the matter by the Governors (Walis) of Bagdad. Each of them is stuck to the tail of the other (other's fraudulency). They unanimously stomach people's property and spoil the house of the world, the Sublime Porte taking no notice of hyenas and a dead body. The lethargic British Resident at Constantinople can manage to settle this affair if he has spirit, energy and courage. This lawful property of mine ought not to go for nothing. I made a mistake in entrusting it to the Ottoman Bank. It is easy for the Ambassador at Constantinople to realize this money either at Constantinople or at Bagdad itself. Only a warrant with order from the Sublime Porte with a strong and stringent Committee is required to realise the money. I am willing that an adequate portion of the said money be given to the Committee as present, reward of their labour and remuneration, so that it may, by means of cudgel, blows and rebukes, recover the said money from the Wali and the people of Bagdad. I have however to remark that the said Committee also might take bribe from X, Y, or Z all and every; say yes and aye and yes again and thus put an end to the matter. I am willing that five hundred or one thousand liras be paid to the Committee out of my money which is in the Bank and the work done. But I am aware that there are persons whose fathers are burnt (gone to hell) who would hold out temptation and offer bribes beyond measure; especially several Effendis, evil disposed, mean, cursed, fraudulent and deceitful. In fact, it was they who moved in the matter and spoiled it, that is to say, they began giving away money gratuitously by taking bribe and exhausted the capital of the bank. The Wali of Bagdad and the members of the Bagdad Council were always in awe of these people and had hopes of gain from one another. One lay under the obligation of another, and I a stranger and a fool, fell into this trouble. I empower the British Resident and my agents and executors to spend as much money (rishwat) in this matter, as possible and relieve my soul from the troubles of the Bank and the Ottoman bribe-giving and bribe-taking employes. I curse myself that I went in for it and put myself alive in difficulty. It is however easy for the British Government to realise the money from the Ottoman Government because I am connected with the British Government and my said lawful money is kept in deposit in the Bank of Bagdad. That the Ottoman Government is guarantee is put down in the pass book (Juzdan) issued by the Bank, which is with Khizr.

THE BENAZIR FAIR—
RAMPUR STATE.
NOTICE.

The annual Benazir Fair at Rampur will be held this year on the bank of the Kosi river, by the Rampur and Moradabad road, from the 24th to 30th November. Trades-people of all kinds have been invited with their wares from different parts of the country, and, besides the usual assortments of imported and other miscellaneous goods, special care will be taken to have some of the notable indigenous manufactures of the Province, as of Fatehgarh, Manikpur, Tilhar, Moradabad, and Rampur itself, amply represented. As an additional attraction, the Fair will this time combine an Agricultural and Cattle Show. The Director of Agriculture and Commerce has been asked to provide a set of farming implements, some of which will also be shown in working. The Cattle Show will include horses, ponies, mules, cows, bullocks, and buffaloes, and will offer a good opportunity to parties wishing to buy or sell such animals; the State itself being prepared to purchase a fair number to replace those that have become unserviceable. Fodder for cattle brought for show will be provided free of cost.

The tradesmen's stalls, and tents for visitors will form a well ordered camp, with due care for sanitation. For the amusement of visitors there will be a varied programme of wrestling, elephant and ram fights, military sports, &c., ending with the usual display of fireworks. European visitors will be very welcome, and will find every arrangement made for their comfort.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa which gives a graphic account of the ... in Independent Tipperah of broad views and work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following.—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight—"she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, a reflections on this or that moral and political subject are not a moral and political subject. Mr. Mookerjee, really a man of letters, to the "last of the Nawabs of Tipperah" and "the last of the Nawabs of Behar and Orissa": afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

AUTUMN.

[From Mr. Austin's "Love's Widowhood." *]

Now I who oft have carolled of the Spring,
Must chant of Autumn and the dirgeful days ;
Of windless dawns enveiled in dewy haze,
Of cloistered evenings when no sweet birds sing,
But every note of joy hath trooped and taken wing.

But when I saw Her first, you scarce could say
If it were Summer still, or Autumn yet.
Rather it seemed as if the twain had met,
And, Summer being loth to go away,
Autumn retained its hand, and begged of it to stay.

The second bloom had come upon the rose,
Not, as in June, exultingly content
With its own loveliness, but meekly bent,
Pondering how beauty saddens to the close,
And fair decay consumes each hectic flower that blows.

The traveller's joy still journeyed in the hedge,
Nor yet to palsied gossamer had shrunk :
Green still the bracken round the beech-tree's trunk ;
But loosestrife seeded by the river ledge,
And now and then a sigh came rippling through the sedge.

The white-cupped bindweed garlanded the lane,
Trying to make-believe the year was young.
Withal, hard-by, where it too clomb and clung,
The berries bryony began to wane,
And the wayfaring-tree showed many a russet stain

There was a pensive patience in the air,
As sweet as sad, when sadness doth but flow
From generous grief, and not for selfish woe :
Such as can make the wrinkled forehead fair,
And sheds a halo round love's slowly silvering hair.

And such She seemed. The summer in her mien
Had something too of autumn's mellow tone ;
A something that was more surmised than shown,
As when, though distant woodlands still are green,
Embrowning shadows seem half stealing in between.

THE LARK.

[From Mr. Austin's "The Owl and the Lark." *]

I thought the lecture somewhat long,
Impatient for its ending ;
When, sudden, came a burst of song !
It was the lark ascending.

Dew gleamed in many a jewelled cup,
The air was bright and gracious ;
And away the wings and the song went up,
Up through the ether spacious.

They bubbled, rippled, up the dome,
In sprays of silvery trilling ;
Like endless fountain's lyric foam,
Still falling, still refilling.

And when I could no more descry
The bird, I still could hear it ;
For sight, but not for soul, too high,
Unseen but certain Spirit.

All that the perched owl's puckered brow
H: I vainly bid me ponder,
The lark's light wings were solving now
In the roofless dome up yonder.

Then brief as lightning-flash,—no more,—
I passed beyond the Finite ;
And, borne past Heaven's wide-open door,
Saw everything within it.

Slow showering down from cloudless sphere,
The wanderer Elysian
Dropped nearer, clearer, to the ear,
Then back into the vision.

On his own song he seemed to swim ;
Diving through song, descended .
Since I had been to Heaven with him,
Earth now was apprehended.

O souls perplexed by hood and cowl,
Fain would you find a teacher,
Consult the lark and not the owl,
The poet, not the preacher.

While brains mechanic vainly weave
The web and woof of thinking,
Go, mount up with the lark, and leave
The bird of wisdom blinking.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—The combined ill effects of over-crowding, sedentary occupations and monotony of life are only too well known to those who have to pass the best part of their lives labouring in factories and crowded workrooms. The compulsory confinement weakens the general health and induces chronic constipation, indigestion, and various forms of skin diseases. Holloway's remedies are of priceless value to persons of this class, for they can be used without entailing loss of work, being purely vegetable in their composition, and consequently act without harshness on the most delicate system. The experience of more than forty years proves that no means surpass Holloway's remedies for curing bad legs, bad breasts, piles, and wounds of all kinds.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

THE choice of Sheriff for the next year has very worthily fallen on Mr. H. B. H. Turner, of Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. In Madras, Mr. Hingginbotham has been given another term.

THE Times of Dec. 3 states that the India Council has finally accepted the agreement concluded between the Nizam, the Deccan Mining Company, and the Concessionaires. Watson pays the Company £150,000 sterling and receives in return deferred shares upon which he will receive no interest until five per cent. is paid on the original capital. The right to prospect for coal is extended to the end of 1891. The Nizam is to have the perpetual right to nominate one Director.

The Nizam accepts the agreement in discharge of all claims against Watson and his colleagues, with the exception of Abdul Huq.

THE following sensational news was received by the last mail from London :—

"A terrible discovery has been made of infamous practices in a private club in the West End, and nearly one hundred members, chiefly aristocrats, are implicated. Over thirty warrants were issued: but arrests were not made on the understanding that the offenders would quit the country, which was done. Several officers in the Army have been compelled in consequence to resign their commission. The list of offenders includes an earl, the heir to a dukedom; the son of another duke, whose brother some years ago lost his seat in Parliament through a similar discovery; a peer, several honourables and a parson. The newspapers have not touched on the subject save for a slight allusion to it; but the matter is at present all the talk in the West End, and has caused the greatest distress in many aristocratic families."

MEANWHILE, we learn by telegraph that the Earl of Euston is prosecuting Mr. Parke, editor of the North London Press. On the 26th November,

"the Earl of Euston was examined, and said that a man in Piccadilly gave him a card announcing that poses plastiques were being held at Cleveland Street where he went a first and only time. The door of the house he went to said that no poses plastiques were being held and then made certain abominable proposals, upon which Euston left the house immediately. He, the editor of the North London Press, has reserved his defence and been committed for trial, bail being accepted."

For Tania! On the morning of Wednesday, the 4th December of Grace 1889, the Bheel was off even in the blossoms of his sin, house'd, disappointed, unanel'd; reckoning made, but sent to his account all his imperfections on his head, on the scaffold. Some of his relatives were admitted to the scene of execution. They refused to receive the dead body on account of the ignominious death. So he resigned himself body and breath to the vengeance of the British Justice which, for a murder ten years ago, executed the actual perpetrator, subsequently sent to the Andamans two accomplices and sentenced others to lesser terms, and now again made Tania end his career on the gallows. Does the ancient murder now stand avenged? The Jew of the Play could not be more exacting. Even the Pioneer is shocked. It remarks :—"To go back over these sentences and condemn another accomplice, after so long an interval, to the extreme penalty of the law, strikes us as an extreme use, if not an abuse, of the tremendous powers with which the judicial administration has been armed for putting down a dangerous and contagious offence, but not for vengeance." The Royal Prince now touring in India may well be amazed at the dead order which British arms and administration have imposed on the country. Why then should the "Dacons" of Burma have any quarter at all?

THE Criminal Sessions opened on Wednesday under the presidency of Mr. Justice Norris. The first case taken up was that of the boy John Jackson—a new arrival—charged with forgery, theft, and receiving stolen property valued at £1,000. The prisoner pleaded guilty and his Lordship sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for eighteen calendar months—a sentence, his lordship thought, not less than what he would pass upon any of Her Majesty's subjects of this country for such an offence. He trusted that he did not err on the side of leniency in passing the sentence.

The next was the Sooterkin's Lane shooting case. The Judge was not, as he said, unduly lenient, and mercifully treated the prisoner Thomas Lee Christie—a Volunteer—to 12 months' hard labor. He had pleaded guilty to attempting to murder two people—his wife Agnes and her grand-mother, Caroline Gore. His Lordship was disposed to treat the case as one of grievous hurt with a deadly weapon. The prisoner had returned home excited with drink, got hold of his rifle, loaded it with ball cartridge and fired at the two women in the passage. His Lordship did not think that the prisoner intended to do them any bodily harm or kill them.

For theft of Rs. 13-9-0 in a shop, Bhoobun Das Byragee—an old offender—who pleaded not guilty, was ordered 5 years' rigorous imprisonment.

Biddoo Bhooshun Ghose admitted having forged an application for the withdrawal of Rs. 50 from a Branch Post Office. His Lordship took time to consider the sentence, and the next day awarded the same punishment which he had the day before visited Jackson with.

Three more old offenders were sentenced to 5 years each, two to transportation for 10 years, and one to six months. The last wished that Justice Norris might be the Viceroy—apparently thinking he might do better in that office.

In a case of theft of Rs. 5, the Jury could not agree, being divided in the proportion of 5 to 4, the majority declaring in favor of the prisoner Jadoo Patro. His Lordship discharged the Jury, but, as the Englishman reports, "a sufficient number of persons not being present to form a new Jury, the old one was recalled, and his lordship re-read all the evidence for their benefit, when they returned an unanimous verdict of guilty. The prisoner was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment."

THE Hindus of Rampore Beaulah are woefully distressed at the act of the Lascar, of a steam packet belonging to the India General Steam Navigation Company at anchor off the town, slaughtering a cow for food doubtless. The "horrible news," as a correspondent of the Statesman calls it, flew like wild-fire. There was a general hurrying to the bank as if some great accident on the river had happened. At length, the Hindu population converged to the premises of the Dharma Sabha, where a great meeting was organised at which there was much wailing and indignation. Many propositions were offered, of which the principal ones formulated and carried by general acclaim were the following :—

"1 that all Hindoos of this town must fast this night, 2 that no Hindoo should drink the water of the river to-night, 3 that no Hindoo should send or receive his goods by this steamer, 4 that no Hindoo should be a passenger in it."

THE Calcutta Gazette notifies the appointment of Baboo Amerendro Nath Chatterjee, B. L., as an Honorary Presidency Magistrate for the Town of Calcutta. He had been too long overlooked.

STILL at the Commissioners! On Thursday morning, in reminding the public of the municipal meeting of that afternoon, the Indian Daily News calls it a registration meeting by the Municipal Commissioners.

THE Governor-General in Council has, from the 7th December 1889, extended the whole of the Indian Salt Act, XII of 1882, excepting the portions thereof specified in the second paragraph of section 1, which are already in force, and section 31, to the Municipal Calcutta.

THE examination for admission to the Mechanical Apprentice Department of the Civil Engineering College, Seebpore, comes off on Monday and Tuesday, the 20th and 21st January 1890. Candidates must apply by the 10th January at the latest, and be of the age between 15 and 17 years. Before being admitted to the College every applicant will be medically examined, by the College Surgeon, as to his physical strength, fitness for manual labour, and eye-sight. There will be one vacancy on the free list for Christian apprentices in February next, and twenty-two on the reduced fee (Rs. 5 per mensem) list. For natives, at least two vacancies, possibly more, are expected on the reduced (Rs. 2) fee list. The patronage for filling up the vacancies rests with the Board of Visitors. Who are the Visitors? Do they visit the College? Or, leave everything to the Principal?

A CORRESPONDENT says that

"a vacancy has lately happened in the Jeypore Appellate Court by the promotion to a membership in the Jeypore Council of Baboo Mohindro Nath Sen, one of the judges of the Appellate Court, Jeypore."

THE Indian Press is full of Alcohol. The Teetotallers had hitherto the field all to themselves. But now the camp of Bacchus is up. The readers of the Statesman in especial had been quite sickened with the thin dilutions of the Rev. Mr. Evans and other doctors of the Water Cure. Acting on the principle of audi alteram partem, our contemporary, however, has opened its columns to a fair discussion, and the challenge has been accepted. Some excellent letters have appeared. One correspondent draws attention to an elaborate inquiry made not long ago by the leading society of medical investigators.

"The British Medical Association appointed a committee to inquire into the effects of drinking spirituous liquors, upon the duration of life, with a view to determine whether it retarded or promoted longevity. The committee, it seems, ascertained the ages at which some 4,234 people died, and classified them under five different heads, giving the average age attained by each class. I shall, with your permission, reproduce the figures placing them in an ascending scale so as to enable your readers to judge of the table at a glance:—

	Average age.
	Years.	Days.
Total Abstainers	51	22
Decidedly Intemperate	53	3
Free Drinkers... ..	57	59
Careless Drinkers	59	67
Habitually Temperate Drinkers	63	13

This table is most instructive so far as it goes. It not only destroys the hypothesis of alcohol being a poison—for it would be a curious phenomenon if those who abstained altogether from poison were shorter-lived than those who used it even to excess—but it shows that its natural tendency is to lengthen life. Even the theory that spirituous liquors are good as physic only and not as food, is insufficient to account for the facts set forth in the above figures. If there is any meaning in them, and any reliance to be placed on statistics, they show that longevity is promoted by the regular and moderate use of alcohol."

That is startling, in all conscience. But the writer is far too able and honest to take unfair advantage of his facts.

THE same writer points out that "the comparison is not made as between two classes merely, viz., Total Abstainers and Drunkards; but that it embraces every grade of drinkers; and the truth holds all along the scale that while the misuse of liquor tends to shorten life, such shortening is due altogether to such misuse, varying with the degree in which it is misused; while per contra the habitual use of it in moderation promotes longevity. In a word, the table demonstrates that wine is useful not merely as physic but as food. When taken in moderation with our regular meals—not before or after, and in the way that a cup of tea or coffee is taken, in a fixed quantity never exceeded, it serves as an article of diet, as truly as the corn with which it is constantly associated in Holy Writ. The fact is that alcohol is one of the 'many things' which, according to Shakespeare, —

"By season, seasoned are,
Unto their right praised and true perfection."

ANOTHER writer follows up. But we have space only for his postscript, which, as in a lady's autograph, is the most important. It contains his personal testimony.

"Those who have taken to alcohol early are the least affected by it. I am told that during the opening months of my existence I was not only given to alcoholic stimulants, but even basted in brandy and water, and I am at present I think a somewhat fair specimen of humanity."

GOOD news of even a subjunctive kind is welcome. A Mr. Porter of Nottinghamshire has left Mr. Bradlaugh by will £1,000, if the sturdy Atheist, who has surmounted so many difficulties in his rugged path, and outlived a hundred elaborate calumnies, can survive the testator's widow.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE Viceroy's Levée comes off on Tuesday next at 9-30 P.M. The Drawing Room of the Viceroy and the Marchioness of Lansdowne has been fixed for next Friday at the same hour.

THE explorer Stanley, who was at one time given up for lost, has arrived at Zanzibar. Both he and Emin Pasha had reached Bagamoyo on the 4th instant. There a sad accident befell Emin. The cause has not been satisfactorily explained. It is reported that, owing to his defective eyesight, miscalculating the height of the parapet of the balcony of the house where he was staying from the ground, he walked out of the window and fell twenty feet. Blood oozed out from his ears and his body was terribly bruised. It is doubtful whether he will survive this fall, though these explorers are, in every sense, tenacious of life. In any case, both Stanley and Emin have secured immortality.

BABOO Nandalal Bose, who may be said to be the author of the new provision in the municipal law regarding assessment of residential houses, has not succeeded in his contention in the Small Cause Court, as to the interpretation of Section 122. The ground attached to his house has been let out and he contends that they, being so transferred, form no part of the house, at any rate, for purposes of assessment. The Chairman of the Corporation held that, not being separately numbered, the lands could not be separately assessed. The law says "the annual value of any house not built for letting purposes and not ordinarily let shall be 5 per cent. on the sum obtained by adding the estimated present cost of building the house less a reasonable amount to be deducted on account of depreciation, if any, to the estimated value of the land valued with the house as part of the same premises." The municipality has assessed the house, allowing for depreciation at 10 per cent., at Rs. 82,000. Eight biggahs of land attached to the house, have been valued at Rs. 51,000. The total therefore comes up to Rs. 1,33,000, and 5 per cent., the annual valuation for purposes of assessment of Rs. 6,650. Mr. Acworth, on behalf of the Baboo, contended that the Chairman had proceeded on a wrong that he had separated the house from the land and estimated which the land might fetch if put up for sale in the market; had estimated the value of the land 'valued with the house,' and would probably have been much smaller, for to remove the house cut away the materials would cost a large sum of money; that from the house the land could only be assessed under the first part of the section upon its gross annual rental which could be shown to be very small, the land being actually let under a lease, and that as to the land the Chairman should be directed to assess it under the first clause of section 122 on the gross annual rent at which the land might reasonably be expected to let from year to year."

Mr. Dunne, on behalf of the Corporation, replied that—

"the words 'valued with the house as part of the same premises' were simply descriptive. They pointed to the land, the value of which, as part of the same premises with the house, it was sought to ascertain. That the object was to ascertain what capital the premises—house and land together—might reasonably be taken to represent for the purpose of imposing rates under section 101 upon the 'gross annual value' which, at 5 per cent. such capital would return."

The First Judge, Mr. G. Sance, is of opinion that—

"section 122 of the present Act II of 1888 clearly lays down two methods of assessment. First, upon 'land or houses built for letting purposes, or ordinarily let' the annual value of which can be readily ascertained—the assessment is to be on the gross annual value. Second, as to premises not ordinarily let, the annual value of which can not for that reason be readily ascertained, the annual value was to be arrived at by ascertaining what amount of capital at its market value, the 'premises,' house and land, might reasonably be taken to represent, and taking 5 per cent. on that capital. Under section 88 of the old Act IV of 1876, it was enacted: 'The Commissioners shall . . . impose upon all houses and land within the town the following annual rates which shall be calculated on the annual value of the said house and land.' But no method was provided by which the annual value of premises not readily ascertainable, because not ordinarily let, should be ascertained. That was the defect in the old Act which the new Act was intended to remedy. In the case of Nundo Lal Bose vs. the Corporation for the Town of Calcutta, I. L. R., 11, Cal. p. 275, the Assessor to the Commissioners thus described the principle upon which he had rated the premises 65, Bag Bazar Street (see page 279 of the Report). After stating that the house and premises in question form the joint-family dwelling house of the applicant, and that it is difficult to determine what is a reasonable rental for such houses, which are built not with a view to letting, but for the residence and convenience of the owners, he goes on to say: 'In assessing the said premises No. 65, Bag Bazar Street, I estimated the total expenditure on building and land at Rs. 1,80,000, and assessed the gross annual rent at which the said house and premises might reasonably be expected to let from year to year at Rs. 4,800, being at the rate of 2½ per cent on the said sum of Rs. 1,80,000.' The Judges (Garth C.J., and Wilson J.) said (page 181): 'It is of course no part of our duty to say how such valuation should be made; but they held the method adopted for the purpose of ascertaining the annual value of the house and land was not within the powers of the Commissioners, and therefore illegal. It seems to me impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that the Legislature intended to provide and legalise (as to premises the annual value of which is not readily ascertainable) a method of assessment which had been held to be illegal. The Assessor must arrive at the capital or market value of the premises, by adding the estimated present cost of building the house (less reasonable reduction for depreciation) to the estimated value of the land if put up for sale as part of the same premises with the house, or as the Act puts it, at the estimated value of the land valued with the house as part of the same premises.' Five per cent. on the capital so ascertained is to be taken as the gross annual value of the premises for the purpose of imposing rates. In my opinion, the assessment made on these premises by the Chairman follows in its method both the spirit and the letter of the law, and this appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.'

The Judge would have preferred, in the interest of the public, to make a reference to the High Court, but he did not find his way to it, for the Act gave him no power on that behalf.

In the mixed jungle of Indian Law and English Precedents, the disappointed suitor with an adequate purse may discover a technical way denied to the ingenious ingenuity of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court. If possible, the matter will be brought up before the High Court—though it be but to fill the pockets of the accommodating gentlemen of the long robe. And then Mr. Acworth, who complained, not without reason, that his argument was not accurately represented in the judgment, may have an opportunity of the hearing of a superior audience than he has yet obtained. The judgment is obviously disappointing. The case was a test case of great importance to the citizens of the metropolis. Baboo Nandlal Bose, in fighting for himself, is also fighting for his fellow-ratepayers. Such a judgment is clearly inadequate under the circumstances. Mr. Acworth raised a question of interpretation of the law of that section of the Municipal Consolidation Act (Sec. 122) by which an official legislature gave up the wealthy native citizens who live in their own houses, a so great a stake in the city, to slaughter for presuming to sue their houses. That question, with the nice distinction of counsel in the connection, was simply avoided in the sentence. In the bench as in the field, discretion is the law of valour.

Rakshas has come from the West. He is a German. His name is Dr. Selanka. He is exploring the forests of the Indian Archipelago and of other islands of the Indian Ocean in search of the "missing link" or proof to the contrary, namely, that there never was any link to miss, that in fact there is no affinity or connection whatever. Professor Selanka, in fact, is a Naturalist, who, having studied Darwinism at home, has come all the way to put it to the test of observation and facts. He has naturally been to those great equatorial islands, rich with the abundance of Tropical Nature, in the heart of whose wilds, while Charles Darwin was at it at home, putting together his experiences and collections of the scientific voyage of the Beagle, and crossing pigeons, to verify his immortal inspiration, another brother in science received the same revelation of the relations of the animal kingdom and indeed discovered that touch of Nature which makes the whole world kin. There, in the footsteps of the veteran Alfred Wallace, he has been prosecuting his researches. Dr. Selanka is a capital shot and a horrible butcher. In Java alone, he killed and dissected a thousand monkeys, besides no end of other animals. He is now come to the Land of the Rakshases of the East—the Lanka of the Indians and the Taprobane of classic Europe. Here he has been in Kandy, Newara Elyag, Ratnapura and Anuradhapura. Here too, doubtless, he has been doing execution worthy of Meghad himself among the Simian tribes which annoyed Ravana the Great. We leave him to the mercies of Hanuman the Great and of Rama in the next world.

EARLY last month, a native marriage took place at Colombo which was the talk of local society. To us on the Continent, it is worthy of notice for the evidence of cordiality subsisting between natives and Europeans which was given on the occasion. The bridegroom was Mr.

Tiruvilingam, Deputy Fiscal of Colombo, son of Mr. Hallock Mudelyar of the Custom House, Jaffna, and the bride, Miss Swarnam, daughter of Mr. Sankara Pillai, Banian to Messrs. Volkart Brothers. Mr. Pillai is a wealthy man and expended liberally. Sarna Villa, his residence near the Kachari, was the scene of much festivity for more than a week previous to the Monday on which the ceremony of uniting the gentleman and lady, called tilit in the Island, was held. The parties are Tamils and Hindus, and Sankar Pillai gave away his daughter to the young Mudelyar according to the sastras. On a subsequent evening, he gave a party to the European community. It was a Natch and supper at Sarna Villa which was fitted up for the occasion regardless of expense, in a style of gorgeous Oriental magnificence. The native music was much appreciated. The band of the Colombo Volunteers also played. Besides the dining and reception rooms, one room was set apart for the native ladies; in the midst of them the bride in blushing beauty was seated in state. The ladies of the clan Mudelyar mustered strong. There was Mrs. Rama Nathan, Mrs. Bristo and many others. Over them all presided the venerable mother of the lamented Sir Coomara Swamy. At 10 O'clock, the European and Christian guests, numbering over sixty, sat to an elegant supper.

THE papers are quoting from a small publication of Cassell & Co.'s an account of Scanderberg at the court of Amurath II., Sultan of the Turks. George Castriota, prince of Albania, born in 1414, was delivered as a hostage to the Turks by his father the King. He was remarkable for beauty, stature, and daring, and was a Hercules in strength, and withal most expert in athletics and military exercises. The most astonishing feats are reported of him, throwing into the shade those of the "fearless De Courcey," Lord of Ulster, of English history, and indeed all the performances in the profane records of all ages and countries. Thus, he came to receive the name of Iskander, the Oriental form of Alexander, whence Scanderberg. The most extraordinary virtues were naturally ascribed to the weapon he used, as to Arthur's Escalibur and to Roland's Durandar. Sultan Mahomet II. was foolish enough to request the hero for the present of his sword. With characteristic magnanimity, Scanderberg readily parted with his trusty blade. But it was of no use to anybody else. The Sultan was overjoyed at the gift. He lost no time to examine it, but was disappointed. It was nothing particular. He had many as good and not a few better. But there was no trusting appearances, so he set to try it. It then turned out to be a commonplace instrument. He saw no use in detaining such a useless object. Why should he be under obligation for so trumpery a gift? He returned it to its owner. Scanderberg received back his own with a smile, but he did not dismiss the bearer before he had astonished him with some extraordinary cutting performances with the weapon condemned by imperial wit. As the envoy was about to depart, the hero imparted to him the secret, for the behoof of his royal sovereign and master and his own liege. "Tell his Majesty the Sultan with my best complements," said he, "that though Iskanderberg had gladly sent him what his Majesty had asked for and what only he could give—his sword, the arm that alone could wield it to any purpose was left behind."

THE good Protestants of England are amusing themselves with the following piece of anecdote:—

"Maria Theresa of Austria was greatly addicted to gambling, and played for exceedingly high stakes. The court functionaries did all in their power to overcome this passion, but to no purpose. They finally appealed to the empress's confessor, who induced the imperial gamester not to give up cards, but to play for only a kreutzer a point. The cunning empress, however, ordered her jeweller to make her one hundred kreutzers in a peculiar manner, so that each one could be opened in the middle and a ducat inserted. The two pieces were put together, so that only the initiated knew that they were not what they seemed. Thus the empress kept the letter of the confessor's demand, and at the same time enjoyed the excitement in which she delighted."

That reminds us of the trick of 'cute Hindus on absolute fast on the Day of Siva deceiving the god by diving in their bath and drinking of the water below the surface. But there is no deceiving the gods, whether Hindu or other, as everybody with any sense knows. Frivolous-minded as women may be, they are all religious and sincerely pious. It is a libel on the sex to suppose that so excellent a woman as Theresa should, in her madness for gambling, trick her own confessor and trifle with Religion itself. If she went so desperately wrong, she would find herself deserted in her own Court. The story now exhumed is of a piece with the mass of scandal about Courts and aristocracy by ex-valets and filles de chambre and shady Persons venues, the sanctioned amount of which stands at about 4 lacs yearly. Besides the Provincial grants, large sums have been assigned to certain Boards by the P. W. Department for the maintenance of provincial roads transferred to their charge.

It is a great advantage and no small relief to the Boards that the Road Cess, which is the main stay of the District Fund and which is levied at the rate of half-an-anna in the rupee on the gross rental, is realized by the Collectors of Districts and credited to the District Fund after deducting costs of collection. These Collectors being also the ex-officio Chairmen of the District Boards, this arrangement is only natural. Of the Road Cess, the resolution speaks hopefully "as a source of revenue which will expand slowly but strictly in consequence of the increase in the valuation which from time to time is effected in all districts. The normal increase is estimated to be Rs. 30,000 a year for the whole Province." The pounds and ferries were under the direct administration of the Boards, and the Lieutenant-Governor expresses himself as on the whole satisfied with their work in this respect, although, as in the executive administration of the finances in municipalities, marks of weakness are sometimes apparent. Successful revenue administration is the test of efficiency, and it is too early as yet to say how far these local bodies will be able to stand this test. Considering the large variety of objects to which the District Fund is devoted, it is always felt to be insufficient, and the question is often raised whether permanent additional grants should not be made by the Government to enable the Boards to cope with the increasing demands upon them. On this point, the present resolution contains a liberal, though necessarily guarded, expression of Sir Stuart Bayley's opinion. He says:—"If financial considerations permit of any additional permanent grants being made to District Boards, the Lieutenant Governor is satisfied that the transfer of ferry receipts [i. e., the portion of them not made over to local bodies] is the best method of making them, and he will be glad, if it should be in his power hereafter, to assist the working of Local Self-Government organizations by conceding to them the whole of these receipts."

Turning to expenditure, the largest item is, of course, Public Works, and the next in importance is education. On these the major portion of the receipts was spent, namely, about 35 lacs on the former, and ten lacs and a half on the latter. The total expenditure under the head "Medical" is only about Rs. 20,000, and even this is a considerable improvement upon the expenditure in the previous year, which stood so low as about Rs. 8,000. The resolution makes an important observation on this subject:—

"It will be seen from this account that the responsibilities imposed and expenditure incurred by District Boards in regard to medical institutions are inconsiderable. An outlay of only Rs. 25,000 in Bengal is represented by more than two lakhs in Panjab and about three lakhs in Madras. Among other changes which may be contemplated in the administrative functions of local bodies in Bengal, it seems desirable that steps should be taken to assimilate their duties to those undertaken by similar bodies in other Provinces in the Medical Department. But if their powers are to be enlarged in this direction, the change must necessarily be accompanied by an increase in the resources placed at their disposal."

The Lieutenant-Governor is dissatisfied with the administration of the educational grants by District Boards. In many districts, the number of primary schools has decreased, owing, among other reasons, to the Boards' neglecting to expend the whole of the sums in their hands for the management of primary education. There has also been a disposition to favor middle schools at the expense of the primary schools. Evidently, the most outrageous instance of neglect in this respect occurred in the Midnapore District. Here the District Board in a manner avenged their disappointment at the Government having refused to increase the grant from Provincial Revenues on account of ferries by "charging the whole anticipated loss of income to the grant for primary education." This is strongly condemned, and it was, indeed, as the resolution says, highly improper, instead of rateably distributing any retrenchments that were found to be necessary, to enforce the whole reduction on the one grant which it was the least desirable to reduce. Other districts are found to have made savings out of the allotments for primary education, instead of spending the whole of them, the total of such savings, as reported by the Director of Public Instruction, being no less than Rs. 70,000 in round numbers. Strict orders have been given for fully and properly expending the grant placed at the disposal of the Boards for primary education.

The position of the Deputy Inspector of Schools under the Local Self-Government Act is, as the Director of Public Instruction reports, apt to be anomalous and uncomfortable. His suggestions often meet with neglect at the hands of the District Boards, and, in consequence, he is not as much respected by managers and masters of schools as he used to be. The Director says: "Misunderstandings must necessarily arise. I have already referred to Mr. Bellet's opinion that the Deputy Inspector should be an official member of the District Board. This is probably the best solution of the problem, and this is the more necessary as the District Board obviously cannot devote much of its time to educational business." This proposal is accepted by the Government, and where Deputy Inspectors have not already been appointed members, they will now be at the first opportunity. District Boards are also enjoined to see that no friction arises between the Boards and the officers of the Education Department.

The friction between educational officers and the District Boards does not represent all the conflict of authority which interferes with the even working of the system. There are similar differences between the District and Local Boards in regard to the expenditure on roads. The Local Boards naturally claim larger allotments for village roads than the District Boards are willing to give, and much discontent is caused when these claims are not adequately responded to. General dissatisfaction consequently prevails in the rural areas with respect to the administration of the Road Cess Fund, towards which they have been contributing from the first. This dissatisfaction would be more accentuated if with the establishment of Union Committees in the villages, which it is now proposed to supply, larger assignments for village roads were not made. Sir George Campbell, while Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, issued a Proclamation, directing that a fair proportion of the proceeds of the Road Cess should be apportioned for the petty roads in the districts. Every taxpayer was thus to be encouraged and invited to claim that the tax should be fairly applied to the village roads and local paths and water channels in which he was interested. The object of this policy was to popularise the Cess, and although Sir Stuart Bayley adheres to the spirit of these orders, he is clearly of opinion that some modification of them is called for in their practical application. The Lieutenant-Governor's views are set forth with great force and clearness as follows: "It has been repeatedly declared that it is very desirable to make a liberal allotment for the construction and repairs of village roads which is a matter of the first convenience not only to the influential residents, but to all the inhabitants of the villages affected. Road Cess Funds are to be expended for the benefit of the localities concerned, and nothing is more calculated to popularise the administration of this Department than to show the villagers who pay the tax that their local interests are not neglected. On the other hand, before village roads can be of much use, there must be a system of main arteries through the district, without which village roads will fail in their main purpose of connecting villages with larger markets. It is not right that an excessive proportion of the cess funds should be devoted to village roads—and what is an excessive proportion must be determined by the circumstances of each district—but it is desirable that the allotment should in all cases be as liberal as the circumstances will permit." The principles herein indicated are unexceptionable, and are characterised by thorough grasp of the question and equal regard for all interests concerned. These principles have now been acted upon in most districts, and what alone is complained of, is that in giving effect to them, system and organization have been unduly neglected, and Sir Steuart Bayley regrets that there is not more careful control over the expenditure on village roads than is now exercised over it. There is a proposal of scheduling the village roads, and it is also considered expedient that no village road should be undertaken except with the approval of the District Engineer, and that the execution of the work should be subject to his inspection and control.

In regard to sanitation, very little progress was made during the year, and, as in education, the sums which were provided for sanitary improvements were either not utilized at all or only partially expended. These results are considered to be very unsatisfactory, and strengthen the argument for the establishment of the Union Committees. "The importance of the village organization," as the Government of India observes, "is an essential element of success in sanitary improvements in rural areas," and Sir Steuart Bayley has called for the opinions of the Divisional Commissioners with a view to the early establishment of such an agency.

Passing over other heads of expenditure, which, judging from the expenditure incurred on them, do not call for any remarks, we conclude with quoting the Lieutenant-Governor's remarks on the general working of the scheme:—

"Upon the whole the Lieutenant-Governor considers that the results of the year's administration amply justify the remarks with which he closed last year's report. He then wrote:—'Sir Steuart Bayley's opinion is that when we have found in some instances considerable success, and in no instance failure; when we have to some extent awakened public interest and enlisted public spirit without impairing efficiency in administration; and when the majority of district officers are working in cordial sympathy with the local bodies, it may fairly be said that the first experience of the measure gives good promise of its satisfactory establishment.' The working of District Boards during the past year has not been devoid of blemishes: the defects have been pointed out in this review; but generally speaking it has been satisfactory. As a rule the interest taken by the members of a Board in its working is great: the attendance in many districts is creditable, and there is a praiseworthy desire to aim at successful administration. On the other hand, there are signs in some cases of timidity; in others of inexperience in the transaction of public business; in others of the undue subordination of public to private purposes; and in many instances there is an unwise tendency to excessive interference with the executive in professional questions. These defects are indeed not peculiar to District Boards in Bengal, but are inherent in every system of Local Self-Government in all countries. They are far more than compensated by the advantage of entrusting the management of local affairs into the hands of those who from the nature of the case are most permanently interested in its success. Local Self-Government in Bengal is still in its infancy and awaits development in all departments, but it promises well. What appears to be now chiefly needed is more organization and opportunities for advice, encouragement, and, where necessary, supervision and control to be exercised by a higher authority with larger experience and observation of the working of Boards throughout the whole Province and in other Provinces of India than can now be supplied by Magistrates and Commissioners, who are absorbed in their own work of administration, and cannot discharge the functions which would properly devolve on a Central Board with an official President at its head. It is impossible for the Lieutenant-Governor to directly undertake these duties, and he apprehends that the constitution of such a Board of control as was originally contemplated when the scheme of Local Self-Government was first introduced into Bengal will soon become an administrative necessity. The resources of District Boards call for further development; their assets are at present altogether insufficient to meet the responsibilities which properly devolve on such bodies, and are fulfilled by District Boards in other parts of India. The administration of Public Works, of Education, and especially of the Sanitary Department calls for more direct supervision and guidance than the Local Government is able to give, and if Local Self-Government in Bengal is to receive its proper expansion, it will, in the Lieutenant-Governor's opinion, be necessary to supplement the district working of local bodies with the assistance and support and capacity for organization which a central authority with leisure and ability for such a task will alone be in a position to afford."

The Local Self-Government Board is likely soon to be established as the controlling authority over the District and Municipal Committees in the Province. A Sanitary Board has already been appointed, consisting of the Junior Member of the Board of Revenue, the Sanitary Commissioner, and an official Engineer. Union Committees are about to be supplied as the unit of Local Self-Government in the districts. The establishment of a Local Self-Government Board is intended to make the machinery complete by itself, and whatever objections to the measure may exist on the score of the additional expense it will involve, it cannot be doubted that it will supply one valuable element of success in the administration which is now wanting under the control now exercised by District Officer, namely, unity of principles and of organization as applied to all districts and municipalities.

THE WILL OF THE LATE NAWAB SIR EKBAL-UD-DAULA, G. C. S. I.

[A Translation.]
[Concluded from p. 550.]

During the rule of Najib Pasha, I built an underground hall in the rawak (corridor) of the Bakai Sheerif at Kazimain exclusively with my own money, and my son and wife are buried in it, and my men and servants are appointed for illuminating and sweeping it. When Suraija Begum died, I simply for the sake of my friendship with Ahmad Agha and Suraija Begum reluctantly consented to Suraija Begum being buried in that place, namely, the said underground hall. After me, no one shall be allowed to be buried in the said underground hall, and my agents shall not allow any one to be interred there. The Resident shall take charge of this and see that no one else is interred there. The arrangements made by me in respect of servants and illumination shall continue after me.

My tomb and all the furniture, fittings, appurtenances and paraphernalia of my tomb shall be as of Kings as to illumination with European candles, cheerags, lamps, gas, naphtha, and hangings, pendants, ottos, incenses, rose-water, keorab, farash, servants, readers, sweepers, readers of the Koran, water carriers, supervisors, head servant especially appointed to look after my tomb, &c., &c. These things should be to a proper extent, rather, a little more. Coffee, hooka, sherbet, tea, cigarettes, rose-water and Arak-i-bahar shall be given to persons frequenting and visiting my tomb and reading Fatiha there, as in my life time. These arrangements, &c., and these large endowments are made simply and especially for this that my tomb may for ever be ornamented and look grand like the tombs of kings, that all the expenses connected with my tomb be made liberally and profusely and that the fame of my tomb may last and continue in this world like the fame of my name, and that my tomb may not look like the grave of poor men and uncared for as the graves in a common burial ground. I am very fond of decoration and ornamentation of a grave and of respect shown to the dead. It is for this reason and with this intention that I have made a vast endowment for my tomb. I hope that my agents, executors (awsia), servants and friends will not make themselves accountable (conscience-burdened as) to me. They shall try and spend as much as they can for the preservation and decoration of my tomb. The Resident at Bagdad ought to allow, carry out and approve of this. Let him not fall short in this particular; because I have made vast endowments and this simply for the sake and service of my tomb. I am desirous that the fame of my tomb and my name ~~shall~~ ^{may} be of Quality for which there used to be such demand with the Bentleys and Colburns, and the rage for which is far from extinct.

CAPTAIN Hearsey has made another sortie on the Pioneer. Taking advantage of the presence of Mr. Allen in Calcutta, on Wednesday, he made an application to the Chief Magistrate for summons against him. Mr. Marsden enquired if he was in a better position than when he obtained summonses against Mr. Chesney and Mr. Dare. Mr. Rose, on behalf of the Captain, replied he was, inasmuch as it was in evidence in the Howrah prosecution that Mr. Allen was the writer of the article complained against, and there was fresh proof of publication in Calcutta and by Mr. Allen at the Dalhousie Institute. Mr. Marsden next enquired why there was delay in the present application. Mr. Rose explained that the fresh evidence was discovered only a fortnight ago and that his client would not rush to Court without taking advice. It then struck the Magistrate that he had heard that Mr. Allen was to have left Calcutta by the preceding night's mail, and advised Mr. Rose to enquire and renew his application. Mr. Allen had left the same night, and the application was renewed yesterday. Mr. Marsden, without calling for any evidence, at once granted the summons on charges of defamation and abetment of same.

There is no peace for the Pioneer. It may deaden its conscience against remorse for having wronged an unoffending man. But

The law's long howl from Bhagirati's shores will continually knock at the prison-bars of its sleeping soul and wake it to a sense of its conduct. The situation is come to this. Either the offending journal must make peace with the Captain or the Captain must have justice. The Pioneer has not at all behaved in a straightforward British fashion, and it has caught a veritable Tartar.

THE Pioneer's pride is by no means generous. Besides its influence in official circles, the journal sticks out in reliance on its long purse and Captain Hearsey's very short one with a hole in it. It has failed to scare him away from attacking it by the difficulties of such an enterprise. If justice was not to be had at Allahabad or anywhere in Upper India, he came down all the way to Calcutta in quest of it. He is no nearer attainment of his object. The Pioneer now hopes to ruin him by delay on frivolous pretexts, without allowing an investigation into the merits. Under such circumstances, Captain Hearsey is truly an object of public sympathy. We are glad to see that a subscription is already afoot, which noblemen and gentlemen like the Maharaja of Nuddea and Sirdar Dyal Singh Majithia of the Panjab, Kumar Binoy Krishna, Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Baboo Doorga Mohan Dass and Baboo Gonesh Chunder Chunder have readily joined. We hope others will come forward with equal alacrity. The cause is one that appeals to the sympathy of all right-souled men of all classes and nationalities.

THE following paragraph is making the round of the world :—

"This remark of John Newton deserves to be written on the tablet of every heart. 'I see in the world,' he observes, 'two heaps—one of human happiness, one of human misery. Now, if I can take but the smallest bit from the second heap and add to the first, I carry a point. If as I go home, a child has dropped a half-penny, and if by giving it another I can wipe away its tears, I feel that I have done something. I should be glad, indeed, to do great things, but I will not neglect such little ones as this.' These little things are what we all can do and should."

That is unquestionably a good and true sentiment worthy of every well-regulated mind and humble heart. Great things are best, to be sure, and we ought to aim at them if practicable, and within our powers and opportunities. But, in the meantime, let us do our duty and attend to the small things in our way. These particularly appeal to us as more suited to our capacities and means. The great might well be left to accomplish great objects.

But the quotation from John Newton has small value as an apothegm; indeed, it is spoiled by a dull introduction. A single line of the Poet who "talked like poor Poll" is worth the whole passage of the reverend preacher, and far more memorable, to wit—

These little things are great to little man.

Though written on a particular occasion, it is capable of endless applications.

There is a sentence of Jean Paul Richter's to the same purport. "We ought," says the sublime Humourist, "to value little joys more than great ones; the night-gown more than the dress-coat; ...Plutus's heaps are worthless than his handbills, the plum than the penny for a rainy day; ...not great but little heaps can make us happy."

It is to be regretted that yesterday's meeting at the Town Hall in connection with the royal visitor, had an inglorious ending. It was a goodly gathering of the highest and the youngest in the town—of the Lieutenant-Governor, members of both the Councils, Judges of the High Court, merchants, traders, independent gentlemen, titled and untitled, merchants' clerks, schoolmasters and schoolboys. The place of honor was, of course, given to His Honor, but the proceedings did not end honorably. The first Resolution was moved by Maharaja Sir Jotindromohun Tagore and seconded by Sir Alexander Wilson, and runs thus—

"That this Meeting is of opinion that a public welcome on the part of the inhabitants generally of this city should be accorded to His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor on the occasion of his visit to Calcutta." It was carried nem con.

The second Resolution detailing the manner of the reception was moved by the Chief Justice Sir William Comer Petheram and seconded by Raja Durga Churn Law. It was in these words :

"That in order to carry out the purpose of the Resolution just passed a Committee, with power to add to their number, be formed of the noblemen and gentlemen named below (the list is too long for reproduction here) to call for subscriptions with which to provide a suitable reception of His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor, such reception to consist of a public welcome at Prinsep's Ghat and of an Evening Entertainment to be offered to His Royal Highness at the Rink, and to include as many kinds of native amusements as the Committee shall find it convenient to offer. Further, in the event of any surplus of subscriptions remaining in the hands of the Committee, such surplus shall be applied in such a way as a majority of the subscribers in meeting assembled shall decide."

This Resolution was not put to the meeting and of course not carried. An amendment moved by Orator Surrender Not was carried by a majority. The terms of the amendment are

"That in lieu of the public entertainment at the Rink the bulk of the subscriptions be devoted to the endowment of some institution to be determined upon by the Committee which will bear the name of H. R. H. Prince Albert Victor and be a permanent memorial of his visit to Calcutta."

The amendment has no force of its own independent of the Resolution of which it was a corrective, and is not complete in itself for independent working. The amendment therefore falls dead as also any programme for welcoming the Prince in Calcutta. The metropolis is resolved to accord a public welcome, but it is left to each of the inhabitants to do so in the way he thinks best and convenient to himself. Virtually, there will be no reception of the Prince. Such is the wisdom of Calcutta in public meeting of the best and the bravest assembled.

Orator Surrender Not is the hero of the hour, and Sir Stuart Bayley has won the admiration of Surrender Not and his cohorts. Praise is indeed due to Sir Stuart for allowing, unlike one of his predecessors, the amendment to be moved and putting it to the meeting when seconded, and then declaring it carried when the show of hands preponderated in its favor. But he exhausted himself with that feat and closed the meeting without bringing it to a legitimate close. He did not even wait for the vote of thanks, which was in the programme of the evening. He was in no mood to receive it, or else it would have been vociferously carried by the same show of hands without heads that decided the fate of the second resolution. Doubtless, Sir Stuart left the Hall with a firmer faith in Surrender Not. But will he smile again?

The Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation has his reward and his revenge. His reward for the pains he took to induce Sir Rivers Thompson, much against that Lieutenant-Governor's judgment, to introduce the dismissed native Civilian to the bench of Presidency Magistrates. His revenge on the Chamber of Commerce which refused to join the Municipal Committee to concert measures for the fitting reception of the Prince. The Chamber wanted to act independently of the Corporation, and the Chairman who had before gone the length of asking the Commissioners to sanction Rs. 10,000 for entertaining the royal visitor, now determined that there should be no entertainment, and the public meeting has voted no entertainment. Last, not least, the Orator has his revenge on the race that blighted his career as a Covenanted Civil Servant.

It was a mistake for Sir Stuart to have strayed out of Belvedere to the perilous position of chairman of a public meeting on a ceremonial subject which the passions of the people had converted into a bone of contention. It is always hazardous for a ruler to descend to the political arena. It was clearly so, for our good Lieutenant-Governor, at a time when the demonstrations of and about the Congress, itself initiated and encouraged by Europeans, have shaken the balance of faculties of our countrymen. It was specially so for him to accept the lead of a meeting born in dissension as it were, ill-planned, arising out of hole and corner proceedings. We detected the original sin in our last. He as well as the promoters ought at least to have guarded against a surprise. The Chamber and the British Indian Association ought to have been warned by the incidents of the Dufferin meeting. No precautions were taken, and the boys of all Surrender Not's schools were freely let in. Even then there was not a soul to discern what was in store. The meeting might easily have been adjourned. There was ample ground for such a step. The Chairman ought certainly to have left the meeting when he could not control it, instead of demeaning himself to seek the assistance of the author of the mischief, Surrender Not, to maintain some show of order among his rowdy schoolboys and his school-master chaghers. When the promoters had incurred the whole risk there was still a way of escape, but none of the assembled powers and notables had the nerve for the emergency. In one respect, they were rightly served for their isolation from the people and their love of sycophants, to the neglect of men of brains who can really help them.

As for Surrender Not, he is only a verbal hydrant for anybody to tap, but he is always a demagogue living on mob applause. He would not jump into the sea in an enthusiasm of letters and philosophy, but he is quite up to burning the temple for a cheap immortality. So for a barren triumph he has not scrupled to disgrace his city and his country, and to damage the best interests of his countrymen, by forcibly dragging his fellow-citizens through the mire and, above all, foisting on the nation the gratuitous stigma of a stupid disloyalty and the blackest ingratitude to a distant people and a dynasty to which they owe so much and from which they yet expect not a little. Alas! — the pity of it, Iago! O, Iago! the pity of it, Iago!

There was only one man who came to the rescue, who rose to the height of the occasion. That was Mr. R. D. Metha. He not only spoke sense and showed judgment, but he ruled the meeting and, by sheer presence of mind and pluck, obtained a hearing. It was a hopeless effort. The enemy had come prepared in sufficient force, and they had been there and then repeatedly commanded — without protest — to "vote solid." And Baboo Koonjo Lal Banerjee's ill-judged speech had given them an excuse for indignation.

DR. Sincar was right, after all. On the occasion of the last illness, he declared that the Hon'ble Romesh Chunder Mitter's health would not allow him to continue discharging his onerous and exacting duties. The patient, however, had confidence in his constitution and its recuperating powers. So he struggled bravely, but the fight could not be long maintained. Mr. Justice Mitter has again fallen ill, and, this time taking the hint, retires from the Bench with the commencement of the new year. There have been, from time to time, so many anticipatory announcements without any foundation, made evidently by those who feed on vacancies or at least are given to speculating on places and promotions, that we deem it right to say that this time the news is no mere child of Wish. At the end of last week, the Puisne informed the Chief Justice and "sent in his papers," and these have gone up to Government from the High Court on Monday.

The Hon'ble Romesh Chunder Mitter is the only Native Judge who has been able to complete the term for pension. An able and upright, though not a brilliant, Judge, his retirement makes a gap indeed in the High Court Bench. Calm and sedate, he gave valuable assistance to his colleagues and satisfaction to the profession and the public. A native of the soil, he was patriotic, without being political.

The Pleaders of the High Court have already recorded their regret at his retirement and their high appreciation of him as a Judge.

Such an eminent and successful public servant, a native Judge of the High Court who for sometime officiated as Chief Justice, will not, we feel, be allowed to sink into a private station without a proper recognition from Government. In the old Supreme Court, he would have been knighted at his stepping into the Bench.

THE next question is as to his successor. After a succession of Hindus, the time has unquestionably come for a Mahomedan. The Mahomedans will certainly get the place if they can only find the man. As in the case of the first Hindu Judge of the High Court, the first Mahomedan Judge will be an experiment. It seems too late in the day to say that there is no Mahomedan practicing in the Courts or in the subordinate judicial service fit enough to be tried. There is at least a senior Vakeel who is a real Arabic scholar, thoroughly versed in the mysteries of the Law of Islam, with a knowledge of both the Bengal and Behar Schools and of the English tongue. If, nevertheless, the Judges should be averse to have a Mahomedan for a brother on the Bench, there is no difficulty to find a Hindu. One gentleman stands by general consent prominent at the head of the profession who would supply that element of strength to the Bench which it will lose by the retirement of Mr. Mitter.

Of course, the selection will be confined to the Pleaders and Sub-Judges. That is matter of law and authoritative ruling. In common parlance we speak of "native Judges" and the phrase creeps even into official documents. But by the terms of the Charter, at least two-thirds of the Judges were to be barristers of a certain standing and an equal proportion to be members of the Indian Civil Service in the judicial branch of a certain standing. The rest were to be from uncovenanted Judges and Pleaders—who are mostly natives. As the last provision was an experiment, no proportion was fixed. The late Public Service Commission recommended that, the experiment having proved successful beyond the most sanguine expectations, it was time that the native proportion too were fixed at the same rate. And so it has been, the Secretary of State having accepted the Commission's recommendation and directed accordingly. That shuts out intriguing barristers practicing in Bengal or in any other Province from forcing entrance, on the whining plea of being a native. A barrister, be he native or European, can get in only as a barrister.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1889.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

THE District and Local Boards constituted under the new Local Self-Government Act have now been at work for more than three years. The first review of their operations published by the Government of Bengal, embraced a period of 18 months beginning from October 1886 when the system was first started, and naturally dealt with the measures which had been taken for the introduction of Local Self-Government in these Provinces. Another resolution has now been published which reviews the working of these Boards during the last official year.

There are now District Boards in 38 districts, while the number of Local Boards which are at the headquarters of sub-divisions is 106. The interest shown by the members, judged by the test of attendance, was not in all cases as it should be. This was particularly the case with the Local Boards at which the attendance was indifferent, and in most cases below 50 per cent. The members of some Local Boards complain of not receiving travelling allowance like members of District Boards when attending meetings, but the two cases stand on a different footing. While members of a District Board live often at a considerable distance from the district headquarters, members of Local Boards, as a rule, live in the vicinity of the sub-divisional headquarters where such Boards meet, and the excuse alleged for non-attendance is, therefore, deemed unsatisfactory.

Local Boards are by law to exercise only such executive functions as may be made over to them by the District Boards. In most districts, however, they have been entrusted with the administration of the grants for village roads, pounds, ferries, and primary education.

The total income at the disposal of the District Boards in the year 1888-89 was about 56 lacs of rupees, of which the balance of the District Road Cess Fund, after deducting all costs of collection, is, of course, the principal asset. This alone amounted to 41 lacs of rupees, the remaining important sources of revenue being pounds and ferries bringing about 4 lacs and a half each, and grants from Provincial Re-death may be greater than the fame of my name when alive, and that it may appear from the fittings of my tomb as if I am not dead but alive and asleep.

I have many money claims on men of whom some are dead and some are alive. I have torn most of the papers and documents executed by them. After me, no one shall demand anything from them, because I shall depart and it will be bad to make claim on them and their heirs. Of my debtors who are dead, Agha Michail is one on whom I have a large claim and I waive it in his favor. His house which has been purchased by Safia Khanam has been completed wholly and entirely through my aid. She took loan from me and has not repaid it. It should not be recovered from her. I waived it in her favor in her lifetime as well as after her death.

Inasmuch as I have entrusted my affairs to the Resident at Bagdad, I hope that he himself would render reasonable and proper assistance in a friendly and generous manner and with heart and tongue to my agents and executors who are Abul Hasan, Khizr, Nawab Mahomed Hassain and Aga Mahomed. Again the Resident should aid and assist in appointing permanently Nawab Mahomed Hassain Khan and Aga Mahomed and his other brothers to perform the work of distribution of zakat, because the Resident entertains the same opinion as I do as to the integrity and honesty of Nawab Mahomed Hassain Khan and his children. From the day the work of distribution was entrusted to me, thank God, I had had no hand in it, as I entrusted the said Nawab with the work as my deputy and agent, and he also performed it with integrity. The only thing I hope and expect of the amla and officers (amla wa abli dattar) of the Residency is that they shall exert themselves to perform the work to be done after my life is gone, (i. e.) when I am dead, in the same way as they used to do during my lifetime, rather more, that they shall assist my agents and executors, that they shall fight with my enemies and persons who are hostile to me, and that they shall not covet or hope to get anything from them as they did on several occasions, a fact which is known to themselves. It looks bad on my part to put down their names and give any detail.

If my female and male servants steal after my death the cash and the things belonging to me, the Resident at Bagdad shall take those back from them by force, threats, rebukes and reprimands; because a vast amount of money in cash, and things innumerable are in their custody, and it is not far from them if they steal, for such is the rule of the world and especially in the East. They (the said things) shall in every way be taken back from them. Whoever from among my male servants would do so after my death, shall not be included in the category of my servants. He shall be turned out for his life time and for ever; because there can be no worse act of dishonesty and treachery than this.

In case any of my female and male servants kill me by administering poison, the Resident at Bagdad shall instantly take his or her life in revenge. He shall not give him or her opportunity and time to slip and to argue i. e., for tedious legal proceedings. If the Resident be in a helpless position owing to the Osmanli rule, he shall send an account of it to India, so that his or her life may be taken in revenge without partiality and regard for any one. If in this conflict there be fear of my name being disgraced, the Resident shall remain quiet and shut his eyes and leave the matter to God, because I know what proceedings were taken by the Resident in the case of the murder of Milne, and the death of Milne remained unavenged, notwithstanding that his murderer was plainly and clearly known and was forthcoming. In such cases silence is preferable. Let us go into Jehannam and our blood be on the winds.

If any one claim any debt from me it shall be considered false. I am not indebted to people; on the other hand, people are indebted to me. If any one shall bring any forged paper bearing my seal and signature it shall be considered false. Whenever, during my life time, I have written to any one in Arabic, Persian or Hindce, I have written in my own hand and I have affixed my seal also to some of them when necessary. My seal shall be considered useless and valueless. The correctness depends on my handwriting.

A paper in my handwriting is with Ahmed Aga, and it is now useless. I wrote him that paper and it was valid when he was Vice-consul of the Resident. The reason why I had written him was that inasmuch as he was the Vice-consul he would assist and aid in carrying out the provisions of my will in the Residency. After he has been removed from the post of Vice-consul, the said writing of mine is not fit to be relied upon and is of no weight. When the condition is gone, the thing too for which the condition was laid is gone.

The Resident at Bagdad shall make several copies of the original pamphlet which is in my own handwriting. He shall keep a copy in his office, give another copy to Aboul Hasan, Khazr, Nawab Mahomed Hassain and Aga Mahomed, and send one copy to the Governor-General in Calcutta, another to the Government agent, Benares, and another to the Comptroller-General. He shall try in all places to make them act according to my writing and approve of it, because I have written it in a sound state of body and mind and in perfect exercise of the senses, reason, understanding, intelligence, and intellect, and in a wise, just and careful manner. I am the owner of all my cash and things which are lawful and exclusive property of mine, and I have made this just distribution in respect of my property, both in Arabia and in India. Let it commend itself to every wise and able man and justice-loving authority.

I have long entertained a wish that, should God give me more power and wealth, to raise a defence and wall around Kazimain as in Samarra. I could not however do this. In the first place, I could not manage to perform this work and mix with workers and common people, and in the second place I was led to think, after deliberation, that perhaps my fund would not be sufficient and I shall have to repent for it at the end. Notwithstanding this, if the Resident, Abul Hassain, Khizr, Nawab Mahomed Hassain Khan and Aga Mahomed agree, concur, and be of one and the same opinion in this, and if they can do it easily and think that they will be able to meet the expenses, let them begin, and put down my name at the head of the gate, otherwise they shall not; God does not give any one trouble but to the extent he can bear. The design is the accomplishment of the end. God knows what passes in ones mind and heart. I shall, God willing, be rewarded, but a reward not deserving (unperformed act). This work is not easy and simple. It requires labor. One shall have even to fight with (Ottoman) and argue much. But there is also the saying:—The man cuts mountains. Let my agents and executors work if they can, and not to do it if they cannot. money would not cover the work and suffice for it, or the some obstacles which may prevent the execution of this. This work is done with wisdom, courage, honesty and easy; but this is difficult. This work can be done by homed Hassain Khan, his children and his wife, thick and thin with every one and what is bad, but, withal, the world and vexations. The amla and the scoundrels, who take out one's life blood, sorts of tricks, fraud and dishonesty, considerations that I did not dare to take knew the people. I now leave it to my

My brother Amin-ud-Doula deceased foolish act during his life time in, Ben given the dwelling house of my deceased by the side of the tank of Ram Rai, a in which I am a large partner, to a Hi permission and knowledge, and without Mahajun has appropriated the said house without my knowledge and permission. That house by reason of being the dwelling house of my grandmother is revered by me as a mosque, place of worship and a sanctuary. I appeal to and request the British Government at Benares that, out of justice and impartiality, it may restore the said house to me, and make it over to all the four persons abovenamed, namely, Nazim Mirza, Fakhruddowlah, Akbar Khan and Askar Khan, and enjoin them to allow it to stand for ever as it is, without being let, and keep it in lamp and light. The said Mahajun deserves to be punished and fined because, notwithstanding that he knew that all the property of my father and mother are owned by me and my brother and that I was absent from my native country and was living at Bagdad, the Mahajun was an ass and fool to ignore me and take the joint house from one person without my permission. If the said Mahajun contend that he has spent money on account of the said house, he in the first place eats dirt and in the second place his punishment and fine ought to be this—that (the Government) shall immediately take the house out of his possession and make it over to the four persons named above.

That Mahajun is legally guilty in the eyes of the British Government because he clandestinely took my house from Aminudowlah without my permission and knowledge. Aminudowlah had no sound understanding. If he had, how was it that, although not in want and a man of wealth and influence, he consented to make over the dwelling house of his grandmother who is held in great reverence by us, to a Mahajun belonging to a different caste, and professing a different religion, owing to which Kaaba (Shrine at Mecca) became a place of idolatry. If the money spent by the Mahajun be a small amount and the justice of British Government allows it, his expenses shall be paid out of the principal amount or the interest of my promissory notes which are kept in deposit in the office of the Comptroller-General at Calcutta, and the house shall be made over to all my four men. It is painful and disagreeable to me that the house of my grandmother would by means of dishonesty be the abode of the Mahajun. It is to be regretted that such oppression, highhandedness and unaccountable acts ake place in British territory, and that there is no one to question who is this scoundrel of a Mahajan whose father is burnt and whose wife is a prostitute, who appropriated and took possession of my house without my permission and knowledge. He has turned Kaaba into a place of idolatry. The scoundrel had no thought whatever of this day. I several times wanted to bring a suit against him, but I was afraid of the consequence of judicial proceedings and the freaks of the court amla. My numerous travels in foreign countries also allowed me no time.

I have endowed the tombs of my father and mother situate in Calcutta and Benares with my property at Durga Kund and Sekrol and at other places in Benares, Hindoostan. I entrust the supervision thereof to Nazim Mirza, Jani Sahib alias Fukraddowlah, son of Nazimudowlah, and Akbar Khan and Askar Khan, sons of Mirza Jan, son of Nazimoodowlah, who shall, in agreement with, and with the advice of, one another, repair the said two tombs and defray the expenses connected therewith, with the rent of the said property and appoint amin, servants, keepers and readers for each place. They shall make perfect arrangements for illumination and lighting cherags with liberality and profuseness. If the income arising from the property does not suffice, they shall take the interest due on the promissory notes which are now kept in deposit in the office of the Comptroller-General at Calcutta and which were formerly in the Bank of Bombay. The Comptroller-General shall not hesitate and delay to pay such portion of the interest as may be required for defraying the expenses of the said two tombs, because they are all my lawful exclusive and individual property which are kept in deposit with him. Although the said promissory notes have not been renewed in my name, they are in reality and in fact my lawful exclusive and individual property, being my share of my maternal property. The one for ten thousand Rupees was purchased in the name of Fukrud Dowlah by money by my wife Chand Begum, as my agent when I was in India. The promissory notes standing in the name of my father and mother are my exclusive property, having been given to me by my father and mother, and which I have by my share by division. Inasmuch as I was absent from my native land, those notes remained in the hands of my father and mother. My other brothers who were co-heirs with me and were in my native country, those notes which fell to their share and which stood in the names of my father and mother renewed in their own names. My notes have remained as they were in the names of my father and mother and have not been renewed in my name. My life to an end in a foreign country. None of my property at Durgakund and other places shall be sold. My father and mother stand in their places as they are. The expenses may be incurred in connection with the tombs of my father and mother at Calcutta and Benares for illumination, readers, gardeners, &c., &c., shall for ever continue to be made; and I expect the said four persons to fix the scale of the said expenses without slightest lightness of hand or heart.

I make a wakf of the interest of the said promissory notes for the legitimate male issue of my brothers, that is, for them who may be penniless and in want. I leave the supervision and power of distribution thereof in the hands of Nazim Mirza, Fukrudowlah, Akbar Khan and Askar Khan; so that they may give as much as they think proper to those whom they know to be in need and want. If the rent of my property do not suffice for the repairs and expenses of the tombs of my father and mother, they shall spend as much as necessary out of the said interest of the said promissory notes. The promissory notes shall for ever remain in the office of the Comptroller-General in Calcutta. The interest thereof shall go towards the expense of the tombs of my father and mother, and the expenses of the legitimate issue of my brothers. Only those shall be considered to be the legitimate issue of my brothers whom my brothers had during their lifetime acknowledged and recognised as legitimate. This money shall be unlawful for the females of this family but (lawful) for males and they also should be legitimate.

Baboo Ramanath Biswas or Radhanath Biswas who is the manager and Moktear of my property at Benares is a thief and a treacherous, deceitful, dishonest and artful man. He has eaten and taken the whole of the income of my said property. He sent no portion of it to me. I have been unable to expel him and demand accounts from him because I know that the practices in vogue in British Courts cause confusion and are the origin of corruption, mischief, and delay. The British Government shall after me take away all my said property from the hands of the said cursed and perfidious Baboo and make them over to Nazim Mirza, Fukrud Dowlah, Akbar Khan and Askar Khan. It lies in my mouth to say, that thousands and lacs of Rupees of mine have gone down into the stomach of that Baboo and his brother and been digested by them, and I, through fear (of the irregularities) of the Court could not utter anything. That man is a great rogue, rascal, thief and scoundrel and a worthless fellow. He shall at once be dismissed. The abovenamed four persons can demand accounts from him and bring him into Court or pardon him and shut their eyes. It is better they pardon him as I have done; for the Baboo is a bad, cursed man and the procedure of British Courts is bad; the wronged, the seekers of redress are captives of the paw of the Court officials, and business goes on by bribery not to be counted or described.

If any of the legitimate or illegitimate descendants of my brothers come to Arabia and claim my property, tomb, cash, and things that are in Arabia, from the servants, Head servant and agent, it shall be wrong and like eating of dirt, and shall not be admitted and entertained by any Court and officer. I have divided the whole of my property and cash in Arabia and India into two parts. I have made an endowment of those that are in Arabia for my tomb and my servants, and of those that are in India for the tomb of my father and mother and legitimate male issue of my brothers. Every one shall remain contented and pleased with and thankful for the share allotted to him. I have done this simply out of my generosity; otherwise, had there been any other person in my place he would have forgotten the said legitimate issue and the tombs of his father and mother and would not have given a single para to the issue of his brothers. Notwithstanding I had met with evil from my brothers, I have done good towards their children. Let them pray for my soul; because I have not been forgetful and a slave of my passion. I have not spent my money in evil and immoral paths. I have not given it to strangers and outsiders. I have not taken and kept any concubine. I have not adopted any child nor brought up wife's daughter by another husband. I have not passed my life in idleness and amusements. I have not done any mean act. God has not disgraced my name, has brought my life to an end with goodness, protected and helped me at every place, and graced me with pomp and dignity in foreign land so much so that Kings envied me. The Resident at Bagdad and the Government of India shall by no means object and hesitate to put into execution and carry out the above provisions (of the Will). They shall be approved of and given effect to by them. I was the master of my own mind and property. I have done what I thought proper and advisable. I have not acted improperly and wrongly. I have not left unprovided any relative of mine either dead or alive. In this matter there has been no man more wise or just than myself, as I have been mindful of all. God is my support. He will help me in my work after my death also, in the same manner as he has helped me in my life. My heart and intentions were pure; because I never wished ill of any one nor I coveted any one's property.

If any one shall, after me, claim to be my wife and heir in order to get property, it shall be false and invalid. I took only one wife in my life and she was daughter of the son of Tipoo Sultan, may paradise be his abode! She bore me four children and all five (children and mother) died during my lifetime. I leave this world without widow or issue, as if my house was a mule stable, without birth or issue (young or produce). The other women who were in my house, were servants, washer-women, cooks, and seamstresses, in order to administer to my wants and guard against mischief; they were temporary and transient like the running water, the blowing wind, and the flying bird. I neither married nor made meta. I have no child, infant, issue, liver-holder, heart-fixer. I came alone to this world and I am going alone.

I write again that the Resident at Bagdad shall in a right manner direct the business connected with my tomb and my houses at Kazimain, Bagdad, Karbala &c., &c., and the business connected with my servants. He shall never neglect it but aid and assist in doing the things stated by me, be it in Arabia or in India. The special request I make to the Resident is that he will attend in person to the preservation and decoration of my tomb, because I have acquired these properties in Arabia simply that my tomb may be preserved and look respectable and grand, inasmuch as I love myself dead better than myself alive.

If any one of the descendants of my brothers and sisters come from India to Bagdad, the Resident at Bagdad shall not allow him to enter the Residency but shall turn him out like a dog and never pay heed to him, because they have no right whatever in my affairs in Arabia. It is not improbable that the Indians of Kazimain, Bagdad, and Karbala, shall aid them and come in a crowd to the Residency and become their agents and guides. The Resident shall (under such circumstances) order the Khawassas to ply staves on their posteriors and drive them off all to one and the same place.

Signed by the testator Nawab Sir Ekbal-ud-Daula, G. C. S. I., of Oudh, and acknowledged by him to be his last Will and Testament in the presence of us present at the same time who at his request in his presence and in the presence of each other, have subscribed our names as witnesses at Bagdad, this 18th day of January 1883.

NOTIFICATION.

Simla, the 3rd September, 1889.

Their Excellencies the Viceroy and Marchioness of Lansdowne will hold a Drawing Room at Government House, Calcutta, on Friday, the 13th December, 1889, at 9-30 P.M.

Ladies purposing to attend the Drawing Room are requested to send their cards and addresses to the Aide-de-Camp in waiting not later than Saturday, the 7th December, 1889, after which "no cards" will be received, and to bring with them to the Drawing Room two cards, with their names legibly written on them—one to be given on entering Government House, and the other to the Aide-de-Camp in waiting at the time of presentation.

Ladies who have not already been presented at the Court of St. James or at Government House are requested to send their cards through the Ladies intending to present them, with their addresses, to the Aide-de-Camp in waiting as soon as possible.

Ladies who present others should themselves attend the Drawing Room.

Ladies attending the Drawing Room will be expected to appear in full dress, but without trains.

The carriages of those who have the private entrée will enter by the South-West Gate, and set down at the South Entrance of Government House.

All other carriages will enter by the North-East Gate, set down under the Grand Stairs, and pass out by the North-West Gate.

By Command,
WILLIAM BERESFORD,
Lieut.-Colonel,
Military Secretary to the Viceroy.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who being tired of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. "Therefore, of experience, and his brethren should listen to Travels in Bengal is a readable abounds in anecdotes which structure as amusing, and it is too many political allusions, if some few have crept in. CONTEMPORARY VERSE.

THE BATTLE OF THE BOYS.

Now let there be a merry sound of tom tom and sitar,
Through thy shady groves and fragrant lanes, oh pleasant Bow Bazar,
As thou wert constant in our ills be joyous in our joy,
For dull and dumb and down are they who wrought thy boys annoy.

Ah, how our hearts were beating, when near the close of day
We saw the army of our foes drawn out in proud array,
With all their nose-led Magistrates and their judicial peers,
And Edgar's corps of consuls and Peacock's grim compeers.
There stood those ermined sons of pride—the Judges of our land,
The great L. G. was in the midst, a paper in his hand,
And as we looked on them we sighed and thought of days of yore,
The days which each Bengali prays will come again no more.
When clouds of dark Mahratta war like some vast funeral pall
Came rolling o'er our peaceful plains and darkened all Bengal,
And we that are so proud to-day—who hold our heads so high
Would shin up all the peepul trees until the clouds rolled by.

Outspake our noble leader, "I know you're only boys,
Vote solid for the cause to-day, don't waste your breath in noise, Don't wag your heads—don't knock your knees - don't shout and play the fool,
Don't think you're learning Morals within the Ripon School,
Don't fire your little lungs too soon, but keep each little throat
For that vast shout which will record your solid sober vote."

"But see, our foes are moving—hark to the mingled hum,
The time to strike is close at hand—'tis come, my lads, 'tis come,
Lift all your hands together, give your voices to the breeze,
And shout huzzay as Britons shout when Britons want to sneeze.
Shout for your betel and paun, huzzay! huzzay! huzzay!
The great Sir Henry Harrison is on our side to-day."

But see, our foes are breaking, and in the flying horde
Is many an acting Magistrate and member of the Board;
The ermined crew are scurrying fast across the marble floors,
The great L. G. is hurrying past the welcome opening doors.
Edgar hath fled, he could not stand those proud triumphant cheers,
And Halliday hath cut his stick with Peacock's grim compeers,
For our God hath crushed the tyrants and our God hath raised up boys
To mar the counsels of the wise with clamour and with noise;
Now glory to the Lord of Hosts, to whom all glories are,
And glory to that noble race, the boys of Bow Bazar.

The Englishman, Dec. 11.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

A WORTHY successor of a worthy representative of the mercantile interest, Sir Alexander Wilson, has taken Mr. R. Steel's place, as an Additional Member of the Governor-General's Council. Sir Alexander was sworn in yesterday, when the Calcutta session began.

The Council passed the new municipal law for the Central Provinces. It received the assent of the Governor-General the same day and is published in to-day's Gazette of India as Act XVIII of 1889. It comes into operation from the 1st January 1890. Another measure, for the better sanitation of villages in the same Provinces, was also finally disposed of. It will be known as Act XIX of 1889, and takes immediate effect. Finally, Act XX, adding new sections to and amending the Lunatic Asylums laws, was passed.

MR. Colman Macaulay has taken five months' extension of furlives and consequently resigned the membership of the local legislative Council. Mr. F. B. Peacock has been taken in to fill the vacancy. He will find some consolation in the Honorable Membership of the Council for the loss of the Chief Commissionership of Assam. The Hon'ble Sir Charles Paul and the Hon'ble C. H. Moore will continue as members of the same Council for another term.

THE Chief Justice has retired from the Vice-Chancellery of the Calcutta University in favor of the new Puisne Mr. Justice Gurudas Banerjee. With thanks to the retiring Vice-Chancellor and the conferring Lord Chancellor, we hail this excellent but long-deferred departure. This is the first time that the selection has fallen on a native. The great Orientalist Dr. Rajendralala Mitter should have been given the refusal. At any rate, it is a relief that the office has not been thrust on unworthy shoulders.

RAJA Shiva Prasad has resigned the Vice-Presidentship of the Benares Anti-pollution Society. With the death of Maharaja Isri Prasad, the Raja finds it prudent to withdraw his active interference from Benares politics and all costly functions.

FOR the better subjugation of Upper Burma, she will be bound fast in iron chains. One crore and fifty lacs of rupees will be sunk in the country in railways in three years.

NAINI TAL has been visited by a swarm of locusts.

FROM the next Calendar year, parcels from British India to Ceylon will be carried by the Post office at the Indian inland parcel rates.

THE Assistant Surveyor-General in charge of the Mathematical Instrument Department shall henceforth discharge all the functions of the Secretary under the Inventions and Designs Act, V. of 1888.

THE Secretary of State for India has sanctioned an estimate amounting to Rs. 25,42,235 for the construction of an extension of the Tirhoot State Railway from Durbhunga to Bairagnia.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

THE Bengal and North-Western Railway branch lines to Byramghat and Revelgunge have been sanctioned at a cost of £1,00,000.

THE Bikanir-Jodhpur Railway is being pushed on vigorously. The necessary material has been indented for. The Jodhpur and Jeypur Durbars have undertaken to run through their respective territories a line to Bikanir.

THE bridge over the Chenab at Shershah is nearly ready. It will probably be opened by Prince Albert Victor. The Alexandra bridge over the same river at Wizarabad was opened by the Prince of Wales.

A SHORT retired line of embankment is to be constructed at Laltakuri in the Moorshedabad district. For the purpose, 62 bighas, 15 cottahs and 4 chittacks of land of standard measurement has been declared.

THE Government has sanctioned the re-excavation of Churnial khali and the construction of the Churnial Sluice in the 24-Pergunnahs. 489 beeghas of land of standard measurement or 9 miles 1,980 feet in length and about 150 in breadth will be taken up under the Act.

MR. R. Belchambers, Registrar and what not of the High Court, Original Jurisdiction, has resigned the Honorary Presidency Magistrateship of the town. The original mistake was to appoint a man with no leisure for honorary duties.

THE Gilchrist Scholarship Examination begins on Monday, the 13th January, and the Sanskrit Title Examination for 1890 commences on Monday, the 3rd March, 1890.

THE Examination for filling up vacancies in the Clerical Establishments of the Secretariat offices of the Government of India and attached offices and of the offices subordinate to the Government of Bengal, held at Calcutta, in the Senate House, for the Upper and Lower Divisions respectively, for the Upper Division on the 4th January and for the Lower Division on the 20th January 1890 and following days.

THE Hyderabad Chloroform Commission have arrived at the conclusion that the danger of the drug lies in asphyxia or overdose, and that it has no direct effect upon the action of the heart. Five hundred animals, from horses to rabbits, were experimented upon.

A EUROPEAN postal employé by name P. H. Courcy, in the Kyoukse district, has been sentenced by the Recorder's Session Court at Rangoon, for criminal breach of trust of a money-order, to three years rigorous imprisonment. He attempted to transfer his guilt to two innocent men.

THE Reserved Forests in the Palamow and Hazaribagh Sub-divisions of the Chota Nagpur Forest Division and those of the Darjeeling Terai and Lower Hills (Kurseong and Teesta Sub-divisions of Darjeeling Forest Division) as well as those of the district of Julpagori (Julpagori and Bura Forest Sub-division) will remain closed against hunting, shooting and fishing from the 15th December, 1889 to 1st June, 1890, except with the written permission of the Conservator of the Forests or the Local Government.

A CORRESPONDENT in the Dainik reports the death at the age of 100 of the grandmother of Rai Bahadr Bepin Behary Dutt, Government Pleader, Midnapore.

THERE has just died at Baranagar, in the northern suburbs of Calcutta, a man who exceeded that age by five years. He was a shaw by caste and known as Sham Chand Kalipáki. He took four wives, one after the death of another, the last time marrying when he was 62 years old. The first three bore him no children. By the latter, however, he leaves 5 sons and 2 daughters, the eldest-born—a son—now being aged 35 years and the youngest—a daughter—17 years. Sham Chand had a sister who had attained the age of 100 years. He kept his health remarkably well to the last. He did not take any particular exercise. As a good Hindu of the publican caste, though keeping a European oilman's store, in Bazaar, he was, of course, a rigid teetotaler.

DURING the year 1890, the following days will be observed as public holidays in Bengal :—

25th January	Sripanchami.
6th March	Dolejatra.
5th April...	Easter Saturday.
12th "	Chaitsankranti.
24th May	Empress' Birthday.
29th "	Dashahara..
7th August	Janmashtami.
13th October	Mahalaya.
18th, 20th to 25th and 27th to 29th October...	Durga and Lukhi Pujahs.
11th and 12th November	Kali Pujah.
20th and 21st "	Jagadhatri Pujah.
24th, 26th and 27th December	The day preceding and two days following Christmas Day.

and Sundays, New Year's Day, Good Friday, and Christmas Day.

ABOUT four months ago, in the court of the Tehsildar of Conjeveram, Raju Chetty, for the offence of receiving stolen property, was sentenced, in open court, to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment. He served his three months and wanted to leave, but they would not let him go. And not without excuse. For the warrant to the jailor directed his confinement for four months. So he was detained another month. On coming out, after serving in jail for four months, he complained to the District Magistrate charging the jailor with maliciously keeping him in durance vile for the space of one whole month. The trying officer, the Tehsildar, was now called on for explanation, and he admitted that he sentenced the man to 3 months, but by a mistake in his office "four months" was written in the warrant.

The Tehsildar's admission is honourable to him. All that the poor complainant can get against him for his pains is a mild warning to that officer to be careful in future. The jailor ought to be well punished, departmentally at all events, if he did not take notice of the prisoner's complaint and inquire into its truth.

WE take the following paragraph from the last Education resolution of the Bengal Government on the subject of discipline in schools :—

"Mr. Tawney considers that the conduct of pupils is deteriorating, and attributes this result to deficiencies in the subordinate masters, and increasing competition for pupils. He observes that 'in a single issue of a weekly Bengali newspaper there appeared advertisements from not less than seven high and middle schools offering various pecuniary inducements to boys who might choose to join the first class of any one of them. This system of stealing pupils is, I fear, on the increase. It is heart-breaking to conscientious teachers, and fosters ingratitude in the pupils. The position of Government high schools is, of course, sufficiently strong for the head-masters to enforce some kind of discipline if they choose to do so. As a rule, I believe, the heads of Government schools are upright and conscientious men, and do exert themselves to the utmost to keep order in their schools and elevate the tone of the students. The same may be said also of the heads of many non-Government schools. But there can be no doubt that by so doing they expose themselves to considerable odium.' As a remedy he proposes the extreme measure of altogether prohibiting unlicensed education. 'No school,' he observes, 'should be allowed to receive pupils that has not been carefully inspected by a Government officer and received a license from Government, to be periodically renewed; and the University should so modify its regulations as to make it impossible for any unlicensed school to send up candidates to the Entrance examination.' These remarks were penned before the receipt of the important Resolution recently recorded by the Government of India on the subject, which has indicated the measures to be adopted for the improvement of discipline. The Lieutenant-Governor has no desire to go beyond the limits laid down by that Resolution in enforcing supervision over private school."

Whatever may be thought of the remedy proposed, by Mr. Tawney, all must admire his candour and courage. Would that Government in these latter days had something of these good old virtues!

AT Lahore, there was a collision between the carriage of Mr. Justice Benton and one of the station hacknies. The occupants of the former—Mr. and Mrs. Benton—were thrown out, the husband sustaining a slight concussion of the brain and the wife fracturing a collar bone. Here in Calcutta, a week or so ago, Mr. Justice Banerjee's carriage collided with another gentleman's, but narrowly escaped with its owner. It was being taken to the Police, and the occupant inside was about to leave in a hackney-coach hired there and then in the street, when he gave his name. All on a sudden, the scene changed. At sight of the magic inscription and at the magic sound as it was whispered, the gathering clouds of difficulty at once dispersed, and frowning faces forthwith beamed with gracious sunshine, and the very Police contrived to get up an appearance of a blush. And the dignity of the Law arrested in his travels was allowed to go his own way without any further molestation then or thereafter.

There is a moral to the incident. The art of administration is still in its infancy, and here is another proof. It is too much the modern habit to take these small contretemps easy, as to neglect the minor decencies of official life. It must be admitted, however, that when they do happen, they are a source of inconvenience and annoyance. They are certainly not calculated to inspire the populace with respect for their rulers. Nor is it so difficult to apply a remedy. Fifty years ago, a Supreme Court Judge could never be stopped on such a trifling plea. Not long ago, the Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police and head of the Town Corporation was stopped by his own Police on a public occasion.

THE eminent French statistician, Dr. E. Eugrel, gives the following figures of the loss of human life in the different wars of the last thirty-four years. The Crimean War 750,000 men; the Italian War (1859) 45,000; the Danish War (1864) 3,000; the American Civil War—the Northern States 280,000, the Southern States 520,000; the Austro-Prussian War 45,000; the Franco-German War—France 155,000, Germany 60,000; the Turco-Russian War 250,000; the South African Wars 30,000; the Afghan War 25,000; the Mexican and Cochín-Chinese expeditions 65,000; and the Bulgaro-Servian Insurrection 25,000; being a total of 2,253,000 deaths, without counting the victims of disease.

NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

OUR worst fears are in course of realization. The consequences of entire dependence on machinery and other blind forces and on the absolutely free service of vast numbers of ignorant men under irresponsible teaching and manipulation—which we pointed out in our leading article of October 5—are already showing themselves with unmistakable emphasis.

England is again suffering from strikes. The men employed in gas works of the Manchester and Salford Corporations refused to work. They resent the employment of non-Unionists. Manchester was in semi-darkness on the night of the 6th. A number of factories there have been shut up. On the 8th, both at Manchester and Salford, many of the churches were closed for want of lights. The coal porters threatened suspension of work on Friday, unless all the coal merchants and Gas Companies in London engaged to pay them certain wages. Owing to gas stokers' refusal, night work at Woolwich Arsenal has been suspended. The latest report is that one thousand gas stokers, deserting the Union, have come over to the South Metropolitan Gas Company, and new men have been taken in to complete the full complement.

THE Brazilian Revolution is, in some quarters, traced to the liberation of the slaves. There must be a good deal of heart-burning as actual inconvenience from the Abolition, but the supposed kinship of the present movement to the Southern Confederacy in North America is negatived by the existence of several Abolitionists in the new Administration. Another reason given is the influence exerted by the Emperor's daughter and her husband, Comte Diu, a Bourbon Prince, a spendthrift of vicious habits. The Catholic Clerical party who had been trying for the upper hand in public affairs had secured the warm sympathy of the daughter. That is scarcely adequate to account for so great an act. To add to the misfortunes of the Imperial family, the jewels of the Empress, which included the finest diamonds in the world, were stolen at Rio Janeiro. Dom Pedro arrived at Lisbon on the 7th December. He has declared that he had no intimation of the revolution until it burst upon him. He refuses to accept the Civil List allowances.

THE Southern States of America are mourning the death of their ex-President Jefferson Davis.

THERE is an epidemic of influenza throughout Russia. It has spread to Vienna, Berlin, and Copenhagen. At Berlin, the disease has invaded the Judges and the courts are closed. It has threatened the schools and theatres. Epidemic fever is reported from Paris.

ROBERT Browning, the great poet, is no more.

It will be remembered that, as we were informed by telegraph, at a meeting of the Council of the East India Association, on the 18th November, that steady, unfussy, and, therefore, all the more respected and efficient, friend of India, Lord Stanley of Alderley, had made an important announcement with respect to the appointment of natives to the Council of India. By the arrival of the mail, we are in position to lay before the public a true and authoritative report of what his Lordship said at the E. I. A. Rooms.

Lord Stanley of Alderley said that when the Council of India Bill was before the House of Lords last session, he had intended to move an amendment to enable the Secretary of State to fill up three vacancies with Natives of India, one from each of the three Presidencies.

He heard a doubt expressed as to whether the power did not exist already, so before putting down any amendment, he asked Lord Cross what his opinion was on the subject. Lord Cross replied that he had no doubt whatever that he had the power to appoint any Native of India to a seat on his Council, and that he had already thought of such appointments, but the difficulty was to find suitable persons for the post. He then asked Lord Cross if he might make this public, and Lord Cross gave his consent, without which he could not have repeated private communications.

This permission given by the Secretary of State proved the sincerity of the opinion he had expressed, and that he was favourable to such appointments; because if he had refused the permission to quote him, he (Lord Stanley) would have had to move the amendment, and the Secretary of State might have avoided expressing the opinion that the amendment was unnecessary, and might have rejected it without going into the merits of the case, on the ground that it was too late in the session to allow of any alterations in the Bill which would lead to fresh discussions in the House of Commons.

He had at the same time consulted another Peer, in the class of ex-Secretaries of State or Viceroy, who agreed with Lord Cross, but he said the difficulty was that none of the Indians who were qualified, would leave their homes, or could abandon the care of their property.

Under these circumstances the first step was gained, viz., to know that Natives of India could sit in the Council, and the next was to give the Secretary of State opportunities for selecting one or more Natives of India duly qualified, and also willing to leave their country, and to reside for a time in England.

Men who were best qualified by their attainments and social position, would not offer themselves as candidates for seats in the Council; and he thought that any intervention of the Congress in such a matter would do more harm than good, but it was probable that when it became known in India that there not only was no legal obstacle to seats in the Council of the Secretary of State being filled by Natives of India, but also that a favourable view was taken of such appointments, the names of duly qualified and willing candidates would become known through the usual channels of information.

THE disastrous finale of the last week's Town Hall meeting is beginning to tell seriously. The Native or, as it calls itself, the National Chamber of Commerce has seen fit to dissociate itself with the National Congress. Last Thursday, its ruling Committee passed this Resolution :—

"That this Chamber being a body representing mainly, if not solely, the native commercial and trading interest of this country, they do not think it desirable or expedient to send delegates to the fifth National Congress."

O Diamond! Diamond! we think we hear the discerning friends of the Congress expostulate little dost thou know what thou hast done—what vast injury—what irreparable mischief—thou hast committed! Congress or no Congress, that is the lament that has been on the lips of every patriot or good citizen in the country who bears a thinking head on his shoulders, ever since the fatal day.

LAST Thursday, three men of the Leinster Regiment, now stationed at Fort William, were arrested as the perpetrators of the death, on the 7th November last, of a Toddy-seller near Dum-Dum. Government had offered Rs. 500 for the discovery, and the Viceroy himself had taken a personal interest in the detection and chastisement of a crime that has sent a panic in the most peaceful parts of Bengal. On Wednesday, a private of the Buffs by name Gouldsbury—himself an accomplice—voluntured a statement to the Dum-Dum Magistrate. On local enquiry on that statement, Mr. Steindale issued the warrants against O'Hara, Macdermot and Bellew. One of these three has corroborated the informing accomplice.

As Sir Arthur Gordon's term of office is about to close, there is a special interest attaching to his public statements. His final annual message as Governor was delivered to the Ceylon Legislature on the 22nd of last month. It commences with congratulations on the condition of the revenue, which for the next year 1890 is estimated at Rs. 15,376,000. This estimate is likely to be exceeded, as, in all probability, a Pearl Fishery will take place next year at Dutch Bay, Captain Donnan having reported that some thirty millions of oysters still remain there to be fished. A small fishery may take place at Karativu Paar before the close of the present year.

In Ceylon, as on the Continent, however, the needs of the administration increase beyond the gradual expansion of income. Such reforms as the improvement of accommodation for courts and public offices must therefore stand over, while the surplus was devoted to the promotion of education and the health of the people, to the communications of the country, to irrigation and other works. The most notable act of the closing year of the Gordon régime is the reconstruction and expansion of the medical department. A Committee is already considering the details of an elaborate scheme for the medical relief of the whole Colony prepared by Dr. Kynsey. At present, there are 48 Hospitals and 105 Dispensaries. 45 Dispensaries are to be added and the present accommodation in the existing Hospitals is to be increased :—

"His Excellency is confident that if the development of his scheme is steadily kept in view, on the one hand, along with a vigorous prosecution of works for the improvement of the water-supply of the people, both for agricultural and domestic purposes, a vast change in the physical and moral condition and the comfort and well-being of many poor sickly and thinly peopled districts, will in a few years be apparent; that tracts now inhabited by but a few small and diminishing families will again become populous, desert wastes again fertile; and that where the Government now has to expend large sums on the relief of distress and the prevention of famine it will hereafter receive a handsome revenue from a prosperous people."

By a notification under the head of "Separate Revenue, Salt," numbered 6005, dated the 29th November 1889, published in the Gazette of India of the 30th November 1889, the Governor-General in Council extended, with effect from the 7th December 1889, the whole of the Indian Salt Act, XII of 1882, excepting the portions thereof specified in the second paragraph of Section 1, which are already in force, and Section 31, to the municipal Calcutta. The next notification No. 6007 gives the rules, and these are expressly made to apply only to the area to which the municipal Act applies. Rule 1 opens with these words : "These rules shall apply to Calcutta as for the time being defined by or under the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, 1888, or any other law relating to the municipal affairs of the Town and Suburbs of Calcutta for the time being in force." They are, therefore, not enforceable beyond the limits of Calcutta proper and such portions of the Suburbs which are under the administration of the Calcutta Municipal Commissioners. These rules absolutely prohibit the importation into Calcutta of the pukka salt—"being salt which has been obtained in the manufacture of saltpetre, and on which the duty for the time being imposed under section 7 of the Act has not been paid at the place where the salt was obtained as on salt manufactured in the part of British India where that place is situated," but allow the manufacture or refining of saltpetre and eduction of salt therefrom only under a license, the conditions of which virtually amount to a prohibition for small concerns. Thus,

"No license shall be granted for the manufacture of crude saltpetre, unless the licensing officer is satisfied that the soil in the vicinity of the place of manufacture and the soil from which the said crude saltpetre is to be produced do not contain such a percentage of chloride of sodium as to render the manufacture a source of danger to the salt revenue, and unless the works are so situated that they can without difficulty be supervised by the Salt Revenue Department.

As a general rule no refinery shall be licensed until the parties applying for a license have satisfied the licensing officer that they are prepared to produce within the period of the license not less than two hundred maunds of refined saltpetre.

No refinery shall be licensed until the parties applying for a license have satisfied the licensing officer that the refinery buildings and premises are so constructed and surrounded by a wall as to afford full security for the levy of the duty on salt educed therein."

The rules are thirty in number, and yet are not exhausted. It is open to the Commissioner of Salt Revenue to add conditions to the license over and above those prescribed in the rules. Fees are of course payable for the licenses. Rs. 50 will be charged for the manufacture and refining of saltpetre, including the eduction of salt, and annas four for the manufacture of saltpetre, payable annually on or before the 31st July, the close of the Salt year.

Whatever the necessity for these rules, they are a surprise to the manufacturers and refiners hitherto unhampered by any restrictions. They were published without any previous intimation to or knowledge of those concerned in the trade. Scarcely any time is allowed them to understand the rules or to fit up their places to the requirements now demanded of them. To add to the horror of the manufacturers ignorant of the ways of a civilized Government and blissfully unconscious of what is going on about them the officers of the Salt Revenue, without previous notice of any kind, pounced upon these manufactories the same day that the rules came into operation, to the consternation of the people engaged and proceeded to dictate to them to the interference of the business. These attentions are not confined to the area prescribed. The zealous officers, without regard to the rules but under their authority, think they are sufficiently armed to molest all such places, whether within or beyond Calcutta, and do not spare those which are beyond the reach of the rules. There are about a dozen manufactories in or about Calcutta, only two being situate within the municipal limits. But all the twelve suffer equally. For the moment they are handicapped, and business suffers. The proprietors are at their wits' end. It is a lax administration, to say the least, that could thus override the law and bring on stagnation. Anyhow, until the rules are extended to them, they must be allowed their own way and left unmolested.

It is indeed satisfactory to notice, from a recent Bengal Government Resolution, that the Sale Law, for default in paying the Government revenue by a certain fixed day, has, for some years, been resorted to very sparingly. The proportion of actual sales to defaults was, in last year, so low as 8.68 and this was half of the previous five years' percentage. This policy of leniency to defaulters does not meet with favor from district authorities, and one Collector of experience writes :—"The continued condonation of these defaults, which (as the Board's orders stand) is inevitable, is calculated to weaken our revenue machinery, and it is to be hoped that the reports submitted on the subject will result in some system of penalising defaulters for delay. At present the sale day is a farce." Sir Steuart Bayley, however, does not consider that the greater moderation now displayed has, in any way, affected the revenue, and refers to the percentage of collections in past years in support of his view.

THE difficulty of keeping Inspecting Officers of Government straight in the path of duty, has always been a subject of anxiety to Government. In the recent Education Resolution of the Bengal Government, it is complained that Sub-Inspectors have been guilty of making tours more with a view to swell their travelling bills than to do the work properly. Sir Steuart Bayley observes: "The incompatibility of haste with useful inspection work is painfully clear, and the Lieutenant-Governor regrets to see the rapidity with which Sub-Inspectors have moved attributed in many cases to a desire to earn travelling allowance. It is imperative that extravagant and perfunctory touring should be not only persistently discouraged, as Mr. Tawney remarks, but positively prohibited." Orders of this kind have been passed over and over and several precautions and safeguards with the object of removing the abuses of inspection have been employed, but so far without success.

THE number of pupils in colleges in Bengal continues to increase at a rate at which it is calculated that the roll of the Calcutta University students will double in about four years. Every new annual report, says the Government Resolution, supplies fresh evidence of the progress of college education, of its growing popularity and wider diffusion. There is some increase also in the number of pupils attending secondary schools, i.e., high English, middle English, and middle vernacular. Primary schools, and the number attending them, however, show a decrease. Without some progress made in the extension of this class of education, the Lieutenant-Governor considers that the result of any year's work can never be considered as altogether good, and reaffirms the policy of Government to extend elementary education as widely as may be possible. Female education also does not show much progress in its elementary stage.

EX-SULTAN Murad is regaining his senses and the reigning Sultan Abdul Hamid is losing his. Such is the testimony of a Mahomedan, said to be influential, writing from Constantinople to the London Daily News:

"It is an open secret known by the Ambassadors, that the Sultan cannot keep anything to himself. He will disclose to his entourage, who are generally of an ignorant class, matters of the highest importance on vital subjects. He will endeavour to ask the opinion of every one, and take the opinion of every one, and finally follow the advice of no one. The last one who has the privilege of advising his Sovereign is the most fortunate of all. Marshals, chamberlains, aides-de-camp, sheiks, secretaries, interpreters, translators, chandelier-holders, carpet-beaters, water-carriers, coffee-beaters, and other similar folk, who enjoy here much more influence over our Padishah than the ministers of the Sublime Porte—all have a certain hold over the religious chief of Islam. Our Padishah seems to be lying on a bed of roses when he sees the whole world at Stamboul at loggerheads, and he certainly feels much happier when he sees the foreign high representatives here, especially those of the signatory Powers of the Treaty of Berlin like the Ministers of the Sublime Porte in discord. Never did the motto 'Divide et Impera' please a Turkish monarch better than it pleases Abdul-Hamid; it is his last hope of retaining for a few years longer his falling crown. The Sultan is only reigning by 'force' and not by 'law,' as Count Vassili very cleverly explained it in the Nouvelle Revue. The Sultan according to our Mahomedan law (Shari-Sharif) is only acting as ad interim to Sultan Murad who is still living. Murad was deposed on a Fatwa of the Sheikh-ul-Islam, our highest religious authority, as having lost his intellectual powers, and after consultation with the highest medical authorities, as well as the Council of Ministers, Abdul-Hamid was proclaimed Sultan, but these last two years Sultan Murad's health has so much improved that Abdul-Hamid has become de facto only a Vakil (ad interim) to his brother Murad. It is now affirmed that Murad's health is entirely restored, and as the Mahomedan law does not permit a Vakil when the original Sovereign is well, Murad is legally entitled to be restored to the throne. Abdul Hamid, as we are all aware here, is showing serious symptoms of illness. They are apparent in his conduct to his Ministers, his nearest relatives, in the harem and to his entourage, in the exile from the capital, of thousands of people, the execution of many personages, and, in a word, in the general interference of the Sultan with everything which the Porte does. He desires to do everything by himself, to meddle in the smallest details, even in the marriages of his suite. Abdul Hamid is suffering from the very same illness which caused the dethronement of his brother Murad, and the Ulema, together with the functionaries, are already asking each other why the Sultan should not retire and either Murad Effendi or Rechad Effendi be proclaimed in his stead. All these are signs of future internal disorder. The first war will create serious local disturbances, although it is believed here that there will be no shedding of blood, for the whole people are united as to what should be done to save the empire from utter ruin."

From internal traces, the writer is a Turk, and he is represented to be an influential man. Much, naturally, is being made of his statement. And it may produce an opinion in Europe which, reacting on minds at home, may have the effect of precipitating affairs. His account, however, seems to conflict with the impression left on our minds of the mind and character of the reigning Sultan by the report of the interview held with him by Professor Vambéry as published in a Pesth paper. Whom are we to believe? It will be remembered that in our leading article of the 15th November, noticing His Majesty's conversation with Mons. Vambéry, we said, 'All that shows that Turkey is now ruled by a sovereign who knows his affairs and is conversant with the politics of Europe at large.' And judging from what fell from the Sultan, nobody could come to any other conclusion. Nor is there any ground for suspecting the accuracy of the report, which evidently was supplied by Vambéry himself. Partizan as the Professor is, his competency and his honesty are equally beyond question. We prefer to trust ourselves to the guidance of the known publicist of world-wide reputation to relying on the unnamed Mahomedan politician of Stamboul. This gentleman is no doubt a well-informed person, but he seems to deal largely in "bazaar gup." His testimony to the character and state of mind of the sovereign is wholly inferential. His inference falls to the ground if his facts can be explained by any other hypothesis, and they are capable of such explanation. If the Sultan interferes too much in the administration and in everything, that is precisely what an autocrat with any taste for work usually does, and what an able despot confident of his ability naturally would do.

COMPLAINTS reach us of lax supervision in the Eden Hindu Hostel, entailing hardships on the Boarders and deteriorating their morals. The Committee's visits being few and far between, the Superintendent of the Hostel, a clerk on a small pay in the office of the Director of Public Instruction—the President of the Committee—is the monarch of all he surveys or chooses to superintend. We await, for further notice, the disposal of the complaint which has formally gone up to the Committee from 41 Boarders.

THERE are still those who contend that the amendment carried at the Royal Reception meeting survives, and can be given effect to. They however, forget that the resolution which it sought to correct was not put to the meeting and not carried. The knowing ones of the meeting, recovering their wits, avoided a complete disaster by a strategic flight, and the juvenile Amending Hands without heads, flushed with their empty triumph, as soon left the Hall. To prove his loyalty and sincerity to the public, Surrender Not assumes that the second Resolution forming the Committee with the Secretaries was passed as amended by himself, and, in his capacity of Secretary ^{he}, his Iggyan Association, offered to the Secretaries to the Prince Albert Victor Reception Committee, Rs 10,000, for giving "effect to the first resolution and the second resolution as passed in its amended form," with promises of "further remittances." The gentlemen who would have been the Secretaries, had the second resolution been put to the vote and carried, would not, as indeed they could not, receive the sum, and declined the offer—without thanks.

THERE will be Reception of, and Entertainment to, the Prince, all the same—nay, all the better for the foolish exhibition at the Town Hall. Accordingly, several gentlemen today met at the British Indian Association Rooms and, under the presidency of Maharaja Jotendra Mohun Tagore, Resolved upon a Committee of about 250 with Sri Jotendra as Chairman and the Secretaries of the Chamber of Commerce and the British Indian Association as Secretaries, to arrange for the reception and entertainment, and an Executive Committee of 50 with power to add to their number to carry out the details. There were no speeches, the gentlemen assembled meant work, and there had been enough specification down to ignoble lengths. The resolutions were passed unanimously, the disturbing element having been kept out altogether. Several subscriptions, amounting to about Rs 16,000, were announced. The Maharaja of Durbhanga's princely offer of bearing the greater part of the cost of the entertainment was received with cheers.

Nor is the Premier Peer of Bengal alone in his glory. His munificent loyalty to the Throne has found a second fit. The meeting closed with an agreeable surprise. There was present a Chief of an ancient and illustrious House of classic Kalinga in the South, now sojourning here, who not only subscribed a handsome amount on the spot but made a magnificent offer into the bagam. The Maharaja of Vizianagram does not belong to Bengal, and it is known that he has contributed in a princely way to the Reception Fund in his native Madras. Nevertheless, His Highness promised to make up any sum that might be wanting to give a suitable Reception and Entertainment that the Committee might determine upon.

All's well that ends well. *And we devoutly trust all will yet end well. But we confess we are not still without some misgivings. The cloven foot is still visible to the discerning. After what has occurred, the word "leaders" has no right to a place in the Bengal political dictionary, but we feel bound to warn the respectable men of all classes against the influence of some worms that have crept into this business.

It was these minikins who, by their peculiar methods—their petty malignant manipulations on a great ceremonial public occasion—in a great measure invited the late crash. And we do not know to what contretemps they may succeed in landing the present Reorganization. The evil genius is not exhausted, we are afraid. Its workings may be traced in the last proceedings. They may be clearly read in the personnel of the Committees formed. Some of the highest and best names are conspicuous by their absence. We can understand the omission of the treacherous and disloyal men who laid and sprung the mine on the loyal demonstration in the Town Hall, and insulted in the same breath both their fellow citizens and Royalty itself. But it was a grave responsibility to keep out the head of the Town Corporation and fix on Sir Henry Harrison the indelible stamp of disloyalty. Such a virtual vote of Censure has never been known, and ought to have been avoided by all means. The British Indian Conclave evidently did not see the extent of consequences of their confident discharge of the Censorship. The matter could scarcely end there. The Corporation could not quietly look on while their Chairman was thus insulted. They and the whole town might be urged to come to the rescue, or might consider it necessary to follow up the censure. The Government itself is placed in a fix. It must in duty declare itself. Even if there were a consensus of all the powers and possibilities to blast them, men like Sir Henry Harrison and Mr. H. J. S. Cotton are not easy to efface. They have got that in them by Heaven's endowment which can maintain them Unhurt amid the war of elements.

But if there was any ground for keeping clear of these gentlemen, there were other omissions which can not be defended on that plan. Baboo Surendra Nath Banerjee's exclusion is natural, the feeling of the Royalists and Loyalists being too fresh, but it is scarcely expedient. It certainly will not commend itself to those many respectable men who would have seen harmony reestablished between the several parties. He could not disturb a Committee pledged to a settled programme. It would have been a graceful concession to put him on the General Committee. The Hon'ble Dr. Ma-of Idralal Sircar's exclusion is a positive ingratitude, after his prompt secession from the faction at the request of the Chairman, at the Town Hall meeting.

If the plan was to have nothing to do with any one who had been a party to the intrigue of disturbance, how comes Dr. Sanders to be on the Committee who was prepared to support the Amendment, had the original mover and seconder not backed out? There are scores of names of well-known citizens, besides, who have been kept out, against whom there could be no political objection, but who are thus causelessly classed, by implication, among the disaffected. The old families of the Setts and Bysacks are nowhere. The pure Brahmans are equally at a discount. The several families of Mitters of Simlah, the three leading Dutt families are all quietly ignored. The different branches of the old House of Raja Sookmoy, the early friend of the East India Company, are represented by a single member. There is no member of Raja Nursing's and Raja Buddynath's families. Surely, the names of Kumars Dowlat Chunder and Monohur would have occurred to anybody who knew Native Calcutta. The Seals are represented by a single scapegrace, while his uncle is forgotten. Maharshi Debender Nath Tagore—the eldest son of the historic Dwarkanath Tagore, friend of Her Majesty the Queen, as well as of other crowned heads in Europe—with his whole family has been kept out. The grandsons of Raja Ram Mohan Roy (another friend of Her Majesty's) have been equally left in the lurch. Among Rajas, we miss the heads of the ancient Houses of Naldanga and Chachra. We do not see the Brahman Raja of Hlitampur. We see not the great Zemindar of Kakina. We are not giving names at random, but those of the select few who are expected by the country to have a place in such an assemblage on such an occasion. We could mention dozens of well-known Zemindars in and about the town, such as the Biswases, Dasses and Chowdhrys of Jaun Bazaar, the Roy Chowdhrys of Cossipore, the Chowdhrys of Panchai, and Roy Chowdhrys of Taki, the Mookerjees of Gobardanga, the Pal Chowdhrys of Latoodaha, who all reside and are well known in town, who are unrepresented. Who has not heard of Baboos Nafar Chunder and Biptodas Pal Chowdhry? or of Ray Jatindra Nath Chowdhry? We find Dewan Jai Prakash Lal of Doomraon, but miss Dewan Bhoobaneswar Dutt of Hutwa? Surely, Dewan Fazel Rabbi of Moorsshedabad ought to have occurred to some at least of the promoters. We do not see Kumar Nil Krishna, but his younger brother is there. The Kayastha Malliks of Calcutta are represented by a single name.

Kumar Inder Chunder Singh, so well known to native and European society for his munificence and his public spirit, is alone of all the Paikpara Raj pointedly excluded. The natives in the Government services have been entirely left out. Rai Bahadr Rajendra Nath Mitra, long the practical arbiter of many fates as the only native Secretary in the Bengal Office, now at Alipore, is not in. Nor is there Baboo Bankim Chunder Chatterjee, perhaps the greatest Bengali name in Bengal. A ban seems to have been contemplated against all native connections of Government. Men like Baboo Abhoya Charan Das, grown grey in functions of the kind to be performed, who can scarcely be said to be retired, seeing that they are still serving actively in honorary capacities, have been tabooed. But what shall we say of an insane List which, with so many barristers of sorts in it, has no room for Messrs. Mono Mohan Ghosh and W. C. Bonnerjee? The last kick of the ass in the camp—whoever he be—we will mention is that directed against the Press. Our Father in British Indian Street itself, who has so often replied to toasts for us at public dinners, the veteran James Wilson is excluded. And so, with him, the conductors of the Amrita Bazar, Hope, and of that unspeakable rag, Reis & Rayyet, are nowhere.

The more Select Executive Committee has been constituted with equal carelessness, and evidently on personal likes and dislikes. It is crowded with ornamental figure-heads, while men of work like Mr. Mehta, who are on every lip, have been excluded.

IN our last, we finished the publication of a certified translate of the Will of the late Nawab Ikbaloob Dowlah Bahadoor, which is now the subject of litigation in the Indian courts. It is a document unexampled in testamentary annals, and is replete with interesting and instructive reading. Its charm lies in the frankness of its narrations and opinions. But candour without care is apt to be a nuisance. Our attention has been drawn to a passage as open to this remark. Referring to his Benares property, the testator denounces his agent there in no measured terms. But he is not sure who is his agent. He mentions two different men, both Biswases, but abuses one without identifying him, speaking throughout of him in the grammatical third person singular. One of them, Baboo Radhanath of that ilk, we are assured, was not the Nawab's agent and has had nothing to do with his affairs. We are glad to have this opportunity of doing justice.

THE Family of Ali is irresistible. Notwithstanding the bar under which they lie among the Orthodox, they have always found partisans who, though few in number, are strong in their faith and zeal—men of light and leading—Nawabs and Viziers.

The wisdom of British Proverbial Philosophy has once more secured a signal proof. The grey mare is the better horse by far. In these days of Woman's Rights and Female ascendancy, it was time enough that the fact should be unmistakably asserted and freely admitted. A quarter of a century ago, a Mrs. B—had, by popular voice, the distinction of being the Judge of Rajshahye. If the claims of the prior letter had been overlooked, justice, though slow, is sure, and the amende honorable has at length been made by the administrative conscience and the dues paid with all interest, with the enthronement of Saraswati on the highest board of justice.

There is a moral in every incident, and so in this. Nothing like marriage, when of the right sort. It is a salutary lesson, and one particularly wanted at a time when the cry is heard on all sides that marriage is a failure, and that the young man of the period will have none of it. Our Boys at any rate have presented to them a capital example of fruitful matrimony in every sense.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1889.

THE STATUTORY CIVIL SERVICE.

To the Government of India, the result of the Public Service Commission, as modified by the Secretary of State, must be a great disappointment. It was after much and repeated correspondence, extending over a period of two years, that the Government of India succeeded in getting Lord Kimberley's sanction to appoint a Commission with power to go into the whole subject of a larger admission of natives to the higher offices of the public service, independently of the limitations at present imposed by Acts of Parliament, and with a view to Parliamentary legislation, if necessary. The Secretary of State was, from the first, averse to any legislative changes, while the Government of India, both under Lord Ripon and Lord Dufferin, insisted upon such changes as the best way of dealing with the question. They pointed out the defects of the Statutory system, and strongly advocated fresh Parliamentary legislation, as the only means of arriving at a satisfactory solution of the problem. But the Secretary of State was opposed to legislation. To Lord Ripon's proposals to make certain changes in the Covenanted Civil Service Competition in England, to open wider that door of admission to natives of India, leaving the Statutory system to make up any deficiency in the 18 per cent. which was recognised as the fair proportion of the whole recruitment to be reserved for natives, by appointments made under revised and more comprehensive rules, Lord Kimberley answered with an emphatic negative, stoutly holding out for the Statutory system, which, far from deserving the secondary place to which Lord Ripon's scheme would have reduced it, was considered to be the primary method of selecting natives of India for the Civil Service. The English competition was, he said, naturally adapted to the circumstances of home-born rather than of Indian candidates, and the Act of 1870 was "the remedy provided by Parliament itself for any defects that might show themselves in the competitive system established in 1853, and for any inconvenience or injustice which the natives of India might be shown by experience to suffer" from the conditions of the English system. He described the Act as "a measure of remarkable breadth and liberality, affording an unlimited field of experiment in methods of selection," and asked the Indian Government "to exhaust this remedy before undertaking the possibly impracticable task of completely adapting competitive selection in England to the circumstances both of European and of Indian candidates." These instructions of the Secretary of State were fully considered by Lord Dufferin's Government. Revised draft rules under the Statutory Act were circulated to Local Governments for their opinion, and, after considering the replies received, the Government of India again addressed the Secretary of State on the subject. All the Local Governments had commented upon the defects of the Statutory system, and Lord Dufferin's Government was of opinion that no good was to be expected from any mere tinkering of what, he believed, called for radical change. They concluded with expressing an opinion "that any scheme, to be entirely satisfactory, would require Parliamentary legislation, and unless the Secretary of State was willing to undertake such legislation as might be shown to be necessary, it would be impossible to devise a satisfactory scheme." To this strong expression of opinion, Lord Kimberley assented, and in his Despatch of 15th July 1886 sanctioned the re-opening of the question. The Public Service Commission was accordingly appointed with a sufficiently strong and representative constitution, and the Commission, after holding its sittings in various provinces and collecting a mass of evidence, recommended the lines on which Parliamentary legislation should be framed. The Statutory Act was proposed to be repealed, as in the Commission's opinion, no amendment, whether of the Statute, or the rules, would meet the ends in view, and the services were recommended to be reconstructed on the basis of an Imperial and a Provincial Service. The Provincial Service was to be constituted partly out of appointments which are at present reserved by Schedule to the Covenanted Civil Service and partly out of existing Uncovenanted appointments. The revision of the Schedule annexed to the Statute 24 and 25, Vict., Cap. 54, would have required Parliamentary legislation. These proposals of the Commission were substantially accepted by the Government of India, which, in forwarding the Commission's recommendations, might well and reasonably expect that the Secretary of State, after having admitted the necessity of the whole question being reconsidered in view to Parliamentary legislation if necessary, would accord his sanction to the scheme as at last devised. Nothing of the kind. Lord Cross harks back to the old position held by Lord Kimberley in his reply to Lord Ripon's Despatch of 12th September 1884. The present Secretary of State even quotes Lord Kimberley's high estimate of the Statutory Act, and repeats that the remedy it provides should be exhausted before applying to Parliament for fresh legislation. If this is not throwing the whole thing overboard, we do not know what is. The great point in issue between the two authorities for a long time was as to the ^{and surgical} ~~necessity~~ of otherwise of fresh Parliamentary legislation. So far as this is concerned, the Government of India have scarcely been treated with fairness or sufficient courtesy.

Both Lord Kimberley and Lord Cross are eloquent in their praise of the Statute of 1870. It is "a measure of remarkable breadth and liberality," "the Parliamentary remedy for any defects in the existing system," in a word, an instrument capable of versatile application and endless hidden possibilities. Holding such an estimate of the capacities of that Act, the Secretary of State could not well be prepared to resort to Parliament, while he points out that the very suggestion of the repeal of a measure of such liberality would be regarded as a retrograde step and scarcely have chance of a hearing. It would be represented, says Lord Cross, as a withdrawal, from the natives of India, of an important Statutory right. If it were explained, he adds, that such a withdrawal is counterbalanced by the proposed constitution of the Provincial Service upon a wider basis, by transferring to it a number of appointments now reserved by the Schedule for the Covenanted Civil Service, the reply might be made that the fact that an office is not in the Schedule does not necessarily imply that it shall be held exclusively by the Provincial Service. Indeed, for some time, such excluded offices would be treated as ground common to both Services. Under such circumstances, any draft enactment, brought before Parliament, argues the Secretary of State, might present the aspect of being rather unfavorable than favorable to the natives. It is also pointed out that "the difficulties which have really hampered the free action of Government, in using the existing statutes, are such as cannot be, summarily removed by fresh legislation: They can be overcome only by time and the operation of agencies already at work." The Holloway's Pills.—Teachings of Experience.—The united testimony of thousands, extending over more than forty years, most strongly recommends these Pills as the best purifiers, the mildest aperients, and the surest restoratives. They never prove delusive, or give merely temporary relief, but attack all ailments of the stomach, lungs, heart, head, and bowels in the only safe and legitimate way, by depurating the blood, and so eradicating those impurities which are the source and constituent of almost every disease. Their medicinal efficacy is wonderful in renovating enfeebled constitutions. Their action embraces all that is desirable in a household medicine. They expel every noxious and effete matter; and thus the strength is nurtured and the energies stimulated.

conclusion of the Secretary of State is, that the proposed legislation, besides being of doubtful expediency, would not facilitate the scheme of the Commission, the obstacles to any very early and permanent redistribution of the public offices being due to the state of education and civilization among the natives rather than to the law. The measures proposed by the Commission are many of them such as, in their own view, would take some time for their complete realization. Lord Cross, therefore, holds that it is possible "to accept in substance the Commission's scheme and introduce it without discarding any essential part or disturbing its framework upon the basis of the existing Acts of Parliament."

THE INCOME TAX.

If the demoralising effects of any impost were an argument for its abolition, the Income Tax ought to be doomed. It has been demoralising all round. Both officers and assesseees have succumbed to the temptations to fraud offered by its administration. Our authority for such a statement is the official Blue-book. The Board of Revenue in the last report on the administration of the Income tax writes: "In 1887-88 enquires were made which resulted in the discovery that the Marwari traders in Calcutta had for some time past been underassessed, and that there had been much fraudulent evasion of the law through collusion with an Assessor and another person who was employed by an attorney as a tout to procure him work in connection with Income-tax cases. The irregularities then discovered were remedied, the Assessor was dismissed, and as the then Collector retired about the same time a new Collector was appointed. A much stricter system of enquiry into the incomes and profits of the Marwari merchants was introduced, the result of which has been a very large increase in the sum payable by them as Income-tax." The increase amounted to over 2¼ lacs in last year, and it is expected to grow with better administration. The State was thus for years a heavy loser under the then much belauded administration of a European Collector whose retirement is conveniently synchronous with the discovery. The native Assessor is justly dismissed, but the report is silent as to whether any proceedings were taken to bring the attorney's tout to justice. After such disclosures of the conduct of Government officers, one can scarcely be surprised to find the wide prevalence of dishonesty in various shapes and degrees among the general body of tax-payers. We rely upon the same report for evidence in support of this. The Board says that many Europeans and Companies in Calcutta under-declared their income "through ignorance of what constituted income." "Allowances to resident partners, interest on partners' capital, Income-tax paid in the previous year, sums not wholly or exclusively laid out for trade, debit balances of previous years introduced as a set-off against the year's profits, are instances of improper deductions from assessable incomes which were apparently permitted in previous years." Altogether, the Marwaris are not all the black sheep in the Calcutta fold, and many strange things were permitted in previous years, under an exemplary Collector whose retirement was well-timed with the introduction of critical enquiry. About native assesseees, the Collector of Bhagulpore writes: "In this district regular accounts are rarely kept except by tradesmen, and every year the Act is in operation I believe the system of keeping two sets of accounts—one for the Assessor and the other for business—is developed.

Many of the mofussil money-lenders profess to keep none at all, and to work on their bonds, producing of course just as many of these as they think the Assessor or Deputy Collector will have heard of or as suits their purpose." The Commissioner of Orissa reports the difficulty of ascertaining the income of Mohunts and Pandas who are the only persons having the largest incomes in that province. The Commissioner of Chota Nagpore reports a difficulty of another kind. He complains that the contractors under the Bengal-Nagpore Railway Company either did not submit returns of their income, or furnished such as were incomplete and unreliable, and the Railway Engineers did not in all cases give the necessary information asked for.

The unpopularity of the tax is admitted by the Board itself to be beyond question. It is, however, added, no doubt as a plea for its retention, that "there is now seldom any open expression of discontent even amongst the classes who have to pay it, though evasions of the law by deliberately understating incomes, by fabricating accounts or by other equally unfair means continue to be common among petty traders and professional men without fixed salaries." The last admissions are a sufficient condemnation of a tax which is admittedly sapping all morality in the commercial classes in the country. Our own experience not only confirms the opinion expressed by the Board as to the prevalence of dishonesty in evading the payment of the tax, but goes further. It is by no means confined to petty traders. There are manufacturers and dealers on a large scale who are known to fabricate two sets of accounts, and this is not confined to natives. European Companies are not above resorting to unfair means for underestimating their profits. It is the salaried class and holders of Government securities that are precluded from these means of evading payment, but even, among the former, there are not a few who derive an income from perquisites, and these go unassessed from the difficulty of ascertaining them. Another mode of evasion is reported to be the wilful commission of default. Instances, the Board says, were not wanting in which the assesseees defaulted under the idea that failure to pay the tax and its subsequent payment under warrant would be strong grounds for claiming exemption in the next year. The Board is of opinion that, with the exception of Calcutta, the limit of taxation has been reached in the provinces. The Board has no doubt data to justify this view. They are evidently satisfied with the amount which was collected in the year 1888-9, which shows a considerable increase. But we have independent information to show that the collections are often swollen by the arbitrary assessment of incomes falling below the taxable minimum under the law. So long as the law remains in force, people with assessable incomes must pay the tax, however it might press on them, but there is no reason why zealous Deputy Collectors and Assessors, who fight shy of closely scrutinising the incomes of the higher classes of assesseees who can protect themselves even in their unfair evasions of the Act, should make up the deficiency in their collections by spreading their net over a large area which ought to be left untouched by their operations. This area comprises a large number of small incomes derived by poor dealers who are not intelligent enough to defend themselves from oppression and reconcile themselves to the impost as a call from the Sirkar which must be obeyed by all without exception.

THE MAHARAJA OF VIZIANAGRAM AND THE NEW MADRAS JUBILEE TOWN HALL.

DURING his late visit to Madras, the Maharaja of Vizianagram was welcomed with an address by the promoters of the Town Hall in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee. As the building owes its existence mainly, within so short a time, to His Highness' enlightened munificence, it was but natural, now that the Hall has been completed, that there should be a grateful demonstration in his honour. The Maharaja replied as follows:—

YOUR EXCELLENCY,—With your permission, I will now return thanks to the Trustees of the Victoria Public Hall, who have shown me greater honor than my humble attempts entitle me to receive on this occasion. Colonel Moore, Trustees of the Victoria Hall, Ladies and Gentlemen, I sincerely thank you for your kind invitation to receive the address with which you have just honored me. It is, of course, a great pleasure to me to see, as I now do, this beautiful building in its complete state, and I must say that I think in its appearance, and its many appliances of convenience for every sort of entertainment and function of public utility, it reflects undoubtedly very great credit upon the architect, upon all who had either supervision over it, or suggestions to make as to its existence, as well as upon those responsible for its construction. In 1875, when an entertainment was given to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, for want of such a building, His Royal Highness was entertained by Madras in a pavilion temporarily fitted up in the Royapuram Railway Terminus. Although the bamboo and the palm are emblems of peace and prosperity and are often substituted for architectural needs in Madras, yet I trust no one would doubt that, instead of those fragile materials, granite and mortar, which are the materials used for the foundation and superstructure of this building, are far more fitting symbols and suitable indicators of unswerving loyalty which is the monopoly only of us, the Eastern Aryans. On such occasions, to quote my much respected friend Dr. Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee in Calcutta, "when we directly have to show our loyalty to royalty, our loyalty has no limits." Overflowing with ever so much greater enthusiasm, it leaves a more abiding impression on our hearts than on those of any nation, I make bold to say, on the face of the earth; and I am delighted that, on the present occasion of a Royal visit, this building is to be utilized for the homage which Madras is to offer to H. R. H. our beloved Prince Albert Victor. Then, again, the simile holds good when you apply it to the steadfastness of purpose in discharging manifest and manifold functions of public utility other than those mentioned above. From similes and sentiments, if we turn towards practical advantages, I think I shall be able to convince you that aid in this direction, or like objects, carries off the palm of superiority over the succour that may be lent to the much talked of and itinerating assembly known as "the National Congress." I have no objection to that association; but I simply mean to say that, at present, it fails to fulfil its proper mission, for the simple reason that it espouses political agitation alone; whereas there is no question of general beneficence either of a political or social nature, that cannot be discussed under this roof; while, strange to say, as above alluded to, the National Congress completely turns its back upon all social questions, which constitute the very foundation upon which any fitting political superstructure is alone capable of construction. I am afraid that unless the National Congress recognises social reforms as well, the fruits aimed at by it will prove very inadequate, and certainly dearly bought for the expenditure it has necessitated. So, gentlemen, I think I have proved that permanency, or durability, is on the side of social reform. Among social reforms, for instance, what greater reform, either social or legal, as you may please to call it, can we think of, than a measure to put a stop to the sale of Hindu girls in marriage—which among the Latins, was known as co-emption, and which was put a stop to before the inauguration of what is known as the Twelve Tables—a practice not only common, but extensively prevalent throughout the Madras Presidency, and in a less degree in the other two Presidencies, viz., Bombay and Bengal in British India, especially among the Brahminical classes in the Southern Presidency, under the most objectionable and absolutely groundless allegations of religious sanction, greatly owing to the utter ignorance of the lower classes regarding the intent and import of the Shastras, and partly owing to the uninterrupted and rapid decay of Hindu Hierarchical prestige upon the various sects from the middle of this century; and partly owing to the inefficiency of the provision in the British Slavery Act V of 1843. And to bring about such a desirable end, I am afraid, the National Congress will not turn a listening ear to me; whereas I am emboldened to ask attention to it here, through your indulgence, although it is a seeming digression, for which I beg your forbearance, from the present purposes for which we have assembled here. I have mentioned the subject to prove practically the various advantages one would derive in such places of public advantage and general utility as the Victoria Public Hall in which we are now assembled. Having proved the superiority of permanent institutions, of established societies and Town Halls over ephemeral and itinerant bodies, I thank you most cordially for the kind expressions concerning anything I have been able to do towards forwarding so valuable a work; and I trust that the Victoria Public Hall may always continue to more than fulfil the anticipations entertained concerning it, when it was first projected; and I assure you I shall always retain a most lively recollection of the honor which, as I have said above, I have not the least claim to, and which you have been pleased to do me on this occasion. I assure you that I shall ever exert myself to further anything concerning the Victoria Public Hall, in which you have shown such praiseworthy interest, to the best of my abilities, and I will strive to deserve the kind sentiments you have so liberally lavished on me.

NAWAB ABDUL LUTEEF BAHADOOR AT THE SCHOOL OF GREEK MEDICINE AT DELHI.

A most interesting ceremony was the other day performed at the Yunani Medical School in this city.

Nawab Abdul Luteef Bahadur, C. I. E., of Calcutta, was lately in our midst on a short visit, and the members of the Committee of the Madrass F. M. S. or medical school for imparting instruction under the Yunani system, took the opportunity of presenting him with an address of welcome, as he had always evinced a strong interest in the cause of Yunani medicine.

A meeting of the members of the Committee of the Medresah, and of other gentlemen interested in the institution was convened on Sunday the 17th instant, at the school premises. The President of the Committee, Syed Hadi Hossain Khan Bahadur, supported by Prince Muzya Jah Bahadur of the ex-Royal Family of Delhi, Nawab Saeedooddeen Ahmad Khan of the Loharoo Family, Shum-ul Olma Mahomed Zakaoollah Khan Bahadur, Hakeem Abdul Majeed Khan, and others, presented the Nawab with an address of welcome, couched in most complimentary terms, for his lifelong services in the cause of Mahomedan Education and improvement as well as in the cause of Yunani medicine.

The Nawab in returning his cordial thanks for the great and unexpected honor conferred upon him by the leaders of Delhi society, addressed the meeting for a couple of hours.

After dealing with the most important question of Mahomedan Education, in general terms, he entered into an elaborate discussion of the subject of the Yunani system of medicine. He then acknowledged the benefits which medical and surgical treatment had, under the European system of allopathy, conferred upon the natives of India. Then he dwelt upon the urgent necessity that existed in this country for the preservation and improvement of the Yunani system, which was largely patronized and resorted to by certain sections of the Mahomedan and Hindoo communities, who, owing to strong religious and social prejudices, were unable and unwilling to avail themselves of the advantages of European medicine, and who were satisfied that, whilst generally benefiting them by its mode of treatment, the Yunani system religiously respected those prejudices.

As an instance, he said that, in the first place, notwithstanding the march of civilization, there were still millions of men and women in this country who deliberately refused, even at the sacrifice of their lives and health, to touch any medicine made of spirits; and secondly, there were thousands of females of the Pardahkeen class, who preferred death rather than allow their person to be seen, much less touched, by male physicians and surgeons. He reminded his audience that it was with the sole object of satisfactorily meeting this latter requirement that the splendid and most beneficent institution of Lady Dufferin's Zenana Hospitals has been established throughout this country under the auspices of Her most Gracious Majesty the Queen Empress. Having thus shown that there did exist a large number of Her Majesty's subjects in India who were rightly or wrongly deprived of the blessings of the European system of medicine, and who had still a faith in the Yunani system, the Nawab pointed out to the meeting that before this there had been no organization whatever for giving regular instruction in the science of Yunani medicine. It was well known that the various Hakeems or physicians of the Yunani school who found time, were in the habit of giving private tuition to a number of students, who were inclined to learn that branch of science; and it was thus that a pretty good complement of Hakeems was found to exist in almost all parts of India. This, the Nawab observed, was by no means satisfactory. He said that such a mode of recruiting the ranks of the Hakeems was highly unsatisfactory. The result was that there were Hakeems and Hakeems. There were some who were really well educated and competent physicians—having undergone a regular course of instruction in the difficult science and passed several years of apprenticeship under well-known practitioners. Whilst there were many others who had only acquired a very superficial knowledge of the Yunani system, and in the absence of better qualified men had set themselves up as Hakeems, and the requirements of the people provided them with practice. The mischief that this sort of medical practitioners are likely to do can be easily imagined. It was to remedy this state of affairs that Hakeem Abdul Majeed Khan, the eldest son of the famous and eminent physician, Hakeem Mahmood Khan (whose forefathers had established themselves in Delhi for the last 200 years, as physicians to the Emperors of Delhi)—and himself a most successful and learned physician—has founded this medical school for giving a complete course of instruction in the Yunani system. The Yunani system-loving communities cannot be too thankful to Hakeem Abdul Mujed Khan for this philanthropic and laudable move on his part. The Nawab said that he was aware from personal knowledge that at the courts of almost all native Princes throughout India, Yunani Hakeems formed a part of the regular establishments, in addition to English Doctors of medicine, and he had no doubt that if an appeal for assistance were made in a proper manner to the Princes and noblemen of India, sufficient help would be forthcoming without much difficulty. He exhorted his audience to adopt suitable measures for bringing to the notice of the Indian public the good work which the infant school was doing, and to try, to the utmost of their power, to give it their full support in every way.

The Nawab, after again thanking the members of the Committee for the honor he had received at their hands, sat down. The President thanked the Nawab, on behalf of the gentlemen present, for his admirable, interesting and most instructive speech; and then the meeting broke up.

Delhi, 28th November 1889.

MIR ABDULLAH.

THE SASTRAS AND THE SCRIPTURES.

As Hindus we cannot but feel sympathetically towards Pundit Bhashya Charya in his lamentations, in The Hindu of Madras, over the reluctance of Western Orientalists to acknowledge the antiquity of any Indian work or monument. "The Bhagavad Gita is copied, according to them, from the New Testament and was written after the beginning of the Christian era. Sir William Jones thought the Code of Manu was written in the ninth century B. C., and we are now told by Western scholars that it was written in the fourth century after Christ, &c."

When Sir William Jones and other distinguished scholars began to study the Sacred Books of the East, they were confounded on finding that their new and old Testaments contained so much in common with them, causing them to come to the conclusion that either they must be "copied from the Christian Gospel histories or the Christian Gospel histories are copies from them, or they have both been copied from an older mythos." Their mode of explanation—the coincidence was that "the haughty self—showed his creed and ritual and legends from—alia."

The Revd. Maurice, in his book titled "Brahminical Fraud detected or the attempts of the Sacerdotal tribe of India to invest their fabulous deities and heroes with the honours and attributes of the Christian Messiah, examined, exposed and defeated," made out to his own satisfaction and that of the English Bishops how these swindling interpolations were made. But later experience has shown the Antiquarian that the explanation is no longer tenable and that the antiquity of the Sanskrit text is long anterior to the advent of the foreigner.

If the conclusion of the early scholars before referred to stood along with their dates for the Eastern Scriptures, it would now be impossible to avoid the conclusion that the Christian religion has been copied from its Indian predecessors. So the whole of our ancient books must be postdated to suit Christian ideas. History and the Bible will not agree, so much the worse for history. It must be cut and carved till it does fit it according to the Western antiquarian.

No. 1671.

From—C. J. Lyall, Esq., C.I.E., Offg. Secretary to the Government of India.

To—The Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

Calcutta, the 10th December 1889.

I AM DIRECTOR. The receipt of your letter No. 8201, dated the 30th Oct., containing (1) a memorial addressed to the Governor-General in Council, signed by Mahadev Keshav Kumthekar, late a Mamlatdar in the Central Provinces, the Bombay Presidency, whose dismissal was recommended by the Government of Bombay and was ordered in the letter from the Government of Bombay noted (No. 1251, dated 2nd Sep. 1889), and (2) a memorial presented to the Government of Bombay by certain influential officials (Sankar Balchandra Bapat, Venkatesh Krishna Yeshwant Ballal Tambe.)

2. In reply I am to observe that all these petitioners, with the exception of Kumthekar, were among the seven incriminated officials who were specially selected by the Government of Bombay as the first to be removed from the public service, as having most clearly incurred the penalty of dismissal provided by the Statute 49 George III, Cap. 126. At the same time the Government of Bombay reserved a number of cases for further consideration as presenting some doubtful features. Such being the case, it was concluded that His Excellency the Governor in Council, who was fully aware of all the circumstances under which the different individuals had paid, regarded these seven and also Kumthekar (who was the first of a second set of seven recommended for dismissal) as the most culpable or among the most culpable; and as soon as the Government of India had satisfied itself that they had without doubt paid money corruptly, it gave effect to the view of the Local Government which had thus singled them out. In forwarding the present representations, the Government of Bombay makes no recommendation for any special reconsideration of any individual case. Moreover, with the exception of the memorial from Kumthekar, which has already been disposed of, none of the petitions is addressed to the Government of India, and no reason is given in your letter why they have been forwarded. They have, however, been considered by the Governor-General in Council, and I am to communicate the conclusions at which he has arrived.

3. With reference to the petition from Shankar Bhalchandra Bapat, I am to point out that there is no suggestion in the case of any such pressure as could amount to extortion, while the payments were undoubtedly made to obtain an office and therefore within the statute. The harassment to which he refers seems to have consisted in Mr. Sathé having been appointed Native Assistant to the Commissioner in preference to himself, and he also apprehended that some one else might be similarly preferred. There is some force in the petitioner's remark that when Mr. Crawford, in breach of standing orders, personally asked for a loan, it was difficult for his native subordinate to refuse, but it is not true that he had no alternative. I am further to observe that although Bapat's case may be said to resemble in some respects that of Ganesh Pandurang Thakár, the Government of India, in excusing the latter from the penalty of dismissal after considerable hesitation, went to the extreme limit of indulgence. Bapat's case, moreover, is differentiated from that of Thakár in that he made more than one payment. The Governor-General in Council, therefore, is not prepared to re-open this case.

4. Nor does His Excellency in Council see any ground for reconsidering the case of Venkatesh Krishna Dravid. This man had committed a very grave error, and had been declared absolutely disqualified for a year for any judicial office, while at the end of that period he was to be tried as a Karkun or subordinate Magistrate before he could be considered eligible for a Mamlatdarship. In these circumstances he cannot plead supersession, and there were no threats or other pressure used to induce him to pay. He paid money to secure an office for which he had been deliberately held to be not eligible until he had given proof of fitness in a subordinate post. In other words he volunteered a payment "to escape the results of previous misconduct" or mistakes.

5. As regards the case of Yeshwant Ballal Tambe, I am to invite a reference to the deliberate opinion of the Commissioners that "as to the allegation that he was driven to give a bribe by being 'transferred and superseded, we find it to be groundless." Sir Raymond West in his minute describes Tambe's case as one in which "mere acquiescent connivance verged into active complicity," and it would seem that Tambe voluntarily put himself into communication with Deshmukh in the first instance. I am to say that if, notwithstanding these expressions of opinion, the Government of Bombay thinks that there are any special reasons for reconsideration of this case, those reasons should be stated clearly and fully for the information of the Governor-General in Council. The original statement made by Tambe to Mr. Ommanney has not been submitted to this Department, and there is nothing on record before the Government of India to support the plea that he held out against paying until he was distinctly threatened with a transfer to Poent.

6. In conclusion I am to state for the information of the Governor in Council that Balwant Narayan Dabir, another of the eight men whose dismissal was first ordered by the Government of India in accordance with the views believed to be entertained by the Governor in Council, has submitted a copy of a memorial addressed to the Governor-General in Council, the original of which he states has been forwarded through the Bombay Government. With reference to this case I am to say that the Governor-General in Council has no doubt about the guilt of the memorialist. In their report the Commissioners remark that "Dabir, if there be truth in his story, shows himself in no sense a victim of extortion or pressure, but a man who himself conceived the idea of offering a bribe for that to which he had no special claim;" and it appears to His Excellency in Council that there is ample evidence that he was anxious to obtain a permanent Mamlatdarship, and that, finding it must be paid for, he volunteered the payment of a large sum of money. In these circumstances the Government of India is unable to consider the order for his dismissal.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,
C. J. LYALL,

Offg. Secretary to the Government of India.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who b

of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty that attracts our author's eye:—[Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hints his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him. Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in. The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

A SERMON IN LOWER BENGAL.

BY SIR ALFRED LYALL

in the character of Hajee Mahomed Ghazee oorf Moonjahid-ood-din Wahabee, preacher from Arabia via Cabool and Swat, addressing the secret assembly.

Men of the Indian cities who call on the Prophet's name,
By our brotherhood in Islam ye besought me, and I came,
From a country hard and barren to, a softly watered land,
To a round sky line of harvests from a wilderness of sand ;
From our bare and barren homesteads, from our feast of dates and milk,

From your places, your flesh pots, and your raiment of the silk ;
From a land of fenced citadels, where blood is lightly shed,
Where a clan must hold its borders, and a man must keep his head ;
Where the wayfarer benighted, as he nears a village late
Spies the red spark from the matches of the guard about the gate,
Where the faithful watch in vain except the Lord their city keep—
Here the infidels protect you, and with open door ye sleep.
You have sought my aid and counsel, I must lead you, I must pray
That the God of Islam may restore your old imperial sway,
In the towns your fathers founded, in the provinces they named,
May revive a faith forgotten and the rites that ye have maimed ;
That he prosper your conspiracy and send his spirit forth,
On the Arab of the Dekhan and the Afghan of the North ;
So the bayonet be dashed aside with the swing of a curved sword,
And ye reap a bloody harvest with the sickle of the Lord.
Can I bid you hope and prosper ? Verily such things may be,
Men have conquered (nothing doubting) greater odds than you shall see ;

Yea, you Musalmans are many ; and their fighting men are few.
Prayer is good—but practice better—What is it that ye can do ?
Will ye fight for this fair heritage, this empire that ye lost ?
Yea, our God is God of battles, and the martyrs are his host,
Will ye join that noble army ? Will ye rather death than shame ?
Will ye play for all ye pray for when your heads are on the game ?

No—your brains are dull with eating, and your hearts are choked with lust,

And your seat is loose in saddle, and your scimitars are rust.
Ye are cankered by the luxury that keeps you rich and weak,
Ye trade in wine and usury—Nay, hear, for I must speak—
Shall I care for noisy menace, or the weight of an Indian blow ?
I who stormed the English picket on the skirt of Siah Koh,
When the wild Bajour mountain men lay choking with their blood
And the Kafirs held their footing, for I slew one where he stood.
They are cursed, but so are cowards ; and when ye can fight as they did

God succours all such Musalmans ; and then shall ye be aided

When ye gird your loins to harness, and renounce your gainful ease,
When ye quit your painted Tazeahs and pagan heresies—
Ye who bow to graven sepulchres, and adore a martyr's stone,
Who pray to a dead hermit, that should pray to God alone—
When ye shun the Hindu festivals, the tinkling of the bell,
The dancing, the idolatries, the harlotry of hell ;
When ye kneel to God in penitence, and cringe no more to men,
Ye shall smite the stiff-necked infidel, and rule, but not till then.
Then be of courage, oh men ; yea, though here in the darkness is burning

Faintly the light of our faith, by your sins and your ignorance dimmed,

Once it was lit by the Lord, and He knoweth no shadow of turning,
He shall pour oil at his time, and in season the lamp shall be trimmed.

Then shall ye hark to his voice, and start from your sleep at the warning,

Pealing afar through the Sound as of bugle in can

Through the chill air

Bidding the soldier arise, he must wake and

Be armed ere the light.

Strong must your heart and your hand be, no

Time for soft dreams is before you,

Woe to the coward who sleeps, when the Darkness that bound him has flown,

Firm be your faith and your feet, when the Sun's burning rays shall be o'er you,

When the rifles are ranging in line, and the Clear note of battle is blown.

* * * * *

So ye are stirred by my words, ye pardon my scorn and upbraiding,
Eagerly circle me round and ask will I lead an attack ?

Nay, though your spirits be willing, your flesh is but weak for crusading,

When I face Englishmen's cannon I want better stuff at my back

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Coughs, Influenza.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the respiratory organs. In common colds and influenza the Pills, taken internally, and the Ointment rubbed over the chest and throat, are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic, this treatment is the easiest, safest and surest. Holloway's Pills purify the blood, remove all obstacles to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the over-gorged air tubes, and render respiration free, without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits ; such are the ready means of escaping from suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other chest complaints, by which the health of so many is seriously and permanently injured in most countries.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

THE mediæval implements of torture collected in the Castle of Nuremberg have been sold to a London company, who will exhibit them in the principal towns of Europe and then put them up to public auction. Berlin has an eye on the entire collection.

TURNER'S "The Grand Canal, Venice" has again changed hands. The original of Miller's line-engraving, it was one of the gems of the Manley Hall gallery. Messrs. Agnew and Sons had purchased it for about £7,000. It was hitherto in the possession of the Earl of Dudley. He has now parted with it. It has passed to the New World, Lucky Cornelius Vanderbilt of New York has secured it at a considerable advance on the former price.

HERE is an account of the Austro-Hungarian Scientific Expedition to East Africa. It was read on November 27, before a special meeting of the Geographical Society of Vienna:—

"The travellers were the Hungarian Count Samu Teleki, and the Austrian Naval Lieutenant Ritter von Hochnel. They set off direct to Taveta, at the foot of Kilimanjaro, with the intention of making the ascent. They reached a height of 16,000 feet, but failed to attain the summit—a feat only recently achieved by Dr. Hans Meyer. The Expedition consisted of 250 men. They then marched northwards through Masailand, with Mount Kenia as their destination. They met with an unfriendly reception from the natives. At Kekupe they were assailed with showers of arrows, and had to fight their way for five days. By this time the natives were not spared, and were cut down without mercy. The Expedition, without sustaining any serious loss, reached Nyero, at the foot of Mount Kenia. Here Hochnel was seized with dysentery and had to be left behind, while Count Teleki made the ascent. Mount Kenia rises from the plateau of Lukipia, itself 6,000 feet above the sea level, to a height of about 18,000 feet; but Teleki and his men, toiling over the snow, reached a height of only 15,500 feet. The Expedition fell short of provisions, and to procure them a minor expedition was sent out, and did not return for two months. Those who remained behind were dependent for food on Count Teleki's skill with his gun. He killed during these two months a hundred elephants, buffaloes, and rhinoceroses. When the foraging party returned, on Feb. 10, 1888, an eighteen days' march brought the Expedition to Mount Nyero, where an excellent guide was secured. They suspected the existence of a lake in the neighbourhood, and, indeed, sighted one on March 6. It seemed to extend for miles towards the north. The inland sea was christened Lake Rudolph. The Expedition made all haste towards it, as they had provisions for only nine days, in the hope of coming across villages on the shore. In this they were cruelly disappointed. The whole country was barren and deserted, and during the twenty-two days' march to the northern end of the lake, where two large rivers empty themselves into it, hunger and privation were again endured. They discovered another lake east of Reshiat, which they named Lake Stéphanie, and returned to Reshiat without having met a single native, and in a state of utter exhaustion. They were unable to survey the second lake as they had done the first. Returning by the southern end of Lake Rudolph, taking a westerly course, they marched for thirty-five days without any other food than the scanty proceeds of Count Teleki's gun. It was a period of terrible hunger and hardship, and when Nyero was at last reached it was none too soon. The Expedition had been on the march for 166 days, meeting with nothing but privations. It returned by Lake Naiyasha and Ukambani to Taveta, its starting-point, reaching Mombassa, on the Indian Ocean, on Oct. 25, 1888."

THE Fisk Jubilee Singers have been repulsed from Bengal. In a Land of Darkness of different shades from Shemitic tawny to Hametic jet, and in a city with a West Indian brigade, Uncle Tom was no novelty. Besides, we are far too virtuous, or not enough virtuous, to be drawn by psalmody, however excellent or in the name of whatever charity.

THE Junior Scholarships for 1890, for candidates passing the Entrance Examination, in the Presidency Division have been fixed at 6 in the second grade and 12, third grade. The six are grantable to the highest in the divisional list without reference to districts. The twelve are distributed among the different districts of the Division in the following proportions :—

THE Bengal Legislative Council recommences operation from this day. We say operation because a cess is on the cards.

THE progress of education among Mahomedans, though maintained in the last year, was not so satisfactory as desirable, and unremitting attention to the subject on the part of the education department is enjoined. Two Mahomedan Assistant Inspectors were appointed during the year for the special purpose of securing the proper administration of the Mohsin Fund.

THE Calcutta Noter of the Indian Planter's Gazette laments that Surrender Not's offer of Rs. 10,000 was not accepted, for in that case he would have been obliged to pay up. But that practical joke was not open to the inchoate Committee.

The Party of the Original Resolution are, however, avenged on the enemy all the same—indeed, all the better. The refusal threw the Party of Amendment on their own resources. Considering who were at the bottom of the mischief-making at the Town Hall, and that they had a plausible case, and could appeal in the name of humanity to the charitable instincts of the public, these were not to be despised. No wonder that they are getting on swimmingly—even famously. Their overt mouth-piece, the Amender-in-Chief, too, has proved himself equal to the occasion. No Oriental of Orientals he, but a Bengali with true British energy, he is moving Heaven and Earth, even down to the other place (to speak in Parliamentary language) to his and his associates' good faith. Even perseverance that can remove mountains will not convert into innocence a perpetrated offence. But it can earn forgiveness and grace. And he promises to make splendid amends for the unfortunate Amendment.

LAST week, we noticed the zeal in excess of law with which the Salt Revenue officers protect the monopoly in and around Calcutta. The World cites a case exemplifying the inconvenient extent to which the monopoly may be carried in European countries.

"In a Neapolitan family some of the children became ill about a month ago, and the doctor ordered them to Capri to take salt baths. The parents took their children to Capri, and hired a small house for them near the sea. The children were too ill to bathe in the sea, so servants went down to the beach and brought up sea water in buckets for their baths in the house: whereupon the regie inspector arrested the servants, because he caught them in the act of taking salt (in the water) without paying the Government duty, salt being a Government monopoly in Italy.

AN American philologist, Mr. H. Hale, is engaged on a vocabulary of the composite language known as Chinook Jargon—the language of Oregon traders, in the same way as Pidjin or Pigeon is of the English in China.

THIS year the loyal Scots went without their public Dinner on St. Andrew's Day. The Covenanted Civil Servants of India—of whatever nationality—are more mindful of their inner men. They hold their Annual Dinner at the Bengal United Service Club, on the 2nd January next.

BENGAL must accept the "bad selection" forced by Government on the unwilling Judges of the High Court, unless Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, in his superior purer wisdom disallow the appointment. Mr. Ameer Ali joins the High Court on its reopening after Christmas holidays.

THE High Court closes for the Christmas from Monday next, resuming work on the 2nd January, or two days earlier than in preceding years. The Small Cause Court too will remain closed for the same period.

THE Dumk was sorry to miss our name on the Prince's Reception and Entertainment Committee, and is glad to find the omission rectified. We don't know what reflection is proper to us on the occasion. Shall we say Et tu Brute? At any rate, we must be excused thanking our contemporary or any other, seeing that we were out by the malingering myopia of some vulgar understrapper and are in by force of our own right hand. Not that we cared for it—for that matter, the world knows of what stuff we are made—but we criticised the doings of the promoters on public grounds and impressed on them the necessity of abandoning selfish regards in the interest of the loyal business in hand, and clenched our point by showing the extraordinary exclusion of the conductors of well-known metropolitan journals, including—without any mock-modesty or coquetry more worthy of a young miss than hard-headed men of the work-day world—ourselves. At the worst, we had had no reason to be ashamed. It was a case of excommunication of the whole country. We felt like the great artist in his death-bed when he exclaimed, "We are all going to Heaven and Vandyke is of the company." We had the most splendid company. The just Yudhistir, at any rate, did not enter Elysium alone.

THE late Robert Browning will have a corner in the Westminster Abbey, as he deserves.

Monte Carlo has been reopened, after the summer closure, with additional gaming tables.

A Turkish paper reports the loss of the steamship Indie in the Aegean Sea with 500 pilgrims.

Dom Pedro has expressed a wish to stand with other Royalists candidates for the coming Brazilian elections. The Republic maintains a firm attitude. For cheering the late Emperor, at Rio too sailors have been shot.

The Doctors have pronounced Emin Pasha out of danger. Emperor William has raised him to the Order of the Iron Crown.

King Oscar of Sweden and Norway has honored the Indian Press in the person of one of its leading members. Mr. Henry Curwen, of the Times of India, has been created a Knight of the Royal Order of Vasa. This is a true distinction, conferred as it is on a literary man by learned Royalty.

The slave-hunter of the East African coast, Bushiri, has paid by his death the penalty of his crime. Major Wissman paid one thousand pounds to the natives who captured him. He was courtmartialled and hanged. The news has elicited admiration of the Germans from our contemporary of the Englishman. It says, "The Germans have acted in the matter with a promptitude which is to be admired. 'Off with his head. So much for Buckingham'. A few sharp strokes of this kind would paralyse the horrible traffic which is depopulating the richest parts of Central Africa. Bushiri's field of operation extended as far inland as Lake Maero and the upper waters of the Congo."

The Influenza now raging on the Continent has crossed over to London and on to the New World. It is, in some quarters, identified with the Dengue.

Mr. Editor Ernest Parke of the North London Press has pleaded justification to the charge of libel filed against him by Lord Euston.

The Cleveland Street scandal has gone into court. The Government resents the imputation that it had abetted the escape of the delinquents. It throws the blame on others' shoulders. At the instance of the Treasury, the Bow Street Magistrate, Mr. Vaughan has issued summonses against the wellknown solicitor Newton, and two others.

AFTER being feasted and fêted and having had sport of sorts, in Southern India—in Travancore and Madras, Prince Albert Victor has gone to Burma, to celebrate the Christmas in his Sovereign grandmother's new dominion, at Mandalay. He arrived at Rangoon yesterday. On the closing day of the year, he starts for this capital, reaching it on the 3rd. His Royal Highness remains in Calcutta for ten days. The public entertainment on the Maidan has been fixed for Tuesday, the 9th January from 6 to 8 in the evening.

TOTAL subscriptions to the Calcutta Reception and Entertainment Fund amount to Rs. 48,000, the Maharaja of Darbhanga leading with Rs. 10,000.—His Highness arrived last night.

THE High Court has sanctioned the compromise in the Burdwan Adoption case. The Dowager Maharani Naram Kamaree accepts the adoption of Lala Bunbehary's son and pledges not to adopt any other. She will continue to receive the monthly stipend fixed for her and be paid in addition in a lump rupees thirteen lacs, in satisfaction of all claims against the Raj estate during the life time of Bijan Behary. She will further receive for the term of her natural life the block Nos. 1 and 2 of the premises No. 9, Clive Street, Calcutta, and absolutely the Burdwan house known as Ziayet Munzil. Bun Behary has proved himself superior to the lawyers engaged in the case. The compromise was a surprise to them no less than the public. The Advocate General alone of the lawyer tribe, we believe, had been let into the secret, and Sir Charles Paul behaved with his accustomed magnanimity.

FEMALE Emancipation confessedly has reached its highest in America. And now the Rights of Woman have been carried to its ultimate—who will say illegitimate?—conclusion. Miss Victoria Woodhal, now Mrs. Martine, of London Bank, has been asked to stand for the Presidentship. And why not? If a female may be a Hereditary Sovereign, why not an Elected salaried Ruler? If a monarch for life by why, not a monarch for a limited period by choice of the Almighty People?

One of Eve's daughters, under shelter of loose ecclesiastical cover, is said to have reached the penetralia of the Vatican, and found herself on the Chair of Peter. It does not matter whether the story of Johannes Angelicus is true or not. Enough that, started by a monk, it has long been believed in Christendom. It was not rejected on the inherent improbability, not to say the absolute impossibility, of such a succession. If male sentiment, or for that matter female too, is averse from womanly domination of the Church, there can be no such objection to female rule in the State. In fact, female sovereignty has always been a fact. It is as old as the time of Solomon. The Salic Law itself is evidence of it. Now, whatever may be the expediency of that law in respect of hereditary succession, it does not apply to succession to Presidential Rule. There is no reason for excluding women from an office conditioned by time and dependent on choice.

The cry for a female President is no brutum fulmen. Whether women have a vote or no, they are in Christendom quite capable of influencing elections. A combination of the gentler sex is rather a formidable prospect for the politics of the future. A caucus of women may be irresistible.

THE Board of Revenue in Bengal complain of the inadequacy of the powers of search and arrest possessed by excise officers under the present law, and recommend that, when a revision of the Excise Act is undertaken, it should be remedied. At present, not even an Excise Inspector, not to speak of other subordinate officers, can deal with a case of suspected breach of excise regulations without a warrant from the Collector or the presence of a police officer. In matter of detection, promptitude is everything, but as things now stand, the opportunity frequently slips away, and the case goes undetected. This representation, we knew, was imperative after the collapse of several cases and the escape of men caught red-handed as it were in the act of infringing the excise law. In especial, after Mr. John Apcar's judgment on the Honorary Bench, the Board were in honour bound to go up to Government with a representation. We only wonder they do not press for immediate legislation. In the interest of the Revenue, and therefore in that of the tax-payer, there is a crying need for improvement in the laws of Excise.

THE Pioneer writes:—

"Amongst the few things purely Indian of which India is proud are her mangoes. There are mangoes, as everybody knows, in other tropical places: but we have always been accorded the palm in this respect. A correspondent, however, who has visited those parts of Africa that are watered by the Niger gives us some particulars about the fruit there that put this country in the shade altogether. 'Three crops a year,' he tells us, 'and occasionally, I believe, four. Directly one begins to ripen the tree is covered again with blossoms.' There is also, apparently, a rollicking disregard of nature—as known to us here—about these prolific mango trees. 'As soon as the crop begins to ripen on one part of the tree another portion of it begins to blossom, and so on for three months.' These mango-gatlings discharge fruit that is 'delicious for an ungrafted species,' and ranges from 'a good-sized melon,' 'a turkey's egg' down to 'a pin's-head.' The happy dwellers in this land of plenty have mangoes all the year round—but it is not reported whether they enjoy as uninterruptedly the 'doloriferous and sacchariferous boil' (pace the shade of the late Onoocool Chunder Mukerjee!) which is too often the mango-eater's portion even in our own miserably attenuated fruit season."

That reminds us of the American Missionary Ward who, in his book on India, says that the people of this country freely acknowledge the superiority of the Europeans in everything but music. Distance, no doubt, lends enchantment to the view. But is nearness such a disillusionist? Familiarity is a notorious breeder of contempt. But we never knew her produce monsters. Is India come to be so contemptible? Has she nothing to be proud of beyond her mangoes? And this from an Anglo-Indian! The mango is, of course, nothing; the Europeans don't understand it; the mangosteen is the thing for their connaissances. In fact, India is a barren wild which merits no mercy, and would be the better for being swept away or drowned in the Indian Ocean. Nay, India is a cheat and imposter; a delusion and a snare to tempt unsuspecting Britons to their ruin by drawing them out of homely simplicity to fill their lap with the yellow dirt and inoculate them with —Luxury's contagion, weak and vile!

Is the fruit mango remembered, and not the concomitant fish mango? And does not Hilsa suggest itself in the connection? How weak! And if the mango be the only fruit of any consequence, what of the pagoda? That good venerable elder of the vegetable kingdom, though stripped to the stock and stalks, still continues to support multitudes of European families and enrich not a few Europeans, specially of the British Islands. And this is the return!

The concluding sentence contains a gratuitous attack on the dead. The late Baboo Onoocool Chunder Mookerjee was not only a respected Judge of the High Court, but an ornament of Calcutta society, native and European. It was his misfortune to have a foolish nephew, who published an extraordinary biography of his uncle, in a new dialect of the writer's own invention. But it is not true that Mr. Justice Mookerjee ever used such language, and the suggestion is most unkind and unmanly.

HERE is how they obey the standing orders of Government on the subject of the dismissal of public servants. The case of Doyal Chand Banerjee, of the Military Pay Examiner's Office, to which we drew the attention of Lord Dufferin at the time, resulted in the reinstatement of the poor clerk, if not in his old post at least in another of equal value. The present case is one that shows a more barefaced violation of orders and the utter inutility of respectful representations to superior authorities after a matter of this kind has once been "settled" to the satisfaction of some subordinate officer. The stereotyped reply of "declines to interfere" is all that one gets for his pains to represent his case in appeal. Rakhal Chunder Auddy, an inferior clerk in the Chief Commissariat Office, Accounts Branch, Calcutta, had at one time been intended to be sent up with the Hazara Field Force. He was examined by the Garrison Surgeon, Fort William, and pronounced fit to accompany the expedition. Regarding the way in which medical officers perform this part of their duty in respect of the native Indian subjects of Her Majesty, some light is thrown upon it by the following passage from one of the several memorials and petitions of Rakhal:—"My statement in my petition dated 14th September 1888, that I was not examined by the medical officer on the 11th September requires an explanation, particularly in view of the remarks made by the medical officer himself and the reliance placed by you on them. The fact is, when I presented myself to the officer for examination, he merely looked at me hurriedly. He did not apply the stethoscope for examining my heart, nor did he ask me a single question regarding my health or the state of my body. If the hurried look he cast on me and any observation he might have made of my gait and voice, satisfied him of my sound health, he was, of course, justified in certifying to my competence to proceed to Hazara." It is impossible for a poor clerk to speak out more plainly. Rakhal, after he had been pronounced fit, upon such examination, to proceed to Hazara, petitioned the head of his office for being sent to either the Presidency Surgeon or the Medical Board, for a thorough and satisfactory examination. He was strongly persuaded that no medical man, upon a real examination, could pronounce him fit. The result, however, was a summary order of dismissal. It will be noted that no order was made directing him to proceed. In his petition to the Commissary General, Eastern Circle, Meerut, Rakhal pertinently states,—"I beg humbly to submit that if any order had actually been made directing me to proceed to Hazara, I would certainly have, whatever the state of my health and whatever, therefore, the risk to my life, promptly obeyed it by proceeding to the station directed, instead of incurring a charge of contumacy and disobedience. If after joining the station, the climate did not, as I had feared, suit me, I would then have, on medical certificate, applied for retransfer to Calcutta or elsewhere. Under these circumstances, Sir, you will see that I have been dismissed on the charge of having disobeyed an order when, in fact, no order had been made. I, therefore, humbly crave that, after the necessary enquiry into this statement, the order of my dismissal may be revoked, and I may be reinstated in the post I held." A case like this could occur only in India, and that with reference to a native subject of the Queen. No order was made, and yet a person in Government service is dismissed on the ground of having disobeyed an order! Major Hobday, the Commissary-General, Eastern Circle, Meerut, might think it inadvisable to interfere, at the instance of a native clerk, with an order of dismissal passed by his immediate subordinate. But it is rather strange that the superior authorities of the Military Department should support the illegality. The case reminds us of the wag in the story who was ordered to be hanged for having murdered his father-in-law when father-in-law he had none, for the simple fact of the poor fellow not having been ever married.

BROUGHT up amid the hard realities of iron-hearted Sheffield, though himself a lover of literature and devoted to literature's universal king, sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child, the veteran editor of the Indian Daily News cannot be expected to thoroughly sympathise with the effusive loyalty of an Eastern community to a distant throne. But he has spoken with thoughtful temperance. It is a pleasure to find oneself in agreement with him.

In noticing our article on the Town Hall meeting, the Indian Daily News says:—

"The philosophic sage who presides over Reis and Rayyet strongly condemns the proceedings at the meeting on Friday last. His censure goes almost all round. Not even the Chairman escapes, though he seems to be chastised more in sorrow than in anger."

After quoting a paragraph from us, the writer supports our points:—

"It was not without some suspicion of the possibility of such a result that we stated that the Sheriff ought to preside at such meetings, though for decency's sake we put the objection to the arrangement made on other grounds. Sir Steuart might well have attended the meeting as Sir Steuart, or even as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. But even he himself, we imagine, now feels what an error it was to accept a position which might subject him to as great a mortification as could well happen to a prominent public man. Had our contention been admitted—and every one confesses now that we were right—the Head of the Province would have been spared the humiliation, which he no doubt feels, of having to appeal to the disturber of the meeting to help to keep order. It would have spared the respectable portion of the community the pain of feeling, as they do feel, that in their presence the Head of the Province was practically insulted, and that they were powerless to help either him or themselves. Reis and Rayyet says that 'the assembled powers and notables were rightly served by the neglect of men who can really help them.' It is difficult to help men who will not be helped, and who probably either scorn advice or misapprehend the motives from which it is tendered. This latter is probably the case; but the results are not the less unfortunate. We believe in publicity. There was no public good intended in the hole and corner meetings that were held as preliminaries for the intended object. There has been more of self-seeking than of honour to visitors, and in this may be traced much of the mischief that has been done and the scandal attending it."

Just so! And the original sin was repeated in the fresh start made at the British Indian Association Rooms. It was our unpleasant duty, last week, to expose it, and, we are glad to say, with effect. We are thankful to the wiser heads concerned to accept in good part our humble suggestions. It was too much to expect the Loyalists to welcome the ring-leaders in the late fracas. But most of the other names have been included.

THE late Town Hall meeting at Calcutta is still the topic of the Press. From the precincts of the Dutch, it has travelled through the Benighted Province on to Duck Land. The Indian Spectator devotes a column to it between two deliberate Editorial Notes which claim notice. We regret we have to join issue with our contemporary ad orem, though happily not usque ad mala. For, though we have no stomach for the Duck eggs served in the first course—the opening Note—the Bombay apples—the Mazagon mangoes—of opinion in the second are some of them exactly to our frugivorous Brahmanic taste. "Is it fair?" the Spectator begins—

"to hold Mr. Surendranath Bannerji to be solely responsible for the contretemps that attended last week's public meeting at Calcutta to devise means for a suitable reception for H. R. H. Prince Albert Victor? If it was Mr. Bannerji's schoolboys alone who swamped the original resolution, the trick ought to have been denounced on the spot."

And why not? He moved the uncalled-for amendment. He got it seconded by one of his youthful camp followers. He carried it by a rauc—by means of a caucus of school boys previously drilled and quietly brought in, who were repeatedly reminded on the very spot to "vote solid." He disturbed the scene; he created discord where all should have been harmony throughout; he set himself up in purposeless opposition to the respectability of the metropolis assembled for a ceremonial function of loyalty to the throne. And he did not budge an inch in his mad resolve of making a mess of the whole demonstration—did not leave the field till he had, with the help of his noisy rabble, routed his fell ow-citizens who had come to express their loyalty and to pay for a suitable reception and entertainment, according to their feeble old lights, to the scion of Royalty come to visit them and see their country. And is the community to be blamed for holding the arch-enemy—the author of all the mischief—responsible?

Is stress laid on the "soleness" of the responsibility? Who but Master, or say Schoolmaster, Surendra Nath Banerjee is responsible for bringing in all his Masters Banerjee and Mookerjee and Chatterjee and Gangooly and Chuckerbutty and Bose and Ghose and Mitter and Doss and what not besides en masse, to disturb so promising a scene of good feeling? Who but that old boy Surrender Not, Schoolmaster, Orator and Agitator, is alone responsible for the invasion of the youthful Goths and Vandals into the Town Hall?

On the victory of the Schoolboy Vote, the Indian Spectator speaks with its usual vigour and with entire wisdom. Our contemporary is indignant with "those who thus seduce the youth of the country for political or other purposes."

THE Amrita Bazar Patrika has not noticed our reply to its criticism of our matured deliverance on the Official Secrets Act. But we think we see a change in its attitude towards the law. And as time goes on, that change will be more and more pronounced, until the fantasy of a ghoul of the Press cease to trouble our brethren of the quill. As for our being sent to jail in shoals, there is no fear of it. It must be done by some other agency, there being no provision in the present law. We doubt whether there will be a single prosecution in six months.

We must dispose of the other criticisms which have come to our notice. They are all characteristic of the several quarters from which they respectively emanate. Here, for instance, is the judgment of a young person who, having quarrelled with his superiors in a Government office, has set up a new weekly:—

"It is never too late to mend: and it is certainly a nobler and manlier act to acknowledge an error than persist in it. Two weeks ago, our revered contemporary of Reis and Rayyet came out with a flaming leader denouncing the Official Secrets Act, which our contemporary characterised as a 'gratuitous outrage upon the people and Princes of India,' an 'ugly monster mugged in the guise' of something else, and calculated to 'charm many good people and deceive the unwary,' although its 'object is plain to those who' like the editor of Reis and Rayyet, for instance 'are able to look behind special pretences.' While His Excellency the Viceroy was declared to 'have fairly opened his mouth' and to have 'already shown his teeth.' During the past two weeks, however, new light appears to have dawned upon the mind of the editor, or perhaps he became apprehensive of a bite of the Viceroy's 'teeth' aforesaid. And so we are not at all surprised to see that in the last issue of his paper the editor has made the amende honorable by retracting every word of what he had written on the subject, and to all appearance he seems to be in a highly penitent mood at the present moment. Our contemporary acknowledges his 'blunder,' and declares that the new Act is 'a harmless enough thing.' This spectacle of the editor of Reis and Rayyet changing his views at the shortest notice has somewhat bewildered some other journals. But they forget that the editor of the Bowbazar paper is, according to one admirer who sings in verse, 'an Asian mystery,' while, according to another admirer who labours in prose, his journal is 'more literary than political.' Under these circumstances the politics of Reis and Rayyet may be left alone. But at the same time we must say that the editor has shown rare moral courage by boldly acknowledging his blunder, and we thank him for it."—The Saturday Herald, Nov. 16.

Imperance! And this is the style in which one who has yet to win his literary spurs and who is scarcely an abecedarian in politics, conceives himself entitled to speak of those who have weathered many a trial and given not only proofs of capacity and valour, but also pledges of virtue. There surely is something demoralising in the anonymity of journalism, or else the writer of that paragraph would have been baffled by the demonstrative scorn of society, if he had attempted to take such liberties in propria persona. He talks of our having become apprehensive of a bite from the Viceroy. Well, we had at any rate had ourselves open to such an attack. He, young man of exemplary prudence as he is, has never risked any danger or discomfort. His paper has sneaked to the powers, great and small, from the outset. For ourselves, we have neither courted popularity or notoriety of any kind, nor sought place or pelf or power from any man. Journalist from within our teens, we wrote from the bosom of alma mater against the annexation of Oude, when the great Dalhousie launched his stern fiat, as well as against the policy of his worthy Lieutenant for Bengal, the no less able Halliday. Since then, numbers of Governors and Governors-General have been and gone without making any difference in us. In the time of Lord Northbrook, both Viceroy and successive Lieutenants were kind to us, but one by one we managed to estrange them all in the discharge of our duty as a citizen and journalist—to our inconvenience and absolute loss. On the occasion of the Baroda Blunder and the Breach of Faith with Mulhar Rao Gackwar, we risked almost our neck. And when, notwithstanding all, the officers and his personal friends and followers called a meeting in the Town Hall to vote the Viceroy a statue, we, true to our conception of duty, led the forlorn hope of a dozen or so of enthusiasts since popularly known as the "Immortal Ten"—to press an amendment on the principal Resolution. We do not mind mentioning these matters, since several of our contemporaries have, in connection with the late meeting, pointedly referred to the old incidents and our connection therewith. And it is of such seasoned publicists and citizens, that this young gent speaks with affected sang froid in a newspaper whose policy is to fish for patronage.

THE BARA THAKUR BAHADOOR of Tipperah will give an Evening Party on the 30th, to meet the Lieutenant-Governor.

BULWUNT RAO BHUYA, a son of the late Maharajah Scindiah and now, we believe, a member of the Council of Regency at Gwalior, has come to Calcutta about a week.

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1889.

THE EXCISE DEPARTMENT.

THE public agitation against the outstill system has prevailed, and the most gratifying feature in the later Government resolutions on excise administration is Sir Steuart Bayley's determination to follow up the gradual substitution of the sudder distillery system for outstills. The Sudder system is being established in all localities suitable for its introduction. We could only wish the process occupied no unnecessary delay through the obstructiveness of overzealous officials ambitious of showing a good return for their districts. While central distilleries are replacing the outstills in populous districts, the outstills which must be retained in sparsely inhabited tracts are also receiving attention in view to their being made free from those objections which hitherto lay against them. Mr. Westmacott is doing his best to raise the duty paid on outstill liquor to the rate per gallon London-proof paid on distillery liquor, and the number and capacity of the outstills are being steadily diminished. In 1888-89, as compared with 1887-88, there was a reduction of nearly four hundred in the number of outstills and of 22,002 gallons in their liquid capacity. This is a great advance in the right direction, and it is indeed very gratifying to find the Lieutenant-Governor in thorough sympathy with the movement. He says, "These reforms must be persisted in, although, as was anticipated, their immediate result is a considerable reduction in the excise revenue." In the selection of sites, the wishes of the public will now be no longer disregarded. "Distinct instructions," says the last Resolution, "have been given to the licensing officers to ascertain and consider local opinion, and directions have been issued that, where municipalities exist, the Municipal Commissioners should be consulted in determining the location of shops. On no account are any shops to be opened near market places, schools, factories or other public places." These latter orders are apparently to have only prospective effect, although in especial circumstances it would be desirable to remove shops where their situation is now either a nuisance or fraught with temptation to the public.

The Board's excise report contains some interesting information as regards the consumption of opium. This consumption prevails largely along the whole seaboard from Chittagong to Pooree, with the exception of Noakhally and Backergunge, and in malarious districts like Burdwan, Moorshedabad, Rungpore, Purneah and Maldah, where it is regarded as a febrifuge. The total revenue from opium in 1888-89 was a little above 20 lacs, or about half a lac better than the previous year. The largest increase, viz., about Rs. 23,000, took place in Chittagong, and in writing of this district, the Commissioner makes a strong defence of the excise administration. He says:—

"The sales amounted to 98 maunds 26 seers as against 150 maunds 24 seers in 1884-85, while the revenue amounted to Rs. 1,52,700, against Rs. 1,58,319 in that year. In other words, by judicious orders, Government has restricted the consumption by 51 maunds 28 seers in the course of four years. The duty on this amount is Rs. 58,184, but instead of losing this large sum, the loss is only Rs. 5,619. Those who accuse Government of fostering the excise revenue at all costs, will find it difficult to reconcile these figures with their theories. The consumers, who in 1884-85 paid Rs. 34-7 for each seer of opium, or only 6-7 over the duty levied, paid last year Rs. 46-3, or more than Rs. 18 over the duty. These figures only represent the Government share. The retailer's profit has to be added before the selling price is got, but it is clear from these figures that the price of the drug must have been considerably raised to the consumer."

The Board report several cases of opium smuggling from Nepal, but they can suggest no remedial measures beyond the infliction of adequate sentences by judicial officers in cases of smuggling which are detected. They deprecate the employment of a detective and preventive establishment, as any establishment that might be entertained would not be sufficiently large to watch the very extended frontier of Nepal, which is open and may be crossed at any point, while there are objections to increasing the subordinate police who would probably harass the people far more than afford protection to the revenue.

The most important administrative change in the year was the appointment of Mr. Westmacott as Excise Commissioner, and the consequent relief given to Divisional Commissioners in their work in this Department. Some of the powers exercised by the Board of Revenue in excise matters have also been vested in the newly appointed Commissioner. Some additional excise Deputy Collectorships have been sanctioned by the Secretary of State. Altogether, the excise department is receiving much attention, and one may now fairly look for the removal of some of the abuses which have all along marked its administration.

THE SPECTRE OF SALT IN SALTPETRE :

AN OFFICIAL ATTACK ON AN INDUSTRY.

IN our last, we referred to the new salt rules published in the Gazette of India and their distressing consequences upon the few industries in Calcutta and its Suburbs for the washing of saltpetre. The suddenness with which the rules have been passed and the active interference under color of them by the salt officers, have already resulted in producing an utter stagnation of trade. All the establishments have been shut up, with the exception of two. The proprietors of these latter had made some large contracts for the supply of washed saltpetre. They could not possibly think of suspending their industry, whatever the effect of the new rules upon them or their men. It seems that the true nature and character of the industries in Calcutta and its Suburbs for the washing of saltpetre, has not been understood by the superior authorities. We fear, a complete reliance upon reports of subordinate officers of Salt Revenue has been the cause of the mischief. What the owners of these industries really do is to purchase crude saltpetre in Calcutta itself, and wash it with cool water, and boil and cool the educed material, and perform a few other processes, till the entire quantity of saltpetre that is capable of being educed by such a primitive process is extracted. The refuse that remains, after such education, contains from 8 to 10 per cent. of saltpetre, but the costs incurred by a repetition of the process of boiling and cooling becomes greater than what can be recouped by the price of the article that may be extracted by it. It is this refuse that is apprehended to be capable of consumption as crude salt by certain classes of the community, and it is entirely in consequence of this refuse that the new rules have been passed by the Government of India. Not that the material is actually capable of consumption as salt by any class of the community amidst which these industries exist! The subordinate officers of Salt Revenue, however, in their zeal for the State Revenue, suppose otherwise. So great is their devotion to duty that, in the days of the East India Company, when production of salt was the Company's monopoly, a proposal was seriously sent up to the higher officers of the Department for stopping the cultivation of the cocoa-nut and the Indian plaintain, or at least for imposing a tax on each tree, on the ground that certain parts of both, reduced to cinders, might afford a kind of crude saline substance. The mantles of those men have fallen on their successors under the Queen's Government. No wonder, therefore, that they should turn their attentions to this refuse of these saltpetre-washing establishments. Some of these establishments have existed for more than half a century. As for the rest, many are more than twelve years old. Only one or two are of recent origin. That these polite attentions had not hitherto been paid to them, was not the fault of the salt officers. The Government of India, fearing no loss of revenue, refused to pass a Salt Act for these provinces, or for the metropolis and its suburbs. Omitting all reference to sections 7 and 8 about duty and price, the last Salt Act (XII of 1882) was passed for the North-Western Provinces, the Panjab, Oudh, the Central Provinces, Ajmir, Mairwara, Sindh, the districts of the Patna Division, and the territories under the jurisdiction of the Agent to the Governor-General in Central India. The Act empowers the Governor-General to extend its provisions, by a notification in the Gazette of India, to any part of British India other than the territories for which it was expressly passed. That extension has now taken place to the metropolis and its suburbs.

The correspondence that has led to such extension has not been published. We are, therefore, not in a position to judge of the necessity that existed or arose for the measure. As far, however, as we are aware, we have not heard of a single case instituted by the Salt officers against any person in the metropolis or the suburbs for anything done in the way of selling any salt of clandestine manufacture. The refuse of these saltpetre establishments in the town and its environments has all along been sold openly and utilized for purposes of agricultural manure and tanneries, or shipped in British vessels for similar use in foreign countries. If the necessity had really existed for an extension of the Salt Act to the metropolis and its suburbs, there could be no harm in taking the people into confidence by publishing the whole correspondence on the subject. At any rate, the present distress of the owners of these saltpetre industries and the utter stagnation of trade could have been easily avoided by a timely notice. The men could then have put their houses in order, instead of being obliged to completely suspend their work, in consequence of the odious interference of the salt officers to which we have referred. So great is the harassment and vexation in store for them, from the operation of the rules that have been passed, that some of the proprietors have thought of retiring from the business altogether rather than submit to the wrong, if the rules are not withdrawn or modified. They are fully willing to place the refuse of their industry at the uncontrolled disposal of Government, for removal or destruction as the latter may desire. If the Act has been extended and the rules passed really in consequence of the apprehension that exists about the consumption of that refuse as salt, to the detriment of the public revenue, the Government should have no objection to withdraw these rules, if the proprietors undertake to place the whole of that refuse under its disposal, sacrificing any little income they might have hitherto derived from it. The sincerity of Government will be put to test by such an offer. It is easy to pass rules for preventing any part of the refuse from being secreted or concealed for any illicit purpose.

Regarding the two that have already submitted to the operation of the rules, their position has, by reason of the interference of the officers, already become intolerable. Obligated, in consequence of the nature of their industry, to submit to the new rules, they are not desirous of at all changing the character of their business. They are not manufacturers of salt, and they do not wish to be. The object, however, of the officers is to convert them into such. It is doubtless a selfish object entertained with a view to expand the operations of the salt establishment at the metropolis.

EIGHT YEARS' JOURNALISM:

OR,

REIS AND RAYYET FROM THE START, WITH A WORD OF BUSINESS.

It is now some eight years since Reis and Rayyet was started.

It made its mark from the outset.

The consensus of the entire Press, Native and European, testified to its worth in terms not to be mistaken—in terms of, indeed, unexampled enthusiasm.

The Englishman (Jas. Furrell) said

"It deserves to be a success." January 1882.

The Statesman (W. M. Riach) wrote

"It is written in a racy style of English such as we rarely meet with in Indian journalism."

The Anurita Bazar Patrika :—

- "We have got the Reis and Rayyet, a new weekly, published here in this city, and we give our contemporary a sincere welcome. That the paper is written in good English and is ably conducted and thoroughly independent goes without saying, considering the party who has taken it in hand. We fear our contemporary will throw everything in confusion in Calcutta, and that regardless of the claims of friends and foes. So much humbuggism has now permeated our society, that it is for that if for nothing else, a paper like our new contemporary was needed for the protection of honest people."

"Fearless and independent."—Hindoo Patriot.

So up the country, the Liberty of Lucknow, said

"We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the first number of the Reis and Rayyet, a newspaper and review of Politics, Literature, and Society, hailing from the City of Palaces. If the contents of the first number be taken as a type, we have no hesitation in adding our humble testimony that the journal before us will not fail to earn a reputation for itself. The style is vivacious, smart, and oftentimes, humours. May our young brother live long to sow broadcast the principles of social amity, progress, and liberal democracy."

"A very vigorous youngster. There is no little 'go' in our contemporary."—Express.

Nor did the welcome come from the critics of only the English press in India. Here is a specimen of French opinion :—

"Un nouveau journal vient de se fonder à Calcutta, le Reis and Rayyet, dont nous avons un numéro sous les yeux. L'Éditeur est un indien, ce qui rend d'autant plus remarquable l'élégance et surtout l'indépendance de cette plume qui sera comme l'épée de Damocles suspendue sur la tête également des Reis et des Rayyet, pour abaisser au besoin l'orgueil des uns, et relever la dignité des autres, rappeler à tous ce que la Constitution exige de chacun pour assurer la paix de la Reine et la grandeur de l'Empire."

"Cette petite anecdote fera comprendre ce que sera le Reis and Rayyet. Puisse-t-il se maintenir toujours à cette hauteur, c'est le vœu que nous formons pour lui."—Le Petit Bengal.

The excellence and spirit have been kept up, as the continued good opinion of the whole Press shows.

"That very smart paper."—Englishman, February 16, 1882.

"That remarkably clever paper has the gift invaluable, &c."—Statesman, October 26, 1882.

"One of the best written and ablest conducted papers in Bengal."—Times of India, August 1883.

"Written with an extraordinary command of the English language and strange felicity of style."—Statesman, December 25, 1883.

"Able and smartly conducted paper."—Englishman, June 23, 1884.

"Able conducted Calcutta paper."—Sind Times, June, 1884.

"I always find your paper bright and clever."—The Hon'ble C. P. Ilbert to the Manager, January 14, 1885.

"Few Englishmen have so complete a command of their own language as the editor, and still fewer so felicitous a style."—Statesman, March 28, 1885.

"Reis & Rayyet—has singularly keen powers of appreciation."—Sind Times, October 10, 1885.

"Reis & Rayyet—is perhaps the ablest paper in the country in point of literary power."—Statesman, November 18, 1885.

"Reis & Rayyet—which usually takes a most sensible view of events."—Indian Planter's Gazette and Sporting News, November 2, 1886.

"The Reis & Rayyet has made an enterprising effort not unworthy of a London journal, to trace the names and families of the persons who lost their lives in the steamer Sir John Lawrence. That paper is one of a style we could wish to see more represented in India. It obtains information and expresses currents of opinion almost inaccessible to papers conducted by Europeans, while it is free from the rabid and superficial style which either repels Europeans or at least disheartens them from looking for sense in the Native press."—Englishman, June 28, 1887.

"If there are transactions of a questionable character, the Press—whether Native or English—simply performs a duty in bringing the abuse to the light. And on this subject there are some remarks in the last number of Reis & Rayyet which deserve attention. Of course, Reis & Rayyet is 'only a Native paper,' and, therefore, may be regarded as a vilifying organ full of hatred and malice. But so long as its hatred and malice are directed against wrong-doing, its nativity may be forgiven. It is undoubtedly the best written paper in the country among the 'vilifying' and malice-inspired branch of the estate. It is often written with a thoughtfulness that might be imitated with advantage, and with a sense of responsibility which might be advantageously copied."—Indian Daily News, July 27, 1887.

"Our grave Native contemporary of the Patriot, by far and away the most profoundly political of Native journals, though rather below our Reis & Rayyet friend in talent, generally observes."—Bengal Times Oct. 13, 1888.

"The incomparable Reis and Rayyet."—Indian Daily News, Nov. 12, 1888.

"Reis & Rayyet, acknowledged by all Anglo-Indian journalists to be far and away the most ably conducted native paper in the country,....."—Evening News, Nov. 16, 1888.

So in England, a Cabinet Minister sent an extract from Reis and Rayyet to the Pall Mall Gazette which was published with commendation in that journal in 1884.

"A journal well known for its criticisms of Indian administration."—Daily News, (London) January 23, 1885.

An English politician wrote, under date the 26th June, 1885,—"I have no suggestions to make. The Reis and Rayyet is an exemplary paper." Again, on the 16th February 1888,—"I like your article on..... in R. & R. of January 21. Look at St. James' Gazette of February 15."

"I made good use of your remarks on the Cambay case and the difference between Lord Reay and Sir A. Lyall."—Letter from a British Peer, dated May 15, 1887.

"I read your paper religiously."—The late Major Evans Bell.

Reis and Rayyet is a thoroughly independent paper, treating all matters frankly and forcibly but with perfect fairness. It presents, of course, the information and well considered opinion of its Editor—the results of a pretty wide experience and of long years of inquiry and speculation. It essays to represent genuine Oriental Thought and Indian Opinion as distinguished from the crude yearnings of the English-speaking minority and the ignorance—of themselves and their country, not to say of the Empire at large—of the isolated populations of the Provincial capitals and the citizens of this Metropolis in a corner.

It is strong in its conductor's knowledge of Indian history and of the relations of the British Power with the Native States and Chiefs of every grade; it is opposed to Annexation and undue interference; but it is slow to take up grievances of any kind, and is earnestly desirous of steady solid improvement in Native Kingdoms and Principalities and Estates.

It addresses itself to superior intelligence and culture of both natives and Europeans—the flower of society.

It essays to inform public opinion in Europe.

But it is not an agitating journal. It is above wire-pulling. It submits itself to no dictation—lends itself to no "cries." It does not confine itself to politics. Giving all legitimate attention to the discussion of topics of the day, it finds a variety of other matters for the interest and edification of the reader—questions of history, belles-lettres, jurisprudence and political philosophy, narratives of travels, incidents of society and life throughout the globe and so forth. Chaste in its own language and conversation, even in the most frolicsome abandon, it does not admit any of the indecent quack advertisements which fill the Indian Press, in the English as well as vernacular side. Nor does it lend itself to any "bogus" concern, whatever the bait offered.

With the New Year some further improvements will be introduced. Reminiscences and memoirs of notable men, notices of remarkable places, essays on political topics of the day, the antiquities of cities and memoirs of native families, will, from time to time, be incorporated.

The stones and bricks of Calcutta are not without their memories, nor the history of its families without its interest. The history of the important families in the country has either not been written at all, or been distorted and falsified by vanity, ignorance, and dishonesty. These subjects are well worth taking up by an independent writer who has read and inquired and knows.

We are glad to know that R. & R. is in much request at our schools and colleges as a useful adjunct to the means of education. In future, it will be made more useful still to our students of language and literature. Indians who have themselves threaded the mazes of a difficult, because most copious and ever-shifting, tongue and its vast literary empire, are peculiarly fitted to lead their junior countrymen in the same paths.

We have been repeatedly asked to print on cheap paper and reduce our rates, to bring them within the means of poor students who would in such a case subscribe in large numbers. After giving it deliberate consideration, we regret we cannot accede to the request. The inability is often more imaginary than real. Our countrymen have not yet generally acquired the habit of paying fully for their improvement. It is important that they should learn to buy books and papers. That is one of the first steps to national progress. Nothing like having your own books and papers, so that you can read again and again and mark and inwardly digest them. As for such as are absolutely unable to muster so much as one Rupee per month for a newspaper, all we can do is to suggest their clubbing together to divide the burden.

A VILLAGE DESERTED FOR OPPRESSION.

SIR,—I think your readers are well acquainted with the name of that renowned and historic personage Nawab Munney Begum, mother of the former Nawab Nazim Mobaruck-ud-Dowlah Bahadur of Moorshedabad, whose intricate affairs and monetary transactions in the early days of the East India Company's rule have been so often referred to by Burke in his speeches against Warren Hastings in the British Parliament. In the establishment of this august lady was a eunuch named Sidi Busunt Ali Khan who, in the course of a long and faithful service, rose high in her favor and obtained from her a portion of her hoarded treasure. This wealth enabled him to purchase a considerable quantity of landed property, yielding an annual income of nearly Rupees 25,000. Before his death he made a will (wakf) whereby he directed that his self-acquired estate would on his demise go into the hands of Government who should manage it either by its own officers or place it under some pious and influential Mahomedan of the city, and that the income should be devoted to the service of his religion in the manner specified by him. On his death which took place at an early period of the present century, Nawab Nazir Sidi Darab Ali Khan Bahadur, the oldest and most trustworthy of the Nizamut eunuchs, was entrusted with the task of carrying out the instruction of the testator as also with the management of the property, which he very ably did till the brewing of the unfortunate quarrel between the late ex-Nawab Nazim and his Dewan Raja Prosanna Narayan Deb Bahadur, which ended disastrously in the final extinction of the Nizamut. It is a fact known to all that for his devotion and loyalty to his master, Darab Ali Khan was subjected to extreme insult, all his power being withdrawn, and with it the charge of the estate was taken away and given, on the recommendation of the ex-Dewan, then Assistant to the Agent to the Governor General, to a Committee consisting of Nawab Azim Ali Khan Bahadur of Jafarganj as President and Syed Amir Ali and Syed Mahomed Reza as members. The Lieutenant Governor by his letter dated Fort William the 26th April 1867 confirmed the arrangement. On the death of Syed Mahomed Reza, five years after, Syed Kazim Ali, one of the brothers of the President, was appointed to succeed him, but the post of Amir Ali vacated by his death about 10 years ago was never filled. Thus the committee, originally composed of three persons, was reduced to two only who were connected with each other by the close bond of blood and represented the same interest. Nawab Kazim Ali, though a man of independent views and action, could not check the proceedings of his brother, and Nawab Azim Ali Khan became the all in all of the Committee and the undisputed owner of the property held by him in trust. Having but little time to look after Zemindari business and finding himself wanting in administrative talent, he made over, though not formally, the charge of the estate to the designing and selfish persons who had gathered round him to add to his position and dignity as a reis. From this time began the mismanagement of the property, the oppression of the tenants, the decrease in, and misappropriation and misuse of, the income, and the extravagance of the expenditure. Leases began to be granted out to parties, who offered best to satisfy the avarice of the persons in whose hands the President and sole manager of the estate was a toy, at the lowest bonus and at low rents. Decrees obtained against rayyets for arrears of rent began to lapse through the negligence of officers in not praying for timely execution of them. The estate suffered greatly in consequence. The stipulation of the testator now became a dead letter. The Ijara lease of the villages Dumkal, Colladanga, Lakhimpur and Ramna Eduratnagar in this district ceased about a year ago, and a fresh proposal for a lease having been made by the same parties and assented to by the President, in spite of the strong opposition of the only member and against the cries of the rayyets who complained of all sorts of persecution and cruelty under the Ijardar, the inhabitants of Kaladanga left their village in a body and migrated to the Zemindari of a more lenient landlord. They have memorialised the Lieutenant Governor and the Divisional Commissioner and even wired them the news of their desertion. As the interest of a public estate is going to be jeopardised, it is respectfully requested that His Honor will be pleased to direct Government interference in the matter. Mr. Editor, you are a powerful advocate of the Mahomedan cause and are fully acquainted with the facts of the case by your connection with the Nizamut at the time of the late Nawab Nazim. We earnestly hope that you will move the authorities to save the estate from ruin. It is rumoured that Nawab Kazim Ali has protested to the President against giving, and warned the applicant against taking, lease of the property without the permission of a duly constituted Committee, and intend also to move the District Judge to call for accounts from the President for the past 20 years. This is a move in the right direction. We applaud this independence on his part and are anxious for the result.

MONGHYR.

Jamalpur, the 15th December, 1889.

A case of diabolical murder in cold blood of a young girl of Nooniah caste, aged about 9 years, is alleged to have been perpetrated by her aunt (maternal) a few days ago. The deceased and her aunt were residents of Monghyr Purbia Serai. The girl as a rule used to frequent the house of her aunt in question. One day wearing some valuable ornaments she called at her aunt's when the wretched woman, evidently with an eye to the jewellery, stabbed the girl with a Habooab (Bow-knife) to death and robbed the murdered girl of all her jewellery. The body was then wrapped up in cloth and thrown into the drain leading to a waste land a few yards from the house. The woman is now under arrest pending trial.

Some great changes are about to take place in the vast establishment of the E. I. Railway, which will particularly affect Jamalpur. Certain important offices will be removed to Calcutta shortly, namely, the Traffic Manager's. The Audit office will follow.

Some of the executive heads of Departments, such as the Chief Engineer, Loco Superintendent retire shortly. When the Traffic and Audit offices are removed from Jamalpur, the Loco Department will be left in sole possession of this place. The largest Railway station on the line will be comparatively isolated by the removal of some hundreds of men composing the clerical staff of the two offices named.

There is likelihood of a Bengali breach of promise case being taken to court. The bride's party after having made all the necessary arrangements and the bridegroom and his party having arrived here from distant places, and everything being ready for the wedding, the match was abruptly broken off. An attempt at mediation by friends on both sides has not succeeded as yet.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

The following proposed Bye-laws, framed under Section 412, Act II B.C., 1888, are hereby published for general information under directions of the Commissioners in meeting:—

Regarding the height and mode of construction of buildings;

Rebuilding of portion of old Buildings.

1. Whenever any old building has been taken down to an extent exceeding one-third of such building, such to be measured in cubic feet, the rebuilding of the portion thereof shall be deemed to be the erection of a new building, and such portion shall be subject to the regulations of the Act and to the Bye-laws respecting new buildings.

Construction of Outer Walls and Foundations.

2. Every such building shall have its outer walls constructed of brick or other hard and incombustible substance, and the foundation shall be the solid ground, or concrete, or other solid substructure on which the footings shall rest.

Footings to Walls.

3. Every person who shall erect a new building shall construct every wall of such building so as to rest upon proper footings. He shall cause the projection at the widest part of the footings of every wall, on each side of such wall to be at least equal to one-half of the thickness of such wall at its base, unless an adjoining wall interferes, in which case the projection may be omitted where that wall adjoins.

He shall also cause the diminution of the footings to be in regular offsets, or in one offset at the top of the footings, and he shall cause the height from the bottom of the footings to the base of the wall to be at least equal to two-thirds of the thickness of the wall at its base.

All Walls and Return Walls to be Bonded together.

4. In the case of any building exceeding one story in height, every wall shall be properly bonded and solidly put together with mortar, and no part of such wall shall overhang any part underneath it, and all return walls shall be properly bonded together.

This rule is not intended to [apply to] cornices or mouldings where otherwise [in] admissible.

Thickness of Walls.

5. Every wall and every return of wall of such building shall be of such thickness as may be considered safe by the Commissioners, having regard to the height of the buildings, the materials of which it is constructed, and the purposes to which it will be put; provided that it shall not be lawful for the Commissioners to require more than is required by Appendix I.

Support of Beams and Girders.

6. All beams and girders shall be supported by a sufficient breadth of brickwork, stone or other solid substance, to secure to the satisfaction of the Commissioners the stability of such beam or girder.

Roofs, Skylights, &c., to be of Incombustible Materials.

7. The roof of all buildings and every turret, sky-light or other erection placed on the roof of such buildings shall be externally covered with some incombustible materials. Also every gutter, shoot or trough in connection with the roof of such building, shall be constructed of incombustible materials.

Minimum Width of Streets.

8. Except when otherwise allowed by the Commissioners, all new public streets intended for carriage-ways, shall have a minimum width of 16 feet, and all new streets passing through bustis shall have a minimum width of 12 feet.

Or, Alternative.

Except when otherwise allowed by the Commissioners, all new public streets intended for carriage ways, shall have a minimum width of 40 feet, and all new streets passing through bustis shall have a minimum width of 12 feet.

Regarding Ventilation and the extent to which space must be left for the free circulation of air as required by the provisions of section two hundred and forty-three of Act II (B.C.) of 1888 ;

1. With respect to buildings which are to be newly erected on any site previously unbuilt upon, the following provisions shall have effect, namely :—

The foundation of any such building shall not be constructed on any site which has been filled up with street or other refuse, unless such refuse is either properly removed, or unless a period of 20 years has elapsed from the time when the refuse was deposited.

Provided that with the consent of the General Committee, the period of 20 years may be reduced, if the state of the soil is such as to admit of it.

2. No new building which abuts on a street of a less width than 40 feet, shall, without the written permission of the Commissioners, be erected to a greater height than twice the width of the street it abuts on. This height shall be over and above the 2 feet allowed by the law for the plinth.

3. In the case of a house abutting on two streets, the height of the house shall be calculated with reference to the width of the broader of two streets.

4. Every such building intended to be used as a dwelling shall be so constructed that the whole or at least one side of every room thereof shall either be an external wall or abut on an interior open space or on a verandah. Such interior open space shall have an area equal to not less than one-tenth of the aggregate floor-area of all the rooms abutting thereon, and shall not be in any direction less than 6 feet across. Such external wall shall, where it faces a street of less than 16 feet in width, have between it and the boundary line of the owner's premises an open space of not less than 2 feet in width. At the sides it may be attached to the adjacent premises, but if not so attached, at the sides and in every case at the back, it shall have a space of 4 feet along the whole side of the building between it and the boundary line of the owner's premises, or between it and the inner edge of the boundary wall, if that boundary line is a wall. And every open space, whether exterior or interior, required by this clause, shall be and be kept free from any erection other than a boundary wall, and shall be open to the sky, and shall be and be kept open to access from each end thereof.

5. Every open space or interior court-yard referred to in the above rule shall be raised at least 1 foot above the level of the nearest street, so as to admit of easy drainage into it.

6. Every room intended to be inhabited in any such building, except a room in the roof thereof, shall be in every part at least 8 feet in height from the floor to the ceiling.

7. Every such room shall have a clear superficial area of not less than 80 square feet.

8. Every such room shall be ventilated by means of doors or windows which open directly into the external air or into a verandah, and have an aggregate opening equal to not less than one-fifth of the superficial area of the side of the room which faces an open space.

9. The provision of rule 1 clause (e) shall apply to old buildings taken down and rebuilt so far as regards bye-laws made under clause (f) also.

CALCUTTA.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridood Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News. October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; those who d being tire of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following: [Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river:—[Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye:—[Extract.]
 The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting: [Extract].—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious: he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree. "a naked Whiteman" hurts his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes!" But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him.....

Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

FOR SUPPLYING

MEN OF EUROPEAN TRAINING.

Under a benevolent Scheme now in operation for several years, started by Baboo Pran Kissen Chowdry, for assisting meritorious but poor Indian students, under certain conditions, to go to Europe for competing for the Indian Service, there is now room for a native student, of sound health, who, having passed the Calcutta Government Medical College, may desire to compete for the Covenanted Indian Medical Service. Passage and expenses for two years' residence in England will be paid out of the fund of the Scheme.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

REFLECTIONS ON THE PAST.

Oh ! joy to the spring-tide sun,
For it opens the buds to leaves,
And it makes sweet climbers run
With their fragrance over the eaves ;
And it calls glad birds about
To sing new songs of praise ;—
Oh, joy to the Spring ! but it cannot bring
The joy of by-gone days !

I think on the Past with a thought
That paineth the bosom sore :—
A face, a form, to my mind is brought,
Which my eyes can never see more !
I hear a kind word said
By a tongue that is mute and cold ;
I feel the clasp of a hand, now dead
And withering in the mould !

But the thought of a friendship changed
Is worse than a dream of the dead ;
And I think of the dear estranged
Till reason, with peace, seems fled.
There are hearts that loved me once,
There are hands that once caressed,
That are colder now than the frost on the bough
That killeth the bird in its nest !

REASONS FOR RISIBILITY.

SWEET coz ! I'm happy when I can,
I'm merry while I may,
For life's at most a narrow span,
At best a winter's day.
If care could make the sunbeam wear
A brighter, warmer hue,
The evening star shine out more fair,
The blue sky look more blue,
Then I should be a graver man—
But since 't is not the way,
Sweet coz ! I'm happy when I can,
And merry when I may !

If sighs could make us sin the less,
Perchance I were not glad—
If mourning were the sage's dress,
My garb should then be sad—
But since the angels' wings are white,
And e'en the young saints smile—
Since virtue wears a robe of light,
And vice a brow of guile—

Since laughter is not under ban,
Nor gladness clad in gray—
Sweet coz ! I'm happy when I can,
And merry when I may.

I've seen a bishop dance a reel,
And a sinner fast and pray,
A knave at the top of Fortune's wheel,
And a good man cast away !
Wine I have seen your grave ones quaff,
Might set our fleet afloat ;
But I never heard a hearty laugh
From out a villain's throat ;
And I never knew a mirthful man
Make sad a young maid's day—
So, coz ! I'm happy when I can,
And merry while I may.

NEWS AND COMMENTS.

EMPEROR William has addressed the following letter dated Pless, Nov. 29, to Count Moltke, whom he elsewhere calls "the palladium of my subjects and a terror to my enemies":—

"My dear Field Marshal,—Fifty years have elapsed since the day on which my late great-grandfather bestowed on you the Order Pour le Mérite for your distinguished conduct in Turkey. During my recent stay in that distant and interesting land I had a good opportunity of learning how fresh the memory of the observant and active officer of the general staff of 1839 still is amid the scenes of his first military achievements. To-day, however, you must permit me to remember, more than all, the immortal services which you have been permitted to render your fatherland since then. It is difficult for me to add a further token of recognition to those with which your Sovereigns have expressed their gratitude for your deeds. Still, I cannot allow to-day's unique anniversary to pass without one. I therefore herewith bestow on you the crown, to be worn with the decoration of honour earned fifty years ago, which, as a token of my special affection, I have had made in diamonds. The army and the fatherland join with me in hoping that you will enjoy the distinction (God willing) for a long time to come, as hale and hearty as ever.—Your grateful and devoted Sovereign, William."

The Germans are now beating the French in grace itself. That letter is worth all other testimonials and memorials.

THE English papers report a notable wedding—an old boy united to his grandmother or one old enough to be such. On Nov. 25, at Eton Bray, a village near Dunstable, a labourer, named Joseph Room, aged 50 years and a widower for 12 years, was married to Maria Dyer, aged 86 years and a widow for 36 years. Considering that wives and widows are inadmissible, we wonder where they found the lovely spinsters to match the interesting fright of a bride for bridesmaids.

ONE Mrs. Lister, under a judicial order, divorced herself from her husband for his adultery and cruelty, and was awarded by Mr. Justice Butt a permanent alimony. The divorcing wife took another husband and the divorced husband objected to pay the alimony. The appellate Court—Lord Justices Cotton and Fry—have rejected the prayer of the husband to be relieved of the continuous burden, holding that the lower court was competent to make the permanent order.

THE High Court closed for the Christmas vacation with the presentation of an address by the Pleaders to the retiring Mr. Justice Romesh Chunder Mitter. All the Judges were present in the Court room of the First Bench, where the presenters assembled. The address spoke in flattering terms of the "great ability, strong common sense, thorough independence, untiring patience and uniform courtesy" of the Bengali Judge, and of his labours on the Public Service Commission. It was read by the Senior Pleader Baboo Annada Prasad Banerjee, and presented in a casket. Mr. Twidale also addressed the Judge, and the Honorable Baboo returned a modest reply. He then met the Vakils in their library and took leave of each and all. While the Vakils are loud in their praise of the retiring Judge, Government quietly accepts his resignation. We append the reply to the address :—

"Baboo Annada Prasad, Mr. Twidale, and other Gentlemen,—I am extremely grateful to you all for the address presented to me. It is about sixteen years ago that I was selected from your body to fill up the vacancy in this Court, caused by the death of my illustrious predecessor, Mr. Dwarkanath Mitter, and at that time I was comparatively young in age and experience. Naturally, therefore, I felt a sense of diffidence in my ability to discharge the duties,—very responsible duties, of a Judge of the highest Court in the country. That sense of diffidence was much deepened by the circumstance that I was selected to fill up the gap, which, those who, like myself, knew Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter, will bear me out, could not be filled up well for sometime to come. Gentlemen, however, I had this confidence in myself that I would spare no trouble to do my work honestly, and to the best of my ability. I was always actuated by this single desire, and although no one is more sensible than I am that I do not deserve even an infinitesimal portion of all that you have been good enough to say of my services, still it is most gratifying to me to find that the members of the profession to which I belong think that I have given satisfaction to the public. Gentlemen, even if I were in good health, I should have found great difficulty in expressing adequately my feelings for your good wishes and kind expressions of sympathy. But in the present state of my health, I find it almost impossible to do so. I shall, therefore, ask you, Gentlemen, to accept my most cordial thanks. I shall meet you in the library of your Association to bid you farewell individually."

MR. Amir Ali has just been Gazetted to act as a Puisne Judge, until Her Majesty's pleasure is known.

THE Bombay Guardian thus notices the retirement of Mr. Justice Mitter :—

"Mr. 'Justice' Romesh Chunder Mitter has resigned his seat on the Calcutta High Court bench. His health has been failing ever since his indefensible action in the Patna case. He was stricken with partial paralysis immediately after the outrageous insult to Luchini recorded on page 10 of 'A Terrible Crime under British Rule in India.'"

There are barbarians and barbarians; savages of sorts. Some naked, others clad up to neck and sporting a covering on the head besides. The essential attribute of the order is quite compatible with a considerable amount of knowledge and literary accomplishment.

THE Pioneer expects United Burma to yield this year an actual surplus of 75 lacs. How much do the Upper Provinces contribute to this figure?

SIR Charles Crosthwaite has resumed his place in Burma, and Mr. A. P. MacDonnell his own in the Home Department. The Home Secretary, however, goes on furlough in March next, Mr. C. J. Lyall again acting for him. Mr. Lyall does not go to Assam, he being placed on special duty.

GOVERNMENT is awaking to the in-equity of its proceedings in Upper Burma. During the last five months, about one thousand "Dacoits" have been released. The military police is also to be reduced.

THE statistical abstract for the Colonial and other Possessions of the United Kingdom for the fifteen years 1874-1888, shews a remarkable development of trade. For instance, the imports from India have risen from £37,000,000 to £79,000,000, and from Australasia from £44,000,000 to £65,000,000; the exports to India have grown from £56,000,000 to £92,000,000, and to Australasia from £39,000,000 to £57,000,000 in value.

THE Vienna military paper Die Reichswehr says—Russia will soon have, in Europe, 2,880 field guns; France, 2,880—total 6,200. Germany has 2,884; Austria will have, at the beginning of next year, 1,776,—total, 4,660. With the Italian 1,620, the equilibrium is restored between Russia and France on one side and the Triple Alliance on the other.

IN one month, twenty-three German officers shot themselves. The number increased in June, and more suicides are apprehended. There surely is something rotten in the great military Empires.

M. DELONCLE writes in the Sécle that the evacuation of Egypt cannot be injurious to England, while it would pacify the Nile and the Soudan, and reopen East Africa to the free influence of civilization.

UNDER the new military law, foreigners, including in the category British subjects born in France whose fathers also happen to have been born in France, are to be considered to all intents and purposes as French subjects, and, as such, are bound to serve first in the Active Army for three years, and then in the Reserve and in the Territorial Army up to the age of 45. All sons of foreigners born in France who are in the present year 20 years of age are to be held liable to compulsory military service in the army for 25 years.

THE Hungarian Lower House has rejected by 193 to 84, M. Iranyi's motion to amend the Naturalisation Act of 1879. If the motion had passed, Louis Kossuth would have retained, notwithstanding his perpetual residence abroad, the rights of a Hungarian citizen. The Hungarian patriot already holds the freedom of several Hungarian cities. For his sake, if for nothing else, the law should have been altered. At the worst, he could not possibly tax his countrymen's forbearance much longer.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to a Madras paper that the Sub-division Zemindar P. Kottaisami Tevar of Ramnad has agreed, under a registered document, to advance to his cousin Mr. Dinakarasami Setupathi, younger brother of the Ramnad Zemindar, one lac of rupees, to enable him to file a suit for the partition of the Ramnad Zemindary. The Sub-division Zemindar has secured by the deed the principal with interest. The rate of interest is not mentioned by the correspondent. We only hope Ramnad will not prove another Shivagunga.

LAST Saturday, Maharaja Prabhu Narayan Singh Bahadur, of Benares, was formally installed by the Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. P. He was simultaneously presented with the samud, invested with the khilut, valued at Rs. 5,000, and installed in the gundi. It was a large assemblage. There were present Maharaja Sir Radha Prasad Singh Bahadur of Dumraon; Maharaja Sir Krishna Pratap Sahie Bahadur of Hatwa; Raja Lal Madho Singh of Amethi; Raja Ram Pratap Singh of Manda; Raja Mahomed Salamat Shah of Azamgarh; Maharaj Kumar Lal Jagannath Singh of Sohawal and others, besides representatives from Cashmere, Patiala, Kapurthala, Jheend and Nabha. One name is conspicuous by its absence from the record. The everlasting Raja Siva Prasad—the inevitable factor in every Benares function or fracas—the unavoidable factotum of the old Maharaja gone to Heaven—was nowhere on the important occasion, whether as master of ceremonies or mate—ruler of the roast or bottleholder. He could not be so engrossed with the affairs of his new Raj that he had no time to attend so auspicious a ceremony in the old Principality, to which he owes so much. Was he diplomatically sick or not asked? The present Maharaja Bahadur showed the stuff in him by inaugurating his régime with kicking off the leeches.

ON Saturday the 7th instant, the second daughter of Kassim Arifi, the well known Surat merchant of our Town and proprietor of the only silk manufactory at Calcutta, was married to the second son of Moolla Ismail, a wealthy merchant of Mandalay and Rangoon, who held a prominent position at the Court of the king of Burmah, both at the time of Theebaw and that of his father. Feasts and Nautches were given to the élite of Mahomedan society for several days. The Moolla who had come to Calcutta for the purpose of this wedding has returned to Rangoon.

THE Hon'ble F. M. Halliday will continue, for another term, to be an additional Member of the Governor-General's Council.

EIGHTY women of the Servo-Hungarian village of Melencze are under trial for having poisoned their husbands and other near relatives. The crime came to light so far back as 1882, when a young beautiful woman named Draga Kukin, having poisoned her husband and stung to remorse, gave herself up. Two professional fortune-tellers who supplied the destructive were arrested, who have since died in prison. The Police have been at it for the last seven years.

WE read—

"The number of visitors on the closing day of the Paris Exhibition was 370,000, the number of tickets presented (five for every admission after five o'clock) being 511,000. The total number of paying visitors to the Exhibition was 25,000,000, as compared with 12,000,000 in 1878 and 8,000,000 in 1867. Of the 30,000,000 tickets issued, 28,000,000 have been utilised. The theatre receipts during the Exhibition have been the largest on record, and the railways have also profited. The receipts of the Northern Company from Jan. 2 to Oct. 21 have been 147,000,000 frs., an increase of 15,000,000 frs., and those of Lyons Company 270,000,000 frs., an increase of 18,000,000 frs., while the Western Orleans and Southern lines have each had an increase of 9,000,000 frs., or about 9 per cent. This increase will really benefit the State rather than the shareholders, who are guaranteed 4 per cent. by the Government. The Eiffel Tower receipts have been 6,500,000 frs. According to the calculations of the police, 5,000,000 provincials and 1,500,000 foreigners have visited the Exhibition. The foreigners include 380,000 English, 225,000 Belgians, 160,000 Germans, 56,000 Spaniards, 52,000 Swiss, 38,000 Italians, 32,000 Austrians, 7,000 Russians, 5,000 Greeks, Turks, and Romanians, 3,500 Portuguese, 2,500 Scandinavians, 8,000 Asiatics, 12,000 Algerians and other Africans, 90,000 North Americans and 25,000 South Americans."

MR. H. Lee has been appointed to officiate as Magistrate and Collector of Midnapur, during the absence on leave of Mr. C. H. Vowel, or until further orders. We adverted to Mr. Lee's ability and suavity of manners some time ago, and will only add that he was one of those gentlemen whose intervention brought about the amicable settlement of the Burdwan case. In 1886-89, he officiated in the very post to which he is now appointed, earning the reputation of a very able officer.

THE last M. A. Examination of the Calcutta University gives the following results:—

In English Class I. seven students, three from the Presidency College, two from the Dacca College, one from the Metropolitan Institution and one from the City College. In class II. seven and in Class III. nine, the Presidency College in each class heading the list. In Mathematics, two in Class I. four in Class II. and two in Class III. In Latin, one in Class I. In Sanskrit, 2 in II. and 2 in III. In Persian, 1 in I. and 1 in II. History, 1 in I. 3 in III. Mental and Moral Philosophy, 3 in I, 2 in II and 1 in III. Natural and Physical Science—Chemistry, 3 in I, 5 in II and 1 in III; Physics, 3 in II. Physiology and Zoology, 2 in II and 1 in III. Geology and Mineralogy, 1 in III.

• NOTES AND LEADERETTES.

THE influenza has marred Christmas in Europe. The Kaiser suffered from cold and feverish symptoms. The Czar is down with a second and a serious attack. The King of Portugal is suffering. The hospitals in Paris and Vienna are crowded with patients. The garrison in Brussels has been decimated. Several deaths are reported from Paris. Many postmen in the western district of London have been disabled. It is feared, from past experience, that the present epidemic is the precursor of an outbreak of cholera.

THE quiet revolution in Brazil has ceased to be peaceful. Anti-revolutionary riots are reported from Rio de Janeiro. There were serious fights in the streets from the 18th to the 20th, which could be quelled only by the military. There is disaffection too in the army. The provisional Government has been driven to extreme measures. It has issued a decree fixing the general elections for September next and the meeting of the Constituent Assembly for November. Dom Pedro and family have been banished, as also the late premier. The grant to the ex-Emperor has been recalled, his annual allowance suspended, and his property seized. Another report says there is anarchy in Brazil. Martial law has been proclaimed. Persons charged with sedition, suborning the military, or in any way opposing the Republic are to be militarily tried. A newspaper has been suspended for siding with the opposition to the Republic.

ON Tuesday, December 3, Vienna was completely snow-bound. Provisions could not enter the arches of the railway, and the viaducts under which cars would pass were blocked. A hundred snow ploughs and over 4300 sweepers were at work.

AN Austro-Hungarian Chamber of Commerce and Industry has been established in London, to further the commercial relations between Great Britain and its colonies and the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Persons of all nationalities are eligible as members.

PRINCE Albert Victor arrives at Calcutta on Friday, the 3rd January. The day will be observed as a public holiday. His Royal Highness lands at Prinsep's Ghat at, so far as at present is known, 4-30 in the afternoon. Preparations are making there for a right royal welcome. It will be an official reception. The available space can accommodate about 1,500 persons. Admission to the Ghat will be by tickets issued by the Commissioner of Police. Further information on the subject will be found in the Police Notification elsewhere.

THE Municipal Commissioners have been specially summoned to meet next Monday, to discuss a proposition for Rs. 10,000 as a contribution to the Reception and Entertainment Fund started by the Chamber of Commerce and the British Indian Association. Application has also been made by the Opposition Shop for a grant towards a permanent memorial. We hope there will be no exhibition of temper and taking up of past bitter feeling.

HAVING sent Captain Hearsey out of his own Province, to seek for redress, if any, against it in other Provinces and Presidencies, the Pioneer has turned its attention to Suman Swamy, who has established his headquarters at Allahabad itself. The Pioneer identifies Suman Swamy with one Desika Chari, a native of Tiruvelliankudi in the Tanjore District, sentenced in 1869 to six years' rigorous imprisonment, for having made a false charge and committed perjury in support of it. Released from jail in 1874, he did not return to his relatives who probably gave him up as dead. In 1877, he turned up in Calcutta and took employment in the Post Office, passing as Srinivasulu Chari, his brother. He then quarrelled with the Postmaster and suddenly left the service. He next shewed himself in this capital in 1886 as a Congress delegate from Madras. But the delegates from that Presidency disowned him. It was then that he assumed the name of Suman Swamy and started the Cow Memorial Fund and agitation. The clinching proof of identity, according to the Allahabad journal, is the crooked middle finger of the right hand which distinguishes both Desika Chari and Suman Swami. Suman Swami denies that he is Desika Chari. But he is in no hurry to revenge himself on the Pioneer. He proposes a course different from that taken by Captain Hearsey. He writes to the Morning Post of Allahabad:—

"Your local contemporary, the Pioneer, the arch-enemy and the licensed libeller of the natives and native improvements, has, as such, been no friend of the movement set on foot for the conservation of dairy and agricultural cattle, from the very commencement. Is it a wonder, then, to find that the paper has violently attacked me in its leader under the head—'The History of an Agitation,' in its yesterday's issue, in which I have been identified with a criminal to my deep sorrow? I most emphatically deny all the charges with indignation, and regard them with the contempt they deserve; but, in this age of scepticism and mysticism, as the unsupported assertion of an individual, be he a king or a vassal, will not be believed in, I have put myself in communication with people who have known me for the last forty years, as well as with those whose statements will disprove the scandalous assertions of your local contemporary beyond all doubt.

After receiving their replies, and thus strengthening my position, I shall not fail to address your contemporary, giving a categorical denial to all the charges; and I shall take, as well, legal action against the paper to recover three (3) lakhs of rupees damages for libel in the Allahabad High Court. Yours faithfully, Suman Swami, Allahabad, December 24."

It is a dilatory course that Swami has chosen.

THE only effort at appropriate originality in the displays of welcome to the Prince, was made at the old Mahratta capital of Poona, by a respectable, if rather obscure, association calling itself the Dinabandhu Sarvajanic Sabha. This society has for its object the education of the poor and neglected classes. On the road through which the royal party were to pass, it posted 150 boys of its charity school under this inscription, to wit—

"Tell Grandma! we are a happy nation,

• But nineteen crores are without education."

It is reported that the Prince and his uncle (the Duke) and Governor Reay and all laughed at the reading. Well, if the verse was not quite worthy of the noble Laureate of England, it did not go for nothing. Indeed, it served a useful and thoroughly welcome purpose. As Dryden says, "It is good to laugh at any rate, and if a straw can tickle a man's fancy, it is an instrument of pleasure." It was something to be proud of for the Dinabandhu Bard to have lightened up the path of the Prince. And considering that there were so many brither Scots in the party who echoed the princely burst of hilarity, the triumph was all the greater.

There is a serious side to the business, however. In all probability, in fact, the Sabha did not care to extract a smile from the British visitors, whether hailing from this side or that of the Tweed, so much as to impress on the Prince and the Powers the educational destitution of the land. A little correction would have made the lines tolerable doggerel. As it is, it is not a bad prose epigram expressing a fine and true sentiment of a loyal people and embodying an important matter of fact. We do hope the thought has not been lost on the Prince and his Party in the merriment over the form.

THE poor Aryans! Their position in the Republic of Letters is much to be pitied! They are still wandering like nomads throughout the whole Hemisphere, for want of a home. The Eastern branch in especial has ever been the victim of Destiny. The condition of its members is now, as it has long been, at a low ebb. At any rate, the consolations of a Past were theirs. During all their many vicissitudes of fortune,—under all the whips and scorns of time,

The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,— to all the mean reproaches of mushroom prosperity, to

The insolence of office, and the spurns

That patient merit of the unworthy takes, they might still proudly answer, Fumus! Their present is not over-owing in credit or comfort, much less in glory—their future is at best problematical: their only resource lies in the Pleasures of Memory. But now, alas! their very Past is in peril. Their ancient history is the sport of learned ingenuity. The primitive domicile itself of their race is in dispute. Their birth-right has been seized. They have been expatriated. Their local habitation gone, their name has almost ceased to have a meaning. These Aryas are at length declared to be no Asiatics at all! They are Northmen, Scandinavians, Finns, anything but Orientals! Europeans have no idea of how the idea jars on the Indian ear. The modern Hindu, product of ages of exclusiveness, refinement and puritanism, is scarcely yet reconciled to trace his ancestry from High Asia, now a land of mlechhas—unclean barbarians. But to be driven farther back, far into the shores of the Baltic, that is simply intolerable!

MEANWHILE, an eminent French ethnologist has presented to the Academy of Sciences, in an "Introduction to the Study of the Human Races," his general conclusions with regard to the origin and distribution of mankind. They are thus summarised. There are as many as 72 distinct races in the human species, all descending or branching off from three fundamental types—the Black, the Yellow and the White—which had their origin at the great central mass of Northern Asia, which this savant regards as the cradle of mankind. Representatives of these three types, as of some at least of the races sprung from them, are still to be found there. The Whites originated on the west of the central mass, the Yellows on the north and the Blacks on the south. The Whites extended to north and west, giving birth to three secondary types, the Finnish, the Semitic and the Aryan. The area of distribution of both the Whites and the Yellows has been continuous, from their having the whole of the extensive land surface of Europe and Asia before them. The Yellows spread eastward and crossed over by Behring's Straits into America. The Whites and Yellows blended with each other, and formed many varieties of man. The Blacks were compelled, partly by the nature of the continent and partly by the attacks of the other types, to move down south into Africa and east into the Indian Archipelago or Melanesia. The proto-Semites were arrested in their distribution in North Africa, the mixture of the two races producing the Negroid tribes. In Central and Southern Africa, the Blacks maintained their ethnic purity to modern times, until the mixture with the Dutch and others from Europe and the north of Africa led to such products as the Boers, Bushmen, &c. The Black residue in the original home became blended with the Whites and Yellows, to give rise to the different shades of the Dravidians.

LAST week, we noticed the deliverance of flippant youth on our frank abandonment of the cry of panic at the Official Secrets Act, in which this journal had in haste joined at a time when the editor was away in the country. Let us now turn to the old fogeys of the Press:—

"If there is one man in India whose opinion we value more than another it is that of our esteemed friend and contemporary of Reis and Rayyet. The pleasure it gave us on reading his open and frank confession in the last number of Reis and Rayyet over the Official Secrets Act is so thoroughly in keeping with his unalloyed character, that we felt convinced the moment he came to look at the intentions of the Act through his own glasses, he would see for himself the error he had committed during his inland seclusion far away from Calcutta.

Our contemporary says, duty must be done at any cost. How pleasant, how agreeable it would be to all classes, official and unofficial, if we had more men of his fair and unbiassed opinion, candid and well matured expressions. Speaking pointedly of the Official Secrets Act, our contemporary says:—

"We find it a harmless enough thing. It might be put to bad uses, but that is a different question. That suggestion is bred of jealousy of Indian officials. But it is forgotten that the terrible Indian Bureaucracy had nothing to do with the inception of the measure. It is an emanation of British statesmanship khas and pure, and has run the gauntlet of party and radical criticism at Home. There are all the necessary safeguards against abuse. As for this country, it was already law in it when the Government of India introduced it here. It had already passed in England for all British Possessions. The Indian Act is simply a re-enactment. The Hon'ble Mr. Scoble said as much, but we gentlemen of the Press—not very much different from Bismarck's gentlemen of the press, perhaps—we were not going to take a member of Council's word on trust. In justice to us all, we must say that the Lord President put us on the wrong scent. (Is it possible His Excellency meant to apply a practical test to gauge the perspicacity of the Indian Press?) Indeed, the Indian Act is a trifle milder than its prototype of the Mother Country. So far as the Press is concerned, there is not a shadow of menace against it. Nay, there is not a word about journals or journalists, publishers or printers. All our rage has gone for nothing. And we, for one, must gulp down our humble pie with as good a face as we can command."

Is there anything more reasonably natural than that when we find we have erred, we feel it necessary that the earliest opportunity should be seized to make the amende? It is not eating humble pie, but the act of a gentleman of honor who values his reputation, which we feel satisfied our friend and contemporary does. While congratulating our contemporary, we only add, that we have already more than once said that the Act will prove either a curse or a blessing. Certainly the former if not worked justly, and assuredly the latter if worked with honest impartiality, and we feel confident this latter Lord Lansdowne will strictly enforce."—The Mahomedan Observer, Nov. 16.

That opinion is derived from a much larger experience of life and affairs and on a wider field of action, than is open to junior clerks in an office of military accounts.

HERE, again, is a treatment of the same matter from an organ of recognised weight of the great politicians of Maharashtra:—

"Our able contemporary of the Reis and Rayyet has made a confession withdrawing all hostile criticism on the Act as it is nothing more than reproduction of an English Statute which has, to use our contemporary's words, run the 'gauntlet of party and Radical criticism at home.' Our brother supposes that it is after all a harmless thing and that we were warring with a windmill of our fancy. We regret we have to differ and honestly differ from our contemporary whose action appears to us to be rather hasty. It is true that the Act is a copy of an English Statute. The fact was well known to all. But we could not and do not still perceive how that justifies the introduction of it in this country. In England they have the right to call for any papers from Government and the Statute, which does not touch this right in the least, serves there only to prevent possible mischief. Not so in India. We have here no right to demand production of any papers and there is thus a very great danger of important measures affecting the home policy being passed in secret and without passing through the scrutiny of public opinion. Indeed, our brother appears to be half conscious of such consequences when he speaks of the possibility of the Act being put to bad uses owing to the jealousy of Indian officials; and here lies the rub. Instances are not wanting, in fact have been freely given, of the good results of the disclosures of official measures in the Press before they are finally passed. The Act is so worded that any such course may be impossible in future and the cry in the Press is directed against this possible gagging of the Press. The danger is not quite imaginary; and if Government wish to retain the Act now passed, they should find their way to grant the privilege of demanding papers to the Press or similar institutions here. As the matter stands at present, we are at a double disadvantage. We can not ask for papers and we shall be debarred from publishing any news that we may get, though such publication may in the end be calculated to do good to the public. The Members of the Legislative Council could well have foreseen this and modified the wording of the Act so as to prevent publication of news dangerous to the safety of the empire. But as the proverb says 'no will, no way.'—The Mahratta, Nov. 17.

The old story! There has been no introduction, properly speaking, at the instance of the Indian authorities, at all. The English Act was law here, whether the Indian Legislature brought in any bill or not.

In point of fact, it is still law here, though we have got an Act of our own. Under the circumstance, it is vain to quarrel with the Indian Government as if it had, out of the depths of its baseness, evolved a dreadful engine of oppression for us. The whole panic has been a regular "sell," as our contemporaries are beginning to find.

It was laid down by the Government of India, in 1847, that if the public conduct of an officer in the transaction of his official duties is impugned, he is at liberty to seek redress through the usual official channel, by an appeal to the Government he serves, and that the Government so appealed to will afford him every opportunity of vindicating his character. The Bengal Government has unearthed this rule, and, accepting it as sound, has strongly impressed on its subordinate offices and officers—not to rush to newspapers, whether in England or in India, in defence of conduct impugned, but to follow the good old rule laid down in the general order of the Government of India in the Foreign Department, dated the 15th March 1847.

THE Calcutta University have been reckless this year in fixing the dates for the several Examinations. But they have not been obstinate in sticking to their own. On representation, they changed the dates for the Arts Examinations. They have been now applied to to fix a later date than the 17th March 1890 for the B. L. The candidates have a substantial grievance. There have been several additions to the course, without additional time being granted to get these up. To add to their misfortune the Calcutta market is unable to supply the necessary books.

THE Fifth National Indian Congress opened at Bombay on the 26th. The delegates and visitors numbered about four thousand. Mr. Peroshah Mehta welcomed the delegates, and Sir William Wedderburn, who had been bespoken for the occasion, was formally elected President. Having come all the way from England for it, Sir William might well say as he did that he appreciated the honor done him. He was glad to be associated with a movement so well calculated to advance the interests of both England and India. He had watched the movement from its inception, and had found nothing but good in its origin, its objects and its methods. It only proved the highest British statesmanship, being the natural healthy fruit of higher education and free institutions freely granted to the Indian people. The Congress aimed at the revival of national life and increased material prosperity of India, through methods open and constitutional, with absolute reliance on British justice and love of fairplay. He eulogized the Marquis of Ripon as the greatest and best of Viceroys who, he said, had met and fulfilled the aspirations of the national movement. He presented a gloomy contrast between the administration in India and the liberal policy at Home. Yet, in approaching this subject he showed sufficient remains in himself as an ex-Indian Civilian of the esprit de corps of his former Service. He was tender to the sins of his brethren. He would not condemn the men but the system which, in certain important particulars, opposed the official administrators to the interests of the Indian taxpayer. He could not expect that as a class the official administrators would work for peace, economy and reform, to their own disadvantage. He will, we are afraid, be pronounced a reactionary in Indian politics. According to him, all the great constitutional changes since the outbreak of 1857 have been unfortunate; the destruction of the Double Government—against which the Liberals of forty years ago thundered—a grave blunder. He sighed for the good old days of the East India Company, when, he believed, there were two important safeguards. The first was a wholesome jealousy felt by Parliament towards the East India Company as a privileged corporation, the second was the necessity for the renewal of the charter, thereby affording an opportunity for reforms and concessions suited to the progressive condition of Indian affairs. The Secretary of State's Council, in his view, affords no protection to the Indian people. For, there the Original Judges form the Appellate Court, as it were, and simply confirm their own decrees. In his estimation, the present method of control is a mockery, a snare and a delusion. The President lastly informed his audience, with a frankness for which he will receive scant thanks, that the Congress was not viewed favorably at Home. The India office, the services and society, were all strongly opposed to it. The London press was not particularly friendly, and the M. P.s with Indian experience ranged themselves on the official side. But he consoled them with the assurance that the spirit of the age was with them and that the forces of the new democracy were in sympathy with national aspirations. He closed his address by recommending to their earnest attention the unofficial Bill for the reform of the Legislative Councils, and introducing to them the author of the Bill—Mr. Bradlaugh—whose name, he said, was a synonym for independence, for strength and for success.

IN our last we published a letter under the rather sensational head of "A Village deserted for Oppression." With reference to the personal appeal made to us, we remember the history of the Trust and the persons mentioned, but we are not acquainted with the later management of who had the farm, how he got it, or what he did with it. The spectre brought before the public by our correspondent comes, however, in such a questionable shape, that the Administration must speak to it. If his statement be true, it is no joke that the tenantry on a Government estate should be driven from it. Indians put up with much before they can make up their minds to give up their homes and lands.

THE Hero of the Hour is, of course, Sir Surrender Not, Knight of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of La Mancha, Grand Crosspuoses and Commander of the Invincible Juvenile Band, Master of Arts and Postures, Senior Wrangler, &c., &c., &c. Having conquered the East, he has led his army of young fire-eaters, with a sprinkling of old boys, to the West. He will doubtless conquer in Bombay as in Bengal—if he has an opportunity of bringing out his patent vocal instrument. He has only to give the word of command to his faithful following of hands without heads, and they will all start up "solid," to the confusion of the best and bravest.

What a rare triumph was his!

Oh, the Glorious Revolution!
Oh, the brand-new Constitution!
Now that the Boys, led by bold folks,
Have turned the tables upon the Old Folks!

How easily the thing was done,
For the boys were more than two to one;
Braver than Quixote, quicker than the fox
With tin enough in the Old Fund box.

Nail up the door, slide down the stairs,
Saw off the legs of the President's Chair—
Such was the will of head of patriot Band,
For the Boys had quite the upper hand.

And now they've sent the Old Folks all to school;
There was no escape from the new Boy Rule.

MEER AMER ALI SAHIB has been gazetted successor to Mr. Justice Mitter. He has already been addressed by his own Mahomedan organization—the go-a-head Islamite Association. He will doubtless receive his due of a dinner, of both pilau and steaks, curry and turkey and adjuncts. There will, as a matter of course, be a confusion of tongues, Aryan, Turanian and Shemitic, on the occasion. We only hope the complimentary diners drinkers in special will take care to avoid the derangement of epitaphs to which they must, under the peculiar circumstances, be liable. Such a contretemps as occurred on the occasion of Mr. Sergeant Hotham's elevation to the bench of the Exchequer Court, would be very lamentable and might be a political danger—by rousing to frenzy all the numerous branches on paper of the Mahomedan Association.

WITHOUT undertaking the long journey to Bombay, the Maharaja of Durbhanga has been able to give the Congress quite a nobleman's—not to say yeoman's—service. At the last meeting of the Behar Landholders' Association on the 13th, he declared himself in its favour and advised his brother landlords to do likewise. Whether they will have the courage to do so is doubtful. At any rate, the public adhesion of a power in the realm like Durbhanga is a godsend to the failing concern.

THE Disloyalists or Lepers have been overtaken by the Nemesis of their own wrong. They intended to give their enemy—the Calcutta public in meeting assembled—a defeat and to dictate the terms of peace. The enemy, unprepared for the ambushade and mine laid for them, took the defeat, but scorned to treat with such a foe. To avoid the consequences of the reverse in the field, they quickly retreated to the hills. From those heights, they view with serene satisfaction the miseries of a victorious mob which had depended for their comfort on others. The Malcontents meditated imposing their own "fad" on the public, but, by the strategy of their opponents, they were left alone in the field to ride their own hobby—down to wheresoever they listed. They were thus constrained to carry out the Amendment they so lightly and lustily moved. If one might forgive the evil spirits—Black spirits and White—whose mischievousness spoiled the harmony and happiness of an auspicious occasion, the accident will do both parties good, teaching each a lesson of which it clearly stood in need. If it has the effect of steadying the youth of the country and infusing some sense of responsibility into the power engines of talk, it will not have been in vain.

Thrown on their resources, the Disloyalists started a shop of their own. The Lepers in fact were obliged to run up their own Asylum, if they could. Whether they could or not, they must certainly try, if only to avoid the strong suspicion of trifling in the gravest public concerns. Otherwise, they would prove themselves to be all boys—the Big Boys—the leaders—being the worst of the lot, the feeblest and most contemptible. So, on Thursday se'nnight, they held a meeting and formed Committees—General and Executive—for their demonstration of a permanent nature. They displayed their inherent weakness at every step. From the Town Hall, they descended to the rickety Albert Hall. In their stress for a figure-head at whose feet to sit, they were reduced to utilise the family feuds of the people. The chair was given to Raja Sourindro Mohan Tagore, whose sympathy was virtually bespoken when his elder brother Maharaja Jotindro Mohan was the most distinguished Loyalist in town. He gave the Cockney Obstructionists who have espoused the movement the benefit of a hint or two out of his landlordly experience how to grind and draw Rint. He exhorted such of the country squires and farmers as were present to collect small sums from the rayyets. He has since followed up his speech with a comparatively considerable collection from his own establishment, the members of which will have long cause to remember, if not to bless, Surrender Not. The permanent chair, however, has been reserved for Mr. J. Stevenson, of Messrs. Graham & Co., who will reside at the Committee meetings.

The promoters can not be sanguine of raising enough money for the Leper Asylum, when they have provided an alternative to fall back upon, namely, that "in the event of its becoming impracticable to carry it out," they will have "any other useful institution, such as may hereafter be determined upon by a meeting of subscribers."

REIS & RAYYET.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1889.

OFFICIAL OPINION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

THE favorable opinion of the working of municipalities and District Boards, recorded by the head of our Local Government, is not without its reservations. The failures of the system are attracting more and more attention, as its operations are more closely watched, and as opportunities for arriving at correct conclusions are being afforded by a longer period of time. It is indeed a matter of congratulation that, notwithstanding the defects and failures which have been detected and pointed out, his Honor the Lieutenant-Governor has expressed himself as on the whole satisfied with the working of the scheme, and considers it not without promise of success in the future. The Commissioners of Divisions, on whose reports the opinion of the Government is based, are, of course, disposed to take a lenient view of the shortcomings of the local authorities, and in striking a balance between the credit and the debit side of the new system, to pronounce generally in its favor. On this favorable verdict, however, our local authorities should not go to sleep. It does not by any means relieve them from the necessity of being more careful in future. Local Self-Government is an integral branch of the administration, and its efficiency must be maintained at the usual official standard. Already, signs of weakness are perceptible in the administration of the taxes and other sources of revenue by the municipalities and Local Boards. The District Boards are presided over by the Magistrates, and it is a great advantage to these Boards that their chief source of income, the Road cess, is under the administration of these officials. In municipalities constituted on the elective basis, it has already been found that there is a tendency among the elected Commissioners to reduce the taxes of the electors, in view of securing their suffrages at a future election. There are other blemishes. One officer complains that the new system has brought no relief to the District Officer. The most unfavorable criticisms come naturally from the backward province of Behar. Mr. Boxwell, Commissioner of the Patna Division, writes:—

"The District Boards are generally praised for working harmoniously. Mr. Guérin discusses the question whether his Board is representative or an assembly of notables. Mr. Beadon says the lawyers on his Board are extremely obstructive. I think all the criticism just, and some of it useful. Much of it is of the nature of awarding marks for merit as to school boys—for intelligent interest, regular attendance, and so forth. But it seems to me that if the members stayed at home they would do just as much good. The best members are the indigo planters, who attend few meetings but readily supervise the repairs of roads in their neighbourhood. The Durbhunga Board, following the lead of their Chairman, the District Officer, voted large sums of money for the relief of distress by excellent road-making, and then, dominated by zemindars and lawyers, tried to make itself incapable of this good work by refusing to levy the cess at the required rate. Mr. Beadon writes the best and most minute criticism. Mr. Boudillon gives the neatest summary. He says:—'The working triumvirate of Chairman, Vice-Chairman and District Engineer carry on the work, and the Board acquiesce, and in important cases advise and vote. Nothing more than this seems to be required, and on that understanding the Board have worked successfully. Our roads are well kept up; we have opened more dispensaries and patshalas, and all this without friction or trouble. So I suppose we may 'plaudit.'

"Mr. Beadon goes carefully into detail, and proves, first, that the scheme relieves the District Officer of no part of his work. The help given by the planters in looking after roads is very great. That given by zemindars, either in action or advice, is almost nothing. And then he shows how the lawyers make their own or their client's interest the first object. Executive Officers and Judges are what the people want. The best Executive Officer is a man who understands, but is free from, and above, all local parties—the Roman among the provincials. Committees are committees, little parliaments. What they would like to do, they cannot be permitted to do; what they are set to do, they do not know how to do. They would like to affirm principles and regulate taxation. All this is done for them over their heads. They are set to carry out works, which a mediocre Executive Officer can do better than the best Committee. Therefore all the praise of Committees is exceptatory. The work is done now, as long ago, by the District Officer and the Engineer. As soon as a Committee tries to affirm a principle, the Government has to step in and bid it vote right."

As with the District Board, the Patna Municipality is also in a bad way. With regard to Patna, the features noted are "inadequate conservancy and latrine arrangements, almost absolute absence of supervision, and the drainage of the Municipality abominably bad." The Commissioners, it is said, attend meetings regularly enough, but do no supervision of work. In Behar, the Zemindars exert their influence in elections to bring about reductions of rates and assessments, the result being that an income adequate for carrying out necessary improvements cannot be maintained. The Commissioner, Mr. Boxwell, sums up:— "In short, almost all the Municipalities suffer from the same causes. The members of Committees either care only for the empty title or busy themselves about the wrong things."

The Commissioner of the Chota Nagpore Division speaks well of the Committees. After favorably noticing the working of the Municipalities in the Chittagong Division, the Commissioner says that the chief weakness of the Chittagong Board appears to have been their disinclination to deal properly with such of their subordinates who commit or attempt to commit fraud, and generally to deal vigorously with abuses. From Hooghly, complaint is made of inadequate penalties inflicted by Municipal Benches through fear of unpopularity. Party spirit and petty personal jealousies also interfere with the conduct of public business. As regards sanitation, the municipalities generally had shown themselves very apathetic, and it is reported that they are unwilling to incur loans for the execution of works of obvious utility, but which are too costly to be constructed out of current income. The municipality of Howrah which has just applied for a loan of 10 lacs for water works, is a noteworthy exception to this dread of incurring financial responsibility, but at Howrah the District Magistrate is Chairman, and there is a considerable European element among the Commissioners. The complaint of unduly favoring English education without according the same treatment to vernacular and primary schools which, as benefitting the mass of the people, have greater claims upon the rates, lies against most municipalities.

The general statement of receipts shows that, while there has been a decrease of income from tax on holdings, houses and land, the receipts from wheel tax, tax on animals and tolls have increased. From this it appears that "there is a tendency to lower the rate of direct taxation and to develop income arising from such taxes as are either indirect or do not touch the rate-payers themselves."

In Dacca, the divisions and dissensions in previous years appear to have subsided.

In the Presidency Division, the Commissioners have indeed taken an interest in their duties, but they have shown an undue tendency to increase establishment and unnecessarily to increase the pay of officers, as well as to devote an unduly large portion of their funds to high education.

These criticisms have furnished the Pioneer with reasons for fearing that the moral responsibility of Native Commissioners is not all that could be desired. After referring to the decrease of income from tax on holdings, houses and lands, and to the tendency to spend more money on the education of the higher classes than on the elementary instruction of the lower, the Allahabad journal draws the moral, "The real danger to the development of a healthy municipal life in the future will not be so much apathy or a disinclination to spend public money, but a proneness on the part of the Native Commissioners to spend in their own interests or the interests of the ratepayers exclusively. The municipal conscience may become more alert as time goes on, but in the meantime there are unpleasant signs of hebetude."

While we are always ready to give credit to our self-governing councils where credit is due, we cannot lose sight of the fact that they have not, with rare exceptions, quite succeeded in showing much administrative aptitude and capacity. Let them take the above criticisms in good part, and endeavour, by their future conduct, to outgrow them. Above all, let them really be a relief to the District Officers and cultivate efficient and organised methods of administration.

MUNICIPAL LIABILITY FOR ENGLISH EDUCATION.

THE responsibilities of municipalities with respect to education have been long involved in uncertainty. Much diversity of opinion and of action has been the consequence, all classes of education, including the higher English, being aided in some places, while in others primary and middle vernacular education were alone considered to have a claim for support upon the municipal fund. The Bengal Municipal Act is not quite explicit on the point, the provision contained in it being that, subject to rules prescribed by the Local Government, the Municipal Fund may be applied, among other things, to the construction and repair of school-houses, and the establishment and maintenance of schools, either wholly or by means of grants-in-aid. No rules of the kind referred to above have, so far as we are aware, been as yet laid down by the Government. Probably, the subject is still under the consideration of the Education Department, but the absence of any rules on the subject has been a fruitful source of friction and even of discrepancies between the municipal and the official authorities. This has been particularly the case in the Presidency Division. Mr. Smith, the Commissioner, has had to warn and admonish his municipal Commissioners not to spend the funds at their disposal in assisting the English schools, which, in his view, should be self-supporting, and rely chiefly upon the support of those comparatively well-to-do classes that desired to give education to their children. For our part, we are disposed to accept this view. The municipalities have too many things to provide for out of their limited resources to be able to assume an additional expensive responsibility like that for higher education. But while we hold this view, we are of opinion that, in exceptional cases, municipalities should not be restricted from exercising their discretion in assisting English schools, the circumstances of which warrant the exercise of such discretion. In any case, however, the question should not be allowed to rest in its present uncertainty. The municipalities, if they knew their duties in regard to education definitely, would not frame their Budgets so as to earn a reproof from their official superiors for their pains. These superior officials themselves would be saved the unpleasantness of the situation. For the rest, there would be uniformity of procedure throughout the province, which is now wanting. We are, therefore, glad that in his last Resolution on the municipalities, Sir Stuart Bayley has taken notice of the question and expressed his views thereon. The Resolution says:—

"It is reported by most Commissioners that the municipal grants are devoted, as a rule, to the maintenance of English education, and that little or no assistance is given to primary schools. This is a tendency to be guarded against, and while the Lieutenant-Governor does not consider that there is any obligation on municipalities to devote the whole of their grants to primary education, he quite agrees with the opinion expressed by Mr. Smith and other experienced officers, that an unduly large portion of the municipal funds should not be assigned to the benefit of the grant and comparatively scanty benefit to the community, who are left to be made to pay for high education to their children. It appears to be a fact that some of the municipal funds to assist or maintain English schools in opposition to other English schools which have been established by private enterprise. In such cases, Government officers of Division, in which the power is vested by law, should not hesitate to exercise their discretion in revoking the municipal estimates until a more equitable apportionment of funds is allotted."

Without being sufficiently definite, this expression of the Lieutenant-Governor's opinion will go far to remedy the existing state of things. Mr. Smith's opinion has received acceptance, and prominence has been given to his views by his name being singled out for mention. But we fear he will not be quite happy to find that, under the present orders, municipalities are under no obligation to devote the whole of their grants to primary education, but may, if they so choose, divert a portion of them for the benefit of English schools which were not set up in opposition to other schools in their neighbourhood. At any rate, here is a loophole which municipalities are likely to take advantage of for the purpose of assisting English schools, in spite of the Commissioner's instructions to the contrary. Future misunderstandings will not entirely cease, and we therefore suggest that an early opportunity should be taken by the Government, in consultation with the Education Department and the Divisional authorities, to place the question at rest, and thus prevent unpleasant bickerings and unnecessary friction between the local and district authorities. Let it be remembered that the question is a particularly sore one in Indian politics.

THE LATE WILKIE COLLINS.

MR. Edmund Yates has written an obituary notice of Wilkie Collins. It is the tribute of a surviving literary friend, unmarred by literary jealousy. It is, indeed, a model of tender treatment, without a trace of the officious falsehood of indiscreet zealous friendship. The writer's appreciation of the deceased's power of plot construction, with special reference to his chef d'œuvre, is thorough and hearty. It is with real delight he places his English friend above the famous French writers in the line.

It would be presumptuous in us so far in the East to suggest any flaw in the statement of a personal friend who is a distinguished literary man. But Mr. Yates seems to us to have been betrayed into a slip of memory in his account of the literary career of his subject. According to him, Mr. Collins did not make his mark or at least did not catch popular taste, till the publication of The Moonstone. That was, no doubt, a tremendous and unprecedented success. But he was already a popular novelist. His historical romance, Antonina, or the Fall of Rome—his very first essay in fiction—met with a reception which would satisfy the most sagacious young author. But The Dead Secret opened the eyes of the public to the presence of a new genius in the Fiction of Sensation. Therein he made a decided hit. We well remember the sensation that its appearance caused. It reached us to these distant shores. He maintained, and even advanced his popularity by The Woman in White. Its appearance in weekly parts in All the Year Round,—the magazine established by Dickens on the ashes of Household Words—was awaited with breathless expectations.

In treating of the personal life, Mr. Yates lets some light upon the habits and trials of the literary men of the day:—

It was during the progress of The Moonstone, I believe, that Wilkie Collins first acquired the baleful habit of taking sedatives, which he continued more or less throughout his life. Excited beyond measure by the constant nerve-pressure created by the necessity of having every thread of his story constantly within his grasp; suffering under a sharp attack of rheumatic gout in the eyes; distracted at the same time by the serious illness of his mother, to whom he was devotedly attached, Wilkie Collins, as Coleridge and De Quincey, and others eminent in the fraternity had done before him, sought and found relief in anodynes. On this subject I almost fear to write, lest I should be suspected of exaggeration; but from what he himself told me, and from what I have heard from friends of even greater intimacy with him, I believe that about that period and for the greater part of his after life Wilkie Collins was in the habit of taking daily, and without apparently serious noxious effect, more laudanum—not Batley's nor any other minimising solution, but absolutely pure laudanum—than would have sufficed to kill a ship's crew or a company of soldiers. This amount was, of course, arrived at slowly and by degrees."

Mr. Yates thus concludes:—

"Edward Pigott, John Everett Millais, and Holman Hunt are, perhaps, the only remaining members of that little coterie which used to meet at Mrs. Collins's house in Hanover Terrace forty years ago, when Wilkie and Charles and all of them were young men. His much-loved brother, Charles Alston Collins, a very subtle humourist and an excellent writer, died sixteen years ago; Dickens, Wills, James White, Augustus Egg, Lemon, Fechter, H. F. Chorley, nearly all the companions of his youth and prime, had predeceased him. Miss Hogarth remains, and Frank Beard, his skilful and ever watchful medical attendant, and myself; but, with the few exceptions I have named, poor Wilkie might have said with Lamb, 'All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.' Dear, good, staunch Wilkie, who has now gone to rejoin them!"

DACCA.

19th December, 1889.

The annual meeting of the Saraswat Samaj was held on the 11th instant at the Northbrook Hall to confer titles of honor for proficiency in the Sanskrit language and literature on the pupils of the Tols. The chair was taken by an old Pundit of Bikrampur. Many influential gentlemen, both European and native, were present.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Soldiers and Sailors.—These well-known and easily used remedies are especially serviceable and convenient for those who, like soldiers and sailors, are exposed to great changes of climate, and the hardships inseparable from their calling. Many of the diseases engendered in the system from these and other untoward causes can be checked and controlled by attention at their onset, and in Holloway's remedies will be found a ready means of relief, without hindrance from duty. Many a man is invalided and rendered more of a burden to himself and friends from neglect of the early symptoms of his complaint, which calamity might be averted by timely resort to the use of Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

The District Judge made a short speech in Bengali, expressing his sympathy with the objects of the Saraswat Samaj. It appeared from the report that of the 159 candidates who appeared at the examination from 80 Tols, 103 had passed.

EIGHT YEARS' JOURNALISM: OR, REIS AND RAYYET FROM THE START, WITH A WORD OF BUSINESS.

It is now some eight years since Reis and Rayyet was started. It made its mark from the outset.

The consensus of the entire Press, Native and European, testified to its worth in terms not to be mistaken—in terms of, indeed, unexampled enthusiasm.

The Englishman (Jas. Furrell) said

"It deserves to be a success." January, 1882.

The Statesman (W. M. Riach) wrote

"It is written in a racy style of English such as we rarely meet with in Indian journalism."

The Amrita Bazar Patrika:—

"We have got the Reis and Rayyet, a new weekly, published here in this city, and we give our contemporary a sincere welcome. That the paper is written in good English and is ably conducted and thoroughly independent goes without saying, considering the party who has taken it in hand. We fear our contemporary will throw everything in confusion in Calcutta, and that regardless of the claims of friends and foes. So much humbuggism has now permeated our society, that it is for that if for nothing else, a paper like our new contemporary was needed for the protection of honest people."

"Fearless and independent."—Hindoo Patriot.

So up the country, the Liberty of Lucknow, said

"We beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the first number of the Reis and Rayyet, a newspaper and review of Politics, Literature, and Society, hailing from the City of Palaces. If the contents of the first number be taken as a type, we have no hesitation in adding our humble testimony that the journal before us will not fail to earn a reputation for itself. The style is vivacious, smart, and oftentimes, humours. May our young brother live long to sow broadcast the principles of social amity, progress, and liberal democracy."

"A very vigorous youngster. There is no little 'go' in our contemporary."—Express.

Nor did the welcome come from the critics of only the English press in India. Here is a specimen of French opinion:—

"Un nouveau journal vient de se fonder à Calcutta, le Reis and Rayyet, dont nous avons un numéro sous les yeux. L'Éditeur est un indien, ce qui rend d'autant plus remarquable l'humour et surtout l'indépendance de cette plume qui sera comme l'épée de Damoclès suspendue sur la tête également des Reis et de Rayyet, pour abaisser au besoin l'orgueil des uns, et relever la dignité des autres, rappeler à tous ce que la Constitution exige de chacun pour assurer la paix de la Reine et la grandeur de l'Empire."

"Cette petite anecdote fera comprendre ce que sera le Reis and Rayyet. Puisse-t-il se maintenir toujours à cette hauteur, c'est le vœu que nous formons pour lui."—Le Petit Bengali.

The excellence and spirit have been kept up, as the continued good opinion of the whole Press shows.

"That very smart paper."—Englishman, February 16, 1882.

"That remarkably clever paper, Reis and Rayyet, has the gift—invaluable in a small Saturday—of sometimes putting a good leading article into a short sentence. [After quoting two sentences and italicising the second, continues] Some of our contemporaries who suffer from a scarcity of leading articles, might do worse than hammer the italicised sentence out to the proper superficialities."—Statesman, October 16, 1882.

"One of the best written and ablest conducted papers in Bengal."—Times of India, August 1883.

"Written with an extraordinary command of the English language and strange felicity of style."—Statesman, December 25, 1883.

"That clever Calcutta paper the Reis and Rayyet, which is not known for its partiality to the Zemindars, has observed this defect in the constitution of the Select Committee" [on the Rent Bill].—Indian Chronicle, May 12, 1884.

"Able and smartly conducted paper."—Englishman, June 23, 1884.

"Able conducted Calcutta paper."—Sind Times, June, 1884.

"I always find your paper bright and clever."—The Hon'ble C. P. Ilbert to the Manager, January 14, 1885.

"Few Englishmen have so complete a command of their own language as the editor, and still fewer so felicitous a style."—Statesman, March 28, 1885.

"Reis & Rayyet—has singularly keen powers of appreciation."—Sind Times, October 10, 1885.

"Reis & Rayyet—is perhaps the ablest paper in the country in point of literary power."—Statesman, November 18, 1885.

"Reis & Rayyet, which usually takes a most sensible view of events."—Indian Planter's Gazette and Sporting News, November 2, 1886.

"The Reis & Rayyet has made an enterprising effort not unworthy of a London journal, to trace the names and families of the persons who lost their lives in the steamer Sir John Lawrence. That paper is one of a style we could wish to see more represented in India. It obtains information and expresses currents of opinion almost inaccessible to papers conducted by Europeans, while it is free from the rabid and superficial style which either repels Europeans or at least disheartens them from looking for sense in the Native press."---Englishman, June 28, 1887.

"If there are transactions of a questionable character, the Press---whether Native or English---simply performs a duty in bringing the abuse to the light. And on this subject there are some remarks in the last number of Reis & Rayyet which deserve attention. Of course, Reis & Rayyet is 'only a Native paper,' and, therefore, may be regarded as a vilifying organ full of hatred and malice. But so long as its hatred and malice are directed against wrong-doing, its nativity may be forgiven. It is undoubtedly the best written paper in the country among the 'vilifying' and malice-inspired branch of the estate. It is often written with a thoughtfulness that might be imitated with advantage, and with a sense of responsibility which might be advantageously copied."---Indian Daily News, July 27, 1887.

"Our grave Native contemporary of the Patriot, by far and away the most profoundly political of Native journals, though rather below our Reis & Rayyet friend in talent, generally, observes, &c."---Bengal Times Oct. 13, 1888.

"The incomparable Reis and Rayyet."---Indian Daily News, Nov. 12, 1888.

"Reis & Rayyet, acknowledged by all Anglo Indian journalists to be far and away the most ably conducted native paper in the country,"---Evening News, Nov. 16, 1888.

"Reis and Rayyet has an eloquent leader on the late Pandit Gangadhar Kabiraj of Moorshedabad. What a shame that so little should be known of his remarkable career!"---Indian Spectator.

"The Indian Planter's Gazette refers to some "graceful remarks" of Reis and Rayyet which is referred to as "this spirited and well-edited journal."--- May 7, 1889.

So in England, a Cabinet Minister sent an extract from Reis and Rayyet to the Pall Mall Gazette which was published with commendation in that journal in 1884.

"A journal well known for its criticisms of Indian administration."---Daily News, (London) January 23, 1885.

An English politician wrote, under date the 26th June, 1885,--- "I have no suggestions to make. The Reis and Rayyet is an exemplary paper." Again, on the 16th February 1888,--- "I like your article on---in R. & R. of January 21. Look at St. James' Gazette of February 15."

"I made good use of your remarks on the Cambay case and the difference between Lord Reay and Sir A. Lyall."---Letter from a British Peer, dated May 15, 1887.

"I read your paper religiously."---The late Major Evans Bell.

Reis and Rayyet is a thoroughly independent paper, treating all matters frankly and forcibly but with perfect fairness. It presents, of course, the information and well considered opinion of its Editor---the results of a pretty wide experience and of long years of inquiry and speculation. It essays to represent genuine Oriental Thought and Indian Opinion as distinguished from the crude yearnings of the English-speaking minority and the ignorance---of themselves and their country, not to say of the Empire at large---of the isolated populations of the Provincial capitals and the citizens of this Metropolis in a corner.

It is strong in its conductor's knowledge of Indian history and of the relations of the British Power with the Native States and Chiefs of every grade; it is opposed to Annexation and undue interference; but it is slow to take up grievances of any kind, and is earnestly desirous of steady solid improvement in Native Kingdoms and Principalities and Estates.

It addresses itself to superior intelligence and culture of both natives and Europeans---the flower of society.

It essays to inform public opinion in Europe.

But it is not an agitating journal. It is above wire-pulling. It submits to no dictation---opens itself to no "cries." It does not confine itself to politics. Giving all legitimate attention to the discussion of topics of the day, it finds a variety of other matters for the interest and edification of the reader---questions of history, belles-lettres, jurisprudence and political philosophy, narratives of travels, incidents of society and life throughout the globe and so forth. Chaste in its own language and conversation, even in the most fishesome d'anon, it does not admit any of the indecent quick advertisements which fill the Indian Press, in the English as well as vernacular side. Nor does it lend itself to any "bogus" concern, whatever the bait offered.

With the New Year some further improvements will be introduced. Reminiscences and memoirs of notable men, notices of remarkable places, essays on political topics of the day, the antiquities of cities and memoirs of native families, will, from time to time, be incorporated.

The stones and bricks of Calcutta are not without their memories, nor the history of its families without its interest. The history of the important families in the country has either not been written at all, or been distorted and falsified by vanity, ignorance, and dishonesty. These subjects are well worth taking up by an independent writer who has read and inquired and knows.

We are glad to know that R. & R. is in much request at our schools and colleges as a useful adjunct to the means of education. In future, it will be made more useful still to our students of language and literature. Indians who have themselves threaded the mazes of a difficult, because most copious and ever-shifting, tongue and its vast literary empire, are peculiarly fitted to lead their junior countrymen in the same paths.

We have been repeatedly asked to print on cheap paper and reduce our rates, to bring them within the means of poor students who would in such a case subscribe in large numbers. After giving it deliberate consideration, we regret we cannot accede to the request. The inability is often more imaginary than real. Our countrymen have not yet generally acquired the habit of paying fully for their improvement. It is important that they should learn to buy books and papers. That is one of the first steps to national progress. Nothing like having your own books and papers, so that you can read again and again and mark and inwardly digest them. As for such as are absolutely unable to muster so much as one Rupee per month for a new paper, all we can do is to suggest their clubbing together to divide the burden.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have received from the office of Reis and Rayyet, one of the leading native newspapers of Calcutta, a most readable little brochure written by Baboo Sambhu C. Mookerjee, once Minister to the late Nawab Faridoon Jah, Bahadoor, Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, which gives a graphic account of the Baboo's travels to and in Independent Tipperah. Written in capital English and evidently by a gentleman of broad views and enlightened mind, the work is decidedly a valuable addition to the catalogue of English written Bengalee literature. This book of travels should be read widely not only by English residents out here, but by our countrymen at home, for it teems with interest and teaches us far more about the fine belt of unopened country travelled through than any work of the sort written by an Englishman would have done. Baboo Sambhu Chunder Mookerjee is one of whom his countrymen may well be proud, for he writes throughout with the moderate and educated pen of a thorough gentleman.—The Indian Planter's Gazette & Sporting News, October 4, 1887.

Mr. S. Mookerjee, who will be readily recognised as the editor of that able little paper the Reis and Rayyet, dedicates his travels in Bengal to a wide circle of readers—those who know India and are unable to love her; those who love her, and do not know her; those who neither know nor love; and those who d being tire of India, take to travelling; foreigners who want to know, and Englishmen. The author himself is not the least tired of India, though he is a traveller by profession, we might almost say, and though he puts limits upon journeys, never caring to get very far away from Calcutta. It is not mileage, however, which makes the traveller. It is the power to observe sympathetically what is going on at each stage of a journey, and to keep his spirit about the minor inconveniences which necessarily occur by road, river, or rail. This Mr. Mookerjee does. He never loses his good humour under any set of circumstances, and what is better, he conveys a full sense of it to his pages. The reader may take a choice of journeys through Eastern Bengal to Tipperah, or to the heart of Bengal Proper, and will in each case be fully rewarded by the fruits of Mr. Mookerjee's wanderings. Perhaps the English reader will be mainly struck by the excellent English style of the writer. The author is not ashamed of his nationality; he rejoices in being a Bengali, but at the same time he indulges in prose which has no alien trace in it. It is not the English of an educated German or Frenchman; it is the nervous Saxon of a subject of the Empress of India. Mr. Mookerjee had special advantages in some of his journeys, especially to Independent Tipperah, whither he was called to an important official position. He was thus assured of many attentions, though, in forming accurate impressions of a country it is doubtful whether it is not better to be untrammelled with connections which frighten away the simple folk and impose reticence on them as a duty. From the notes of his journey through East Bengal, and to show how genial is his outlook, we take the following:—[Extract.]

From Dacca he went further East, and his experiences on the Megna are of a most enlivening description. He saw many visions of beauty, and Mr. Mookerjee is no niggard when he is describing something he has enjoyed seeing. Here is a sketch on his way up the river: [Extract.]

But it is not physical beauty alone which detains our author's eye: [Extract.]

The same symptoms of material progress he notes among the boatmen on his course.—[Extract.]

Some portion of the volume has already been contributed to the Statesman, and will be familiar to our readers. The following description of natural effects is not known to them. We doubt whether Mr. Ruskin, or Mr. Black would accept it as a final account of the sun's rising and setting:—[Extract.]—The Statesman, October 7, 1887.

If we have not before noticed Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee's Travels in Bengal, which was published some months ago, it is not because the little book is either dull or pointless. It contains, on the contrary, much interesting matter, though some of the incidents are over-weighted with detail in what is facetiously called a "little booklet." The author's view as a rule is, by the way, facetious; he is given even to punning; but he is also sentimental in the highest degree—"a naked Whiteman" hints his susceptibilities; a Hindu girl, bathing in the river, throws him into an ecstasy of delight: "she had such large languishing eyes." But he is nothing if not philosophical, and his reflections on this or that social and political subject are not without their moral. Mr. Sambhu C. Mookerjee was formerly Minister to the "last of the Nawabs Nazim of Bengal, Behar and Orissa" and afterwards Minister of the Maharaja of Tipperah. He is a man, therefore, of experience, and when he speaks his brethren should listen to him..... Travels in Bengal is a readable book, and it abounds in anecdotes which are often as instructive as amusing, and it is not spoiled by too many political allusions, though, of course some few have crept in.—The Pioneer, Dec., 1887.

Pran Kissen Chowdry Fund

FOR SUPPLYING

MEN OF EUROPEAN TRAINING

Under a benevolent Scheme now in operation for several years, started by Baboo Pran Kissen Chowdry, for assisting meritorious but poor Indian students, under certain conditions, to go to Europe for competing for the Indian Service, there is now room for a native student, of sound health, who, having passed the Calcutta Government Medical College, may desire to compete for the Covenanted Indian Medical Service. Passage and expenses for two years' residence in England will be paid out of the fund of the Scheme.
